The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE) is necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE) would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 51, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 237 Leg.]

YEAS—48

Baucus	Exon	Mitchell
Bentsen	Ford	Moynihan
Biden	Glenn	Nunn
Boren	Hart	Pell
Bradley	Hawkins	Pryor
Bumpers	Heflin	Randolph
Burdick	Hollings	Riegle
Byrd, Harry F., Jr.	Huddleston	Sarbanes
	Jackson	Sasser
Byrd, Robert C.	Johnston	Schmitt
Cannon	Kasten	Stennis
Chiles	Kennedy	Tower
Cranston	Leahy	Tsongas
DeConcini	Levin	Warner
Dixon	Long	Zorinsky
Dodd	Matsunaga
Eagleton	Melcher

NAYS—51

Abdnor	Goldwater	Murkowski
Andrews	Gorton	Nickles
Armstrong	Grassley	Packwood
Baker	Hatch	Percy
Boschwitz	Hatfield	Pressler
Brady	Hayakawa	Proxmire
Chafee	Heinz	Quayle
Cochran	Helms	Roth
Cohen	Humphrey	Rudman
D'Amato	Jepsen	Simpson
Danforth	Kassebaum	Specter
Denton	Laxalt	Stafford
Dole	Lugar	Stevens
Domenici	Mathias	Symms
Durenberger	Mattingly	Thurmond
East	McClure	Wallop
Garn	Metzenbaum	Weicker

NOT VOTING—1

Inouye

So Mr. BENTSEN's amendment (No. 1977) was rejected.

Mr. DOLE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAKER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1107

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Colorado (Mr. ARMSTRONG) for himself, Mr. LONG, Mr. MATTINGLY, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. GLENN, Mr. SASSER, Mr. QUAYLE, Mr. MURKOWSKI, and Mr. JEPSEN, proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1107:

On page 560, in lieu of lines 22-25, insert:

"(i) the treatment of any item by the taxpayer on the return if the taxpayer believed that there was substantial authority for such treatment, or"

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, the Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COHEN). The Senator will suspend. The Senate is not in order. The Chair could not hear the Senator from Colorado as he was explaining his amendment.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, do I have 30 minutes allocated to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Colorado yield to me for just 30 seconds so that I might ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Finance?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Of course. Not knowing the nature of the Senator's inquiry I ask that it be charged against someone else's 30 minutes.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I might take 30 seconds to ask the chairman of the Finance Committee a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOLE. May we have order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will those Senators standing in the aisle and conversing please retire from the Chamber?

Mr. FORD. I thank the Chair.

Would the distinguished Senator from Kansas advise the Senator from Kentucky now that the procedure is as it relates to amendments that are at the desk? I have one amendment at least I would like to take up. I am willing to give the Senator a time agreement on that maybe somewhat shorter than the regular time if I could find a point in time when I might be able to bring it up and have it considered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, we have not had any structured procedure. I have been taking amendments as people have asked me. Senator ARMSTRONG, then Senator JOHNSON, then Senator HOLLINGS, and you could be next.

Mr. FORD. Could I then, as a matter of record, be on the schedule following the Hollings amendment?

Mr. METZENBAUM. I would like to have two after the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LONG addressed the Chair.

Mr. FORD. This is just kind of a grab bag.

Mr. LONG. I do not think we can agree at this moment because the Senator from Louisiana has an amendment he wants to offer—I have two, and I guess I could combine them.

Mr. DOLE. I just realized the Senator is on the list. Senator DODD, Senator MITCHELL, Senator FORD asked for recognition, Senator STEVENS. I guess we could try to rotate from one side to the other and, hopefully, there will not be many on this side and then we can rotate back.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, would the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Louisiana consider, as floor managers of the bill, since so many of us have amendments that we may not be able to get to them, it is my thought to propose to limit the time on amendments to a half hour instead of an hour so that each of us will have a fair crack at an amendment? I merely make that as a proposal. I do not offer it—it is not within my prerogative to offer it—because otherwise not many of us are going to have a chance to call up our amendments.

Mr. DOLE. Let me say that there are 11 hours on the bill itself, and I will be happy to yield time on the bill and, if necessary, get more time. So far as this Senator is concerned everybody is going to have a chance to discuss their amendments, and so long as we are looking toward a conclusion—and I know the Senator from Ohio is——

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FORD. I asked at the beginning the question of the Senator from Kansas. I would just ask the Senator and the distinguished minority floor leader, both of whom are fair, in an attempt to help us, I would just like to have about 30 minutes on one amendment equally divided, and maybe yield back some of that time, and I would be happy to take it up at a time certain. I do not want to take the time from the Senator from Louisiana because he has some very important amendments. Mine is just as important personally as the others, but I hope we can work out some time.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, the amendment which I have sent to the desk is a relatively simple one, but I hope my colleagues will not be deceived by its simplicity. It is a very, very, very important amendment and, if adopted, will go a long way toward preserving our voluntary tax system, a system which, in large measure, we now take for granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend. The Senate is not in order. The Senator from Colorado cannot be heard.

The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I thank the Chair for obtaining order in the Chamber.

This amendment addresses a section of the bill which deals with tax compliance. In my view, the tax compliance section of this legislation identifies the right problem but, at least in part, comes to the wrong solution. The problem is a simple one. It is tax cheating.

There is no question that tax cheating is on the rise. Punitive tax rates, tortiously complex tax laws, purchasing power eroded by inflation, in sort of the sense that everybody is already cheating on their taxes has given incentive to a lot of otherwise honest people to cut corners and to perhaps, in some cases, even to break laws in the preparation of their tax returns.

The effect of this, aside from the erosion of our national character that is implicit in the notion of cheating on taxes, is to create a drain on the Treasury, which is rapidly rising and is presently estimated to exceed more than $120 billion a year.

The reason for this tax gap is multidimensional. Unreported income, overstated expenses and deductions, lack of audit coverage, unreported dividends and interest income, unreported capital gains, to say nothing of the huge and unreported and expanding underground economy. And because it is such a serious problem, taxpayers who see the problem firsthand, who even here others of their acquaintance brag about how they cut corners on their tax returns, are naturally tempted to do the same themselves.

As the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee summed it up so aptly:

> People just don't like to pay taxes, particularly those who have never tried it.

And, as the chairman of the Senate Finance Subcommittee on Oversight said:

> The workingmen and women of America don't mind paying taxes, they just want to make sure that everyone else pays their fair share of taxes, too.

So I am not unsympathetic to the main purpose of this section to improve the compliance, both from the standpoint of the people who are paying taxes and from the standpoint of assuring that we get the revenue which we are entitled to under the law. Unfortunately, the language which is included in this section goes a bit too far.

Briefly, Mr. President, the tax compliance section has five principal components.

First, it improves the information reporting requirements of the existing law.

Second, the bill reworks the penalty structure of the Internal Revenue Code, and corrects some deficiencies.

Third, the bill adjusts the method of computing interest on payments and on receipts by the Internal Revenue Service.

Fourth, it changes the method of reporting and institutes voluntary withholding of tax on retirement plan distributions.

Finally, it cracks down on abusive tax shelters through a variety of techniques and other miscellaneous provisions.

The end result of this legislation is to raise an estimated $20 billion or $30 billion in new revenue over the next 3 years. And it does so not by adding new layers of taxes but simply through compliance; that is, collecting from people who ought to already be paying their taxes.

With this in mind, you might well ask why is my amendment needed. The answer is very simple: Because this legislation includes what appears to be an innocuous provision. But this provision, in the opinion of tax experts, will have an enormous and adverse effect on the proper relationship between the Internal Revenue Service, taxpayers, and their professional tax advisers. And I am not talking about a question of mere semantics. I am talking about a matter which will be of the utmost importance, which can have a chilling effect on the relationship between the taxpayers and those to whom they go for guidance and counsel in the preparation of their tax return.

Let me give you the background of the situation. Under the current law, penalties can be imposed for tax deficiencies caused by negligence, intentional disregard of the rules, or civil fraud. The penalties are generally waived if a taxpayer reasonably relies upon the advice of his tax adviser. Tax advisers acting negligently or fraudulently face tax preparer penalties and sanctions by their professional associations.

In the real world, the way this works out is that if there is an underpayment of tax at the time of the audit, if the underpayment is proven, the taxpayer is liable for the amount of the tax plus interest. But if he went to a tax accountant or tax attorney, he does not have to pay a penalty. In other words, he is relying on the competency of his professional tax adviser. It is believed by many—and I would reluctantly agree—that the current law is abused in some cases since relatively few returns are audited. They are claiming tax deductions, credits, depreciation schedules that simply are not supported by current tax law or regulation. This is unfair, and discriminates against those taxpayers who are entirely fair and ethical on their tax returns.

It is, in part, what is thought to be corrected by the tax compliance section of this legislation. Specifically, the provision I object to provides a penalty for those who substantially understate their tax, generally 10 percent of the understated tax, if the understatement is more than $5,000 for the individual or $10,000 for a corporation. The penalty could be waived if the taxpayer discloses the facts surrounding the questionable items or if the IRS believes the taxpayer acted in good faith and that the taxpayer believes he is—and I now use the magic words, the words which are the root of the problem—"more likely than not" to prevail in a controversy with the Internal Revenue Service.

The disclosure defense does not apply to tax shelter transactions, however.

My principal concern is to the words "more likely than not," a new test which represents a sharp departure from current law.

But before I discuss that in detail, I want to note the so-called red-flag provision, the disclosure provision, is also fraught with difficulty. These concerns, I think, are best understood from the testimony received at the subcommittee hearings held on March 22 on this legislation.

I would, therefore, Mr. President, read brief extracts from the testimony of former IRS Commissioner Donald Alexander; the chairman of the ABA tax section, Mr. Jack Nolan; the testimony of Mr. Frederick Hickman, former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for Tax Policy.

The matters which I will read relate to the disclosure provision, not directly to the question of my amendment, but they bring into perspective the situation which taxpayers have in complying with the only other available method of avoiding a penalty in the event of understating income.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I would just like to ask if the material that the Senator is referring to regarding the testimony of former IRS Commissioner Alexander, was that testimony in regard to the bill as it was originally introduced, and not the language that is before us now?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes, the Senator is correct. It is the testimony of March 22 and it does not go to the point of "more likely than not," but to the point of the difficulties of disclosure, which is a matter which, in the interest of disclosure, I thought should be a part of the record of these proceedings, even though I am not directly addressing it in my amendment.

Mr. GRASSLEY. The disclosure standard, I say to the Senator, has also been modified in the revision of the language of the provision as it was reported out of the Finance Committee. It is different from what was introduced in early March.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I appreciate that explanation. But I believe, and without wishing to argue it, since it is not the subject of my amendment, that the present standard of disclosure, while not modified from the original proposal, is, nonetheless, an impractical one in many instances for taxpayers and tax preparers to meet.

First, let me quote from the testimony of the former Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service Donald Alexander:

In the materials in which the bill was introduced that penalty is mentioned as being a penalty applicable to someone who takes a position inconsistent with the published position of the Internal Revenue Service and doesn't disclose it.

Now when we find the section itself, we don't find that first requirement. I would suggest, as the Treasury suggested, that you reconsider certain of the details of these provisions, particularly this one, and that you insert a requirement for the application of the automatic penalty; Not only that there be a failure to disclose but that the failure be inconsistent with the published position of the service.

Although reasonable, the disclosure provision does not include this recommendation from the former Commissioner of the IRS.

To quote Jack Nolan who, while speaking in a personal capacity, also is the chairman of the American Bar Association's Tax Section:

I support the general concept of this provision, at least with respect to nonbusiness income, but the provision needs more thought and work.

It is critical, for example, that the definition of what is disclosed in the return be fairly drawn and clearcut. The standard adopted in the bill is inadequate, for reasons discussed in my detailed statement. The application of this penalty to common but highly discretionary adjustments in business tax returns such as disallowances of deductions for unreasonable compensation or inventory adjustments may well be inappropriate and requires much consideration. The threshold provisions which will apply are probably too low.

And to quote from his more detailed statement about the recent experience the IRS has had from similar disclosure provisions:

The definition of a disclosed item is taken from the provisions of § 6601(e) of the Code. Under that provision, the statute of limitations for assessment of a tax deficiency is extended from three to six years for returns with respect to which there is a substantial omission of gross income. In determining whether a substantial omission exists, disclosed amounts are not taken into account.

A large body of case law had developed under Code § 6501(e) as to whether an amount or item has been disclosed. This development has not provided a satisfactory standard for implementation of this no-fault penalty provision. Thus, disclosure in an amended return filed six months' later was held insufficient under § 6501(e) to avoid the longer statute of limitations. Foster v. Commissioner, 45 BTA 126 (1941), aff'd 131 F.2d 405 (5th Cir. 1942); see also John H. Houston, 38 T.C. 486 (1962). Income erroneously reported on the return of an estate by an executrix who should have reported it personally was held not to have been adequately disclosed. Anna Eliza Masterson, 1 T.C. 315 (1942); see also Leslie H. Green, 7 T.C. 263 (1946); Corrigan v. Commissioner, 155 F.2d 164 (6th Cir. 1946). It is doubtful that a penalty should be arbitrarily applied in these types of cases.

A better approach would be for the subcommittee to establish specific standards with respect to the definition of disclosed items for purposes of this penalty provision. The meaning of "nature and amount of such item" (proposed Code § 6660(c)(1)(A)) should be further explained. The standards should provide considerably more guidance as to what will constitute adequate disclosure. Disclosure should not be limited to disclosure "in the return", or "in a statement attached to the return", if it is otherwise adequate, has all necessary identification, and is in a form that it can be readily associated with the return.

The application of this penalty with respect to activities of a trade or business deserves more study. Underpayments attributable to highly-discretionary adjustments by the Internal Revenue Service, the facts with respect to which are reasonably apparent on the face of the return, but as to which there is no specific disclosure in the return, present special considerations. This would include such items as unreasonable compensation, additions to bad debt reserves, amounts capitalized which were treated in the return as repairs, useful lives for depreciation purposes, the extent to which indirect costs are allocated in valuing inventories at cost, write-downs of inventory to market where lower than cost, and others. The Service normally looks at these items in any business return, and it is questionable whether a penalty should be imposed simply because there is no specific disclosure. These types of adjustments produce large deficiencies, but if the interest rate is adequate and the taxpayer's position had a reasonable basis, there should be no penalty.

There will be endless disputes whether such an adjustment arises from an item "described in the return" (proposed Code § 6660(c)(1)). Business returns may become weighted-down with unnecessary "disclosures". The cost of filing returns, particularly for small businesses, may become prohibitive as lawyers and accountants prepare extensive and carefully-worded "disclosures".

It is possible in any event that the threshold amounts have been set too low. The $5,000 amount for individuals perhaps should be $10,000; compare, for example, Code § 163(d). The $10,000 amount for corporations (other than Subchapter 5 corporations and personal holding companies) perhaps should be $25,000.

Notwithstanding the foregoing criticisms, the proposed no-fault penalty is sound in principle and should be enacted in some form. It should be noted, however, that this penalty does not adequately address noncompliance problems arising from tax-sheltered investments. In most instances, tax shelters are fully disclosed in either the taxpayer's return or in a partnership return referred to in the taxpayer's return. As a consequence, the penalty would not be applicable to an underpayment arising from such an investment. It may be necessary to consider some other sanction for such cases.

It is relevant in this respect that the Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility of the American Bar Association has recently promulgated a revised statement of Ethics Opinion 346 providing rigorous ethical standards for tax-shelter opinions. This may have a salutary effect on the compliance problem with respect to such investments.

In this regard, it should be noted that in September 1980, the Treasury Department proposed changes in the rules relating to shelter opinions. The language then proposed involved the "more likely than not" standard. Representatives of the American Bar Association, the New York Bar Association, the American Institute of CPA's, and other lawyers and CPA's, unanimously testified that "more likely than not" was not a practical standard. They did not believe that they were smart enough in the complex world of taxes, and with constantly changing rules, to be able to form an honest opinion that a particular position was "more likely than not" to ultimately prevail in litigation.

Instead, the American Bar Association, in its Opinion 346, adopted as a guideline the phrase "reasonably probable," as to which no quantifiable standard can be easily attached.

In looking at the standard to which the IRS is to be held when taxpayers demand reimbursement of attorneys fees, there is no requirement that IRS believe that it is "more likely than not" to prevail. Quite the reverse. The taxpayer can only collect from IRS if IRS has no support whatsoever for the position that it has taken.

Mr. Frederick W. Hickman, former Assistant Secretary of Tax Policy in the Ford administration, concurs:

The threshold provision is no answer. It is tied in this case to the understatement of tax liability. You may have a corporation that has, let's say $10 million of gross receipts and $9.9 million of expenses, and it has a $10,000 threshold. Another corporation with the same $10 million may have $8 million of expenses, and it would then have a $200,000 threshold. So even if you have a threshold, it is the wrong kind of threshold.

In any event, Mr. President, these expert witnesses raise valid questions. But my amendment goes to the other half of the mechanism by which taxpayers could avoid a negligence penalty, and that is the issue of the "more likely than not" standard.

Let me just put it in perspective for those who have just tuned in. A negligence penalty will not be assessed under the bill if the taxpayer can show that he had a belief that he was more likely than not to prevail in a controversy with the IRS.

Mr. President, I would suggest to you that it is almost impossible for a taxpayer or a tax adviser to know for certain whether or not they are going to prevail or whether or not it is more likely than not. In many cases the complaint I hear over and over again from taxpayers is that the Tax Code is just too complicated to understand, and with good reason.

For example, Vito Tanzi, an economist with the International Monetary Fund and a tax adviser to many nations, made this observation:

The tax system must be simplified. Maybe I should mention the fact that I am the author of two books on income taxation, and I spend my life advising foreign countries on their tax systems, and I cannot prepare my income tax returns each year in the United States. I have difficulty with it. So when the tax system reaches that point, there is some problem with it. And simplification would go a long way.

Imagine that. Here is a man who is an expert, and an author of two books, and he cannot even fill out his own tax return, according to his own testimony. You may say that is an isolated case. I think not.

Within the last 30 minutes, one of the foremost authorities on tax policy in this country—and I will not name him by name because I do not want to embarrass him—volunteered to me that he no longer prepares his own tax return for the same reason: that it is too complicated and too hard to understand.

In other words, we have a very complex tax system. We all know that, Mr. President, so I do not wish to labor the issue of uncertainty. Again in the interest of completeness of the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point some samples of the kind of questions which are almost impossible for a taxpayer or a tax adviser to resolve with the kind of certainty that is required to meet a more likely than not standard.

These are examples which have been prepared by my staff in consultation with certified public accountants and tax attorneys dealing with such issues as net gifts, recognition of professional corporations, noninterest bearing loans to employees, dealer's financial reserves, triangular exchanges of like-kind property, cash transfers upon divorce, property transfers upon divorce, status of dealer land under threat of condemnation, investment credit on special purpose agricultural structures, and insured casualty losses.

I would like to insert into the RECORD, for the benefit of those who will study the proceedings we are engaged in, these examples which I will not take the time to discuss in full right now, because they merely illustrate and document court decisions and revenue rulings, something we all know. That is that the Tax Code, the rulings, and court decisions surrounding the Tax Code has grown so fiendishly complex that in many, many instances the best professionals themselves are uncertain of the status of the law. That is the reason for my unanimous-consent request.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Internal Revenue Service frequently adopts an advocate or litigator, as compared to an administrator, role in order to establish its interpretation of doubtul applications of the income tax law. This approach typically involves a protracted period of litigation and uncertainty, which makes it difficult for tax practitioners, much less taxpayers, to prepare returns with any degree of certainty as to the outcome of the doubtful issue let alone meet a "more likely than not" standard. Examples include the following:

1. NET GIFTS

The Internal Revenue Service quite recently prevailed in the Victor P. Diedrich — U.S. — (1982). in which the court refused to follow long-established precedent that a donor realized no taxable gain when the Federal gift tax agreed to be borne by the donee exceeded the donor's adjusted basis for the subject of the gift. Although the donor in his capacity as an income taxpayer was aware of favorable precedents which refused to treat the transaction as a constructive sale, or other income recognition event. Again, continued litigation by the IRS made the outcome doubtful for the past several years.

2. RECOGNITION OF PROFESSIONAL CORPORATIONS

The IRS commencing with its loss in the Kintner case resisted, both in litigation and by promulgation of regulations, acceptance of a professional corporation or association as a corporation entitled to institute employee retirement and benefit plans for its principals until the IRS defeat in the case of Lawrence G. Empey, 406 F.2d 157 (10th Cir. 1969). Entitlement of a professional corporation and its officer-stockholders was doubtful until final concession by the IRS of this issue after the Empey case was decided.

3. NON-INTEREST-BEARING LOANS TO EMPLOYEES

The IRS has continued to litigate the issue of whether compensation should be imputed to a corporate employee who has received a non-interest bearing loan from his employer, to the current date, notwithstanding the case of J. Simpson Dean, 35 T.C. 1083 (1961) where the court refused to impute such income, reasoning that the borrowing employee could impute offsetting interest expense to the lending employer. This area is still uncertain, and the Congress in an appropriation act from the previous session sought to determine the desirability of continued litigation by the IRS of this issue.

4. DEALER'S FINANCE RESERVE

The IRS contended during the decade of the 1950's that an automobile dealer should accrue currently as gross income amounts withheld by the purchaser of customer installment contracts in a reserve for contingent application against repossession losses. The IRS finally prevailed after losing in five consecutive decisions in five courts of appeal, when the case of John R. Hansen, 360 U.S. 446 (1959) was decided (following a late-developed conflict in the circuits). An automobile dealer would have predicted an incorrect outcome had he relied upon the earlier cases.

5. TRIANGULAR EXCHANGES OF LIKE-KIND PROPERTY

The Internal Revenue Service continues to resist an unconditional acceptance of prearranged dispositions of property through the use of an accommodation third party trader, as non-taxable transactions, notwithstanding the old Board of Tax Appeals Mercantile Trust case and the seminal case of James Alderson, 317 F.2d 790 (9th Cir. 1963) e.g. nonsimultaneous exchanges, exchanges of limited partner interests etc. This continued litigation makes "scoring" difficult under the 51 percent preponderance test.

6. CASH TRANSFERS UPON DIVORCE

Entirely apart from the "garden variety" litigation regarding alimony v. child support issues, there is considerable uncertainty as to the alimony v. division of marital property treatment where installment payments of a principal sum extend beyond ten years and/or the remarriage of the payee former spouse. Example appears under Irving Hayutin, 508 F.2d 462 (10th Cir. 1975) case, citing the conflicting previous Bardwell and McCombs cases in this Circuit. The former spouses often maintain conflicting positions and the IRS acts as "stakeholder". The 51 percent preponderance test is quite uncomfortable here.

7. PROPERTY TRANSFERS UPON DIVORCE

The 10th Circuit has experienced considerable difficulty in the characterization of an inter-spousal transfer of property as (1) a partial or full satisfaction of a support obligation resulting in a constructive sale of the property at its value upon the transfer date, or (2) a division of marital property. In the case of Ray C. Imel, 523 F.2d 853 (10th Cir. 1975) where resort had been taken by the trial court to a local supreme court interrogatory. The court discussed its difficulty in harmonizing the earlier U.S. Supreme Court Davis case and its own earlier Pulliam, Collins and Wiles cases. Characterization as in (1) creates a capital gain for the transferor of appreciated property and stepped-up basis for the transferee. The result in (2) is no gain for the transferor and carryover basis for the transferee. This uncertainty arises in a very common situation.

8. STATUS OF DEALER LAND UNDER THREAT OF CONDEMNATION

The same Court of Appeals in the case of Tri-S Corporation, 400 F. 2d 862 (10th Cir. 1968) held that land which a taxpayer admittedly had held for the purpose of sale to customers in the ordinary course of its subdivision business was converted to investor property entitled to long-term capital gain treatment when the property became subject to a threat of condemnation. The IRS has continued to litigate this issue, with a recent victory in another Court of Appeals. Should a taxpayer be subjected to the risk of "no fault" penalty for the inability of the taxpayer of his tax adviser to predict the eventual outcome of this issue i.e. is a more-than-likely conclusion possible to identify?

9. INVESTMENT CREDIT ON SPECIAL PURPOSE AGRICULTURAL STRUCTURES

Uncertainty reigned the victor in this area until Congress enacted section 48(p), to qualify these structures as eligible investment credit property. Uncertainties in cases arising out of Colorado include Rev. Rul. 68-132 and Rev. Rul. 71-359 (potato storage shed finally accepted) and Rev. Rul. 66-157 (mushroom cellar rejected). Cases ensued involving the entire tedious "greenhouse, pigpen and chicken coop" field of battle. Some taxpayers might not have considered themselves fit to "roll the dice" on a 51 per cent more-than-likely standard or at a minimum might have thought an imposition of a "no fault" penalty basically an unfair measure in a self-assessment taxation system.

10. INSURED CASUALTY LOSS

Although the IRS announced in Rev. Rul. 78-141 that a taxpayer cannot claim a casualty loss deduction where the taxpayer had decided not to file a claim with his insurance carrier, notwithstanding the literal provisions of the section 165 regulations which refer to "reimbursed" rather than "reimbursable" casualty losses. The taxpayers have won recent cases, and the dispute proceeds, with continued uncertainty in a very commonplace transaction.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I will not labor this aspect of my argument because we all know that the Tax Code is complex and fraught with uncertainty.

The bill states that the penalty is to be waived if the taxpayer believes he is more likely than not to prevail in a controversy with the IRS. Given this complexity and the tactics regularly used by the IRS, it is difficult to determine in many instances who has the preponderance of the evidence. Therefore, my amendment very simply changes the standard. It changes it from more likely than not to substantial authority. In other words, the penalty will not be assessed if a taxpayer believes in good faith that he has substantial authority for the tax treatment which he is claiming.

To put it in perspective, let me remind all Senators that the present law in effect says if you hire a tax attorney or a CPA to do your return, that is evidence of good faith, and if you underreport your tax, you have to pay the tax, you have to pay the interest, but you are excused from the penalty. The bill in its present form says no, you have to be more likely than not to prevail. In effect, my amendment splits the difference. It does not go back, as frankly I would just as soon do, to the present law and say, "If you hire a professional, that is enough evidence of good faith." It does not go back to that but it splits the difference and says you have to have substantial authority.

Mr. President, when I first considered this amendment, I had a little different set of words in mind. I had the words reasonable grounds or reasonable basis. In other words, if a reasonable man looking at the law, at the regulation, thought a particular tax treatment made sense, that ought to be enough. I am persuaded out of deference to those who claim that the present system is abused to go to the higher standard of substantial authority. In other words, it cannot just look right, sound right, or seem reasonable, but you have to be able to show that there is actually substantial authority for the tax treatment you are claiming.

Let me kick off five reasons why this amendment ought to be adopted. First, this amendment is nearly identical to the IRS waiver position already contained in the bill. Second, this amendment is consistent with our system of self-assessment of taxes. To quote former Assistant Secretary Hickman:

> In general, this provision strikes really at the heart of the self-assessment system. I think it would be a terrible mistake.

He is referrring to the bill on which he testified on March 22:

> It is not because I do not believe there is a problem but because I think this particular kind of approach to it would contribute more to the problem than to the solution.

The third reason is that this amendment in my judgment will not substantially reduce revenues. Fourth, the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants supports this amendment and with the change will not oppose the bill. May I say so far as I am aware the American Bar Association has no opinion on this bill, no formal position. I have talked with the head of the American Bar, Jack Nolan, and I am authorized by him to say, first, the reason the bar has no position is because it has arisen too late for the bar to adopt a formal position. Second, he has authorized me to say that he is critical of the provision that now appears in the bill and has so testified both before the House and the Senate. There is no question that that is not an official position of the bar but it is the position of at least one prominent member of the bar.

Finally, this amendment will reduce the costs and complexities associated with the filing of returns. If we do not get this amendment in, then the only practical way for accountants and lawyers to protect their clients will be to go back to the red flag provision, which is the other way you can be excused from having a penalty. That means, as one of our colleagues put it, that they will literally be briefing the case for their opposition. It means they will have to document everything they do. It means a flood of paperwork and among other things it will add dramatically to the cost of preparing an income-tax return.

Let me say in conclusion, Mr. President, that the CPA's believe that the more likely than not standard will virtually force them to advise clients to adopt a level of disclosure that will encompass anything as to which there is any doubt. It will be the only way in which they can hold their risks and costs under control. Thus, the disclosure alternative to the more likely than not standard will result in the IRS being inundated with such volumes of disclosures that there will be no way in which any meaningful followup can be made at the audit level. To the extent that the IRS attempts to follow up on the voluminous disclosures, resources will be diverted from more productive audit activities. The result, in the opinion of the certified public accountants, will be that the more likely than not language not only will not produce additional revenue but actually may, because it ties up the audit resources of the Revenue Service, result in less compliance and lower revenues as the IRS finds itself bogged down in endless altercations with taxpayers who are trying to defend their position.

If we substitute the substantial authority proposal, which is included in the amendment which I and my colleagues have offered, this over disclosure effect will be substantially reduced. The CPA's have some confidence that they can deal with the term "substantial authority," but they do not have confidence that they can safely or economically determine what constitutes more likely than not.

Mr. President, with this explanation I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, how much time remains on this amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 26 minutes.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, first of all this subject matter we are dealing with in this amendment—the audit lottery penalty—has a price tag of $1.1 billion. There is going to be some considerable subtraction from that $1.1 billion by the change that the Senator from Colorado has suggested. So I think first of all we have to realize that this controversy is not just a question of semantics; it is a question of $1.1 billion.

The Senator from Colorado suggested in his opening remarks some things that I need to clarify, because they are central to the entire tax compliance legislation that Senator DOLE and I introduced in early March, of which this provision is part.

We heard this afternoon about the necessity for preserving voluntary compliance. The Senator from Colorado has suggested why voluntary compliance is in jeopardy. Tax cheating is increasing and as my friend from Colorado suggests, leading to an erosion of national character. I agree with his comments.

The Senator from Colorado went on to discuss the tax gap and the underground economy. He cited the cutting of corners by taxpayers and the prevalence of this behavior. I suggest to the Senator and to the Members of this body that these were the reasons why the tax compliance legislation was introduced. The impetus for this bill was to collect taxes from those who are not paying what they owe. Part of the legislation that we are considering that the Senator wants to modify concerns that category of taxpayers who want to pay what we call the audit lottery. I feel that my friend's amendment would restore the audit lottery by allowing high-bracket taxpayers to report taxable transactions in ways they believe to be incorrect without disclosing the facts.

This amendment would lose substantial revenue, as I have already suggested. We don't yet know precisely how much revenue would be lost. We all know that there are accountants and other tax advisers who will be permitted to continue their business of selling tickets to the so-called audit lottery that the Finance Committee attempts to eliminate. We all know that part of the business of accountants is to provide counseling to aggressive, high-income taxpayers who may substantially underpay their taxes without fear of any penalty based on the counsel received from their accountants.

It seems to me that essential to the goal of voluntary compliance and preserving the integrity of our tax system is that we do not undermine people's faith and confidence in the equity of the tax system by encouraging the audit lottery. The audit lottery permits a very small fraction of people who are very high-income individuals and large corporations to take very aggressive tax reporting positions. They rely upon the advice of high-priced tax advisers to avoid paying any tax penalty. They are willing to take the chance that they will not be one of the 1.6 percent of all taxpayers who are going to be audited. Within that category of 1.6 percent of the people who are going to be audited, we are only talking about 5 percent, individuals who are generally earning over $50,000 a year and corporations with assets of $100 million, 80 percent of the revenue produced by this penalty will come from individuals earning over $50,000 annualy and corporations with assets of $100 million.

The language being suggested here, admittedly by its sponsor, is new language. He suggests a substantial authority standard. This could create, in my judgment, enormous confusion. It would lead to litigation because it is a new and undefined notion and has not yet been clarified by the sponsor of the amendment.

The amendment would provide an enormous opportunity for high-income individuals and corporations to continue to underpay substantially their taxes without fear of a penalty. When we are taking such controversial steps as cutting the medical deduction, imposing new taxes and closing existing loopholes, to permit the very wealthy to continue to underpay their taxes, always by at least $5,000, without fear of penalty, is unconscionable.

The Finance Committee bill would not require taxpayers to resolve doubts in favor of the IRS. Even if the taxpayer believes that he will not prevail, disclosure of relevant facts will avoid the penalty. That does not involve reciting any court cases, as the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ARMSTRONG) suggested. It just means stating the facts.

The Finance Committee bill affects potentially just about 75,000 individuals, 0.08 of 1 percent of all the individuals with the worst compliance. The Senator from Colorado is correct in claiming that this is an important amendment—for certified public accountants. It will stop accountants and other tax advisors from selling tickets to this audit lottery that I have already referred to. This is a very lucrative part of many accountants' practices.

The Senator from Colorado states that the IRS will be inundated with disclosures. The Commissioner of the IRS, Roscoe Egger, disagrees. He believes that the regulatory authority granted to him will be sufficient to enable him to create a workable disclosure rule. I quote from a letter to Senator DOLE received today from the IRS Commissioner:

> The provision as reported by the Finance Committee has effectively eliminated our concern over its administrability.
>
> * * * * *
>
> Furthermore, the report language notes that while the Secretary of the Treasury has broad authority to determine the appropriate form of disclosing the taxpayer's position on an item on the tax return, that disclosure will in no way require practitioners to provide work papers to the Internal Revenue Service.
>
> The Service will work closely with the practitioner community to develop workable rules for the implementation of these provisions. We will make every effort to minimize reporting and paperwork burdens for taxpayers, practitioners, and the Service itself.

Mr. President I suggest that we are facing a large potential revenue loss as a result of this suggested language. We are working with a standard that the Senator from Colorado has suggested has not been tested. Without further clarification, I maintain, it is not a significant enough movement from existing law to encourage better compliance. I emphasize, too, that there has been an attempt by Senator DOLE and myself to answer some of the concerns that have been expressed about the legislation that was originally introduced. In my reservation to the unanimous-consent request by the Senator from Colorado, I suggested how we modified the provision based upon the suggestions in the testimony that was taken in March.

The Finance Committee bill has already been substantially modified in three major areas to respond to these legitimate concerns. One modification has been the disclosure standard. The second has been the information of our standard to "more likely than not." The third modification was to provide waiver authority for the Commissioner of Revenue. Most importantly, I get back to the initial point that the Senator from Colorado raised. He stated that voluntary compliance is in jeopardy and cited the need for Congressional action to correct that perception. I would like to emphasize the fact, that very wealthy, high-income people and very well-endowed corporations will no longer be able to play the taxpayers' lottery if our provision is retained.

Our legislation is directly related to the fact that many people see the very wealthy avoiding taxes. The wages earned by the working men and women of this country are subject to withholding, and there is 99 percent compliance by working men and women. Why should we have less tax compliance by those most able to pay? With this legislation, we are focusing on the people earning over $50,000 annually. There should not be encouragement to play the lottery, and there obviously ought to be a penalty for those who either do not believe that their position will prevail, or at least disclose the relevant facts. I would hope the Senator would consider some modification of his amendment to address these concerns.

I reserve the remainder of my time and suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes, I withhold.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ARMSTRONG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It is unusual in proceedings in this Chamber that the Senator from Iowa and I are in disagreement. It is obvious we are, and it is my hope that the Senator from Georgia, who has arrived in the meantime, could perhaps help us break this deadlock. I am pleased for that purpose to yield to him 5 minutes.

Mr. MATTINGLY. I thank the Senator from Colorado.

Since I am cosponsoring the amendment, I thought I should rise to support it. I am pleased to cosponsor this amendment. The amendment was offered by the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ARMSTRONG). He and I both are opposed to tax cheaters. Moreover, I favor the compliance improvements which will in turn reach individuals who attempt to evade taxes.

However, I am opposed to the language incorporated in the bill before us here today. The language as included in the bill reported by the Finance Committee will without a doubt have a very chilling effect on the relationship between a taxpayer and his or her tax adviser.

Mr. President, I think the approach offered by our amendment is reasonable. It is a very reasonable compromise between the present law and the language included in the tax bill.

The substantial authority standard would be fair to the taxpayer, the tax adviser, and the Internal Revenue Service.

What this amendment will change is the onus will be on the IRS and not the taxpayer. It is the IRS responsibility to do this job and not what was intended in the language promoted by the Finance Committee.

Mr. GRASSLEY. If the Senator will yield, I would like to address that point. The IRS has to audit before anybody is affected by this legislation.

Mr. MATTINGLY. Right. This is just a move by them to move that away from the IRS and put it back on the taxpayer and the tax adviser, which I think everybody agrees with.

Mr. GRASSLEY. We are just asking for the facts. That is all we are asking for, just the facts.

Mr. MATTINGLY. I think the taxpayers are giving the facts to the IRS.

Mr. GRASSLEY. If they do give the facts on the return, they do not pay the penalty. It is just that simple—just the facts.

Mr. MATTINGLY. But the real question is the standard that they use.

Mr. GRASSLEY. It is not a case of the standard, because that is an alternative defense to the penalty that they can use if they do not report on the more likely than not basis.

Mr. MATTINGLY. The amendment that has been offered by the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Georgia and Senator LONG and Senator BAUCUS is a reasonable approach and a fair approach. What we are trying to attain in taxpayer compliance is fairness and equity, so that is what this amendment does. It attempts to make it more fair.

I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, it has been a good debate, and the issue is well understood.

I want to acknowledge in closing something I said at the very outset, and that is that the problem of taxpayer compliance is a real one and that equity and justice among taxpayers as well as the financial needs of the Government require that we improve the taxpayer compliance.

I believe that Senators owe a debt of gratitude to the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Kansas for bringing before us a really excellent piece of taxpayer compliance legislation.

The fact that I think they have erred in one particular provision, this one relatively small part of their overall suggestion, does not in any way diminish my agreement with their overall effort and my admiration for them in doing so.

I do want to again make this point, however. I am not proposing with respect to the present law to go back to the way things are. I am saying let us split the difference at the present time if we hire a lawyer or hire a CPA in effect to escape any negligence penalty. That does not seem unreasonable to me, but I am not saying go all the way back to that. Just saying to go as far as requiring taxpayers to show that more likely than not they will prevail is too tough a standard and that prudent men will not move that far, in one jump anyway. It is a standard which the professionals in the field say they cannot meet, and therefore they will be required to go to this disclosure approach which the Senator from Georgia is concerned about, as am I, which has been very burdensome not only on taxpayers but on the IRS as well.

The Senator from Iowa made a point which I would like to explore for just a moment. He suggested that the term "substantial authority" is a new term. In fact, exactly the opposite is the case. The term "more likely than not," I am told, appears nowhere in present statutes. I asked specifically this question of the head of the American Bar Association's Tax Section: "Why does the term 'more likely than not' appear in the statutes?"

He told me, "it does not appear any place."

I am not a lawyer, and I do not sit around reading lawbooks, but that is what he told me.

I said, "Where does it come from?" He said, "It comes from the department's circular 230." I said, "Well, what is that?"

It turns out that that is a controversial proposal; it has not even been adopted by the department. It is a proposal which has been so controversial that it has been pending since 1980.

So those words, "more likely than not," are not settled issues. They are not terms that have been extensively litigated and defined by courts. They are controversial, new words in the law.

By contrast, the term "substantial authority" was selected because, I am advised, those words have in fact been litigated and have been the subject of judicial determination.

I put to the legal advisers who assisted me on this, including Mr. Nolan of the Bar Association, this question:

"How much litigation has there been on it?" He said, "Well, enough so that it can be determined judicially what these words mean."

I do not think we need to fear the words "substantial authority."

Mr. President, unless there is more to be said, I am prepared to vote. I look around the Chamber and find that relatively few Members are here. I am reluctant, therefore, to suggest a voice vote. I would ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. The Senator from Kansas wanted to speak on this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under whose time will that be charged?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Equally divided.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I think I am about out of time and so the effect of equally dividing the quorum call would be to shut me out at the end. Could we charge the time to the bill?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes. How much time is——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The quorum call will be charged equally on the bill.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, how much time do I have on this side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 13 minutes on the amendment.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SYMMS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be temporarily laid aside so that we might consider an amendment of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. JOHNSTON).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pending amendment will be temporarily laid aside and the remaining time will be reserved.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOLE. That will be the pending business after the disposition of the Johnston amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1108

(Purpose: to provide reasonable limits on the current tax exemption of possession source investment income)

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Louisiana (Mr. JOHNSTON), for himself, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. JACKSON, and Mr. D'AMATO, proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1108.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 259 beginning after "thereof" on line 2 strike all up to but not including line 11 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "65 percent," and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph

"(C) TRANSITIONAL RULE.—In applying subparagraph (B) with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1982, and before January 1, 1985, the following percentage shall be substituted for "65 percent":

"For taxable years beginning in calendar year:	The percentage is:
1983	55
1984	60.".

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, this is a technical amendment relating to—I mean it is a technically difficult amendment, it is more than a technical amendment, but it relates to—section 936 of the Internal Revenue Code which is the economic base for Puerto Rico.

Mr. President, this is the first of two amendments.

PASSIVE (INVESTMENT) INCOME

In its recommendations with respect to section 936 of the Internal Revenue Code, the possession tax credit, the Senate Finance Committee has made drastic changes in a program which has been the key to Puerto Rico's economic development for over 40 years. The Finance Committee has recommended two changes. First, with respect to passive (investment) income, the Finance Committee has recommended eliminating by 1985 almost 80 percent of the credit now available.

By raising the amount of passive income excluded from qualifying for the credit from the current 50-percent limit to 90 percent.

In the committee report on this particular change, the reason given is that the Treasury Department reports on 936 found "continued tax exemption of excessive possession source investment income." This finding was based on the 1979 Treasury Department report on the 936 program, the latest report available. This data, now over 2 years old, does not take into account the substantial regulatory changes which have been implemented by the Treasury Department of Puerto Rico in coordination with the U.S. Treasury Department in the Puerto Rico 936 funds market.

These changes, promulgated in December 1981 and effective February 1, 1982, have assured that the 936 funds accumulated by the 936 corporations in Puerto Rico through term deposits in the local banking system are utilized to finance the local economy, as Congress intended when it approved section 936. First, past leakages of 936 funds into the external money markets have been curtailed. Second, there has been a significant, important increase in the channeling of these funds by the financial intermediaries into productive investments in the local economy.

The new regulations have limited the use of 936 exclusively in the lending and investment sectors within Puerto Rico through a tightened definition of "eligible activity," refocusing on those activities which increase production and employment in the island. Moreover, the cost to the Puerto Rican Government of funds for these purposes has significantly declined as a result of the program.

These regulatory changes have been described in detail in a position paper prepared by the Treasury Department of Puerto Rico on the committee recommendations, and I ask unanimous consent that this paper be printed in full in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the paper was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PUERTO RICO TREASURY DEPARTMENT—POSITION PAPER ON EFFECTS OF LEGISLATIVE AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 936 OF THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE APPROVED BY THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE

* * * * *

The presumed tax impact of the amendments is based on the naive assumption that changing the determination of taxable income and the allocation of that income among parent corporations and subsidiaries would not change levels of production and the location of productive facilities. But in fact, even minor changes in the 936 system of taxation can cause serious damage to Puerto Rico's industrial production, leading to lower than estimated Federal tax revenues, decreased imports from the U.S., increased migration of unemployed Puerto Ricans to the mainland, and generally increased Federal expenditures both on the mainland and in Puerto Rico. In addition, damages to financial institutions in Puerto Rico due to the loss of 936 funds would be widespread, and the consequent costs to Federal financial regulatory institutions would outweigh the hypothetical revenue gain.

Any revenue increase on the part of the Federal government due to these proposals must be compared with accompanying losses and increases in expenditures. Our preliminary calculations show an initial increase in expenditure to the Federal government of $375 million for 1984, in addition to certain losses on the part of financial regulatory agencies, as discussed below. Moreover, the Puerto Rico Treasury is likely to lose tax revenues of about $187.9 million during the same period, and employment on the Island is likely to fall by at least 15,000 jobs leaving an unemployment rate of more than 25 percent. The rest of this position paper consists of an elaboration of these calculations and a description of further negative effects on the Puerto Rico financial sector.

Before entering into details of the calculations, however, it should be emphasized that the damage to be expected from the present legislative proposals may be far greater than simple calculations can indicate. Since investors will invariably interpret these proposals as percursors of greater change, the final effects on industrial promotion and the future of the Island economy will be more serious. Indeed, for that reason, much of the damage may already be done. The current unemployment rate in Puerto Rico is 23.6 percent, real GNP has not grown for the past 18 months, and production in every sector has fallen during the past year. The only sector showing some resiliance has been the manufacturing sector, which has been buoyed by recession-resistant high technology promotions. Unfortunately, that sector is precisely the one put in danger by the legislative amendments under consideration. This situation can hardly be considered a legacy for the Administration's policies of lowering effective taxes on business and fortifying the free enterprise economies of the Caribbean Basin.

FISCAL AND ECONOMIC EFFECTS

This portion of the paper consists of a recalculation of expected Federal revenue increases, a calculation of Federal budgetary increases, a description of probable fiscal losses to Puerto Rico from the proposed possessions corporation limitation, and a description of probable effects on the industrial sector in Puerto Rico.

The calculation of Federal tax expenditure

In estimating the tax impact of the proposed measures, the Senate Finance Committee evidently employed the same methodology utilized in the U.S. Treasury's Annual Report on the 936 System—i.e. the calculation of "tax expenditure". This term refers to the taxes an entity would pay under a hypothetical full tax regime if its profits were the same as under some exempt regime. In the case at hand, tax expenditure refers to the tax an exempt Puerto Rican subsidiary would pay if it were producing precisely the same output but were taxed at the full U.S. rate. Applying this methodology to components of the income of these corporations thus assumes that those components would not change if they were fully taxed. Now this supposition is evidently false: the very reason for the existence of tax exemption in Puerto Rico is to change industrial production—to increase employment, output, and profits on the Island. To remove the tax exemption even partially would obviously lower employment, production, and profits.

For the purposes of arriving at a rough estimate of the impact of this measure on the Federal budget, it is necessary to know by what amounts employment, production, and profits would fall with its implementation. Lacking time for a complete study of the problem, however, a rough estimate will have to suffice. Elasticities derived from the econometric model of Puerto Rico indicate that relatively minor changes in the 936 system could lower industrial production in Puerto Rico by 10 percent from its expected value in 1984, while more far reaching changes could lower it by 25 percent, with the precise decrease depending on the final decrease in the profitability of mainland investment in Puerto Rico. Taking the more conservative estimate of 10 percent and assuming (also conservatively) that corporate profits would fall by a proportion no greater than that of production, then the original estimate of the Federal tax impact must be lowered by 10 percent. The estimate would then be $900 million for 1984 as opposed to the $1.0 billion estimated.

Against this smaller than expected gain must be set the concommitant Federal budgetary losses of the measures under consideration, as shown in the following section.

Federal budgetary costs

Estimates by the Governor's Economic Advisory Council based on a hypothetical 10 percent drop in Puerto Rico industrial production indicate that Federal expenditures would increase by $375 million during 1984 due to legally mandated transfer payments to Island residents and increased welfare payments on the mainland. This latter category would be due to decreased imports of mainland goods to Puerto Rico, which would cause decreased production on the mainland, leading in turn to more unemployment and the loss of Federal tax revenues. These costs are not itemized here, but are available in a separate study. They are conservative estimates in that they do not include difficult-to-project items such as increases in Medicare and increases in Puerto Rican migration to the mainland. The major components of the provable cost increases are unemployment benefits, social security payments, and losses of mainland tax revenues.

Subtracting these costs from the gross revenue estimated for the PCL leaves a partial net effect of $525 million for 1984. Even this amount must be decreased further because of probable costs to the FDIC and the FSLIC if these measures were passed, as shown in the second half of this paper. But first let us address an issue of considerable importance to the Government of Puerto Rico—its own tax revenues.

Impact on tax revenue in Puerto Rico

Though revenue losses to the Puerto Rico government are not a direct offset to possible Federal revenue gains due to the PCL, they do nevertheless deserve consideration. Such losses would be due to four sources—the toll gate tax, the corporate income tax, the banking franchise tax, and the personal income tax. In order to arrive at an estimate comparable with the Federal tax impact above, we will use the same basic data implied by the impacts estimated by the Senate Finance Committee. The impact of taxing profits allocable to intangibles is estimated by the Committee at $800 million for 1984, the first full year of taxation, which implies that about half of projected taxable income would be due to intangibles. (A 45 percent effective tax rate implies $1.77 billion in taxable profits from this source, which is about 50 percent of the estimated total of $3.6 billion in 936 profits for 1984). In the same manner, a $200 million estimated revenue increase due to taxation of passive income implies that 12.5 percent of total 936 income derives from that source. These proportions can be applied directly to projected Puerto Rico tax collections, yielding an estimated tax loss due to the passage of the PCL measures.

The largest tax loss to Puerto Rico with the passage of these measures would be from the toll gate tax, which is imposed on 936 profits upon repatriation. By 1984, the revenues from this tax are expected to increase to about $100 million per year from their present level of about $85 million (see Table I). In accordance with our earlier scenario, a 10 percent decrease in industrial production would lower this figure to $90 million. Applying the percentage losses of taxable income derived above to the remaining $90 million of expected tax collections yields a revised expected revenue of $33.8 million. The tax loss to Puerto Rico, then would be $66.2 million in toll gate taxes alone.

Corporate income tax losses due to the passage of this measure may be smaller, but they are even more significant for other reasons. Puerto Rico has just recently begun partial taxation of previously fully exempt manufacturing corporations. Revenues from this source grew from $15 million in 1979 to $45 million in 1980, the first full year of taxation under the new program, and they are conservatively estimated to grow by at least 10 percent per year over the next decade. At that rate, revenues would have been $66 million in 1984. Applying the 10 percent loss due to decreased industrial production and the additional losses due to the direct effects of the proposed PCL measures, the expected revenue is reduced to $22.3 million. Losses of corporate tax revenue to Puerto Rico, then, would be $43.7 million.

The third source of revenue loss to the Government of Puerto Rico is the Banking Franchise tax, basically an income tax on commercial banks. Revenue from the franchise tax was expected to be $30 million during 1984, but with the nearly complete loss of 936 funds which would accompany the passage of the amendments under consideration, it is safe to assume that there would be no taxable income for that year on the part of the banks. Revenue loss, then, is the entire projected figure of $30 million.

Lost revenues due to lower personal income tax collections are more difficult to estimate, since there is no simple means of determining which workers would lose their jobs, but a minimum loss can be determined using the projected manufacturing wage bill for 1984. Reducing the projected wage bill of $2.4 billion by 10 percent and multiplying by the average effective personal income tax rate of 20 percent, we arrive at a revenue loss of $48.0 million from this source. As with our other calculations, this is a conservative estimate of revenue loss, since the lost jobs would certainly be in the higher paying capital intensive sectors (e.g. pharmaceuticals and electronics).

The total loss of tax revenue to Puerto Rico with the passage of the PCL measures, therefore, would be at least $187.9 million, composed of a $66.2 million loss of toll gate revenues, a $43.7 million loss of corporate tax revenues, a $30 million loss of banking franchise taxes, and $48 million in personal income tax revenues. Since each item is conservatively estimated and because we have not included excise tax losses and various multiplier effects, this estimate should be considered a bare minimum expected loss. Even so, the sum represents 9 percent of the Government of Puerto Rico's total operating budget for 1983, the loss of which would be a considerable blow to an already beleaguered budget.

TABLE 1.—MONTHLY TOLLGATE TAX COLLECTIONS

[In millions of dollars]

	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982
January		12.4	9.6	5.1	10.4
February		5.2	1.1	2.8	7.0
March		1.8	3.0	5.2	8.0
April	2.1	6.4	1.9	1.6	6.8
May	4.7	2.5	0.7	2.3	3.4
June	42.2	28.7	54.6	23.7	34.0
July	0.3	0.4	2.3	3.4
August	0.3	1.3	0.6	0.6
September	0.3	2.4	1.9	0.3
October	0.3	0.8	0.9	3.3
November	0.7	0.9	5.5	5.6
December	5.9	4.5	3.8	4.0
Total	56.8	67.3	85.9	57.9

Source: Department of the Treasury, Office of Economic Affairs, San Juan, Puerto Rico.

In order to round out our discussion of the damage the PCL would cause to the Puerto Rico economy, we now turn to the showpiece of Puerto Rico's economic development program—the industrial sector.

Impact on the industrial sector

Section 936 has played an extremely important part in the Puerto Rico industrial development program. Puerto Rico has advanced since 1940 from a poverty-stricken Island heavily dependent on low-wage sugar production to a modern, semi-industrialized economy. Much of the credit for this successful record goes to the Island's program to attract mainland private industry to Puerto Rico through Puerto Rico's Industrial Incentive Acts, which build upon Federal tax benefits provided to qualifying U.S. corporations locating in Puerto Rico. These Federal tax benefits, provided under section 936 of the Internal Revenue Code, have been essential to the rapid growth in United States private investment which has been the backbone of the Island's development.

Most of this investment has been in the manufacturing sector, which provides jobs for about 153,100 workers, almost 20 percent of the Island's total employment. They are stable jobs and often provide opportunities for acquiring technical skills. The wages paid are relatively high. In 1978 average employee compensation was $10,697 in U.S. "936" corporations as opposed to average private sector compensation of $7,158 in all Puerto Rican manufacturing. These jobs have been created at a low cost to the Federal government: if we assume that 80 percent of these jobs would disappear under Federal taxation, Federal taxes lost per job are about $2,150, a low figure in comparison with the cost of CETA Title VI jobs at $13,024 per participant, or $39,072 per person placed successfully in a permanent job in 1977.[1]

These jobs are much needed in an area where the unemployment rate now is at 22 percent and has been rising. Since Puerto Ricans can migrate freely to the U.S., it should also be noted that higher unemployment here can be expected to compound the problems of U.S. cities.

In creating jobs, Section 936 has been an important tool. While motivations for investment are as varied and complex in Puerto Rico as they are on the mainland, most informed observers of the Island's economic scene believe that tax exemption is an extremely important reason for industrial investment in Puerto Rico. The island has few natural resources which can be profitably exploited by industry. Most firms which have located on the Island ship their final products to, and obtain their raw material from, points on the mainland which are between 900 and 1,400 miles from the point of manufacture. Energy cost—especially for electricity—are also somewhat higher than on the mainland, due to the almost exclusive reliance of the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority on oil-fueled power generation. It will be several years before alternative energy sources will begin to change these unfavorable energy costs.

For these reasons, and because of the uncertainty that Puerto Rico's present political status poses, investors considering locating in Puerto Rico generally look for a post-tax rate of return higher than on the mainland before coming to the island, something which Section 936 has been able to provide.

Let us now consider the impact of elimination of tax-free treatment of intangibles. Section 482 of the United States Internal Revenue Code has been the key provision covering intercompany pricing. It permits the Internal Revenue Service to "distribute, apportion or allocate gross income, deductions, credits, or allowances" between "two or more . . . . businesses . . . owned or controlled directly or indirectly by the same interest", if it determines "that such distribution, apportionment or allocation is necessary in order to prevent evasion of taxes or clearly to reflect the income of any of such organizations, trades or businesses." Since most large United States-owned corporations operating in Puerto Rico are subsidiaries of parent companies located on the mainland, this provision, its regulations, and interpretations are very important to manufacturing on the island, serving as a guideline in determining the extent to which corporate income will be considered as originating in Puerto Rico, and thus subject to Section 936 and Puerto Rico's industrial incentives laws.

The proposed change in the rules of the game, which would allocate all income from intangibles to the mainland parent, is having an obvious and harmful effect on the investment climate in Puerto Rico. The high technology firms, which include the drug and chemicals industry, electronics firms and scientific instruments, are expected to be the most adversely affected. Not only the big companies with higher stakes (pharmaceuticals and electronics), are affected, however, but many smaller companies as well.

These firms not only provide 39.4 percent of manufacturing employment at present, but have been the main source of new manufacturing jobs. This industry group has expanded employment by 37 percent between 1976 and 1981. Electronics alone, the largest high technology employer with 20,800 jobs in 1981, grew 56 percent over the same five year period. Employment in manufacturing as a whole, however, has barely grown at all (5 percent total growth) since 1976, reflecting declines in labor intensive industries such as apparel and food processing due to high wages and greater import competition. These trends make it clear that Puerto Rico cannot return to the earlier era of labor intensive industry if incentives for high technology firms are weakened. Rather, industrial growth would decline overall and many jobs would be lost.

Recent trends in investment substantiate this conclusion. Because recent actions by the IRS and Congress have increased uncertainty about the "rules of the game" for investors in Puerto Rico, many firms are re-evaluating investments in Puerto Rico; others are increasingly reluctant to undertake new commitments, and many are not even considering investment in Puerto Rico, due to the degree of uncertainty with respect to the profits to be derived from Puerto Rico and the possibility of further changes in the future. Several representatives of various industries have already advised the Government of Puerto Rico that new projects or plant expansions are being shelved until the issue is resolved. The ultimate effect on the economy of Puerto Rico, if existing companies are discouraged from expansion and new companies from locating manufacturing facilities in Puerto Rico, could run in the billions of dollars and thousands of employees. Such a drop in manufacturing investment would worsen recessionary forces within the U.S. economy and increase unemployment on the island. As noted previously, in the past the U.S. has spent over $10,000 per participant in job creation programs: an expenditure much less efficient than the "936" program, which creates jobs both in Puerto Rico and in the U.S.

Adverse effects on the balance of payments also would aggravate inflationary trends. Since precise data on the reexport abroad of Puerto Rican goods shipped to the mainland are not available, the following figures are indicative only of the order of magnitudes involved. Total Puerto Rican merchandise exports to the mainland were $6 billion in 1980; the U.S. balance of payments deficit (1980) was $34 billion. If we assume that all goods produced in Puerto Rico and shipped to the U.S. would otherwise have been produced abroad and imported, we find a substantial balance of payments effect. A fall of 20 percent in Puerto Rican exports under these assumptions would increase the deficit by almost 4 percent. This change would put additional downward pressure on the international value of the U.S. dollar. Thus the role played by Puerto Rico in keeping U.S. corporate operations within the greater U.S. system, a major benefit accruing presently under section 936, would be seriously weakened ending the proposed legislation.

This first portion of our paper has shown that the negative fiscal and economic effects of the proposed legislative amendments to section 936 of the IRC very nearly outweigh the hypothetical revenue gains. The next portion show that the losses to Federal financial regulatory agencies would definitely outweigh any supposed gains.

EFFECTS ON FINANCIAL MARKETS AND INSTITUTIONS

This part of the position paper addresses itself to the provision of the legislative proposal to the effect that the current rule permitting a qualifying 936 corporation to earn up to 50 percent of gross income for the three year base period from passive (investment) income be changed to permit only a maximum of 10 percent. We understand that this particular provision was approved at least partly because of the feelings that the passive income provisions comprise an area of particular inefficiency within the overall 936 program. While we do not agree with this point of view, we would also like to point out that this provision, by itself, would have far reaching, and potentially disastrous consequences on local financial markets and financial institutions operation in Puerto Rico.

The provision amending the 50 percent rule would cause a massive withdrawal of 936 deposits presently in the Puerto Rico banking system for reasons we shall explain below. A change of this magnitude in the deposit levels of depository institutions operation in Puerto Rico could seriously damage the already precarious economic climate of the island by denying it a substantial volume of loanable funds at low interest rates. Furthermore, it could have negative effects on the federally insure depository institutions themselves.

The economic and social cost of the above, coupled with the probability of significant expenditures by some federal regulatory agencies, underlines the probability that a significant if not a major part of the projected revenue effect of this legislation could well be neutralized due to expenses incurred by the federal government as a result of its economic side effects.

Regulatory and operational framework of 936 market

Section 936 was enacted by Congress in 1976 as a substitute for Section 931 of the Internal Revenue Code. The concept and intent embodied by Section 936 was developed by the joint efforts of the Congress, the U.S. Treasury and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico with the objective of fostering employment and investment in Puerto Rico and bringing back to Puerto Rico—and ultimately to the United States—the surplus funds which the 931 corporations had been investing abroad. These objectives have been accomplished since Section 936 was adopted. As a result, billions of dollars that were invested abroad flowed back into the Puerto Rican economy and to the United States. For example, during fiscal year 1981-82, 936 Corporations paid dividends of approximately $2 billion to their U.S. parent corporations.

[1] Estimate derived by the staff of the Governor's Economic and Financial Council from figures in the "Manpower Report of the President," 1980.

The Treasury Department of Puerto Rico, in coordination with the U.S. Treasury, has assured that the 936 funds accumulated by the qualifying corporations in Puerto Rico through term deposits in the local banking system are utilized to bolster the local economy significantly, as Congress intended when it drafted Section 936. Our current supervisory function has resulted in availability of these funds to the commercial banks, federally chartered savings and loan associations and other financial institutions doing business in Puerto Rico at significantly lower cost than funds from alternative sources. There is evidence that these interest cost economies to the financial institutions are being reflected in increasing degrees at the borrower's level in a lower interest rate charged to them by the banking system.

On December 17, 1981, the Department issued two regulations and three rulings in a major step toward a better coordination among all participants in the 936 funds market. This was followed by the issuance of a series of circular letters, which have presented the Department's position on numerous points raised under the regulations and rulings. This regulatory package, effective since February 1, was carefully developed by our Department after extensive consultation with the local financial industry and with the U.S. Treasury. Its purpose was to improve previous local regulations in order to obtain results beneficial to the economy of Puerto Rico, as Congress had intended when it approved Section 936. Essentially, the package was designed to bring about the maximum utilization of 936 funds in the economy of Puerto Rico, to obtain a general decline in the interest rates paid by local borrowers of 936 funds, and to develop a longer term and more stable 936 deposit structure in the local banking system.

Two positive results of the new regulatory package have been the evident curtailment of the apparent leakages of 936 funds into the external money markets and a significant increase in the extent to which these funds are channeled by the financial intermediaries into productive investments in the local economy. The need for improvement in these areas was addressed by previous reports by the U.S. Treasury to Congress covering the operation of the Possessions Corporation System. That we are succeeding in our goals is evidenced by the rapid and significant decline of the coefficients of the local 936 certificate and deposit rates to the external market rates (generally eurodollar CD rates)—a drop of from approximately 95 percent in December of 1981 to much lower levels today, as shown in the graph on the following page.

It is evident that in December of 1981, when the details of the Department's regulatory package became public knowledge, the 936 rate paid by the banks operating in Puerto Rico was finally divorced from its past close relationship with external market rates. This was caused by the closing of the principal arbitrage avenues used by some local financial institutions to place 936 funds abroad. Naturally, the dramatic lowering of the 936 CD rates and the stricter parameters for the lending and investing of those funds in Puerto Rico has been a significant boost to the local economy in the current environment of high interest rates and recession.

There is also direct evidence that more 936 funds are being used in the local economy. To appreciate why this is so, an understanding of the term "Eligible Activity" is of fundamental importance. It has been defined by Regulation to comprise the major lending and investment activity that can be funded by financial institutions with 936 funds. Eligible Activity is such lending or investing activity with 936 funds which tends to increase production, income and employment in Puerto Rico.

Looking at Table II below, we see a breakdown of the major items comprising total Eligible Activity and the corresponding amounts of lending in the local banking system which could be potentially funded with 936 deposits. Total Eligible Activity has increased from approximately $6.5 billion in February to $7.8 billion in May of 1982. Considering that total 936 funds channelled into financial institutions stood at approximately $5.5 billion, it seems reasonable to expect that the banks and S&L's financed most of their Eligible Activity with 936 funds. This is so since 936 funds use is limited by legal and regulatory requirements to financing this type of activity within Puerto Rico. Moreover, the bank's and S&L's ability to finance their Puerto Rican lending and investment operations with locally generated, low-cost funds has made possible substantial economic development arising from their incremental lending and investment activities.

TABLE II.—TOTAL ELIGIBLE ACTIVITY, 1982

[In millions of dollars]

	February	March	April	May
Investment and loans to government of Puerto Rico	1,505.2	1,792.6	1,751.3	1,797.1
Commercial loans	2,925.5	3,438.2	3,542.3	3,690.3
Eligible consumer loans	206.1	227.9	279.6	238.5
Mortgage loans	1,195.5	1,194.2	1,161.0	1,147.0
Real estate investment	108.2	98.7	98.3	98.8
Others	603.7	618.8	786.7	804.6
Total	6,544.2	7,370.4	7,619.2	7,776.3

Amendment to the passive income provision

In this section we will quantify the possible effects of the amendments to the current passive income provisions in Section 936. The Department's data shows that the average balance of the 936 funds placed with all the financial institutions operating in Puerto Rico (commercial and savings banks, federally chartered savings and loan associations and investment bankers) stands currently at approximately $5.5 billion. (This figure is not the same as total eligible activity in Table II because not all eligible activities are financed with 936 funds).

For simplicity, we will assume that the maximum of 50 percent of gross income from passive income (investment) sources is currently being substantially utilized by the qualifying corporations. The corporations' principal investment options for obtaining this exempt income are depository institutions' certificates of deposit (CD's), investments in Puerto Rico obligations, GNMA's on residences in Puerto Rico, and indirect placements in these same investments through repurchase agreements with investment bankers.

If the 50 percent maximum allowed from passive income were to be reduced to 10 percent, every investment option sourcing such passive income would eventually have to suffer a proportional drop in the 936 funds invested in it. This would occur because the change represents an 80 percent decrease in the total passive income that will qualify as tax exempt for federal tax purposes. Given that bank CD's are by far the largest investment for obtaining qualified investment income, it can reasonably be expected that 936 corporations' investment in those CD's would also drop by 80 percent. For purposes of quantifying the possible effects of these changes, we should bear in mind that an 80 percent reduction in the actual 936 deposit and placement level of $5.5 billion would represent a drop to the vicinity of $1.1 billion, a net decrease of $4.4 billion. The remaining deposits in the local banking system would probably be even lower because the 936 corporations, in making their investments, normally leave a "safety" margin of at least 10 percent in their overall passive income so as not to jeopardize their 936 status.

Finally, it should be emphasized that these effects would partially occur even if the passive income restriction were not modified. This is because the proposed change in the treatment of intangibles could have similar (though perhaps smaller) effects on the financial system by drying up the earnings source for the deposits on which passive income is earned.

Effects on financial markets and participating institutions

We must stress that in our opinion as regulators of the local banking industry and financial markets, any change in 936 deposit levels in the financial institutions even approximating these magnitudes would have numerous and far-reaching negative effects on the economy as a whole and in the financial markets and participating institutions in particular.

If an amount approximating $4.4 billion of 936 funds is taken out of the local financial institutions, these institutions will of necessity have to substitute other funds in order to continue their Puerto Rico credit and investment operations, which include very significant medium and long-term commitments. In the case of the U.S., Canadian and Spanish multinational banks and of the major local banks, these 936 funds will probably be replaced by regular funds acquired in the Eurodollar or U.S. financial markets. Naturally, since local 936 deposit rates being paid by commercial banks are significantly below current market rates, this substitution process will represent substantially higher interest costs to the financial institutions which must eventually be passed on to the local borrowers. Given the current differential of about 4 percent between 936 and Eurodollar rates, we estimate that the proposed change in the passive income requirement would add at least $160 million to the cost of loanable funds in Puerto Rico.

The passing on to the Puerto Rican borrower of the higher cost of funds to the banks will have harsh results in view of the significant interest payment increases and the decreasing income and debt repayment ability in a recessionary economy. In the case of a bank that may have lent 936 funds for medium and longer terms at fixed rates, the fund substitution will represent a negative carry as regards cost of funds, a problem identical to the one that has put the savings and loan industry on the verge of collapse.

We must emphasize, however, that this first scenario corresponds only to the case of the major multinational banks that can make this type of large scale funding substitution. This may not necessarily apply in the case of the medium and smaller size financial institutions which may lack, for a number of reasons, everyday access to the external financial market. Therefore, a number of financial institutions in Puerto Rico will experience significant negative effects on their operating results if a massive outflow of 936 funds from the banking system were to take place.

It is in fact possible to quantify the effects of massive withdrawals of 936 funds from the banking institutions in Puerto Rico. For example, as can be seen from the table III below, 936 deposits represent over 40% of the total deposits of commercial banks operating in Puerto Rico, thus, representing the principal component of such banks' funding.

TABLE III.—SELECTED FINANCIAL RATIOS, ALL COMMERCIAL BANKS OPERATING IN PUERTO RICO, 1982

[Dollar amounts in millions]

	Total assets	Total deposits	936 deposits	936 deposits total assets (percent)	936 deposits total deposits (percent)
February	$13,785.2	$11,654.0	$4,909.8	35.62	43.13
March	13,498.9	11,284.5	4,803.3	35.58	42.57
April	13,526.3	11,324.1	4,668.1	34.51	41.22

It is important to note that approximately 70 percent of such 926 deposits are short-term in maturity (i.e. under 180 days), and thus subject to withdrawal within a relatively short period of time.

If the proposed amendment to the passive income provision were to be approved, within a short period (of less than 6 months) approximately 32% (60% of 40%) of the total deposits in the Puerto Rican commercial banking system would be withdrawn. Such withdrawals would most certainly cause an unprecedented strain on the liquidity of the commercial banks—a strain that many institutions would have the utmost difficulty withstanding.

This liquidity problem is further illustrated by the Table IV below, which compares 936 deposits to the aggregate amount of "Cash and Due from banks" in the Puerto Rican banking system. (Cash and Due from Banks are, of course, the principal sources of a bank's liquidity.)

TABLE IV.—SELECTED RATIOS ALL COMMERCIAL BANKS OPERATING IN PUERTO RICO, 1982

[Dollar amounts in millions]

	Cash and due from banks [1]	936 deposits	936 deposits as percent of cash and due from banks
February	$4,281.9	$4,909.8	114.66
March	4,000.7	4,803.4	120.06
April	4,056.3	4,668.1	115.08

[1] Includes currency and cash, checks on banks in Puerto Rico, other cash items, and balances due from other banks in Puerto Rico, United States, and foreign countries. It should be noted that the balance sheets of federally chartered (i.e., national) banks in Puerto Rico do not contain significant cash and due from banks balances since, in contrast to the Puerto Rican chartered banks, such balances are less essential to their overall liquidity position.

To the extent that substantial 936 deposit withdrawals render certain banks so illiquid that they must be closed, the deposit run at other institutions would be fueled by the double impact of their own 936 withdrawals coupled with an increasing concern over the Puerto Rican banking system's overall soundness.

We believe it is important to note that the projected revenue effect of this legislative measure, which is represented as $500 million for fiscal 1983, could quite possibly in fact be negative, because of direct cash payments and other substantial expenses incurred by Federal regulatory agencies required to be made in an attempt to ameliorate the financial problems brought on by the proposed amendment. The failure and consequent mergers or liquidations of from three to four Savings and Loan Associations could result in a net loss to the FSLIC of between $300-400 million (assuming all depositors are paid). The failure of two to three commercial banks could push the combined costs to the FDIC and FSLIC well in excess of $500 million, conservatively stated. In the event of a prolonged crisis, it would be difficult to find buyers willing to assume the assets of distressed banks at attractive prices. Such a situation would also undermine, for years to come, the faith of the public in Puerto Rican financial institutions, as well as cause the local banking system to regress to asset size and deposit levels of previous decades.

We believe this legislation should not be promoted further without considering the views of agencies such as the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, as well as others with supervisory or deposit insurance responsibility over the affected institutions.

COST OF PUBLIC DEBT

The effect of the amendment to the passive income provisions on public sector borrowing must also be touched upon. This Department's regulations concerning use of the 936 funds by banks and other depository institutions set forth the requirement, among others, that each eligible depository institution is required to own and hold at all times not less than thirty percent (30%) of the daily monthly average of its total eligible deposits invested in obligations of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or any of its instrumentalities or political sub-divisions. At least one third (⅓) of that investment requirement is required to be held in obligations of and directly negotiated with the Government Development Bank for Puerto Rico (GDB).

In addition, this Department's regulations concerning use of the 936 funds by investment bankers, brokers and similar institutions provide that these institutions at all times own and hold not less than 30% of the daily monthly average of the total assets transferred, assigned or otherwise delivered through repurchase agreements involving 936 funds, in obligations of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico or its instrumentalities.

Table V, below, shows that in May 1982 the eligible institutions had invested approximately $1.75 billion in Puerto Rican government obligations, of which roughly $734.6 million represented deposits with the GDB at lower interest rates. This has represented significant economies for the public sector through the GDB. The investments in obligations of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico represented not ony purchases of government bonds and notes but also a myriad of government and municipal financings for different projects and situations.

TABLE V.—LOANS AND INVESTMENT IN OBLIGATIONS OF PUERTO RICO GOVERNMENT, 1982

[In millions of dollars]

	February	March	April	May
Government development bank	612.6	822.6	734.9	734.6
Government of Puerto Rico	1,043.5	1,054.2	1,072.8	1,020.7
Total	1,656.1	1,876.8	1,807.7	1,755.3

It should follow that upon the loss of roughly 80% of their 936 deposits, these investments would also be scaled down accordingly by the participating institutions. This would represent a loss to the public sector of significant revenue sources arising out of the lower cost 936 fund deposits. More importantly, it would necessitate rolling-over a substantial amount of government financing at significantly higher interest cost.

The combination of these two factors could result in material increases in debt servicing cost for the public finance sector of the Commonwealth as well as corresponding revenue decreases to the GDB. We must also mention the probable loss of the considerable liquidity factor that the pool of 936 funds have afforded Puerto Rico in the availability of a ready market to absorb short and medium term public debt at a time when the long-term municipal bond markets have been practically closed to the Commonwealth because of the extremely high interest rate environment.

Beyond the short run effects mentioned above, then, the proposed changes would aslo reduce the Island's long-run growth prospects by reducing its ability to borrow to finance infrastructure for economic development.

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSIONS

What should have been a minor modification in Section 936 to correct excessive tax benefits of a handful of large companies has become instead a highly destructive proposal which, if enacted into law, would largely dismantle Puerto Rico's highly successful postwar economic development program by discouraging industrial investment. The effects of the proposed legislation are so far-reaching that their total financial costs exceed any possible gains to the Federal Treasury. The additional nonfinancial costs in loss of confidence in Puerto Rico as an investment site, as well as losses in the confidence of holders of Puerto Rican bonds, must also be counted as very high. This confidence, which has been built up through many years of efforts by the Puerto Rican government, has already been undermined by the proposed amendments to the 936 legislation, and the passage of the proposed changes will further undermine the belief of investors in the stability of the system and in the Island government's ability to comply with its promises of long term tax exemption.

Let us review the major areas of damage which passage of either of the proposed amendments alone would cause. First, they would result in a sharp drop in industrial investment, employment, and production in Puerto Rico. This is particularly so as the provisions are aimed heavily at the most profitable and fastest growing subsectors of Puerto Rico's industry. As Puerto Rico's entire economic development program has been built around manufacturing, this change would be a sharp blow in itself. Beyond this, the measure would also erode Puerto Rico's tax base and bond ratings, making long-term development efforts by the government more difficult. Even worse, it would undermine the stability of the Island's banking system by causing a massive withdrawal of funds from local banks—many of which are branches of mainland financial institutions.

After a careful review of the evidence, it is difficult to imagine how Congress could include these measures as part of a revenue-raising package, as they would have far-reaching consequences which will place heavy demands on the Federal budget at many different points. The loss of manufacturing investment in Puerto Rico will worsen poverty and unemployment on the Island. Not only will this change lead to reduced U.S. exports, with a resulting decline of economic activity and a loss of tax revenues on the mainland, but it will also cause increased migration by Puerto Ricans to large U.S. cities, increasing the strain on welfare programs. Federal unemployment insurance and social security taxes are also collected in Puerto Rico, and the proposed amendments would erode the base on which these taxes are collected.

The Puerto Rico financial system is highly integrated with that of the mainland, and any measures which threaten its stability also will affect the U.S. as a whole. Virtually all of the banks operating in Puerto Rico have some form of Federal deposit insurance. Likewise, many local mortgages are guaranteed by Federal programs such as that of the Veterans' Administration. The proposed legislation can only increase the strains on these programs by causing massive outflows of funds from the Island. In a period of austerity such as the present, the Federal government cannot afford ill-conceived and poorly-thought-out measures which do not really improve the Federal budget deficit.

Finally, a brief comment on geopolitical considerations seems appropriate here. The administration is interested in combating the spread of Communist influence in the Caribbean area, while demonstrating the benefits of free enterprise. An economically strong Puerto Rico will not only support America's efforts in that region in countless ways, but it will also serve as an example to the whole area of what free enterprise can do. Passage of the proposed amendments, by greatly weakening Puerto Rico's economic development program, will mean nothing less than the loss of this valuable support in the Caribbean region.

Mr. JOHNSTON. On pages 15 through 27 of this paper, the issue of investment or passive income is specifically addressed, and I direct the Senate's attention in particular to the chart on page 20 which shows the growth in productive uses of various eligible activities between February 1 and May 1, 1982, when the changes were in effect.

Of these trends, the biggest growth has been in commercial loans, which increased from $2.925 billion in February to $3.690 in May, or by $760 million—approximately 25 percent. The second biggest increase has been in investment in and loans to the government of Puerto Rico which increased from $1.505 billion in February to $1.797 billion in May, an increase of $290 million—roughly 20 percent.

As described on pages 20 to 27 of the report cited above, the Finance Committee's recommendations with respect to passive income are expected to result in a drop of 80 percent, or about $4.4 billion, in 936 funds currently deposited in local financial institutions. In the case of major international, U.S., and local banks, many of these funds probably would be replaced by other funds acquired in either the Eurodollar or U.S. financial markets, but these replacements would be acquired at a substantially higher interest rate, adding at least $160 million to the cost of loanable funds in Puerto Rico. A number of smaller institutions, however, are not expected to be able to replace 936 funds, since these institutions lack everyday access to the external financial market.

The Puerto Rican Treasury Department has quantified the impact of the expected changes. The results are startling and disturbing. Since 40 percent of the current bank deposits are comprised of 936 funds, and since 70 percent of these deposits are in 180-day or less maturities, the Puerto Rican Treasury Department believes a liquidity crisis could be anticipated. If only three or four savings and loans associations in Puerto Rico failed, merged, or were liquidated, the FSLIC (Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation) could lose, assuming all depositors are paid, as much as $300 to $400 million in 1 year. Moreover, if only two or three commercial banks failed, the combined FDIC-FSLIC cost in 1 year would be in excess of $500 million.

In addition, the newly enacted regulations require that each eligible depository institution holding 936 deposits invest 30 percent of those deposits in Government obligations. Moreover, it is further required that one-third of these investments be held in obligations of, and directly negotiated with, the Government Development Bank for Puerto Rico. Similar regulations exist for investment bankers, brokers, and like institutions. Altogether, these institutions, as of May 1982, had invested about $1.75 billion in Puerto Rican Government obligations, with $734.6 million invested with the GDB at lower interest rates. This requirement has resulted in significant savings for the public sector through the GDB and in significant savings on the Puerto Rican deficit. If 80 percent of these deposits were withdrawn, as is anticipated under the Finance Committee proposal, debt-servicing costs would increase and the GDB would lose significant revenues. Moreover, long-term growth prospects for Puerto Rico would likely be reduced as a result of higher costs of borrowing by the Government for infrastructure development.

In contrast to the Finance Committee proposal, my amendment would raise the current 50-percent limit to 65 percent. In other words, my amendment would up the current limit on investment income by 30 percent in contrast to the 80-percent increase proposed by the Finance Committee by 1985. This amendment would reduce the amount of 936 funds reinvested in the local banking system in a reasonable manner and would not run the risk of wide-scale, and ultimately costly, disruptions in the current financing system. It also takes into account the major changes in passive income treatment which were put into place in February of this year—just 5 months ago. Finally, by reducing the amount of passive income which would be protected from Federal tax by the possession credit and by forcing 936 funds into taxable investments, my amendment would generate significant revenues.

Mr. President, I believe this is a fair and reasonable compromise. It addresses the concerns raised by the Finance Committee while taking into account the bold actions already taken by the government of Puerto Rico. My amendment is supported by the government of Puerto Rico and I hope the distinguished floor manager will agree to accept it.

Mr. President, for the edification of my colleagues, section 936 of the Internal Revenue Code is what was called the bootstrap program. It was a program begun by the late and great Gov. Muñoz Marin who saw in Puerto Rico what was described as the poorhouse of the Caribbean, poverty which was truly grinding, and in the American family was totally unacceptable.

So Muñoz Marin, who is regarded as the George Washington of Puerto Rico, together with the Congress of the United States put together a plan to lift Puerto Rico economically by its bootstraps.

The results of this program, Mr. President, have been singularly successful. They have raised Puerto Rico to the highest per capita income status of anywhere in the Caribbean, other than the U.S. Virgin Islands.

So Puerto Rico has about 60 percent of the per capita income of the United States.

Mr. President, this program, this section 936 program, which in effect allows a domestic U.S. corporation to create a subsidiary in Puerto Rico and have the income from that subsidiary in effect tax free within Puerto Rico, provided it employs people and it generates business activity within Puerto Rico, as I said, has been singularly successful.

If you compare the costs per job of that program with the other Government job programs, it is really quite excellent. A 1979 Treasury report says that the cost for employees is $12,600. When you include other employees omitted from that report the actual cost is $10,150 per employee, which compares to $14,766 per year per employee in the work incentive program or $13,000 per year in the CETA program.

Mr. President, there you are with a program which is working, and working well in Puerto Rico. I say working well—it is working well in the sense that it is the lifeblood of the Puerto Rican economy. the fact of the matter is, however, that Puerto Rico has a present unemployment rate of 23.7 percent. No real investment was made last year, and 25,000 jobs, all CETA jobs, were cut last year. So we have in Puerto Rico today a situation similar to the Great Depression in the United States back in the 1930's, almost 24 percent unemployment.

As against this background, Mr. President, the Committee on Finance has offered an amendment which will have truly devastating and truly destabilizing effects upon the 3.2 million inhabitants of Puerto Rico. It is an action taken without hearings. It is an action which is opposed by the Department of Treasury which is otherwise a supporter of this bill. But the amendments to the 936 program were specifically criticized by Secretary Regan or excepted, should I say, from the endorsement of the tax bill by Secretary Regan.

Mr. President, in effect, the result of the Committee on Finance amendment will be, according to the Department of Treasury in Puerto Rico, a cutback in what we call the 936 companies of between 10 percent and 25 percent of the jobs which they furnish, and the 936 companies in turn furnish 85 percent of the manufacturing jobs.

So, in effect, what this means, Mr. President, is that in a commonwealth which has 23.7 percent unemployment you are going to take away between 10 percent and 25 percent of the manufacturing jobs.

It is estimated that the immigration increase into the United States will be up to 49,000 in this year of 1982 as a result of this action, and these are American citizens in Puerto Rico who have a right under our law to come to this country, and as against this kind of unemployment rate unquestionably the increase in immigration will be devastating.

Morever, the Federal cost, according to the Puerto Rican treasury, the Federal cost to the United States will be $375 million per year in unemployment benefits, social security payments, and tax loss.

So, Mr. President, it is no wonder that the Secretary of the Treasury, Donald Regan, has sounded the alarm bell with respect to this provision, because the savings to the Treasury are illusory. You can say how much you save under section 936, but there has been no statement as to what will be the cost to the Treasury under unemployment, social security, and tax loss.

Mr. President, there have perhaps been what some would call abuses in the 936 program. Certainly the pharmaceutical companies have received a higher degree of subsidy than some would say is necessary, although I think if you look at the reports which provide the factual bases for these criticisms you will find that those reports are wrong in a number of instances and the true figures are somewhat different.

But, nevertheless, many Members of this body do see the program as being overly beneficial to those particularly in the pharmaceutical area.

What this amendment and the following amendment will do will be to compromise between what is the present law and what the Finance Committee has done. The Finance Committee has projected tax savings of $400 million in 1983, $1 billion in 1984, and $1.9 billion in 1985 from this change. This compromise will save from the present law $230 million in 1983, $480 million in 1984, and $530 million in 1985. The difference will be a net cost in fiscal year 1983 of $200 million, between what this compromise would do and what the present bill saves, and $500 million in 1984.

Mr. President, those are, as I say, the direct savings or the direct costs, if you will, under section 936, and those do not reflect what the alternative costs would be under social security, unemployment, and tax loss or the increased burden upon other States of the United States caused by the increased immigration.

Mr. President, even with this compromise, if it is enacted, we have very difficult problems in Puerto Rico and, indeed, in the whole Caribbean.

This very night, Mr. President, the President of the United States will speak to some 125 representatives of Caribbean nations, talking about the Caribbean Basin Initiative under which more than $1 billion will be spent to try to provide stability, to try to head off the festering scourge of communism in the Caribbean. And as against that background, Puerto Rico, which has 3.2 million American citizens and economic conditions equivalent to the Great Depression, is sought to be undermind and conditions made worse and, it is not too much to say, Mr. President, that the makings of a revolution are possible by this action in this tax bill.

Mr. President, I say to my colleagues, I do not have any Puerto Ricans in my State, and I daresay there are very few Senators who do. It is a very easy area to overlook. It is a very tempting target to say, "Aha, we can save some money by taking these rich subsidies which go to the pharmaceutical companies."

But, Mr. President, I tell my colleagues that section 936 is the whole economic basis of the economy in Puerto Rico. They no longer have agriculture. Tourism is a very small part of the Puerto Rican economy. If we want to really undermine the whole Puerto Rican economy, then pass this tax bill in its present form, because it will make a terrible situation unbearable. It will set the scene for political repercussions that could do much, much more harm than the Caribbean Basin Initiative could ever do.

I hope, Mr. President, that the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee will look with favor upon this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. JOHNSTON. If I am in control of the time, I yield to my distinguished colleague such time as he may need.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank my friend from Louisiana who has made the case succinctly and forcefully.

I would like to put myself at the disposal of the distinguished chairman of our committee to ask him in what way we can be of assistance to him in this matter.

There are perhaps two prefatory remarks. First, as he knows, this provision in the Tax Code is one of the very oldest in existence. Section 936 dates from 1921. It has been in place now for 60 years. It is integral to the economy of the Commonwealth. It antedates the Commonwealth status in point of fact. The distinguished Governor of the Commonwealth, Carlos Romero-Barceló, has written to me, as I am sure he has to many other Senators and perhaps also to the chairman, to make the simple point that 20 percent of the employment in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico is based upon industrial investments that were prompted by section 936.

I would make a further point—and this is only a personal one—to the chairman that in the interval between the passage by our committee of this measure and today, I have been visited by the heads of some of the major corporations in this Nation who are active in Puerto Rico. As it happens, their particular arrangements are such that they are not hurt by the proposals in the committee bill.

That being the case, they felt more free to come forward and plead, "Don't do this if you can possibly not do it. It will be ruinous to that economy and to that policital relationship."

The second point I would make to the distinguished chairman is one I have made before on this floor when, with great difficulty and in the end with great generosity, he dealt with the problem of food stamps and the eligibility of Puerto Ricans, who are American citizens, for food stamps. I think in the end he showed his generosity as he always does. I had to say on that occasion, as I would say on this occasion, that if the American citizens of Puerto Rico were represented on the floor of the U.S. Senate, legislation such as this could not pass or would be most unlikely ever to pass.

It was not possible to hold hearings. The chairman knows the constraints with which he was required to draw up the tax bill in one 17-hour session of the committee.

It would be easy to stand here and thunder away. I could be dramatic about the matter. I do not know that the occasion requires that. What the occasion requires is to appeal to the judiciousness and fairmindedness of the chairman. Let me ask him: Do we not have a special responsibility to the Commonwealth to reconsider the provisions in the committee bill in conference or here on the floor if the chairman is ready. We do not want to put up a proposition and make it a matter that would divide this Chamber.

The distinguished Senator from Louisiana has said that very few Members of this Chamber have Puerto Rican citizens in their States. Some do. But, of course, most Puerto Ricans live in Puerto Rico and most Kansans live in Kansas.

They are American citizens but are not represented in the Senate. That places upon us a special responsibility. I wonder, having made the points we wish to make, if we might hear from the chairman.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the letter from Governor Romero.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
LA FORTALEZA,
San Juan. Puerto Rico, June 24, 1982.

HON. DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN,
Senate Finance Committee,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: Over the course of the next several days, you will be addressing yourself to the thorny problem of raising new revenues as mandated by the recently passed Senate Budget resolution. As always, one seemingly attractive source for new monies is an alteration, or termination, of Section 936 of the Internal Revenue Code which provides tax credits for United States firms operating in Puerto Rico.

I am writing today to ask that Section 936, which is the backbone of Puerto Rico's attempts to create jobs and reduce our dependence on transfer payments, not be changed in any way. As long as Puerto Rico is not a state, special incentives such as this section are necessary and should be retained in Federal statute.

Section 936 works. In a relatively efficient way, it creates jobs in Puerto Rico. Manufacturing employment today on the island totals 153,000 jobs, the majority of which come from plants set up under the 936 provisions. The 153,000 jobs are 20% of our total island's employment.

Not only does Section 936 create jobs, but over the course of the past sixty years, since the predecessor to this section was first included in the tax code, the kinds of jobs created have changed.

Originally, the jobs created were low-wage, unskilled jobs in the apparel, tobacco, and furniture industries. Today, the jobs created are in highly skilled, sophisticated industries such as electronics, scientific instruments, pharmaceuticals, and chemicals. Increasingly, Puerto Ricans have also been filling the technical and managerial positions as well. This change in the type of jobs created and filled by Puerto Ricans benefits not only the industrial worker, but the whole fabric of Puerto Rican life as the increases in knowledge spill over to the rest of the island's economy and society. This has been expressly recognized by President Reagan through his pledge to use Puerto Rico's expertise as a basic part of the proposed Caribbean Basin Initiative.

There is the mistaken notion that Section 936 benefits only Puerto Rico. The rest of the United States benefits as well. In 1980, Puerto Rico used some of the income created from these jobs to purchase $5.1 billion worth of goods from the nation, namely the 50 states. Included in these purchases were many of the raw materials needed to create the finished products on the island. The $5.1 billion supported 153,000 jobs on the mainland, a number exactly equal to the number of manufacturing jobs existent on the island. Our jobs are, in effect, your jobs. In your state, New York, Puerto Rico purchased in fiscal 1980 $486 million worth of goods, directly supporting 12,678 jobs.

Altering or eliminating 936 would negatively affect Puerto Rico, but since we are so tightly linked to the mainland, there would also be negative effects on the rest of the nation.

First, should employment on the island decline by even 10%, there would be a $1 billion decrease in the Gross National Product of the United States.

Second, Puerto Rico's unemployment level would increase far beyond its current 23%, but unemployment on the mainland will also increase by approximately 30,000 jobs.

Third, Federal and State welfare costs, as well as unemployment benefit costs, would also increase.

Fourth, the flow of Puerto Ricans leaving the island in search of better employment opportunities would accelerate. Last year, 12,000 U.S. citizens from the island moved to the mainland. This year, if current trends continue, 49,000 will do so, There are attendant welfare and social costs with these changes which have yet to be measured, but are surely to be felt by the states in which these citizens settle.

Simply put, I firmly believe that Puerto Rico and the rest of the United States can only lose if Section 936 is altered or changed in any way by the Finance Committee.

There are further points to be made on the question of increased revenues, the initial reason for changing the section. It is assumed that jobs will be created on the mainland by the corporation which now produces goods in Puerto Rico. However, there is no guarantee that these jobs, currently held by Americans, will not simply flow overseas to nations where labor costs are low and environmental standards not as strict. Indeed, it seems a simple fact that this will happen given the economic structure of these foreign countries.

Finally, and very importantly, it is assumed that the revenue lost is that of the Federal Treasury. In fact, the revenue lost is that of the Treasury of Puerto Rico. This is true because Puerto Rico has primary source jurisdiction to tax 936 corporations and these are currently exempted from our corporate tax laws. Should 936 be repealed, and we subject these corporations to our normal 45 percent corporate tax rate, the Federal Government would allow a foreign tax credit to be given to these firms for moneys paid to Puerto Rico. This would leave little or no revenue to be collected by the U.S. Treasury.

When all factors are calculated; when all the secondary and tertiary effects of an alteration of Section 936 are considered, it is entirely likely that the Federal Government, and the State you represent, will realize little or no gain. Puerto Rico, however, will be greatly, and negatively, affected.

While I hesitate to point out alternative methods of revenue enhancement, I do wish to make clear that I have already attempted to raise revenues in Puerto Rico by first, increasing energy taxes, and by delaying the third year of our state tax cut. I had already implemented two years of such cuts, but due to the overwhelming need to raise local revenue, I have postponed the third year's decrease.

In closing, let me point out that we are working closely with the Administration, and in particular, the Treasury Department to attempt to solve, administratively, some of the problems which 936 currently presents. We are not unmindful of them, but feel that the administrative solution is the correct one rather than a legislative action which might not, in truth, accomplish your aims, but will surely frustrate our goals of creating jobs, reducing further our dependence on transfer payments, and of continuing the development of Puerto Rico.

With best regards, I am

Cordially,

CARLOS ROMERO-BARCELÓ.

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Moynihan-Johnston amendment. I join in opposing the Finance Committee proposal to virtually eliminate the 936 taxation system. That proposal is unfair and unwise, and it might well cause irreparable damage to the Puerto Rican economy.

It is clear that there are serious inequities and inefficiencies in the 936 provision. It has been abused by some businesses to reduce their taxes without actually benefiting the Puerto Rican economy.

But it makes no sense to throw out the baby with the bathwater. In other areas, the committee bill closes tax loopholes and achieves worthwhile reforms without sacrificing legitimate tax incentives. The Moynihan-Johnston amendment achieves the same result for section 936—it eliminates the abuses while preserving the justifiable features of this tax incentive.

I have said in the past that more efficient ways exist to assist the Puerto Rican economy than through the use of the 936 system of taxation. I am proud of my support in Congress for fair tax and budget policies toward the people and enterprises of Puerto Rico. But the complete elimination of section 936 today is particularly unjustifiable, coming as it does on top of numerous other assaults on Puerto Rico under the unfair Reagan economic policy.

The Puerto Rican economy is already in danger. Unemployment is now at depression levels of 23.6 percent. Real gross national product has not grown for 18 months; production in every major sector save one has declined during the past year. And the only area showing any resilience at all—manufacturing—will be the hardest hit by the Finance Committee's proposal.

Puerto Rico has suffered heavily under the Republican and Reagan budgets of the past 2 years. Its economy lost $400 million alone because of cuts in CETA, education, food stamps, and health care. The CETA cuts put 25,000 people out of work. And the reductions in SBA, EDA, and FHLA programs deprived the economy of needed capital.

The virtual elimination of the 936 system under the committee bill will compound these burdens and add significantly to the island's economic crisis. The financial costs will be extremely high. Puerto Rico will lose almost $200 million in tax revenues—amounting to 10 percent of the 1983 budget. The withdrawal of about one-third of the total deposits in the Puerto Rican banking system could lead to the failure of several savings and loan associations and commercial banks.

The human costs of this proposal are equally large. An additional 15,000 jobs will be lost, pushing unemployment up over 25 percent. The cost will be measured not only in higher joblessness, but in the increased poverty, the increased burden on the already over-burdened system of social services, and increased migration out of Puerto Rico.

The savings alleged in the committee bill cannot be considered in a vacuum. True, more tax revenues will flow into the Federal Treasury, but the cost of social service programs in both Puerto Rico and the United States will go up as well. In fact, Federal intervention to avert banking failures could cost in the hundreds of millions of dollars and offset a substantial share of the revenues anticipated by the committee proposal.

I support many of the tax reforms contained in this legislation. But the committee bill asks Puerto Rico to pay too high a penalty as the price of salvaging the third year of President Reagan's tax cut for the rich. The people of Puerto Rico have already suffered from the Reagan budget cuts. They should not be made to suffer also for the Reagan tax cut. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I will be very pleased to address the specific questions of the Senator from New York, although I would like to make a general statement first. I think it will satisfy some of the concerns of all the Senators who have an interest in this.

As I understand, first of all, there are still negotiations going on between the Governor, Secretary Regan, Assistant Secretary Chapoton, and others. I met with the Governor yesterday. They had one so-called compromise. Unfortunately, that one lost most of the revenue. I think they are still working this afternoon trying to reach another solution. But if not, it is my hope, as I will make clear, if there is some flexibility in conference, we can do it then. If not, the Caribbean Basin initiative should be on the floor later this year. We have hearings scheduled, I believe, on August 2. I assume that there will be tax provisions in that program and it might be appropriate to address section 936 then if we have not yet resolved it.

I believe we are making progress because of the efforts of the Senator from New York, the Senator from Louisiana, the Senator from Massachusetts, and others, but we have not yet reached the point where I can say with certainly that it will be clarified by the time this bill, hopefully, passes the Senate.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOLE. Yes.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Do I take it his general disposition at this moment is to accept whatever agreement can be reached between the executive branch and the Commonwealth, barring something that is beyond any expectation?

Mr. DOLE. There is one caveat. Maybe this should not be a concern, but we have a mandate from the Senate on $98.3 billion in revenue. My concern would be that if, in fact, the administration, which has a little different view on section 936 than others, including myself, would make some agreement that would take a couple billion dollars away from $98.3, I would trust the administration would recommend where we would find the $2 billion and not just say, "Well, we have made the agreement and we will leave it up to Senator DOLE and others on the committee in the Senate to figure out where they will get the $2 billion."

We are still hoping that they might come in with something that might really solve the problems with this section.

If I could finish my statement, I will then be happy to yield for further questions.

With reference to the Senator's comment that the committee provision dealing with section 936 would not be in this bill if Puerto Rico were a State, I do not know of any State that would get this kind of treatment. I doubt, if Puerto Rico were a State, that we would have section 936 at all.

The problem is that section 936 has been abused by a few companies. This abuse is one of the most egregious of abuses that this bill attempts to correct. I certainly understand everyone's concern. This Senator has tried to be helpful to Puerto Rico on food stamps, medicare, other programs, and I know that the former chairman of the Finance Committee had the same concern. But these amendments that have been offered will not stop the abuse of section 936 and will sacrifice much or all of the revenue in this provision.

Just for the record, section 936 is a special section of the Internal Revenue Code. In fact, it was amended as recently as 1976. It provides substantial incentive to set up manufacturing facilities in Puerto Rico and other U.S. possessions. In essence, provided certain qualifications are met, the income of the 936 is exempt from U.S. tax. That is not bad. In recent years this provision has been subject to abuse by the intangible intensive industries, particularly the drug industry.

In fact, there was a rather extensive report in the Washington Post 2 or 3 months ago about some of these abuses. Those industries have transferred to their 936 corporations patents, trademarks, and other intangibles that "justify" an enormous markup of product prices. Having done so, the drug companies then take profits attributable to U.S. research and marketing efforts and attempt to shift those profits to Puerto Rico where they are exempt under section 936. The costs of developing the patents and the research and development credits associated with them are, meanwhile, kept in the United States to offset against taxable U.S. income. A clearer case of having your cake and eating it, too, has seldom existed in the U.S. tax law.

All the IRS is trying to do is to reallocate these profits under the general reallocation section of the code, section 482.

Virtually every major drug company has been under attack for this practice. Two have gone to trial. The outcome of this is uncertain and has hindered Puerto Rican development for 2 years or more. In the meantime, the drug companies take the position that they can shift these huge profits to Puerto Rico and claim that they are exempt. The results of this aggressive stance have been staggering. In 1978, the most recent year for which we have figures, the revenue loss per Puerto Rican drug company job exceeded $43,000 while the wages paid were barely over $13,000. For nine particularly greedy companies the revenue loss per job exceeded $100,000. The drug industry as a whole soaked up 50 percent of the revenue loss of this provision and in return supplied only 15 percent of all Puerto Rican manufacturing jobs and approximately 3 percent of all Puerto Rican employment.

The Government loses over $500 million to provide only 3 percent of Puerto Rico's employment. This is not a good bargain for us or even a worthwhile deal for Puerto Rico, although it is a tremendous deal for the drug industry. Moreover, according to the Treasury Department, intangible-intensive industries, like the drug industry, do very little to encourage the development of related industries in Puerto Rico, because their customers and suppliers are not in Puerto Rico.

In addition, section 936 permits these companies to earn up to 50 percent of their total income solely from passive investments such as stocks and bonds. This overly liberal provision has permitted the accumulation of far more liquid investments than the 936 corporations themselves might ever need. In addition, it is unclear that these monstrous sums sitting in Puerto Rican banks have been of any help in providing capital for new Puerto Rican businesses. The latest information available from the Treasury shows that as 936 corporations stash away these large sums of tax-exempt dollars in Puerto Rico, equally large sums flow out of Puerto Rico. While recent changes in Puerto Rican banking regulations may change this, we cannot be certain of their effect.

These are obvious abuses, Mr. President. Faced with these abuses, the Finance Committee Republicans' first impulse in our caucus was to repeal section 936 completely or at least to limit the 936 credit of $10,000 per Puerto Rican job. At the urging of Treasury—and they still have a little different position from ours—we reconsidered and decided on the two-pronged provision in the bill.

The bill preserves section 936 for bona fide uses in Puerto Rico. It eliminates the abuses.

The committee provision does two things. First, it lowers over a 3-year period the percentage of passive income a 936 corporation may shelter from 50 percent to 10 percent. Second, the provision does not permit income attributable to intangibles developed outside of Puerto Rico by related persons—that is the U.S. parent of the 936 corporation—to be allocated to the 936 corporation after a formal transfer of the intangible and made, therefore, tax exempt. I do not think anybody would quarrel with that change.

The second part of the provision is, in principal part, a codification of the IRS litigating position in using section 482 to reallocate this income to the U.S. developer of the intangible. If the committee provision is enacted, it would do no more than make explicit exactly what the IRS argues is the proper interpretation of the present law. Income attributable to intangibles developed by the 936 corporation in Puerto Rico or purchased from unrelated parties could still be allocated to the 936 corporation. The committee provision will end the abuse; it makes sense and I believe it will work.

That is where we are now. Then we have the Johnston, Moynihan, and Kennedy amendments and others who have offered amendments. While they are well meaning, they will not work.

I think the amendments do make a step in the right direction. But I am afraid that they will not be anything more than a band-aid to stop a hemorrhage. Of course the drug companies may feel they have better band-aids. In any event, I do not mean by this criticism to suggest that the committee provision is the one and only solution to the problem. There are other efforts being made, but we believe ours is a workable solution.

If the House comes up with a clear alternative that works, certainly I will do the best I can in conference, considering the concerns of the Senator from New York, to try to be fair and work it out. I hope this assurance will satisfy the Senators so they might not press for a vote on their amendments at this time.

If the amendment is not withdrawn, and if the second amendment dealing with income from intangibles is offered, I hope that they will be defeated.

Neither amendment will do the job; each will lose substantial revenue. Indeed, it is possible that an intangible amendment along the lines proposed by Puerto Rico might actually lose revenue. Still, if a compromise position must be reached with the House, these amendments may at least provide some concepts to help us find that compromise. But at the moment, there is no compromise that redresses the abuses and saves the revenues wasted by section 936. Until we see that compromise, we must reject purported compromises that raise no revenue at all.

PASSIVE INCOME

The amendment offered increasing the passive income limit from 10 percent (as it would be under the committee bill) to 35 percent will effectively gut the committee provision. There is no justification for this amendment. Sheltering from U.S. tax the passive interest income from Puerto Rican bank accounts does little to provide Puerto Rican jobs—a teller or two maybe, but not real jobs. The amounts needed for the day-to-day operations of manufacturing facilities should be easily supplied from the 10 percent provided for under the committee bill. Just a glance at the balance sheets of 936 companies reveal that, because of this provision, they do not look like normal manufacturing companies. "Real" assets as a percentage of total assets for 936 companies is 15.3 percent; for U.S. manufacturers it is more than twice that or 35.1 percent. Retained earnings in 936 companies represent 77 percent of total liabilities and shareholder equity; for U.S. manufacturers the comparable figure is only between 39 and 41 percent. There is simply no reason to continue to permit 936 companies to act as investors.

Indeed, if the purpose of this amendment is to permit a 936 corporation to be a passive investor in order to encourage more capital formation in Puerto Rico, we need only look at experience under the present rules to see how poorly the present law provision works. According to the most recent figures available, net capital flows into Puerto Rico have not been increased by this benefit. Instead, funds which flow into Puerto Rico through 936 companies' financial investments tend to flow right out again through the banking system. While recent changes in banking regulations may, and I emphasize may, help, there is no evidence that this problem will be solved.

INTANGIBLES

While the Senator from Louisiana has not offered his amendment regarding income from intangibles, I would like to address a few of the problems I have with the so-called compromises we have seen.

These compromises, while in a very modest way recognizing that an abuse exists, do not go anywhere near far enough to eliminate the abuse. I understand that the Treasury and the Puerto Ricans are working out what they hope will be an amicable and appropriate solution to the problem. I understand that at least one of the compromises we have seen reflects at least portions of some areas of agreement between Treasury and Puerto Rico. I further understand, however, that Treasury has yet to work out some significant details on this provision.

In any event, Treasury did not support what we did in committee and I must urge that we not support any compromise, whether or not supported by Treasury, that does not clearly eliminate the abuse and also raise the substantial revenues that the abuses lose. First, if the compromise permits a taxpayer to elect to continue maintaining his aggressive stance under present law for any period, no revenue will be derived from this provision during that period. Indeed, because some taxpayers may be better off than under present law by electing whatever compromise treatment during a phase-in period, a compromise with such a provision will probably result in a revenue loss. Unless some means is discovered to provide for a revenue pickup for any taxpayer who is allowed relief during a phasein period, no phasein should be considered.

Second, the basic format of every compromise we have seen is overly generous to the drug companies. Any option that permits manufacturing intangibles to be transferred to Puerto Rico provided a cost-sharing payment is made by the 936 corporation to its U.S. parent may be too generous and does not settle much of the underlying problem of what income is properly attributable to those intangibles once transferred. A compromise that permits a 50-50 profit split between the 936 corporation and its parent after a cost-sharing payment has been made, may serve as a good starting point for considering what an appropriate rule is. Without further study, however, I cannot say that any of these options solve our problems. Indeed, I note that even the most stringent I have seen loses approximately two-thirds of the revenue pickup of the committee bill and I further note that this seems overly generous.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have certain facts and figures on this subject printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(PUERTO RICAN) POSSESSION CORPORATIONS CREDIT LIMITATION—PRESENT LAW

Like other U.S. corporations, a section 936 or possession corporation is technically subject to Federal tax on its worldwide income. However, a special credit available under section 936 fully offsets the Federal tax on income earned by such a corporation from a trade or business and certain investments in Puerto Rico. The U.S. parent of the 936 subsidiary can, in turn, eliminate tax on dividends repatriated from the subsidiary through the dividends-received deduction. This elimination of U.S. tax on possessions corporation profits has encouraged substantial development of assembly operations in Puerto Rico, particularly in the drug and electronics businesses where intangibles (patents, tradenames, etc.) developed in the United States but transferred to Puerto Rico justify high mark-up of product prices. The average revenue loss in 1978 for each employee of the drug companies in Puerto Rico exceeded $43,000 (it is now estimated to be over $50,000).

A controversial regulations project under section 482, intended to prevent shifting of income from the taxable U.S. parent corporation to the untaxed 936 corporation (primarily through the transfer to the 936 corporation of intangibles developed in the U.S.), has been somewhat stymied.

Every major drug company with Puerto Rican operations is under audit. Most have large deficiencies assessed against them. Two have gone to trial; a Tax Court decision is expected within a year.

FINANCE COMMITTEE BILL

Income of a corporation that qualified for the possession credit would not include income allocable to intangibles (patents, trademarks, etc). Such income would, under regulations, either be allocated to the U.S. shareholders of a qualifying corporation or, to the extent allocable to foreign shareholders, taxed to the 936 corporation as U.S.-source income. In addition, the current rule that permits a qualifying corporation to earn up to 50 percent passive income would be changed to permit only 10 percent passive income. This change would be phased in over 3 years. Similar rules would be provided for U.S. corporations effectively exempt from tax because they are inhabitants of the Virgin Islands.

Revenue effect

Fiscal year:	Billions
1983	$0.5
1984	1.0
1985	1.2
1986	1.4
1987	1.5

WHY THE COMMITTEE BILL MAKES SENSE

The credit encourages capital- and R&D-intensive, not job-intensive industry in Puerto Rico.

The credit costs much more to the U.S. Treasury than it benefits Puerto Rico. For example, in 1978, the Federal tax expenditure per Puerto Rican employee averaged $12,667 in all manufacturing industries as compared with an average compensation of possession corporation employees of $10,667. While this may not be remarkable when compared to other methods to provide jobs, the disparity in some instances was much greater. In intangible intensive industries, such as pharmaceuticals, the tax expenditure in 1978 averaged $43,261 as compared to an average employee compensation of $13,618. For nine companies, in 1978 the tax loss exceeded $100,000 per employee.

In 1978, 50 percent of the total tax expenditure was attributable to the drug industry which accounted for only 15 percent of all Puerto Rican manufacturing jobs or approximately 3 percent of total Puerto Rican employment.

According to the Treasury's third annual report, intangible intensive industries generally do relatively little to encourage the development of related industries in Puerto Rico because their customers and suppliers generally are not located there.

Excessive shifting of income from U.S. parents to Puerto Rico 936 subsidiaries takes place. When marketing intangibles and patents developed in the United States by U.S. labor are transferred to a 936 subsidiary, at no cost, the U.S. parent claims most of the expenses of their development as deductions against U.S. taxable income, while the exempt 936 subsidiary claims most of the income attributable to those intangibles.

Most drug companies are either under audit or in court over income shifting to their 936 subsidiaries. The uncertainty created by these cases has hindered Puerto Rican development in recent years. Some more definite rules are necessary.

Most 936 corporations are also able to shelter substantial investment income (as opposed to active trade or business income) from tax and can also repatriate that income without tax. Sheltering from U.S. tax the passive income from Puerto Rican bank accounts does little to provide Puerto Rican jobs.

Sheltering vast sums of passive income has not, in the past, provided greater sums for capital investment in Puerto Rico. The third Treasury report shows that the sheltered sums merely freed up other money to flow out of Puerto Rico.

The Treasury report also shows that real assets as a percentage of total assets is 15.3 percent for 936 companies but 35.1 percent for U.S. manufacturers as a whole.

At the end of 1978, retained earnings in 936 corporations represented 77 percent of total liabilities and shareholder equity. The comparable figure for all U.S. manufacturers was between 39 percent and 41 percent.

ALLOCATION OF INTANGIBLES

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, the Finance Committee made a second recommendation with respect to the allocation of intangibles—patents, copyrights, trademarks and the like—under section 936. The practical effect of this recommendation would be the elimination of intangibles in computing income eligible for the tax credit as I understand it. In the report accompanying H.R. 4961, the committee explanation for the change, derived from the three U.S. Department of Treasury reports on section 936 is "unduly high revenue loss attributable to certain industries due to position taken by certain taxpayers with respect to the allocations of intangible income among related parties."

The treatment of intangibles is decidedly a difficult, controversial issue and one which the U.S. Department of the Treasury and the Treasury Department of Puerto Rico have been discussing for the last 10 months. Considerable progress has been made in these negotiations to develop a package of changes in the treatment of intangibles and as I understand it, prior to Finance Committee action, the negotiators were very close to an agreement on all the complex issues involved.

This issue is of critical importance to Puerto Rico. Section 936 and its predecessor, section 931, have been the cornerstones of Puerto Rican economic development, comprising the main incentive available to business to locate on the island. As the 1979 U.S. Treasury Department report on section 936 points out:

Between 1947 and 1972, Puerto Rican gross national product and GNP per capita grew at rates of 6 percent and 5 percent per annum.

Growth which helped turn Puerto Rico from the poorhouse of the Caribbean in the 1950's into its envy in the 1970's. That same report also notes:

The rapid growth in GNP has been accompanied by a shift in Puerto Rican employment from agriculture to manufacturing, particularly in the 1950's and 1960's. Employment in manufacturing grew at an average rate of 4.5 percent per annum over these two decades. By 1970, manufacturing had displaced both agriculture and wholesale and retail trade as the largest sector in terms of employment.

This shift is even more important in the context of improving the quality of life for Puerto Ricans when one considers the fact that unlike past manufacturing jobs created in low-wage, unskilled positions in the apparel, tobacco, and furniture industries, today most of the manufacturing jobs created are in highly skilled, sophisticated industries such as electronics, scientific instruments, pharmaceuticals, and chemicals. In addition, these companies are increasingly filling technical and managerial slots with Puerto Ricans, widening opportunities for highly educated, skilled Puerto Ricans who wish to remain in Puerto Rico. Indeed, as Governor Romero pointed out in a letter to the chairman of the Finance Committee dated June 24, 1982:

> This change in the type of jobs created and filled by Puerto Ricans benefits not only the industrial worker, but the whole fabric of Puerto Rican life as the increases in knowledge spill over to the rest of the island's economy and society. This has been expressly recognized by President Reagan through his pledge to use Puerto Rico's expertise as a basic part of the proposed Caribbean Basin Initiative.

According to the Puerto Rican Treasury Department, 85 percent of the manufacturing jobs in Puerto Rico today are attributable to 936 companies, comprising 20 percent of the island's total employment. The Governor's Economic Advisory Council, assuming a conservatively estimated 10 percent decline in production in 936 companies if the changes recommended by the Finance Committee were adopted—the bottom of the 10- to 25-percent range in the Puerto Rican Treasury's econometric model—estimates that by 1984 Federal expenditures, triggered by legally mandated transfer payments to both island and mainland residents, would increase by $375 million. This figure excludes increases which could be expected in medicare and as a result of increased Puerto Rican migration to the mainland—expected to increase to 49,000 this year, compared to 12,000 in 1981. The major components of this calculation are increased unemployment benefits, social security payments and tax revenue losses on the mainland. Moreover, the Puerto Rican Treasury Department estimates that revenue losses to the Puerto Rican treasury—based on losses from four sources: the toll gate tax, the corporate income tax, the banking franchise tax, and the personal income tax—would total almost $188 million in fiscal year 1984, or an amount equivalent to 9 percent of the Government's total operating budget for 1983.

Although far more difficult to estimate, the Puerto Rican Treasury Department also estimates that the Finance Committee proposal could have a potential adverse impact on the U.S. balance of payments, increasing the trade deficit by almost 4 percent. This figure assumes that Puerto Rican exports would decrease by 20 percent. While this is only a rough estimate, it is certainly fair to say that a significant downward trend would occur.

In contrast to the Finance Committee proposal, the second amendment I am proposing will strengthen the incentive for industry to locate in Puerto Rico by providing a reasonable solution to the intangibles issue and ending the uncertainty which has made potential investors reluctant to establish operations on the island. Moreover, the shift in income from Puerto Rico to the mainland which would result from the cost-sharing and royalty payments and profit allocations would be heightened by the increased economic activity in Puerto Rico produced by the incentive, and substantial real U.S. revenue increases would result.

My amendment has been worked out in close consultation with the Government of Puerto Rico and tracks the position of the Government of Puerto Rico in its negotiations on this issue over the past 10 months with the U.S. Treasury Department. The 936 program and its predecessor are examples of a policy which has worked well. The use of intangibles has been critical to the success of many of the manufacturing operations in Puerto Rico, especially in those high-technology industries which presently provide over 60,000 jobs requiring highly skilled labor and management in over 500 production units.

Beginning with Operation Bootstrap in the 1940's, the quality of life for the 3,200,000 U.S. citizens who reside in Puerto Rico has improved significantly. As a 1977 Library of Congress study showed, based on constant 1975 dollars, the success of this program resulted in a remarkable increase in personal per capita income for Puerto Ricans, growing from $786 in 1950 to $2,183 by 1975. This is a record of which we can all be proud. However, the Puerto Ricans still have a long way to go to catch up with the mainland. To put it in perspective, in 1975 personal per capita income in the continental United States was $5,834. Puerto Rico's personal per capita income, then, was 64 percent of the United States 1975 average and 48 percent below that of the lowest of the States, Mississippi. It seems to me, then, that we must proceed very carefully, very cautiously and in close consultation with the Government of Puerto Rico before we adopt a change in the program which that same Library of Congress study found to be a "major factor in Puerto Rico's rapid economic growth."

I regret to say, Mr. President, that in the opinion of this Senator the Finance Committee's recommendation with respect to intangibles does not meet this critical test. To this end, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of a joint resolution passed by the Senate and the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico on July 7, 1982, expressing extreme concern and disappointment with this action, be printed in full in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

Whereas, the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate, as part of certain measures designed to increase revenues, has approved legislation containing proposals which dramatically modify the existing provisions of Section 936 of the United States Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended, titled "Puerto Rico and Possession Tax Credit".

Whereas, said proposals essentially provide for the following:

A. Allocation of income from intangibles transferred to Puerto Rico from United States sources.

B. Reduction from 50% to 10% in the allowance of passive income from Puerto Rico.

Whereas, said proposals are largely predicated on speculative revenue theories which totally fail to appreciate the overall significance of the effects of the presence of the possessions corporations in our social, economic and political system.

Whereas, the social, economic and political stability of Puerto Rico is severely affected by a number of social, economic and geographical factors, to wit:

A. Its agricultural development is severely restricted due to geographical characteristics.

B. It has scarce exploitable natural resources.

C. Its population density is high, much more than in any State of the United States.

D. Its per capita income lags the lowest per capita income of the States of the United States.

E. Its unemployment, based on traditional statistical methods, is approximately 22%; unofficially it is believed to be more.

F. It depends on imports for its supply of consumer goods.

G. It is entirely dependent on imported petroleum: it has minute quantities of hydroelectric power yet it has no coal, natural gas or nuclear power.

Whereas, in spite of these negative and adverse factors, Puerto Rico has achieved considerable levels of social development, economic growth and political stability, certainly much higher than any Latin American or Caribbean country.

Whereas, the purchasing power of Puerto Rico as a whole has made Puerto Rico the fifth largest importer in the world of goods produced in the United States.

Whereas, Puerto Rico's social, economic and political achievements have been made largely possible due to the combination of tax incentives granted by the United States and Puerto Rico, namely Sections 931 and 936 of the United States Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended, and the Puerto Rico Industrial Incentives Act, as amended.

Whereas, the effects of the establishment of private manufacturing enterprises in Puerto Rico cannot be measured solely by their directly related employment, but by their indirect and rippling repercussions, in manufacturing, construction, banking, services and industry, among others.

Whereas, the presence of earnings from private manufacturing enterprises in the Puerto Rican economy constitutes the cornerstone of Puerto Rico's finance and commerce, and the Puerto Rican Government is promulgating rules for the efficient utilization of said funds in the Puerto Rican economy, at the same time that it encourages the repatriation of excess funds towards the stream of the United States economy.

Whereas, the social economic and political impact of the establishment of private manufacturing enterprises in Puerto Rico must be measured on the basis of the overall effect of their presence in Puerto Rico.

Wherefore, be it resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico

Section 1.—That the unprecedented action of the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate in approving proposals having such transcendental and far reaching effects in Puerto Rico's social, economic and political structures, and without affording the People of Puerto Rico the opportunity to be heard, constitutes an open disregard for the well being of millions of United States Citizens residents of Puerto Rico whose living standards already are well below those of residents of the States of the United States.

Section 2.—That the Legislative Assembly of Puerto Rico expresses deep concern and dissatisfaction as to the proposals which, without the slightest doubt, shall severely and irreparably injure the social, economic and political stability which Puerto Rico has so strivingly achieved during the last decades.

Section 3.—That the Legislative Assembly of Puerto Rico appeals to the wisdom and sense of fair play of the Congress of the United States so that no further action be taken on these proposals and that ample opportunity be given to the different sectors of Puerto Rico to express themselves in formal public hearings held by the Congress.

Section 4.—That the Legislative Assembly of Puerto Rico hereby communicates to the Congress of the United States that it stands united with all its fellow countrymen, regardless of political party affiliations, both here and in the mainland, to wage an agressive fight to stop those ill-conceived proposals from becoming law of the land.

Section 5.—This joint concurrent resolution shall be effective as of its date of approval and shall be circulated among the members of the Congress of the United States, once it is translated and printed in the English language.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, with the cession of Puerto Rico by Spain to the United States in the Treaty of Paris, Puerto Rico has been closely tied to the United States. Our early relationship with Puerto Ricans, pursuant to the terms of the Foraker Act of 1900 and the Jones Act of 1917, paid little attention to the political sensitivities of these U.S. citizens or to the glaring inequalities of wealth which led to sharpened social and economic tentions. With the economic crisis of the 1930's an era of hidden, potentially explosive crisis emerged in Puerto Rico, a crisis only narrowly averted by the emergency of strong leadership and reform under the founder of the Commonwealth, Luis Munoz Marin. If we again ignore the sensitivities of the Puerto Rican leaders and enact a policy, however well-intentioned, that brings about a new economic crisis, I fear we may set the stage for another round of hidden crises, riddled with economic stress for these citizens and accompanied by intensified political violence.

On March 17, just 4 months ago, the President submitted to the Congress what many in this body have called a bold, extraordinary proposal, the Caribbean Basin Initiative (CBI). In his message, the President emphasized the importance of this region to our Nation, stating: "This (underlying economic crisis in the Caribbean) is not a crisis we can afford to ignore. The people of the Caribbean basin are our neighbors. There wellbeing and security are in our own vital interest. Events occurring in the Caribbean basin can affect our lives in profound and dramatic ways." and warned that this crisis "provides the opporunities which extremist and violent minorities exploit." Similarly, I believe we cannot afford to ignore the economic crisis now facing Puerto Rico: rising unemployment, lack of growth and a 5-percent decline in real investment in 1981. Last year, as part of our budget austerity plan, we enacted a 25-percent cut in the food stamp allotment for Puerto Rico, giving Puerto Rico a cut double that experienced by any State. Other program cuts enacted last year also had a severe impact on their stagnant economy including a loss of 25,000 public service jobs which resulted from cuts in CETA. Further adverse impacts now, such as those which would occur under Finance Committee recommendations, coming on top of the proposed billion dollar aid program coupled with various trade and tax proposals for Puerto Rico's neighbors, can only exacerbate the problems of a sagging economy and sow the seeds for further social and political unrest.

We must not forget that the entire Caribbean is of vital importance to our economy and to our security. Half of our trade comes through the Caribbean as does half of our imported strategic materials, including imported oil. Puerto Rico has always played a central, stabilizing role in this area, serving not only as our showplace of democracy in the Caribbean, but also providing us with a direct presence in this increasingly troubled area. It simply does not make sense to possibly provoke a crisis in Puerto Rico under the guise of making small economies while, at the same time, we are preparing to send over $1 billion in aid to other nations located in the same strategic region.

Finally, I note that the administration does not lend its support to this particular Finance Committee recommendation. In a letter to House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Rostenkowski dated July 12, 1982, Treasury Secretary Regan stated:

Notwithstanding our general support for the Senate Finance package, we have some reservations about certain proposals, particularly the proposed limitation on the Possessions credit. . . .

Since the Finance Committee completed its work on H.R. 4961, I have worked closely with the Governor of Puerto Rico and his representatives to devise an alternative to the recommended new changes in the treatment of intangibles. This is decidedly a complex, controversial and difficult issue. In the report accompanying H.R. 4961, the committee indicated its concern about certain practices under section 936 by corporations which transfer intangibles—patents, copyrights, trademarks, and so forth—tax free to subsidiaries in Puerto Rico which in turn use those intangibles to generate income protected from U.S. tax by the section 936 credit. Under the Finance Committee bill, such income attributable to intangibles generally would be shifted away from the 936 corporation to its U.S. shareholders who would be taxed on their pro rata shares of such income.

The Government of Puerto Rico, based on a thoughtful analysis of the propcsal, believes this solution would destroy the incentive for industry to locate in Puerto Rico. The use of intangibles is so critical to the success of the 936 program that this change could, in effect, stop growth in the high technology manufacturing sector, the only sector of the Puerto Rican economy which experienced any real growth last year.

Our alternative addresses the concern of the committee by limiting the amount of income attributable to intangibles which qualifies for the possession credit, but in a way which preserves the effect of Puerto Rico's tax incentives in this crucial sector. We accomplish this by providing two alternatives. One limits the taxable income protected by the possession credit which is derived by a 936 corporation from a product—including the use of intangibles—to 50 percent of the combined profit of the 936 corporation and its U.S. affiliates from the product produced in whole or in part in Puerto Rico. The second alternative allocates to the 936 corporation no income attributable to an intangible unless it has been developed by the 936 corporation or acquired from an unrelated third party—as under the committee bill—or unless it is acquired from an affiliate at an arm's length price. The proposal sets forth rules for determining what portion of the research and experimental expenditures of the possessions corporation and its affiliates will be considered to an arm's length price. Under the proposal, taxable income protected by the possession credit would be the greater of the two alternatives.

By allowing the transfer of intangibles only when the possessions corporation pays adequate compensation, the proposal addresses the concerns of the committee. However, unlike the Finance Committee bill, the proposed amendment would allow Puerto Rico to maintain the incentive for industry to locate there by providing a reasonable solution to the intangible problem and ending the uncertainty which has made potential investors reluctant to establish operations on the island. The shift in income from Puerto Rico to the mainland which would result from the cost-sharing and royalty payments and profit allocations would be heightened by the increased economic activity in Puerto Rico produced by the incentive, and substantial real U.S. revenue increases would result.

Mr. President, as I have said to begin with, my amendments were in two parts. This is the first amendment, the so-called passive income amendment. This amendment has already been signed on to by the Treasury Department. Although a letter of transmittal has not been signed, it has been signed on to. The other amendment, the so-called intangible amendment, has been agreed to in principle. Indeed, I think it has been agreed to actually by the Treasury Department, although their agreement has been pulled back because I think the Senator from Kansas has talked about the revenue effect. Indeed, this is an effort to raise the revenue here and that is no small job.

Mr. President, I can debate the figures that the Senator has used about the cost in the pharmaceutical industry because studies have been done on that 1979 Treasury report, which provides the basis for the cost per capita of jobs being, I think, some $43,000 in the pharmaceutical industry. The studies on that would show that it does not take into consideration any of what they call the forward linkage; that is, the spinoff from the very high investment in the pharmaceutical job—the other satellite industries that are brought in, the other economic activity which that engenders. In terms of efficiency of cost per job, this is one of the most efficient, if not the most efficient, in dollar payoff per job of any Federal program I know of. Mr. President, I will not debate that.

I will say that the Senator from Kansas has always been very reasonable, and when he says he will do something, I have always known him to do it. The unfortunate thing in this respect is that the Senator has not really promised us anything specific, other than his good will, which is considerable; other than his reasonableness, which is legendary. I believe, Mr. President, that the Senator from Kansas will look with favor upon some real compromise efforts either in conference or when this matter comes up with the Caribbean Basin Initiative. I hope we will not have to wait that long, because real economic harm is being done to Puerto Rico even now, even while this is under discussion.

The Governor of Puerto Rico told me this morning that a $200 million bond issue was going to have to be pulled down because of the very consideration by this body of this provision. So I urge expedited consideration of it.

Mr. President, because the Senator from Kansas has made these representations about his willingness to look at this matter in light of the seriousness of the economic plight of Puerto Rico, and because of his demonstrated record in helping Puerto Rico on matters such as food stamps, and also in recognition of the fact that I know he has the votes, with the concurrence of my distinguished colleague from New York, from whom I would want to hear before I do it, I would be ready to pull the amendment down.

At this point, I yield to my colleague from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I only wish to endorse what my friend from Louisiana has said, Mr. President. We not only do rely on the chairman of the Committee on Finance, we must rely on him. We look forward to the possibility of a successful negotiation in the Treasury Department before the bill is finally enacted. The Senator has made a very important statement that he also considers it reasonable to bring this matter forward in the context of the Caribbean Basin Initiative. That gives us, in a 3-week or 4-week span, the possibility of resolving something which must be resolved; we must act fast. The shadow of the committee bill chills everything down there.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, with thanks for the consideration of our distinguished colleague from Kansas and with every hope that the matter can be worked out and compromised in a way that will preserve what is left of the Puerto Rican economy, I withdraw the amendment.

The amendment (UP 1108) was withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the Armstrong amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, is it correct that the Senator did not intend to offer the second amendment?

Mr. JOHNSTON. That is correct, Mr. President. I shall not put the amendment in the RECORD at this point because the Senator from Kansas is well aware of it and it is being negotiated with the Secretary of the Treasury. It is described in my statement, which was put in the RECORD, so I do not think it will be necessary to bring it up at this point.

Mr. DOLE. I addressed both amendments in my statement, also, so the RECORD is made.

Those figures are, of course, subject to debate, but we think they are fairly accurate.

I hope that if, in fact, there is some resolution by Treasury and the Governor or the administration of Puerto Rico that we can accept, that addresses the abuses, and that raises the necessary revenue, then we can take care of this matter in conference.

It is not the intent of the Senator from Kansas to delay it until August or some later time. I realized that this is important to Puerto Rico. It is also, I might add, a matter of major concern to the distinguished majority leader. Senator BAKER met with the Governor yesterday. We are all working toward a suitable solution. I thank the Senators for withdrawing the amendment, and for not offering the intangibles amendment. I am very sensitive to their hope that we will work something out.

Mr. President, it is my understanding that the Senator from Colorado would modify his amendment; that it would be amended, and then the Senator from Kentucky would be recognized to call up his amendment.

I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is, without objection——

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. DOLE. Yes; I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. BAKER. Do I understand now that the Senator from Kentucky is going to offer an amendment? Has it been entered that it be in order for him to do that at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is correct.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, may I inquire of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky and the manager of the bill on this side, the chairman of the committee, how long they think it may take to dispose of this and whether or not they will require a rollcall vote?

Mr. FORD. I say to the distinguished majority leader I understand we have an hour on the amendment. I was not quite ready. I had kind of relaxed for tonight and now we are back up. That is perfectly all right and I understand that game, but I will require a rollcall vote on the amendment.

Mr. BAKER. I am trying to see if we cannot meet a 6:30 recess hour. I wonder if the Senator could advise me as to whether he thinks it is possible to finish this tonight?

Mr. FORD. Let me say to the distinguished Senator, since I was just notified, I have notified other Senators who want to speak on the amendment, and I am trying to get them to the Senate floor now. If the Senator wants to lay the amendment down and discuss it and have a vote on it after 5 minutes of discussion when we come in in the morning, I will be glad to do that. I will try to accommodate Senators any way I can.

Mr. BAKER. Yes, I thank the Senator. I ask the distinguished chairman of the committee then if he would mind, if we have not reached a rollcall vote on this matter by 6:30, if we could put that over to occur in the morning?

Mr. DOLE. That is fine with me. The Senator from Kentucky has been very cooperative. In fact, he was here earlier so it is not the fault of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BAKER. I understand that.

Mr. DOLE. I know, for example, Senator STENNIS must leave and he is an interested party in this debate so maybe we could lay the amendment down, have the debate and at the time the Senator from Colorado is prepared we could set this aside and come back and finish it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Colorado seeking recognition?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am if the Senator from Kansas wishes me to do so. I think we are ready to proceed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I understand that the procedure may be now that rather than proceeding to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, the Senator from Colorado may proceed at this point and then we will take up the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky as the pending questions——

Mr. DOLE. If the majority leader will yield, we would not have a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky this evening.

Mr. BAKER. Will there be a vote on the Armstrong amendment?

Mr. DOLE. No. That has been worked out.

Mr. BAKER. Might I ask one further question. Is it fairly sure that the Senator cannot get to a record vote on this under these circumstances by 6:30?

Mr. FORD. I say to the distinguished majority leader that it is very difficult with the Armstrong amendment taking 5 to 10 minutes, that leaving 25 minutes, which would be totally all mine, without any pro or con, to have a rollcall vote by 6:30.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator. There are a number of Senators who have to make their plans for this evening. I wish to announce at this time then that there will be no more record votes today and the Senate will go out at approximately 6:30. It is my understanding that the Ford amendment will be pending and that we will get as much of that debate out of the way as we can now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pending business will be the Armstrong amendment. The Senator from Colorado has 4 minutes and 14 seconds remaining. Senator DOLE has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. BAKER. Will the Senator from Kansas yield me 1 minute?

Mr. DOLE. I yield.

ORDER TO CONVENE AT 9 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the Senate to convene tomorrow be changed from 10 a.m. to 9 a.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ARMSTRONG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Will the Senator please suspend.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, may we have order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May we have order in the Chamber.

The Senator from Colorado.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1107

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, if I may just take a moment to explain what has transpired during the last half-hour or so, I think we could expedite the work of the Senate very greatly. In discussions with the distinguished chairman, the Senator from Kansas, and the distinguished subcommittee chairman, the Senator from Iowa, we have reached an accommodation of views which I think will satisfy everyone who is interested in the matter which is the subject of my amendment.

In order to expedite that I intend to proceed in the following way: First, I will ask unanimous consent that we vitiate the order for the yeas and nays. Then I will send to the desk a modification——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order is vitiated.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then I will send to the desk a modification of my amendment, and I do send the modification of my amendment to the desk. I will ask unanimous consent that we dispense with reading of the amendment and I will undertake to explain it. It will take only a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is modified.

The amendment (UP No. 1107), as modified, is as follows:

On page 560, strike line 22 through line 15 on page 561 and insert:

"(i) the treatment of any item by the taxpayer on the return if the taxpayer believed that there was substantial authority for such treatment, or

"(ii) any item with respect to which the relevant facts affecting the item's tax treatment are adequately disclosed in the return or in a statement attached to the return.

"(C) SPECIAL RULES IN CASES INVOLVING ABUSIVE TAX SHELTERS.—Subparagraph (B)(ii) shall not apply to any item with respect to—

"(i) a partnership or other entity,

"(ii) any investment plan or arrangement, or

"(iii) any other plan or arrangement, if the principal purpose of such partnership, entity, plan, or arrangement is the avoidance or evasion of Federal income tax, and subparagraph (B)(i) shall not apply to such an item unless the taxpayer believed that the treatment of such item on the return of the taxpayer was more likely than not the proper treatment."

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, to put the modification in perspective, the original amendment changed the standard from "more likely than not" to "substantial authority." That is, taxpayers would not——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Colorado please suspend?

Will the Senators in the Chamber please retire to the cloakroom so the Senator may be heard?

The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, just to recap, the bill as it comes to us contains a provision for a penalty assessment in the event of under payment of tax but it provides that the penalty assessment will not be levied under certain circumstances. One of those is if the taxpayer can show that he had a belief that he was more likely than not to prevail.

However, for reasons that I previously explained, that seems too difficult a standard to me and so I have offered an amendment which would modify that standard to a "substantial authority" basis. I want to discuss in a moment in greater detail the exact meaning of the term "substantial authority."

The effect of the modification which I have sent to the desk and which is now pending is to say that the "more likely than not" standard would apply in those cases referred to at page 561 of the bill beginning at line 5; that is, for tax shelters, those firms or partnerships or corporations whose principal purpose is tax avoidance and/or evasion of Federal income tax.

In that narrowly defined group I am willing to agree that the "more likely than not" standard should apply because if the principal purpose of an entity is in fact to get out of paying tax, that is the principal purpose. It does not seem unreasonable in those circumstances to hold people to a higher standard of accountability than the average taxpayer. However, my amendment with respect to other sections of the bill and for the average business and personal taxpayer remains as I earlier suggested; that is, that the treatment would be justified if the taxpayer had a belief that there was "substantial authority" to support the tax treatment sought.

Mr. President, with that word of explanation, I ask unanimous consent that the following Senators be added as cosponsors to the amendment as modified: Senator DOLE, Senator SYMMS, Senator ROTH, Senator WALLOP, and Senator GRASSLEY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, two matters of acknowledgment and then I will be happy to respond to any questions. First I want to acknowledge my great appreciation and gratitude to the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Kansas for helping me work this out. It is a very technical and difficult area of the law in which they are expert and the Senator from Colorado is not. They have been kind enough to help me with this and to work out the details in a way that I think does truly satisfy all the affected interests, at least reasonably.

I will grant that language in my amendment does not go back to the present law. Those who would like to leave things the way they are—that is to say, you do not have a penalty lifted if you hire an accountant or lawyer—will not be satisfied with what we are doing; because we are saying that if you claim a tax treatment, you have to have substantial authority for doing so. It cannot be off the wall.

Neither, I think the Senator from Iowa would agree, are we going so far as the "more likely than not" test. Effectively, we have split the difference and have taken a step to tighten compliance by taxpayers, but we have done so in a way in which CPA's and tax lawyers feel is not an undue burden.

I also acknowledge the assistance and help of the CPA's themselves, who have done a truly remarkable job in educating Senators and their staff members about this issue in the last 48 hours or so. Their willingness to do so has contributed enormously to the successful outcome of this amendment.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield on my time?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I yield.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I should like to discuss some aspects of the Senator from Colorado's amendment.

Mr. President, I should like to clarify with the Senator from Colorado what qualifies as substantial authority. By that I understand that the Senator from Colorado means to include: First, court cases describing similar facts or circumstances that has not been overruled, whether from the jurisdiction in which the taxpayer resides or elsewhere; second, IRS rulings, whether published or private; or third, IRS regulations. Is that correct?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, the Senator is correct. As I noted earlier, I have been advised by counsel that the term "substantial authority" has been the subject of litigation and has been defined by the courts, so I would not want in my response to attempt to supersede what the courts have found. But I think the Senator has fairly stated it.

I should like to elaborate on my appreciation of the term "substantial authority."

Obviously, no precise, simple, or categorical definition of "substantial authority" is feasible because its meaning will depend upon the facts and circumstances in individual situations and upon subjective judgments. However, an explanation of the meaning of substantial authority is possible. In the context of section 341 of H.R. 4961, it should connote the factors which are taken into account in order to reach a decision. Those factors should include more than the unsupported opinion of a tax adviser, but less than the certainty implied by a test of "more likely than not" to ultimately prevail in litigation. As applied to the taxpayer penalty, if the taxpayer position is taken upon the advice of a tax adviser, a "substantial authority" waiver would require the further examination of the rationale on which the tax adviser based his advice.

Examples of such rationale include decisions of courts in tax controversies which involve the same or similar facts and circumstances; reflections of congressional intent of statutory provisions embodied in committee reports; authoritative, well-reasoned interpretations and expressions of opinions, such as publications of learned, recognized commentators.

A distinction must also be drawn between "substantial authority" under new law as contrasted with existing statutes. New law will be characterized by a lack of precedential discussion, and a consensus as to proper applications may take years of development.

In the end, the term "substantial authority," as all terms of enactment by this body, is ultimately subject to consideration of the courts and by professionals reviewing the work of professionals and courts reaching their conclusions based upon the facts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUDMAN). The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I asked the Senator to yield to me on my time.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am virtually done with my response.

The other night, I made a point of observing that in many cases, Congress has failed in its duty to discipline itself to the task of expressing clearly, in statutory language, its intent, and I thought it was worthwhile and important for us to seek to do that whenever possible.

I believe that the term "substantial authority" meets that test, that this is a term which is known to the law and has been used by courts and will be understood by taxpayers and tax advisers.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Colorado for his clarification. I think it is a very strong statement of a substantial test, a test that obviously is going to relieve some of the fears I have had of the potentially enormous loss of revenue, based upon the original explanation of his amendment. His amendment is one which I now feel comfortable in cosponsoring. I feel that by his statement and his understanding of "substantial authority," he has moved considerably from where we were, and I want him to know that we appreciate it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I am very grateful to the Senator for his patience in helping work this out. He is correct. We are moving a good distance from the present law, which means that if you hire an attorney or a C.P.A. to prepare your tax return, you are not going to have to pay a penalty. This imposes a test, and I think properly so.

I also make this point: The whole subject of my amendment, in the first place, was a tiny fraction of the whole section which the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Kansas developed, which is going to bring in about $20 billion in the next 3 years, without raising anybody's taxes but by getting to people who are not paying taxes but should. As the Senator said, people do not like to pay taxes, especially those who have not been doing so. I think we are moving in the right direction.

I believe we are ready to have a vote on this issue, and I thank the Senators who participated in this effort.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ARMSTRONG) and the Senator from Iowa (Mr. GRASSLEY).

Senator GRASSLEY has really been the leader in this tax compliance area and knows the subject matter very well. Most of title III of the Finance Committee amendment to H.R. 4961 derives from S. 2198, a bill Senator GRASSLEY and I introduced in March. I think he has substantially satisfied his concerns, based upon his colloquy with Senator ARMSTRONG.

It is still a difficult standard; it is far tougher than the so-called reasonable basis standard of present law.

Nobody on the committee is more forthright than the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ARMSTRONG). He is not bringing in some amendment to water down the bill or to make it easier for someone, if they have an accountant, adviser, or attorney, to take some aggressive position and feel that they have been freed of any risk of a penalty down the line.

I believe that the compromise is one that certainly strengthens the bill, and I am pleased that it has worked out this way.

Senator ROTH indicated his concern with respect to this amendment, as did Senator WALLOP and others on our side, and I am certain there are others on the other side who feel that we did not back away. We still have a very difficult standard.

So I thank those who were directly involved in the negotiations.

● Mr. JEPSEN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, Mr. ARMSTRONG. As a cosponsor of his proposal, I believe it makes perfect sense to replace the unclear Finance Committee language, with the more precise and legally defined language proposed by Senator ARMSTRONG.

Clearly the Finance Committee language, "more likely than not" is so broad and vague that if left unchanged, thousands of honest taxpayers could be subjected to unnecessary harassment by Internal Revenue Service bureaucrats. Anyone who has ever been audited by the IRS can attest to the unreasonable and expensive tactics used by many agents. This, despite the completely reasonable and rational actions of the taxpayer.

The complexity of our tax system is such that it is very difficult for anyone to predict with any certainty whether or not they will prevail in a case before the Tax Court. Because of these problems, I am concerned that if left unchanged, tax matters will automatically be resolved in favor of the Internal Revenue Service. Mr. President, I don't think there are very many taxpayers who are prepared to let the IRS be auditor, judge, and jury. Rest assured that this could very well happen if the Armstrong amendment is not approved.

By substituting the "substantial authority" for nontax shelter transaction language, we are reducing the risk that honest taxpayers will not be unfairly accused of tax evasion by overzealous Internal Revenue agents.

Even just a quick look at previous Tax Courts decisions will convince most taxpayers that there are many varying and contradictory decisions produced by the court. In addition, these decisions can very often be used to prove both sides of an issue.

Thus, Mr. President, to require as a basis of proof, the "more likely than not" language, we are almost certainly forcing many honest taxpayers to be subjected to needless litigation. In effect, we are asking the taxpayer to predict the outcome of any potential Tax Court case. If the taxpayer can't determine whether or not his or her position would prevail and still takes the deduction in question, we are going to assume that the taxpayer was trying to defraud the Government.

Senator ARMSTRONG and I believe it is sufficient to have the taxpayer show why he or she took the deduction, then let the court decide whether nor not it was justified. No one, Mr. President, should be asked to predict the outcome of a case.

In closing, I think the Finance Committee has reported out a good bill. However, I think it will be an even better bill if the Senate adopts the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado. Changing the language from "more likely than not" to "substantial authority" will go a long way toward clearing up a cloudy area of the law. I urge my colleagues to join us in changing this section.●

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Armstrong-Long-Mattingly-Baucus amendment. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this amendment.

Section 341 of H.R. 4961 in essence amends the Federal Tax Code to require American taxpayers to "red flag" their tax returns on matters where the taxpayer believes he is more likely to prevail in a tax payment controversy than the Internal Revenue Service or where the taxpayer believes there could be underpayment on his return.

This provision of the tax bill, in effect, makes the tax preparer an arm of the Federal Government. It increases the paperwork burden of taxpayers as they file their returns. And the committee amendment undermines the basic self-assessment principle contained in our tax laws.

Mr. President, it is a basic principle of our tax system that taxpayers are expected to file honest returns. They and the professionals that prepare their tax returns are supposed to approach this task with honesty and fairness. If they do not, they will be subject to IRS penalties and even criminal prosecution in some cases.

And it is up to the IRS to uncover these abuses.

But the current committee amendment essentially implies that most taxpayers and their tax preparers set out to cheat the Government. I do not believe that this is the case. Taxpayers and their tax preparers generally aim to pay what they honestly deem to be their fair tax bill. That is their right, and it is a right that should not be compromised by H.R. 4961.

Mr. President, for the benefit of my colleagues, I would ask that summary informational material on the "red flag" provisions of the tax bill which were originally contained in S. 2198 be included in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

Mr. President, I urge adoption of the Armstrong-Long-Mattingly-Baucus amendment.

The summary follows:

INFORMATIONAL MATERIAL: "RED FLAG" PROVISIONS OF THE TAXPAYER COMPLIANCE IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1982 (S. 2198)

BACKGROUND

In an effort to encourage better taxpayer compliance, the Senate Finance Committee has proposed a radical change in our self-assessment system of taxation. Under the bill, if a substantial underpayment of tax occurs in a normal transaction, a penalty will be assessed against the taxpayer unless he (1) discloses the item which gave rise to the underpayment in the return or (2) believes he is more likely than not to prevail on the issue in a controversy with the IRS.

As a practical matter, it may be impossible to ascertain the likelihood of success in a controversy with the IRS, and the taxpayer will be required to disclose.

PROBLEMS

1. The bill will deter taxpayers from taking many legitimate positions on tax returns by the threat of a penalty or fear of audit. In fact, the taxpayer may not even enter into entirely appropriate transactions. This is unfair where the taxpayer honestly believes that the position he would take would be correct and where there is reasonable support for the position which would have been taken.

2. The cost and complexity of compliance will be increased for taxpayers, because of the burden of disclosure and the requirement to consider the likelihood of success in a controversy with the IRS.

3. The taxpayer will be denied effective representation in dealing with the tax laws because of a change in the relationships among the taxpayer, his advocate, and the IRS. The taxpayer's representative will, in effect, be preparing an audit checklist for the government, and taxpayers may be reluctant to discuss certain issues with him. This change in relationships is a basic threat to our self-assessment system of taxation.

4. While disclosure will be burdensome to taxpayers, it may not be helpful to the government. In assessing the penalty, the government will have to determine whether disclosure should be required, whether disclosure is adequate, and a number of other issues unrelated to determining the tax liability of the taxpayer. This will add substantially to the paperwork and controversy in an already overburdened system. Disclosure may not clarify many complex problems and may draw attention away from other returns where intentional underpayments are not disclosed.

SOLUTION

The disclosure requirement of the bill should be eliminated, and taxpayers should not be deterred from taking positions for which there is reasonable support and which are taken in good faith. Reasonable support could be defined in the legislative history in such a way as to attack abuse situations without burdening legitimate taxpayer transactions.

(The names of Mr. JACKSON and Mr. ANDREWS were added as cosponsors of the amendment, as modified.)

Mr. DOLE. I yield back our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas yields back his time.

All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (UP No. 1107), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, Senate consideration of the taxpayer compliance improvement amendment by the Members of this body is an important milestone in my legislative activities during the 97th Congress. While some Members joke that Senator DOLE and I are responsible for more tax increases in this bill than any other two Senators here today, we like to think that we saved millions of Americans from tax increases by devising a detailed system of reporting requirements and penalties designed to raise $17.7 billion over the next 3 years. By collecting $17.7 billion from people who already owe tax, we have avoided the imposition of tax increases. The only increases considered by the Committee on Finance that could raise the same amount of money were a 5-cent-per-gallon gasoline tax, a $5 per barrel fee on imported oil, a 5 percent ad valorem tax on energy, a substantial reduction or elimination of the third year of the tax cut or limiting the deduction of consumer interest to $1,000 per taxpayer. All of these possibilities would substantially increase the average American's taxes. Our approach not only sidesteps the enactment of tax increases, it improves our revenue collection system by giving all taxpayers the feeling that each person is paying what he or she owes.

The Internal Revenue Service estimates that the revenue loss from noncompliance with existing laws will be approximately $95 billion in 1981. A compliance gap of this magnitude has grave implications for our system of self-assessment. Our tax system relies upon the basis of voluntary compliance—that is, the accurate reporting of income and payments by each taxpayer. As greater numbers of taxpayers perceive that the system is not working fairly and watch dishonest taxpayers go unpunished, fewer people feel any moral obligation to comply with the law. Massive noncompliance will not only undermine our economic base, it will require a greater enforcement effort and threaten each individual's privacy to a greater degree. This bill is an important step by Congress in attempting to check mushrooming noncompliance and preserve our system of voluntary compliance as we know it today.

I have often said that the workingmen and workingwomen of America do not mind paying taxes, they just want everyone to pay their fair share. The Taxpayer Compliance Improvement Act addresses this problem in a comprehensive way in an attempt to maximize compliance.

First, it does not create any new tax liability. Rather it makes a thorough attempt to collect taxes from those who already owe them but are not paying. Both Senator DOLE and I feel it would be tremendously unfair to increase taxes before we attempt to collect revenue from those who have failed to meet their legal obligation to pay tax.

Second, the bill is not attempting to extract moneys from low-income waiters and waitresses to permit the coupon clippers to run free. Many individuals have written me arguing that the tip provision and the entire bill disadvantage lower income people. Undoubtedly, the tip provision has received the greatest publicity, but it is one part of a detailed legislative package.

The problem is not with low- and middle-income taxpayers for they have the highest rate of compliance of any economic sector. Individuals who receive wages have a 99-percent tax compliance rate; regrettably only 17 percent of tips are reported to the IRS for tax purposes.

This bill also has numerous provisions aimed at upper income people who have a low compliance rate. Only 56 percent of capital gains are currently reported. Our bill imposes information reporting requirements on stock and securities brokers. Also, corporate bearer bonds and Treasury bills are not currently subject to the information reporting requirements of the Internal Revenue Code; our bill would require the cashier of a coupon of a corporate bearer bond to notify the IRS of the name and social security number of the bondholder when the interest is paid. A similar provision applies to interest paid on Treasury bills. Our bill also contains a $100,000 penalty on corporate officers for committing civil tax fraud and affixes a penalty on taxpayers who understate their tax liability by at least $5,000 by participating in tax shelters of questionable legality. These provisions are not aimed at low-income taxpayers.

My goal in introducing this legislation was to improve compliance among all taxpayes so the system is truly equitable. In my view, it is imperative that we collect the taxes from those people who have not paid before we contemplate raising taxes on all honest taxpayers. I thank Senator DOLE, his staff and the Joint Committee on Taxation for their hard work in drafting a good and sensible bill. I urge all of my colleagues to support its enactment.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1972

(Purpose: To eliminate the provisions which increase the excise tax on cigarettes)

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I call up my amendment numbered 1972 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kentucky (Mr. FORD) proposes an amendment numbered 1972.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 446, beginning with line 5, strike out all through page 447, line 25.

On page 448, line 1, strike out "Part IV" and insert in lieu thereof "Part III".

On page 453, line 1, strike out "Part V" and insert in lieu thereof "Part IV".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me 1 second for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. FORD. I yield.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Tim Dudgeon of my staff be granted the privilege of the floor during consideration of the current amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my distinguished colleague, Senator HUDDLESTON, and the distinguished Senator from Virginia (Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR.) be added as cosponsors of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I am offering an amendment to restore some measure of fairness to the Finance Committee tax bill by repealing a section of that bill that imposes further regressive tax burdens on low- and middle-income Americans. This amendment that I offer would repeal section 285 of the bill, thus eliminating the proposed doubling of the excise tax on a package of cigarettes.

Mr. President, the legislation we are considering today is billed as a step toward achieving fairness and equity in our complicated tax system. But, when we take a closer look, it is obvious that this is just not so. The chairman of the Finance Committee may claim that it is fair, but the bill clearly flunks the test of equity when it seeks to pick up significant revenues by imposing further burdens on America's middle- and low-income taxpayers through the imposition of higher excise taxes.

We should make clear why we are being asked to take this unprecedented action to raise Federal income taxes by almost $100 billion over a 3-year period. The reason is that something has to be done to atone for the mistakes made last year with passage of an excessive tax bill that reduced Federal revenues by almost $750 billion over a 5-year period. That bill gave most of the tax reduction benefits to upper income Americans. I do not believe anyone can disagree with this. According to the Joint Committee on Taxation, the 31.7 million tax filers making under $15,000 a year will divide $2.9 billion from the July 1, 1982, tax cut while the 162,000 making over $200,000 a year will divide $3.6 billion. The intention of the 1981 tax bill was to give tax benefits to corporations and upper bracket taxpayers because, as the administration argued, this would encourage saving and capital investment and create new jobs. But now we see that this has not worked. Shortly after last year's tax package passed Congress, the economy went off a cliff. The stock market plummeted; unemployment skyrocketed; and, in the face of these dismal economic statistics, interest rates remained high. So now, Congress, looking for relief from continued hard times, has produced a budget resolution for fiscal year 1983 that includes a $100 billion tax increase.

When we raise taxes $100 billion this year we are, in effect, attempting to finance last year's tax bill which gave most of its $750 billion in revenue reductions to upper bracket taxpayers and corporations. But, to the extent we recoup these lost revenues by imposing greater burdens on middle- and low-income Americans—those who benefited least from last year's rate reductions—we are committing an obvious injustice. We are taking from those who can least afford it to preserve tax breaks for those who can most afford it.

By 1987, corporate income taxes will be reduced 36 percent from the 1980 level. By 1985, families earning over $80,000 a year will get tax breaks equal to 8.4 percent of their income, while families earning under $10,000 will receive tax cuts equal to only 2.3 percent of income. In fact, after inflation and social security taxes are taken into account, middle income taxpayers receive no real tax deduction in 1982. Burdens were actually increased for low-income earners. Yet, unbelievably, the Finance Committee proposes further regressive excise taxes on America's low- and middle-income families. That is simply not right. It is simply not fair. It should be unacceptable to anyone who is truly concerned about tax equity and fairness. Much was made of last year's 25 percent rate reduction, but the average taxpayer was more than a little surprised when he saw just how little impact the July 1, 10 percent installment had on his take-home pay. It meant about $1.50 per week for a family with two children earning $300 a week. If the parents smoke more than a pack of cigarettes a day, a doubling of the cigarette excise tax will completely eliminate the 1982, 10 percent tax rate reduction. What little we gave low-income persons in the 1981 tax bill will be taken away by this excise tax provision.

I wish to make clear that doubling the excise tax on cigarettes is extremely regressive. Because it is a tax on consumption, it will impose greater relative tax burdens on middle- and low-income families. Not because consumption of excise tax products increases as income decreases, but because a flat excise tax takes a greater percentage of smaller incomes.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two tables prepared by the Congressional Budget Office which show the net effect of the Reagan budget and tax program by income category.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NET EFFECT OF THE REAGAN BUDGET AND TAX PROGRAM, BY INCOME CATEGORY, CALENDAR YEAR (IN 1983 DOLLARS)

[Household income (1982 dollars)]

All households		Less than $10,000	$10,000 to $20,000	$20,000 to $40,000	$40,000 to $80,000	$80,000 and over
Cumulative net change in benefits and taxes (in millions)	+$64,620	−$4,530	+$4,720	+$24,550	+$24,000	+$15,870
Average net change in benefits and taxes	+$740	−$240	+$220	+$810	+$1,700	+$15,130
Net change in taxes and benefits as a percentage of income	3	−1.7	+1.3	+2.9	+4.4	+6.7

INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX CUTS PER HOUSEHOLD, BY INCOME CATEGORY CALENDAR YEARS 1982–1985 (IN CURRENT DOLLARS)

Calendar year:
1982	$450	$70	$220	$450	$750	$8,430
1983	940	120	440	950	1,830	15,250
1984	1,280	170	590	1,280	2,520	19,350
1985	1,600	250	760	1,650	3,100	21,950

Source: Congressional Budget Office.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a table prepared by the Tax Foundation, which shows estimated burdens of selected taxes in relation to family income at various income levels.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TABLE 1.—ESTIMATED BURDENS OF SELECTED TAXES IN RELATION TO FAMILY INCOME AT VARIOUS INCOME LEVELS, 1972–73, AND RELATED INDEXES OF APPROXIMATE TAX BURDENS FOR 1981

Income class (money income before taxes: thousands of dollars)		Tax burden as percent of income, 1972–73					Index of approximate tax burden, 1981 [1]
		Selected Federal taxes				State-local general sales taxes	Selected Federal taxes				State-local general sales taxes
1972–73	1981 (approximate) [2]	Individual income tax	Liquor	Gasoline [3]	Tobacco		Individual income tax	Liquor	Gasoline	Tobacco
All income classes		9.40	0.45	0.42	0.21	2.04	100	100	100	100	100
Under 3	Under 7.2	2.40	.75	.71	.70	5.11	26	167	169	333	250
3–4	7.2–9.6	2.41	.60	.57	.42	3.45	26	133	136	200	169
4–5	9.6–12	3.32	.62	.57	.37	3.04	35	138	136	176	149
5–6	12–14.4	4.52	.63	.57	.34	2.82	48	140	136	162	138
6–7	14.4–16.8	5.28	.50	.55	.32	2.72	56	111	131	152	133
7–8	16.8–19.2	5.48	.56	.54	.31	2.52	58	124	129	148	124
8–10	19.2–24	7.55	.53	.53	.28	2.41	80	118	126	133	118
10–12	24–28.8	8.62	.50	.50	.25	2.22	92	111	119	119	109
12–15	28.8–36	9.32	.44	.47	.22	2.04	99	98	112	105	100

TABLE 1.—ESTIMATED BURDENS OF SELECTED TAXES IN RELATION TO FAMILY INCOME AT VARIOUS INCOME LEVELS, 1972–73, AND RELATED INDEXES OF APPROXIMATE TAX BURDENS FOR 1981—Continued

Income class (money income before taxes: thousands of dollars)		Tax burden as percent of income, 1972–73					Index of approximate tax burden, 1981 [1]
		Selected Federal taxes				State-local general sales taxes	Selected Federal taxes				State-local general sales taxes
1972–73	1981 (approximate) [2]	Individual income tax	Liquor	Gasoline [3]	Tobacco		Individual income tax	Liquor	Gasoline	Tobacco
15–20	36–48	10.12	.45	.43	.19	1.90	108	100	102	90	93
20–25	48–60	11.00	.39	.37	.15	1.77	117	87	88	71	89
25–plus	60-plus	12.09	.34	.25	.08	1.43	129	76	60	38	70

[1] Based on 1972–73 percentages, which reflect consumption patterns of that period.
[2] Assuming the same rate of income growth at all income levels: 1981 amounts are uniformly 2.4 times those of 1972–73.
[3] Also including other automotive excises.

Source: Basic data (for 1972–73), Tax Foundation, Inc., "Allocating Tax Burdens and Governmental Benefits by Income Class, 1972–73 and 1977" (February 1981), table 3: calculation of index numbers and translation to estimated 1981 income equivalents carried out for this presentation.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, the CBO tables clearly show that the result of the 1981 Reagan tax and spending program was to create a significant transfer of wealth from low- and middle-income families to high-income families. The Tax Foundation table will show that the cigarette excise tax burden, as a percent of income, is several times higher for low-income groups as compared to high-income groups. Indeed, cigarette excise taxes, because of consumption patterns are far more regressive than gasoline, liquor, and general sales taxes. The clear import of these tables is that the Finance Committee bill will impose extremely regressive tax burdens on those very families who benefited least from last year's tax and spending program.

Mr. President, this should not be considered a tobacco issue. It is an economic issue. It raises fundamental questions of fairness. It boils down to who should bear the burden of last year's tax and spending bills. On whose backs do we want to impose further burdens in order to help ring this Nation out of its present economic mess?

Personal views of smoking are irrelevant to consideration of a cigarette excise tax. The Joint Tax Committee's revenue estimates are based on a 4-percent decrease in demand for cigarettes. Certainly this will impact to a certain extent on tobacco States. Over 81,000 persons are employed in tobacco-related jobs in Kentucky. Naturally, I am greatly concerned with the impact a doubling of the excise tax will have on these individuals and the entire Kentucky economy.

I know it is difficult to create any sympathy in this body for a product important to only a small region of the country and I will not try to do so. While a 4-percent reduction in consumption will undoubtedly impact on Kentucky, it will not devastate the State economy. At the same time, it will have a negligible impact on the consumption of tobacco for the average person. So, we should not be persuaded by offhand, social policy arguments. All that really matters is the fact that this provision increases the tax burdens on that part of the taxpaying public that can least afford it.

Mr. President, this amendment will reduce revenues by $4.963 billion over a 3-year period. I have not proposed that another part of the Tax Code be amended to pick up this lost revenue.

I would have done so were it not for the restrictive rules established in the reconciliation instructions that limit amendments to only those provisions already included in the Finance Committee bill. This is regrettable and, because of the severe budgetary pressures we are operating under, it may result in poor tax policy and undermine the will of the majority.

It may be that the lost revenue will be made up in amendments to be offered before final passage. I hope so and I must point out that much of this exercise in raising taxes would not have been necessary if the third year of the 1980 tax cut could have been deferred.

I am concerned that we not take action on the Senate floor that puts further strains on the economy by increasing Federal deficit spending. At the same time, however, I cannot abide by unfair tax provisions that discriminate against certain regions of the country and take money from middle- and low-income taxpayers to preserve tax breaks for corporations and wealthy Americans.

In the interst of tax equity and fairness, I urge the support of my colleagues in repealing this regressive cigarette excise tax provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me say, first of all, that I am certainly sympathetic to the amendment. But as this Senator from Kansas said earlier we found it very difficult to raise $100 billion over a 3-year period and there were some who wanted to go higher than 8 cents a pack. The Senator from Kansas was not one. Neither was the Senator from Minnesota nor the Senator from Idaho in the group that discussed this. There were also some who wanted to add on additional tax on distilled spirits, wine, and beer. We did not do that. I say this only to emphasis how difficult we found it to raise $100 billion over a 3-year period. I am not suggesting that the other options would have created additional problems.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I might say to the distinguished Senator from Kansas that California, Wisconsin, and some other States would have some problems in this Chamber other than the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. DOLE. I am not singling out any Senator. I am just saying we hope we were somewhat helpful in our deliberations. Maybe we were not. But we certainly knew that there might be a problem not just in the State of Kentucky but in other States. So the effort was made to try to find enough revenue without excise taxes, but we were not successful in that effort.

The 8-cents-per-pack excise tax has been in effect since 1951. In 1982 dollars, the excise tax has declined in real terms from 29 cents in 1951 to 8 cents in 1982 as a result of inflation. In addition doubling the cigarette excise tax will not raise the per pack tax, in real terms, above the 1951 level.

A recent study by E. M. Levit, et al., published by the National Bureau of Economic Research, concludes that both the number of smoking teenagers and the quantity of cirgarettes smoked by teenagers are highly price sensitive. The study indicates that a 10-percent increase in the per-pack price, that is, about 8 cents, would reduce the teenage smoking participation rate by 12 percent and reduce the number of cigarettes smoked by teenagers by 14 percent. I must also repeat that we are talking about deleting a provision that would lose about $1.3 billion in 1983, $1.8 billion in 1984, and $1.9 billion in 1985.

The Senator from Kansas has been a strong supporter of the tobacco program, as he demonstrated last week, so I am not here crusading against people who smoke or against people who raise tobacco. But I do suggest that when we made the hard decisions we found ourselves short of revenue.

It was determined by a majority of the committee that we should double the tax on cigarettes. Although I am sympathetic with the concerns that have been raised, I understand I will hear from the other side tomorrow morning or maybe tonight. So I am prepared, if there are no other requests to speak, to yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I yield as much time as my distinguished colleague may need.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, first I would like to associate myself with the remarks that my colleague from Kentucky, Senator FORD, has already made on the subject, and the material that he has placed in the RECORD relating to it.

Then I would also express my awareness and appreciation of the fact that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance has not been a strong advocate for this particular tax proposal in the past and, I think, recognizes some of the difficulties it presents. Nevertheless, it is part of the tax bill that is being presented to us.

I think we all recognize it is always easy to attack a product such as tobacco in trying to assess taxation. As a matter of fact, that statement is borne out by the fact that during this period of time that the Senator from Kansas has referred to, during which the Federal tax has not been increased, the various States have increased taxes on tobacco, on cigarettes, by 224 times. So it has not been a product that has been exempted in any way from the heavy hand of the tax assessors.

As a matter of fact, as we all know, tobacco products produce taxes about 3½ times as much in the Federal, State, and local jurisdictions as the crop returns to those who grow it, over $7 billion now being assessed against this product.

I think we ought to take into account the fact that increased taxation at the Federal level is going to mean a reduction in sales. Indeed, the distinguished Senator from Kansas has indicated that in his remarks and that, of course, means a reduction in the income that States, counties, and even cities are receiving from the sale of tobacco products.

In this period of time when we, here in Congress, are returning more responsibilities to the States and local governments, and returning more of the burden of financing various services that the people need and expect, it seems inappropriate to be taking away from them some of their revenue sources. State taxes have increased by 350 percent during this period of time that it has been indicated that the Federal tax level has remained the same. That is not a unique situation at all either, the fact that the Federal tax is the same. Because of the large number of excise taxes that have been imposed over the years, many of them have not only not been increased, many of them have been eliminated totally, and yet tobacco has continued to pay its way.

Now there may be those who see this as another opportunity to strike a blow against tobacco. Just last week we dealt with the tobacco program, and it was an issue that had greater importance to those States of course, that actually grow the crop. But this is an issue that has nationwide implications and, as a matter of fact, even worldwide implications, and it is an issue that I think ought to be given a great deal of consideration because of the impact it has on the average citizen in this country.

Whether any of us individually agree with the idea of smoking or approve of smoking or do not approve of smoking or indulge ourselves or not, the fact is that 55 million adult Americans do smoke, and this is a regressive tax that applies to the poor, those of moderate income, the same as it does to those who have adequate income to be able to withstand this kind of taxation. So it is a question of equity and fairness that is due consideration on this particular matter.

There is another point that I think is worth making. I do not know that it was considered by the Committee on Finance or has been by very many others, but we are talking about increasing the tax by 8 cents, which represents a 100-percent increase.

A great portion of the cigarettes sold in this country are sold in vending machines, and I do not know of a vending machine that can adjust to an 8-cent increase. Obviously, the increase in those cases will be at least 10 cents. They have to be adjusted on the basis of 5-cent increments, nickels that go into the machine.

So in many cases we are talking here about an increase of even greater than the 100 percent that has been proposed.

Right now we are going through in this country a period of excessive unemployment. People are losing their jobs because businesses are having to cut back, industries are cutting back, because of depressed sales in their particular products. I do not know the exact estimates of what unemployment will result from this particular measure, but if the estimates are correct that the increase in the cost will reduce the sales, and the Committee on Finance recognizes that will occur because they are not doubling the revenue that comes from the doubling of the tax, obviously there is going to be some slippage there which can only be translated into fewer jobs in the cigarette manufacturing and other tobacco manufacturing industries. It is not a time, in my judgment, to think about increasing unemployment in this country.

We all know what the cost of unemployment is to the Federal Government. The figures I have seen recently are that each percentage point of unemployment results in about a $39 billion annual cost to the Government.

So that raises serious questions as to whether or not there is any particular gain to the Federal Treasury out of a tax of this nature. I hope my colleagues will consider all of the questions that relate to this particular tax.

I emphasize again that this is not a question that just those of us from the tobacco States are interested in. I think before the debate is over we will hear from other Senators representing States that do not have a direct interest in tobacco because this is an effort, in attempting to repeal this tax, to represent the average man and woman in the United States who happens to enjoy smoking and who will have to bear the burden of this new tax without regard to their income level, without regard to their financial ability to pay. So it is contrary to the taxing concept that we have in this country of taxing on the basis of ability to pay.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, supporters of increased excise taxes like to point out that the cigarette excise tax has not been increased since 1951. While that is true, it is a meaningless statistic. First of all, Federal tax policy for the last 50 years has moved away from regressive taxation that impacts on middle and lower income Americans to a more progressive system of taxation. And thus, excise tax burdens have decreased across the board on all products during this same 30-year period. In fact, most excise taxes were repealed in 1965 legislation.

At the same time, State excise taxes on tobacco have increased more than 350 percent since the last increase in the Federal cigarette excise tax. This has been a trend now for years—for States to look to the excise tax to raise State funds. This trend accelerated sharply during 1982 as a result of the increased fiscal pressures Reaganomics placed on State governments. In addition, the administration's New Federalism initiative contemplates giving State governments exclusive power to impose excise taxes. The Finance Committee proposal is directly contrary to this effort.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The acting majority leader is recognized.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, is there an amendment pending?

Mr. DOLE. Yes, Senator FORD has a pending amendment.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, as I understand it, this amendment will be the pending amendment in the morning. We were to go out at 6:30. Mr. President, may I ask how much time I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has slightly more than 14 minutes remaining.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I would like to reserve at least 10 minutes of that time, and maybe all of it, for tomorrow. Fifteen minutes is all we have for the proponents.

Mr. DOLE. We can allow time off the bill if the Senator from Kentucky wants more time.

Mr. FORD. I do not want to preclude those from having sufficient time. I just wanted to save time here. The distinguished Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM) wishes to come and speak in favor of this amendment. So I would like to have him have at least 3 minutes tomorrow.

Mr. President, are we going to bring this amendment down now? Are we going to close for the day?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The acting majority leader has the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, may we have order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, what we would like to do now is to set aside the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky—it will be the pending business tomorrow morning—and take up a noncontroversial amendment of the Senator from Alaska that I understand has been cleared by Senator LONG. I understand that we will then recess until tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock. I will ask the acting majority leader if that is correct.

Mr. STEVENS. We have one little bill to finish after we get off the tax bill and then recess.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOLE. When the Senate reconvenes tomorrow morning, the pending business will be the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky be temporarily set aside so that we might make an order for the amendment of the Senator from Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1109

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1109.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At page 438, line 22, strike the period at the end of line 22 and add the following: "and inserting in lieu thereof a new subsection (e) to read as follows:

"(e) EXEMPTION FOR CERTAIN HELICOPTER USES.—

No tax shall be imposed under subsection (a) or (b) on air transportation by helicopter for the purpose of—

"(1) transporting individuals, equipment, or supplies in the exploration for, or the development or removal of, natural resources, or

"(2) the planting, cultivation, cutting, or transportation of, or caring for, trees (including logging operations), but only if the helicopter does not take off from, or land at, a facility eligible for assistance under the Airport and Airway Development Act of 1970, or otherwise use services provided pursuant to title IV of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 during such use.".

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, section 281(b) of H.R. 4961 provides an exemption from the aviation fuel tax used in noncommercial aviation when a helicopter is used for the purpose of transporting individuals, equipment, or supplies in the exploration for, or the development or removal of natural resources as well as the planting, cultivation, cutting, or transportation of, or caring for, trees. The exemption applies only when a helicopter does not take off from, or land at a facility eligible for assistance under the Airport and Airway Development Act.

As my colleagues know, timber and natural resource operations are very important to many of the States in this Nation. Alaska, for example, has tremendous natural resource potential. Unfortunately, recovery of our natural resources if often prohibitively expensive. I commend Senator PACKWOOD and Senator LONG for working out the aviation fuel exemption. It does assist natural resource discovery and development in cases where the helicopters involved are not using the airway system that the excise taxes are designed to fund. However, it has recently come to my attention that the authors of this exemption intended to exempt helicopters involved in these activities from all aviation taxes. My amendment would amplify that amendment and would also exempt helicopters in this situation from the ticket tax under section 4261(a).

Mr. President, I have checked with the Joint Tax Committee and I understand they have communicated with the IRS. I am told that the revenue impact is less than $1 million. I am hopeful that the distinguished chairman will accept this amendment. I have discussed this amendment with the distinguished Senator from Louisiana and it is my understanding that he is in agreement with it.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it was called to our attention that certain helicopters used in timber, forestry or natural resource operations do not take off from, or land at, federally financed facilities or otherwise use the airway system services. These helicopters do not use federally financed facilities or services for extended periods of time. In view of these circumstances the Finance Committee bill provides an exemption from the noncommercial aviation fuel tax for the time these helicopters are used in timber, forestry, or natural resource operations.

The amendment of the Senator from Alaska will exempt helicopters from the air passenger ticket tax when used in timber, forestry, or natural resource operations.

This amendment of the Senator from Alaska is consistent with the purpose and scope of the helicopter exemption from the fuel tax already in the Finance Committee bill, and other noncommercial aviation fuel tax exemptions, not as the one for aircraft engaged in farming purposes. Therefore, we are happy to accept the amendment of the Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I will have a substantial colloquy about the interpretation of the aviation fuel tax as it deals with natural resource activity with the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Kansas, and the Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD), that will appear in the RECORD tomorrow.

But I do appreciate the understanding of the distinguished manager of the bill and the distinguished Senator from Louisiana as manager on his side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back?

Mr. STEVENS. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS).

The amendment (UP No. 1109) was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

TAXING TAX EXEMPT BONDS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, at this point I would like to discuss just briefly and put in the RECORD some information for the benefit of Senators. I hope that the administrative assistants will read the information if Senators cannot, because I think this is information that Senators should definitely have tomorrow when we turn to the subject of the taxation of interest income of State and local bonds.

Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. DODD) has prepared two amendments which he will seek to consolidate into one and the Senator from Louisiana has also prepared two amendments which I will seek to consolidate into one.

To save the time of the Senate, we will seek to simply join in cosponsoring these two amendments which would advance the principle that the Federal Government will not attempt to tax the borrowing power of State governments. I have made as part of the record a resolution of the Attorneys General of State governments where they conclude that it is unconstitutional for the Federal Government to tax the borrowing power of State and local governments. The Supreme Court ruled in Pollask against Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (1895), Mr. President. It is an older case, but it is still good law. Just like Marbury against Madison is still good law, when the Supreme Court held that an act passed by the Congress in violation of the Constitution is unconstitutional.

I am submitting a memorandum by a very good law firm in New York which analyzes these authorities. Any Member of this body owes it to himself to familiarize himself with this subject matter. In my judgment, it is clear beyond any peradventure of doubt that it was neither the intention of Congress, nor the intention of the States in ratifying the 16th amendment, to extend the authority of the Federal Government to tax an essential function of the State government which, in this case, is the borrowing of money to finance the State government. This function is an essential taxing function, without which a State cannot exist.

The decisions supporting this immunity from taxation go back to the early days of our Republic. It is implied, to be sure, but it is there nevertheless. The courts have consistently upheld the principle that the Federal Government cannot tax the essential activities of a State government and the States cannot tax the essential activities of the Federal Government without its consent.

Mr. President, it is ridiculous to assume that the States would have ever ratified the 16th amendment had they ever thought that this would mean that an absolutely essential function of a State government the borrowing of money would be taxed by the Federal Government.

This point was raised by the Governor of New York, Governor Hughes, at that time, a great Governor who subsequently became the Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court. He expressed concern that the 16th amendment might be construed to tax State government. Senator Borah and Senator Brown, sponsors of the 16th amendment, spoke on the floor of the Senate to explain that no such thing was intended; that all that was intended by the 16th amendment was merely to bypass the provision of the Constitution which says that direct taxes had to be apportioned among the States according to their population.

I urge that Senators read the legal authorities so well set forth by the firm of Hawkins, Delafield Wood, which was submitted to the Finance Committee on March 17, 1982.

Mr. President, this is not the first time that this firm has submitted these authorities to the Committee on Finance. But this is the first time the Committee on Finance has acted contrary to it.

I submit that part of that is due to haste and we did not take the time that would ordinarily like to consider the issues and this authority in the detail that we should have.

I urge every Senator to familiarize himself with this essential doctrine of Government that the Constitution intends that the Federal Government should not have the power to destroy the States, and the State governments should not have the power to destroy the Federal Government. Those who do not know this doctrine, Mr. President, would be well advised to familiarize themselves with it.

All of us have taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. I believe Senators in good conscience want to be true to that oath. If they do, then they will conclude that if they want to tax the essential functions of a State government they would have to do so by a consititutional amendment. One was proposed by the House of Representatives about 1920, when they clearly understood the limitations of the 16th amendment.

Also, Mr. President, I would like to show, and I have a memorandum here that makes this information available, that there could be no more inefficient way of raising revenue for the Federal Government than to tax State and local bonds in the fashion proposed here. The reason I say that, Mr. President, is that this tax would only apply to a relatively small portion of the State bonds, those issued after 1982, but it would raise the interest cost on all of the bonds.

For example, there would be a 20 percent tax levied on the income from State and local bonds, as a minimum tax, by persons subject to this individual minimum tax. Those presumably would be people who buy a great deal of those bonds. But no such tax would be levied on the insurance companies who hold large numbers of such bonds in their portfolios. A tax, while levied on a bank, would be levied indirectly. It would only be levied by reducing the bank's deduction for its interest expense paid to depositors.

I am told that in the last analysis the tax on a bank which acquires these bonds would be about a 5 percent tax. The tax on individuals that would work is a 20 percent tax, for most people in this category.

But notice this: All those bonds held by those insurance companies would not be taxed by this minimum tax, and, therefore, on all these new issues those insurance companies would get the benefit of the higher yield because people would not buy the bonds without insisting on a higher yield to buy them to pay the tax on them. That would be a windfall for all these companies that pay a minimal amount of taxes as it is now.

This tax would not apply to all those who hold bonds issued before 1983. Only those who hold bonds issued after 1982 would be subject to this tax.

Therefore, all the others would have a windfall. They would receive higher interest payments paid by the States but they would pay no tax on it because the minimum tax would not apply to them. It would only apply to a very small percentage of our taxpayers, who purchased the bonds issued after 1982.

The banks would only be paying the equivalent of about a 5-percent tax on bonds issued after 1982 but they would not be paying the 20-percent tax that certain individuals would be paying.

It is fair to assume that the statements by the financial officers of the State governments are correct. They have informed us that this would cost them in the first year $1 billion of revenue to pay for the additional cost on $100 billion of new issues of bonds. So here is a proposal to raise the cost of State governments by $1 billion, in exchange for only $150 million in revenue for the Federal Government.

Mr. President, the same taxpayer who pays my salary also pays the salary of the Governor of my State. He pays the salary of my State legislature. So that money would have to be raised by the local governments, by increasing the tax of the people.

In the last analysis we would have levied a billion dollars of State tax on our people to collect $150 million to the Federal Government. In other words, to get $1 for the Federal Government we cost the States $6.60. To put it another way, in order to make a person pay a tax on $1, we permit someone else to go home free with $6, a very inefficient way of taxing.

So, Mr. President, I wish to submit this memorandum of law, making it clear that this is the most inefficient proposal for raising taxes that has yet been reported by the Committee on Finance. I have been a member of that committee for almost 30 years now.

I would insist, Mr. President, that not only is this unconstitutional, and the authorities prove it, but there clearly has to be a better way to raise revenues for the Government. This would mean an increased burden on every local government that must borrow money, on every county, on every municipality, on every school district, on every State, and it would mean a great increase in taxes at that level to sustain the taxes levied at this level.

I would urge, Mr. President, that Senators read the memorandum submitted. I ask unanimous consent that it and the Dodd-Long amendment appear in the RECORD immediately after this statement.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DODD-LONG AMENDMENT CONTINUING TAX-EXEMPT STATUS OF STATE AND LOCAL BOND INTEREST

Present law.—The interest on State and local bonds is not and has never been subject to Federal income tax.

Committee bill.—H.R. 4961 as reported would subject interest on State and local bonds to Federal taxation in two ways:

1. Individual minimum tax.—Interest on tax-exempt bonds issued after December 31, 1982 would be considered a preference subject to the new individual minimum tax taxable at up to 20 percent. (The first $30,000 of taxable and preference income—$40,000 for couples filing joint returns—would not be taxed; the next $20,000 would be taxed at 10 percent, and amounts above this taxed at 20 percent.)

2. Corporate minimum tax.—Financial institutions owning tax-exempt bonds acquired after December 31, 1982 will only be able to deduct 85% (rather than 100%) of the interest on debt used to carry these bonds. The effect of this is to increase taxes on banks that purchase State and local bonds.

Long amendment.—The Long amendment would delete those two provisions in the Committee bill so as to retain the present tax-exempt status of State and local bond interest.

MAJOR ARGUMENTS IN FAVOR OF THE LONG AMENDMENT

1. Committee provisions are unconstitutional.—In a decision made almost nine decades ago and cited favorably a number of times since, the Supreme Court held that the Constitution denied the Federal Government the power to tax State and local bond interest because such a tax would directly impair the borrowing power of the States.

2. State and local financing costs will rise.—The taxpayers who will pay more in Federal taxes will insist upon more interest if they are to invest in State and local bonds. The Municipal Finance Officers Association estimates that the individual minimum tax provision will increase interest costs up to one-half percentage point and the corporate minimum tax provision will increase interest one percentage point—a total of one-and-one-half percentage points. This translates into additional State and local financing costs of $1.5 billion in the first full year and $3 billion in the second year.

3. Additional State and local costs far greater than additional Federal revenues.—The corporate minimum tax change affecting commercial bank purchases of State and local securities might raise $150 million in the first year, according to the Municipal Finance Officers Association. This compares with an increased State and local Government cost under that provision of $1 billion—a ratio of 6.6 to 1. In other words, every dollar of Federal revenue gain from that part of the corporate minimum tax will cost State and local Governments $6.60.

4. Greater impact on lower- and middle-income taxpayers.—Studies show that State and local Governments generally tend to rely more heavily on forms of taxation which are fairly regressive, that is, they burden lower- and middle-income taxpayers more than they burden higher-income taxpayers. By the time the increased Federal taxes have been passed through as an increase in State and local taxes, it is the lower- and middle-income taxpayers who will pay the bulk of it.

5. Windfall to bond investors.—The individual minimum tax on exempt bond interest will raise the taxes of only a relatively small number of taxpayers, yet it will raise exempt bond rates for all investors by an estimated one-half percentage point. In addition, the corporate minimum tax relating to exempt bonds will only raise the taxes of financial institutions, but it will raise exempt bond rates for all investors by an estimated one percentage point. For the great majority of investors not affected by these minimum taxes, this additional one-and-one-half percentage points of tax-exempt yield would be a windfall generated by these tax proposals.

6. Two-tier bond market.—These proposals will draw investment funds away from new issues, that provide actual dollars to the States, and will draw funds toward already outstanding pre-1982 bonds. Under the individual minimum tax, only bonds issued after 1982 can be taxed. Under the corporate preference tax, only bonds purchased by financial institutions after 1982 will increase their tax. This will create a two-tier market in which new issues will be more difficult to market.

RESOLUTION: TAXATION OF STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT BONDS

Whereas, federal legislation has been proposed to extend minimum tax treatment to interest on state and local government bonds received by individuals and deductions for interest payments by corporations acquiring such bonds; and

Whereas, such treatment is of doubtful constitutionality; and

Whereas, the enactment of such proposals would sharply increase the cost of State and local government borrowing to provide essential governmental projects, involving billions of dollars of extra expense; and

Whereas, any federal revenue such enactment would provide would be far less than the additional interest cost burdens imposed on states and local government;

Now therefore, be it resolved that the National Association of Attorneys General:

1. Encourages the Congress to reject proposals to extend minimum tax treatment to the holders of state and local government bonds, both individual and corporate; and

2. Authorizes the General Counsel of this Association to transmit these views to the Congress, the Administration, and other appropriate individuals.

STATEMENT OF HAWKINS, DELAFIELD & WOOD—MINIMUM TAX ON INCOME WHICH INCLUDES INTEREST ON STATE AND MUNICIPAL OBLIGATIONS

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

This statement is submitted in accordance with Press Release No. 82-107 with regard to the hearings being held from March 16 through March 19 on the tax proposals in the Administration's budget. Specifically, this statement is directed to any consideration that the Committee may give to a minimum tax on income, including state and municipal bond interest. The principal points presented in the statement are summarized as follows:

A minimum tax on income including state and municipal bond interest, if enacted into law, would be unconstitutional. The decision by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Pollock case holds that a tax on the interest from state and municipal bonds is unconstitutional. The Sixteenth Amendment did not change the decision in the Pollock case. The history of the adoption of the Sixteenth Amendment confirms the Congressional and Supreme Court construction of its intent and meaning. To the extent that a minimum tax applies to interest on local housing authority obligations it also impairs the obligation of contract.

I. A MINIMUM TAX ON INCOME INCLUDING INTEREST ON STATE AND MUNICIPAL OBLIGATIONS WOULD BE UNCONSTITUTIONAL

A minimum tax would include in the gross income of a taxpayer the amount of so-called "disallowed tax preferences" and would define the so-called "items of tax preference." Among such items might be any excess of interest on obligations which is currently excludable from gross income under section 103 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended, namely the interest or "the obligations of a State, a Territory, or a possession of the United States, or any political subdivision of any of the foregoing, or of the District of Columbia".

The Committee considered such a minimum tax under the Tax Reform Act of 1969 (H.R. 13270). The bill as proposed included a section which would have limited tax preferences to (1) one-half of the sum of the items of tax preference and the taxpayer's adjusted gross income or (2) $10,000, whichever is greater. Hawkins, Delafield & Wood submitted a statement to this Committee while that proposal was under consideration by the Committee. The statement as it related to the minimum tax proposals presented the same analysis that is contained herein. The proposal for a minimum tax on income which includes interest on state and municipal obligations was not included in the bill reported out of this Committee. Senate Report No. 91-552, Tax Reform Act of 1969, at 2029. Reconsideration of a minimum tax by the Committee should lead to the same result now as it did in 1969. If such a tax is proposed and includes income on state and municipal obligations, it would be unconstitutional.

Law, as Mr. Justice Holmes has told us, is a "prophecy of what courts do in fact." In our opinion, the Supreme Court would hold that such a tax on the interest on state and municipal obligations is unconstitutional for the reasons stated below. From the time the income tax was imposed in 1913 until now both Congress and the Supreme Court have adhered steadfastly to the constitutional doctrine that state and municipal bond interest is exempt from federal income tax. It would be strange for Congress to abdicate its obligation to respect constitutional limitations upon its power by levying a tax on such interest without new constitutional authorization.

The doctrine of federal immunity from state interference, including interference by taxation, is a general principle of constitutioal law with which this Committee is undoubtedly familiar. The converse immunity of the states from federal interference is equally well established. In National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833, 842 (1976), the Supreme Court stated unequivocally that the constitutional doctrine of intergovernmental immunity imposes "limits upon the power of Congress to override state sovereignty, even when exercising its otherwise plenary powers to tax or to regulate commerce which are conferred by Art. I of the Constitution." The doctrine was specifically applied to interest on obligations of states and municipalities and of state and municipal instrumentalities by the Supreme Court of the United States in the landmark case of Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, 157 U.S. 429 (1895) and on rehearing, 158 U.S. 601 (1895).

The case decided by the Supreme Court under the Sixteenth amendment as well as the legislative history of the amendment in Congress during ratification by the state legislatures demonstrate that any claim that the amendment repudiated the rule of the Pollock case is unsupported by any judicial precedent, is unfounded in fact, and altogether spurious.

For the purpose of this statement it is not necessary or desirable to delve into the much repeated history of the constitutional doctrine of reciprocal immunity before August 15, 1894 when Congress enacted a statute which levied a tax upon net income, including the interest on state and municipal bonds.

At that time and until the Sixteenth Amendment became effective on February 25, 1913, Article I, Section 2, of the federal Constitution required the apportionment of "direct taxes" among the States according to population, as follows:

"Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound for service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons."

Article I, Section 8, of the Constitution also required that "Duties, Imposts and Excises" shall be uniform, as follows:

"The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defense and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States; . . ."

A. The Pollock Case holds that a tax on the interest from state amd municipal bonds is unconstitutional.

In the Pollock decision which considered the validity of the income tax law of 1894, the Supreme Court pointed out that the federal government had an unlimited power of taxation with a single exception and subject to two qualifications. The one exception was that "Congress cannot tax exports . . ." The two qualifications were that Congress "must impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment, and indirect taxes by the rule of uniformity." 157 U.S. at 557.

In the first Pollock case the Supreme Court held that a tax on the rents and other income from real estate was a direct tax and consequently violated the Constitution because the tax was not "apportioned among the several States . . . according to their respective numbers." The Court also unanimously held that the taxing power, like any and all other powers of the federal government, was impliedly subject to the constitutional limitation that it could not be so exercised that the instrumentalities of the states were taxed. 157 U.S. at 584.

Thus, the first decision in the Pollock case held the income tax act of 1894 invalid in respect of (1) the tax on rents and other income from real estate and (2) the tax on the interest from state and municipal bonds. The justices divided equally on the constitutionality of the income tax pertaining to personal property other than state and municipal obligations and on whether the 1894 act as a whole was unconstitutional.

On rehearing the Supreme Court decided (four of the justices dissenting) first, that the tax on income from personal property was a direct tax and hence was invalid because not apportioned and, second, that the 1894 Act was unconstitutional in its entirety.

The Pollock decision was unanimous as to municipal bond interest because in the words of Mr. Justice Fuller, to tax the interest on municipal bonds "would operate on the power to borrow before it is exercised, and would have a sensible influence on the contract," and would be a "tax on the power of the States and their instrumentalities to borrow money and consequently repugnant to the Constitution." 157 U.S. at 586.

To the same effect was the separate opinion of Mr. Justice Field:

"These bonds and securities are as important to the performance of the duties of the State as like bonds and securities of the United States are important to the performance of their duties, and are as exempt from the taxation of the United States as the former are exempt from the taxation of the States." 157 U.S. at 601.

And Mr. Justice Brown who had concluded that "a tax upon rents or income of real estate is a tax upon the land itself" nevertheless said in the second Pollock decision:

"The tax upon the income of municipal bonds falls obviously within the other category, of an indirect tax upon something which Congress has no right to tax at, all, and hence is invalid. Here is a question, not of the method of taxation, but of the power to subject the property to taxation in any form." 158 U.S. 692–693.

Thus, all the justices in both Pollock decisions, whether they subscribed to the theory that a tax on income was a tax on the source of the income or considered that theory untenable, came to the identical conclusion that the interest on state and municipal obligations could not be included in federally taxable income. It is clear, therefore, that the decision in Pollock concerning the unconstitutionality of taxing state and municipal bond interest rests not on the economic premise that a tax on income is a tax on the source of the income but on the inviolability of the borrowing power of the states and their political subdivisions.[1]

B. The Sixteenth Amendment did not change the decision in the Pollock Case.

This, then, was the law when the Sixteenth Amendment was declared in full force and effect by the Secretary of State on February 25, 1913. The Amendment reads:

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration."

1. The Congress has construed the Sixteenth Amendment consistently with the decision in the Pollock Case.

Even before the Supreme Court decided that the phrase "from whatever source" in the Amendment relates not to the power to tax but to the requirement that certain federal taxes must be apportioned among the states according to their respective populations, Congress had also concluded that the object of the Amendment was to eliminate the necessity of apportionment irrespective of source in order that the income derived from the source of real and personal property could be taxed. Briefly stated, the Amendment means that a tax on income "from whatever source" is immune from the consitutional requirement of apportionment. 38 Stat. L. 168 (1913); 39 Stat. L. 758–59 (1916); 40 Stat. L. 329–30 (1917) and 1065–66 (1918).

When a revenue act was drafted during World War I with a provision to include the interest on municipal bonds in gross income, the lack of power to tax such interest was expressed both in committee reports and congressional debate. It was recognized that lack of apportionment was not the objection to federal taxation of state and municipal bond interest but that the lack of power to tax such interest was absolute. The provision was omitted. H. Rep. No. 767, (65th Cong. 2nd Sess.) p. 9; Sen. R. No. 617, (65th Cong. 3rd Sess.) p. 6; 56 Cong. Rec. p. 10933–41, 10628–33, 11181–86.

Such a contemporaneous construction of the Sixteenth Amendment by Congress from the time it became effective through World War I is certainly an influential if not a controlling consideration in determining the meaning of the Amendment.

Later, in 1923, after the decision of the Supreme Court in Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245 (1920), to be discussed below, Congress considered and the House of Representatives passed a constitutional amendment [2] to

---

[1] The reluctance of the four justices in both Pollock cases to accept the theory that a tax on income is a tax on the source of the income was later shared by the Supreme Court in New York ex rel Cohn v. Graves, 300 U.S. 308 (1937) in which the New York State income tax on rents from real estate in New Jersey was upheld. Obviously, however, this was not the ratio decidendi of the Pollock case, because four of the justices who did not agree that a tax on income from personal property was a tax on the property itself jointed with the other justices in invalidating the tax on municipal bond interest.

[2] The proposed amendment read as follows:

"[H.J. Res. 314, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session.]

Joint Resolution Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE.—

Section 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of any State, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States or any other State.

authorize the taxation of income derived from future issues of state and municipal bonds and to authorize states to tax the income of future issues of federal bonds. H.J. Res. 314, (67th Cong. 4th Sess.); H. Rep. No. 969, (67th Cong. 2d Sess.) The proposal failed to pass the Senate.

2. The Supreme Court has construed the Sixteenth Amendment consistently with the decision on the Pollock Case.

In Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245 (1920), the Supreme Court held (Justice Holmes and Brandeis dissenting) that the Sixteenth Amendment did not authorize an income tax on the salary of a federal judge in view of the fact that the Constitution provided that the compensation of judges "shall not be diminished during their continuance in office." Const. Art. III Sec. 1.

The Court then considered whether the constitutional inhibition against such diminution was modified by the Sixteenth Amendment. After an elaborate analysis of the Sixteenth Amendment the Court concluded that:

"the genesis and words of the Amendment unite in showing that it does not extend the taxing power to new or excepted subjects, but merely removes all occasion otherwise existing for an apportionment among the States of taxes laid on income, whether derived from one source or another." 253 U.S. at 261–2.

Although Evans v. Gore was overruled in O'Malley v. Woodrough, 307 U.S. 277 (1939), it is clear from the opinion of Mr. Justices Frankfurter in the latter case that the decision that federal judges could be taxed on their salaries was based on the premise that, as Justices Holmes and Brandeis had said in their dissenting opinion in Evans v. Gore, a tax on salaries was not a diminution of compensation. Only that portion of the majority opinion in Evans v. Gore was repudiated and not one word in the opinion in O'Malley v. Woodrough questions the above-quoted conclusion of the Court in Evans v. Gore concerning the Sixteenth Amendment.

In Evans v. Gore the Supreme Court had referred to previous cases in which the Court had considered the Sixteenth Amendment, beginning with the opinion of Chief Justice White in Brushaber v. Union Pacific R.R. Co., 240 U.S. 1 (1916) which was the first case involving the scope and meaning of the Sixteenth Amendment. In that case, referring to the text of the Amendment the Chief Justice had declared (240 U.S. at 17–18):

". . . It is clear on the face of this text that it does not purport to confer power to levy income taxes in a generic sense—an authority already possessed and never questioned—or to limit and distinguish between one kind of income taxes and another, but that the whole purpose of the Amendment was to relieve all income taxes when imposed from apportionment from a consideration of the source whence the income was derived. Indeed, in the light of the history which we have given and of the decision in the Pollock Case and the ground upon which the ruling in that case was based, there is no escape from the conclusion that the Amendment was drawn for the purpose of doing away for the future with the principle upon which the Pollock Case was decided, that is, of determining whether a tax on income was direct not by a consideration of the burden placed on the taxed income upon which it directly operated, but by taking into view the burden which resulted on the property from which the income was derived, since in express terms the Amendment provides that income taxes, from whatever source the income may be derived, shall not be subject to the regulation of apportionment."

The Brushaber case was decided on January 24, 1916. On February 21, 1916, the Supreme Court handed down the decision in Stanton v. Baltic Mining Co., 240 U.S. 103 (1916). The decision was unanimous and again the Court reiterated the rule

". . . that the provisions of the Sixteenth Amendment conferred no new power of taxation . . ." 240 U.S. at 112.

In Peck & Co. v. Lowe, 247 U.S. 165 (1918), the Supreme Court decided that the net income of a corporation derived from exporting goods was not a tax on exports prohibited by the Constitution. The unanimous opinion of the Court stated:

"The sixteenth amendment, although referred to in argument, has no real bearing and may be put out of view. As pointed out in recent decisions, it does not extend the taxing power to new or excepted subjects, but merely removes all occasion, which otherwise might exist, for an apportionment among the States of taxes laid on income, whether it be derived from one source or another." 247 U.S. at 172–3.

Two years later, in Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189, 206 (1920), the Court said:

"As repeatedly held, this did not extend the taxing power to new subjects, but merely removed the necessity which might otherwise exist for an apportionment among the States of taxes laid on income."

In 1926 in Metcalf & Eddy v. Mitchell, 269 U.S. 514, 521, Mr. Justice Stone flatly declared:

". . . the sixteenth amendment did not extend the taxing power to any new class of subjects."

Five years later, in Willcuts v. Bunn, Chief Justice Hughes, 282 U.S. 216, 226 (1931), speaking for a unanimous Court which held capital gains on the sale of public securities to be taxable, reiterated the rationale of the rule as follows:

"In the case of the obligations of a State or of its political subivisions, the subject held to be exempt from Federal taxation is the principal and interest of the obligations. Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, supra. These obligations constitute the contract made by the State, or by its political agency pursuant to its authority, and a tax upon the amounts payable by the terms of the contract has therefore been regarded as bearing directly upon the exercise of the borrowing power of the Government."

Again in James v. Dravo Contracting Co., 302 U.S. 134, 153 (1937) Chief Justice Hughes restated the reason for income tax immunity of state and municipal bond interest as follows:

"There is no ineluctable logic which makes the doctrine of immunity with respect to government bonds applicable to the earnings of an independent contractor rendering service to the Government. That doctrine recognizes the direct effect of a tax which 'would operate on the power to borrow before it is exercised' (Pollack v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co., supra) and which would directly affect the Government's obligations as a continuing security. Vital considerations are there involved respecting the permanent relations of the Government to investors in its securities and its ability to maintain its credit—considerations which are not found in connection with contracts made from time to time for the services of independent contractors." (Emphasis supplied.)

And again, in Helvering v. Mountain Producers Corporation, 303 U.S. 376, 386 (1838) the Chief Justice repeats that:

"A tax on the interest payable on state and municipal bonds has been held to be invalid as a tax bearing directly upon the exercise of the borrowing power of the Government (Weston v. Charleston * * *; Pollack v. Farmer's Loan & Trust Co. * * *)."

In the previous year Mr. Justice Cardozo had also pointed out in Hale v. Iowa State Board, 302 U.S. 95, 107 (1937).

"By the teaching of the same (Pollack) case an income tax, if made to cover the interest on Government bonds, is clog upon the borrowing power such as was condemned in McCulluch v. Maryland * * * and Collector v. Day * * *."

And in Helvering v. Gerhardt, 304 U.S. 405 (1938), in upholding a federal income tax as applied to salaries of the employees of the Port Authority, Chief Justice Stone also referred to the hazard of impairing the borrowing power, stating that the immunity doctrine had been sustained:

"where * * * the function involved was one thought to be essential to the maintenance of a state government: as where the attempt was * * * to tax income received by a private investor from state bonds, and thus threaten impairment of the borrowing power of the state, Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, 157 U.S. 429; cf. Weston v. Charleston, supra, 465–466."

The rationale of the Helvering v. Gerhardt case was followed in Graves v. New York ex rel O'Keefe, 306 U.S. 466 (1939) in which the Court held that the salary of an employee of the Home Owners Loan Corporation was not immune from state income tax. Both these cases relate to the same question whether intergovernmental immunities extend to the salaries of employees: Gerhardt to a federal income tax applicable to state employees and O'Keefe to a state income tax applicable to federal employees.

It is noteworthy that in the Gerhardt case Mr. Justice Stone pointed out that the Pollock case had no application because, as distinguished from the income taxation of public salaries, the income taxation of public securities would "threaten impairment of the borrowing power of the state." The O'Keefe case does not refer to the Pollock case, probably because of the Government's position that the income taxation of public securities was essentially different.

In his argument in Graves v. O'Keefe before the Supreme Court, Solicitor General Robert Jackson, later Justice of the Supreme Court, had explained that the Government accepted the distinction drawn by Chief Justice Stone in the Gerhardt case and had emphasized that where deals with a debtor-creditor relationship, the borrower is the one who is burdened. The Solicitor General said that it was the presence of an actual burden upon the public instrumentality which issues public securities which distinguished the taxation of the interest on public securities from the taxation of the salaries of public employees.

More recently, the Supreme Court has invalidated federal regulation which unduly interferes with the performance of sovereign or governmental functions of the

---

"Section 2. Each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of such State."

states. In National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 883, 855 (1976), the Supreme Court held unconstitutional the application of the Fair Labor Act's minimum wage and maximum hour provisions to the states. The opinion states:

"Congress may not exercise . . . power so as to force directly upon the states its choices as to how essential decisions regarding the conduct of integral governmental functions are to be made."

Like the application of the Fair Labor Standards Act considered by the Supreme Court in National League of Cities v. Usery, the imposition of a tax on the obligations of the states (as well as their political subdivisions) would "operate to directly displace the States' freedom to structure integral operations in areas of traditional governmental functions" (426 U.S. 852) by increasing pressures on state budgets, a natural result of higher borrowing costs caused by the diminution in value of interest received by the holders of state obligations. The borrowing power of the states (as well as their political subdivisions) is certainly central to their ability to conduct their traditional operations and to provide the services traditionally furnished by them to the public.

The evidence is overwhelming that the views of Congress and the Supreme Court on the scope of the Sixteenth Amendment correctly express the purpose and meaning of the Amendment. That purpose was to permit Congress to levy and assess taxes on income without complying with the impracticable rule of apportionment according to population. Before the Amendment, Congress had the power to lay income taxes, but not without apportionment. After the Amendment, Congress need not apportion. The history of the Amendment proves that it was never intended to repeal the constitutional doctrine of reciprocal immunity from taxation of state and federal instrumentalities and obligations.

3. The history of the adoption of the Sixteenth Amendment confirms the Congressional and Supreme Court construction of its intent and meaning.

Sixty years ago President Taft sent a special message to Congress in which he urged a constitutional amendment which would confer upon the national government

"the power to levy an income tax * * * without apportionment among the states in proportion to population."

The President urged Congress not to reenact the 1894 income tax law which had been declared unconstitutional, saying:

"For the Congress to assume that the court will reverse itself, and to enact legislation on such an assumption, will not strengthen popular confidence in the stability of judicial construction of the Constitution." 44 Cong. Rec. (June 16, 1909) p. 3344.

Previous to President Taft's special message, Senator Brown of Nebraska had offered a resolution for a constitutional amendment to the effect that "The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes and inheritances." Upon being informed in debate that Congress already had both of the powers in question and that only the rule of apportionment stood in the way of federal income taxation, Senator Brown offered, a few days later, a second resolution which read that "The Congress shall have power to lay and collect direct taxes on income without apportionment among the several states according to population." 44 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD pp. 1548, 1568-9, 3377. The Senate Finance Committee soon reported a resolution for a constitutional amendment in which the words "direct taxes" were changed to "taxes" and after "income" the words "from whatever source derived" were inserted. The proposed amendment then read:

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration." 44 CONGRESIONAL RECORD p. 3900.

The Committee gave no explanation of the reason for these changes.[3] However, the reason for the two changes is clear. The words "direct taxes" in Senator Brown's proposal would require explanation because it was not obvious why the amendment should only provide that direct taxes need not be apportioned. Hence, to eliminate the ambiguity of "direct taxes" the committee provided that taxes on income "from whatever source derived" need not be apportioned. Senator Brown's proposed amendment as clarified by the Senate Finance Committee did not grant power to Congress to lay and collect a tax on incomes; Congress already had plenary power to levy income taxes under Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution (quoted supra at p. 4). The phrase "from whatever source derived" was simply another way of saying that Congress need no longer apportion any tax on incomes, irrespective of the source of the income; that was the sole purpose of the Amendment proposed by President Taft and introduced by Senator Brown.

The debate in Congress took one day in the Senate and one day in the House. The joint resolution proposing the amendment as redrafted by the Committee passed both houses and was immediately submitted to the states. No consideration was given at all to the question of the taxation of income from state and municipal bonds. The matter simply was not discussed. There was no indication that anyone sought to overturn the doctrine that state and municipal bond interest was immune from federal taxation which had been unanimously established in the Pollock case.

On January 5, 1910, Governor Hughes of New York submitted the amendment to the Legislature with a message calling attention to the words "from whatever source derived," suggesting that this might permit the taxation of income from state and municipal obligations, and questioning whether the amendment should be ratified.

On February 10, 1910, Senator Borah spoke in the Senate in answer to Governor Hughes' objection, stating in substance that no such meaning could be attached to the amendment. 45 Cong. Rec. 1694-9. He was followed by Senator Brown who concurred with Senator Borah's interpretation. Later, Senator Brown pointedly suggested that Governor Hughes stood alone in his fear.

"It is a very significant fact that this amendment which was pending in Congress for days and was the subject of discussion by Congress and the press, should never have met this criticism while it was pending. In its present form it had the support of a unanimous Senate and a practically unanimous House of Representatives, who were all, judged by their votes, in favor of conferring this power on Congress, and yet no one in Congress ever suggested any change in the language of the resolution or proposed an amendment thereto to cover the objection now made.

"Nor did any distinguished Governor from any of the 46 States, all of whom are now very loud in their protestations that the Government should have the power to tax incomes without apportionment, ever suggest that the amendment should have been modified in form in any respect. In this body the State of New York enjoys representation of the very highest character and most eminent ability, and yet New York on the roll call, as shown in the Congressional Record, was in favor of this amendment as it passed Congress, and was silent as to any suggestion that the language was faulty.

* * * * *

"The amendment does not alter or modify the relation today existing between the States and the Federal Government. That relation will remain the same under the amendment as it is today without the amendment. It is conceded by all that the Government cannot under the present Constitution tax state securities or state instrumentalities." 45 Cong. Rec. 2245-6 (Feb. 23, 1910).

On February 17, 1910, Senator Elihu Root of New York, a strong advocate for the amendment, wrote to New York State Senator Davenport giving his reasoned opinion that the amendment did not affect the immunity of state and municipal obligations. Senator Root wrote:

"Much as I respect the opinion of the Governor of the State, I cannot agree with the view expressed in his special message on January 5, and as I advocated in the Senate the resolution to submit the proposed amendment, it seems appropriate that I should state my view of its effect.

* * * * *

"The proposal followed the suggestion of the Supreme Court in the Pollock case.

"The evil to be remedied was avowedly and manifestly the incapacity of the National Government resulting from the decision that income practically could not be taxed when derived either from real estate or from personal property, although it could be taxed when derived from business or occupation.

"The terms of the amendment are apt to cure that evil and to take away from the different classes of income considered by the court a practical immunity from taxation based upon the source from which they were derived." 45 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD p. 2539-40 (Mar. 1, 1910).

Thus, three United States Senators sought to allay any doubt held by Governor Hughes. No other member of Congress or any Governor[4] expressed any other view.

---

[3] The only colloquy which took place when the revised resolution was reported to the Senate is found in 44 Cong. Rec. 3900.

[4] In a message to the New Jersey Legislature, dated February 7, 1910, John Franklin Fort, Governor of New Jersey, said:

"* * * Nor am I inclined to accept the statement that the Supreme Court of the United States might construe the words 'from whatever source derived' as found in the pending amendment as justifying the taxing of the securities of any other taxing power."

On February 23, Senator Brown, referring to the message of Governor Fort, of New Jersey, said:

"It cheers our hearts to read in the press that President Taft agrees with the Governor of New Jersey, who, in a message to his legislature February 7 and since the New York message was transmitted, took immediate and direct issue with the governor of New York." (45 Cong. Rec. p. 2245)

That Governor Hughes' doubts were set at rest is shown by his opinions after he became Chief Justice, in Willcuts v. Bunn (supra, p. 13), James v. Dravo Contracting Co. (supra, p. 13) and Helvering v. Mountain Producers Corporation (supra, p. 14).

No one would doubt that if the states and their municipalities were to attempt to impose state or local taxes upon interest received by their residents from obligations of the Federal government, such a levy would be unconstitutional in the absence of consent by Congress to such taxation. Weston v. City of Charleston, 2 Pet. (U.S.) 449 (1829). And this is so even though it is universally accepted that the state legislatures possess plenary power to tax, subject only to the limitations of their state constitutions.

It is our opinion that the unanimous holding in the Pollock case, reaffirmed so many times after the Sixteenth Amendment, that interest on state and municipal securities is free from Federal income taxation under the Constitution would be again reaffirmed by the Supreme Court and that therefore any bill considered by this committee which would impose a minimum tax applicable to such interest would be unconstitutional.

C. To the extent that a minimum tax would apply to interest on local housing authority and agency obligations it would also be unconstitutional under the Fifth Amendment.

It is our opinion that if a minimum tax applied to the interest on bonds of local public housing authorities issued to finance low rent housing, slum clearance and urban renewal projects, the tax would violate the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution.

The United States Housing Act of 1937 provides as follows:

"Obligations, including interest thereon, issued by public housing agencies in connection with low-income housing projects shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States." 42 U.S.C.A. 1437i(b).

The Housing Act of 1949 provides in section 102(g) as follows:

"Obligations, including interest thereon, issued by local public agencies for projects assisted pursuant to this subchapter, and income derived by such agencies from such projects, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States." 42 U.S.C.A. 1452(g)./

Each of the above-quoted provisions of the United States Housing Act of 1937 and the Housing Act of 1949 that the obligations of local housing authorities and agencies "including interest thereon" shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States constitutes a statutory contrat between the federal government and the holders of such obligations. In our opinion, to deprive such holders to any extent of their immunity from federal taxation on the interest which they receive from such obligations impairs the obligation of the contract in violation of the Fifth Amendment which "protects rights against the United States arising out of a contract." Lynch v. United States, 292 U.S. 571 (1933). See also Farmers and Mechanics Savings Bank v. Minnesota, 223 U.S. 516, 528 (1913).

Mr. STEVENS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa such time as he may desire.

TARGETED JOBS TAX CREDIT: SUMMER JOBS

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, during consideration of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act by the Committee on Finance, one of my amendments was adopted extending the targeted jobs tax credit to economically disadvantaged youths. One of the targeted groups eligible to receive the credit under current law is economically disadvantaged youth between the ages of 18 and 24. If an employee is certified, an employer receives a credit of up to 50 percent of the first $6,000 of wages paid to a certified employee under current law.

My provision extends the targeted jobs tax credit to 16- and 17-year-olds from economically disadvantaged backgrounds. Under the new provision, the employer of an eligible teenager could claim an 85 percent credit on the first $3,000 of wages paid. An employee will be eligible for this credit during any 90-day period between May 1 and September 15. The young person who wishes to qualify for this credit must seek certification from the Department of Labor or Treasury. A teenager is eligible for this special credit only once; however, the young person is eligible to use the regular targeted jobs tax credit once they reach 18.

In my view, this bill has a very important purpose. Teenage unemployment is reaching record levels. The unemployment rate for 16–19 year olds in June measured on a seasonally adjusted basis was 22.3 percent. The unemployment rate for 16–19 year old black teenagers in June was 52.6 percent. When I introduced a bill in March with substantially the same content as this committee amendment, teenage unemployment was 21.9 percent; in 4 months the unemployment figure has increased to 22.3 percent. The increase in black teenage unemployment is even more dramatic—the umemployment rate has increased from 42.2 percent in March to 52.6 percent this June. The waste of human resources shown in the increase of these figures underscores the need for this legislation.

The purpose of this tax credit is to encourage employers to hire workers who traditionally have a difficult time finding a job. Members of economically disadvantaged families often lack the family connections helpful to young workers trying to find their first job. This credit is designed to give young workers from economically disadvantaged families an added boost in landing their first job.

This provision will also lessen some of the harmful effects enactment of the minimum wage laws had on teenage employment. While the minimum wage laws have been helpful in enabling older workers to better support their families, the higher cost of labor has diminished the number of jobs. Since teenagers are usually competing for the lowest paying jobs, as the wage base increase teenagers are facing a smaller job market and competing with experienced workers. The additional incentive of the tax credit should increase teenage employment and make teenagers more competitive vis-a-vis the rest of the labor force.

An individual's first job is an important landmark in their own personal development. It is also an important event for the society as a whole—it enables an individual to be a contributing member of society and better understand his or her relationship to the surrounding world. it makes the entire society a more productive and integrated unit. I believe that this program will be the best vocational education program we could adopt. It will give teenagers a tremendous opportunity to acquire work experience. I am pleased that this provision was included within the tax bill and I thank the committee members for their favorable consideration of this addition.

Mr. President, I would like to be recognized to thank my colleagues on the Committee on Finance for including a provision within the extension of the targeted jobs tax credit which will enable general assistance recipients in Polk County, Iowa, to take advantage of the credit.

The targeted jobs tax credit is a credit which may be claimed by an employer for hiring an individual from one of seven targeted groups. These groups are vocational rehabilitation referrals, economically disadvantaged youths, economically disadvantaged Vietnam era veterans, SSI recipients, general assistance recipients under State and local programs, some cooperative education students and economically disadvantaged ex-convicts. After an employee is certified by the Department of Treasury or Labor to be a member of one of these targeted groups, an employer may claim up to one-half of that employee's first year wages up to $6,000. The employer may claim a 25-percent credit for the first $6,000 of wages paid to a certified employee in his or her second year of employment.

The most populous county in Iowa, Polk County, cannot have its general assistance recipients qualify for the targeted jobs tax credit. Why? Recipients of general assistance in Polk County receive vouchers to purchase a fixed dollar amount of food, clothing, and other necessities of life rather than cash. Both the statute and the House Ways and Means Committee report required that general assistance payments be money payments to individuals based on need.

The Finance Committee adopted my suggestion that general assistance recipients who receive voucher or script rather than cash may be eligible to be certified employees for purposes of the targeted jobs tax credit. This change will enable many general assistance recipients throughout the Nation to qualify for the targeted jobs tax credit and hopefully get a toehold in the job market. I thank the members of the committee for accepting this change of great importance to the people of Polk County.

ADOPTION OF TITLE IV OF H.R. 4961, VIOLATED THE RULES AND PROCEDURES OF THE SENATE

● Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate debated the appropriateness of adding the reauthorization of airport development aid program to the Reconciliation Tax Measure, H.R. 4961, the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982. I regret that I was not present in the Senate or in fact in the city to vote against the inclusion of title IV in that tax measure. Had I been present, I would have voted to both overturn the rule of the Chair which found title IV to be germane, and I would have voted in favor of the motion to recommit the entire bill to the Senate Committee on Finance with instructions to report back with title IV omitted.

The ruling of germaneness occurred on the amendment of Senator PACKWOOD to essentially replace title IV with almost identical language. The purpose of the Packwood amendment was to gain a rule from the Chair that the amendment was germane. The Chair reasoned that the amendment was germane because it was germane to the original text of title IV even though the Chair conceded that the original text was not germane to the bill itself. The Packwood amendment was ruled germane to a portion of the bill that had not yet been adopted by the Senate and for which no similar matter existed in a House bill. I believe that the ruling of the Chair was incorrect, and I further believe that it creates a very poor precedent. It now means that any matter reported by any committee can be ruled germane by the process used by Senator PACKWOOD yesterday in direct violation of paragraph 5 of rule 15. This I believe does great damage to the committee system of the Senate.

I also objected to the inclusion of title IV on H.R. 4961 because I believe it violates our budget reconciliation process. This matter is totally extraneous in my view to the tax measure required by the reconciliation instructions included in the first concurrent budget resolution for fiscal year 1983. If we continue to use the budget act and the reconciliation process as it was not intended, we only threaten its continued existence.

I, like most of my other colleagues in the Senate, did not on balance object to title IV on its merits. In fact, the vote of 93 to 5 to support title IV showed that it was strongly supported and the objections to it were procedural. I, for example, was pleased to vote for the measure on its substance with two reservations. As one of the original cosponsors of S. 1272, I felt the aviation fuel taxes established by title IV were too high. The tax level, while too high, at least will be frozen for 5 years and does not escalate by 2 cents a gallon each year as originally proposed by the administration. I believe that if the Administration does not move forward to use the revenues from the trust fund as is intended to enhance our airport and airway system instead of letting enormous surpluses to continue to accumulate, efforts will soon be made to reduce the taxes, and I will join such an effort. I also objected to the very high levels authorized for transfers out of the trust fund to fund the normal operations of the Federal Aviation Administration. I believe this impediment, however, can be addressed through the appropriations process, and I will be working toward that end.

On balance, however, I strongly support the reauthorization of the airport development aid program as provided for in title IV of H.R. 4961 and was particularly pleased to support a 5-year extension of authorizations for adequate funding levels.●

COLORADO RELIEVER AIRPORTS

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, one section of the pending legislation is of particular importance to my constituents in Colorado: The reauthorization of the Airport and Airway System Development Act. Without this legislation, many airports in Colorado will continue to suffer from the lack of badly needed funds for improvements.

It is no secret to any of my colleagues who fly through the West that Stapleton International Airport in Denver is among the Nation's most overcrowded. The Denver area has two very small reliever airports, and another on the drawing board. I have often said that such reliever airports—designed to take commuter traffic, general aviation, and other small aircraft—out of the Stapleton lineup is one of the best answers to the immediate problem. But this solution is dependent on funds from the ADAP program that are needed to construct the third reliever (the Adams County Airport), the new runway at existing Arapahoe County Airport, and expansion of the Jefferson County Airport.

Other airports throughout the State are also dependent on this fund for one project or another. The Weld County Airport is the third largest in the Rocky Mountain Region, exceeded only by Stapleton and Salt Lake City airports and supporting over 200,000 yearly operations. The airport has been listed as eligible for a control tower for years, but still does not have one. The FAA routinely requires control tower data from the Weld County Airport—data that cannot be supplied.

The Montrose Airport has seen a tremendous expansion in business over the past few years, as the Western Slope of Colorado has grown dramatically. Yet funds for the new runway needed to allow continued jet service to the area are not available without this legislation.

The same problem has confronted the Durango Airport for several years. Since Frontier Airlines has phased out the smaller propjets and began jet service, an instrument landing system is vital to communities where Frontier's service is important. Durango has finally received approval for the ILS, but it has not been installed yet. Funds from the ADAP program are extremely important in finishing this project.

There are a number of other airports throughout Colorado that are in dire need of funding for various improvements—those in Pueblo, Cortez, Alamosa, and Grand Junction among them. The modernization of airports in Colorado is particularly important, since the difficulty of flying over dangerous mountains emphasizes the need for the most modern equipment.

It is important to note that the people who use these airports and those who benefit from the services are willing to pay for them. It is not a situation where the taxpayers are again being asked to fork over money for someone else. Like the Highway User's Trust Fund, the ADAP program is financed entirely by user fees. The program is financed by taxes on passenger tickets, cargo, aviation fuel, and tires. This money goes directly into the Airport and Airways Trust Fund, and in turn is allocated for improvements to airports and airway facilities.

This program authorization, for the period ending in 1987, will result in the expenditure of around $800 million for each of the 5 years on airport development. Another $7.5 billion will be available for rebuilding our air traffic control system, and the fund will still end up in 1987 with a $1.3 billion surplus.

In the context of the Colorado airport problems, it is extremely important to note that the bill contains a minimum guarantee of 10 percent for reliever airports. This will require that the Secretary spend at least $510 million on reliever airports nationwide. There are 212 reliever airports planned in the Nation, 155 already constructed, and approximately $1 billion needed for reliever airports according to the national airport system plan. In the past, $15–$25 million has generally been the annual amount appropriated for relievers. So the quantum jump to $510 million over the life of this bill represents a major victory for proponents of relievers.

Mr. President, I support this legislation and must commend Senator DOLE, Senator PACKWOOD, Secretary Drew Lewis, and others who worked on this bill for the splendid job they have done in getting this important authorization to the floor of the Senate and on the eventual enactment.●

SECTION 316 RELATING TO "TIPPED EMPLOYEES"

● Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, yesterday I detailed some of my objections to the adoption of section 316 of H.R. 4961, the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act. I would like to take another opportunity, Mr. President, to add to my discussion and to tell my colleagues why this section of the bill is unworkable and premature.

First, I would like to once again take strong exception to the Finance Committee's statistical statements. In the committee report it states that 84 percent of the income from tips went unpaid in 1981. What this means, Mr. President, is that the compliance rate for tip income is only 16 percent. Mr. President, I simply find this figure hard to believe. I would like to take this time to point out to my colleagues the flimsy foundation that the committee's statement rests on. Exactly how did the committee arrive at this 84 percent compliance rate, Mr. President?

The committee itself admits that their compliance rate is only a "preliminary" estimate based on data supplied by the Department of Commerce to the Internal Revenue Service. Try as I might, I have not been able to secure any hard data on how this rate was calculated and arrived at. A bigger question, however, is: Does this compliance rate apply to all tipped employees or only to employees of food and beverage establishments? I strongly question the committee's statement, Mr. President, for it appears to me that there simply is no specific study by either the IRS or Department of Commerce that I can find to support this compliance rate statement. It seems to me that this figure was "invented." That is to say, it was extrapolated from unrelated national income data and supplemented by a myriad of assumptions. Now, Mr. President, I do not believe that this type of a process is one that we can all rely on. The fact is that no one knows how much tip income, if any, goes unreported for the food and beverage industry or, for that matter, any other industry.

I think, Mr. President, that we need to look at this issue in some detail before any action of this kind is taken. Indeed, I believe that we need to undertake a comprehensive study on the compliance rate for tip income from the employees of food and beverage establishments. In this way, we can have sound evidence upon which to rely—evidence that we simply do not have at this time.

Mr. President, I have spent a considerable amount of time visiting with employees of food and beverage establishments in my State—the very taxpayers that this bill points to as being only slightly better than those who do not report illegal income. Mr. President, I must say that I cannot believe we are lumping the hard-working, honest taxpayers that I have met and talked with into a group of noncompliants that includes criminals and drug dealers. As I indicated in my statement yesterday, these are people who, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, were making less than the minimum wage in 1979.

What about the employers of these taxpayers? Once again, they are saddled with the burden of more paperwork, more recordkeeping. Mr. President, it is the responsibility of the Internal Revenue Service to audit taxpayers. The employer should not be placed in a position where he or she is required to make an allocation of the amount of tips that an employee receives. Indeed, the Finance Committee bill requires that 7 percent of all gross receipts be allocated among all tipped employees and that each employee's share be reported by the employer to the IRS. What is the reason for this 7 percent? How was it selected? There is nothing in the report which explains how this percentage was arrived at. It seems to me that it is an arbitrary number, founded on no evidence or data that I can see.

Furthermore, there is no simple or fair way in which to allocate each employee's share of tips. It is an extremely complicated and cumbersome arrangement to make this estimate. The numbers of food and beverage employees that would have to be considered is tremendous. And, this does not even take into account the current arrangements in many establishments of tip pooling or sharing.

Once again, Mr. President, I must say to my colleagues that I cannot accept this provision; and, if it is enacted even over my vehement objections, I would sincerely hope that it would be eliminated when this measure goes to conference.●

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, now leaving the tax bill, I will soon ask the Chair to lay before the Senate Calendar No. 690, S. 2133. Before I do that, Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator from California if he desires to make a statement first.

Mr. CRANSTON. Would the distinguished acting majority leader permit Senator JACKSON to go first?

Mr. STEVENS. That is what I intended to do, but the Senator from California mentioned he wanted to proceed.

Mr. CRANSTON. I would yield to the Senator from Washington.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, this matter has been cleared by the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate Calendar No. 708, S. Res. 418, a Budget Act waiver.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 418) waiving section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to the consideration of S. 2133.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its immediate consideration.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 418) was agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 418

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to the consideration of S. 2133. Such waiver is necessary because S. 2133, as reported, authorizes the enactment of new budget authority which would first become available in fiscal year 1983, and such bill was not reported on or before May 15, 1982, as required by section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 for such authorizations.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MOUNT ST. HELENS NATIONAL VOLCANIC AREA ACT OF 1982

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate Calendar No. 690, S. 2133.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2133) to designate certain lands in the State of Washington as a National Volcanic Area, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Mount St. Helens National Volcanic Monument Act of 1982".

SEC. 2. (a) In furtherance of the purposes of this Act, certain lands within and adjacent to the Gifford Pinchot National Forest, Washington, which comprise approximately one hundred and five thousand four hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Mount St. Helens National Volcanic Monument," dated May 1982, are hereby designated as the Mount St. Helens National Volcanic Monument (hereinafter referred to as the "monument") to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture through the United States Forest Service.

(b) As soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") shall file a map and a legal description of the monument established under subsection (a) with the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives. Such map and description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this Act: Provided, That correction of clerical and typographic errors in such legal description may be made.

SEC. 3. (a) The Secretary shall administer the monument in accordance with provisions of law applicable to units of the national forest system and the provisions of this Act in a manner so as to protect the significant geologic, biologic, ecologic, cultural, and human interest features of the area; to facilitate opportunities for continued scientific research in a manner consistent with the perpetuation of the significant features of the area; to provide for the interpretation of volcanic and other features for public education and enjoyment; and to provide for recreational and interpretative facilities and opportunities for the use of the public, including public access where appropriate, which are compatible with the purposes for which the monument is established.

(b) Subject to valid existing rights, all Federal lands within the monument are hereby withdrawn from all forms of entry or appropriation or disposal under the public land laws, and from location, entry and patent under the United States mining laws, and from disposition under all laws pertaining to mineral and geothermal leasing and all amendments thereto.

(c) Commercial timber harvesting shall be permitted within the monument boundaries only as may be necessary to control fire, insects, disease, and other agents that might endanger irreplaceable features within the monument or would cause substantial damage to significant resources adjacent to the monument, or would endanger public safety.

(d) In order to protect the significant features of the monument, reduce user conflicts, and ensure visitor safety, the Secretary is authorized to control times and means of access and use of the monument or parts thereof: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as to prohibit the use of motorized vehicles, aircraft or motorboats for emergency and other essential administrative functions, or when necessary, for continued authorized scientific research.

(3) Hunting and fishing shall be permitted within the monument in accordance with applicable Federal and State laws. The Secretary in cooperation with State agencies may designate zones and establish periods when no hunting or fishing shall be permitted for reasons of public safety, administration, or public use and enjoyment. Nothing in this Act shall be construed as affecting the jurisdiction or responsibilities of the State of Washington with respect to wildlife and fish within the monument.

SEC. 4. Nothing in this Act shall prohibit the Secretary from undertaking or permitting those measures within the monument reasonably necessary to ensure public safety and prevent loss of life and property.

SEC. 5. Nothing in this Act shall be construed as authorizing or directing the establishment of protective perimeters or buffer zones around the monument for the purpose of precluding activities outside the monument boundary which would otherwise be permitted under applicable Federal, State, or local law. Nothing in this Act shall be construed as limiting the existing authority of the Secretary to take actions on Federal lands adjacent to the monument necessary to protect public health and safety in emergencies involving volcanic activity.

SEC. 6. The Secretary is directed to prepare and submit to the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives within two years of enactment of this Act a management plan for the monument utilizing, among other information, the data included in the Mount St. Helens Land Management Plan, dated October 1981.

SEC. 7. (a) In furtherance of the purposes of this Act, the Secretary is authorized and directed to acquire in an expeditious manner, the non-Federal lands and interests therein within the boundaries of the monument by exchange, purchase with donated or appropriated funds, or donation: Provided, That land owned by the State of Washington shall be acquired only by donation or exchange.

(b) It is the intent of Congress that, to the maximum extent practicable, non-Federal lands and interests within the monument be acquired expeditiously by exchange. Exchanges shall be on the basis of equal value and either party to the exchange may pay or accept cash in order to equalize the value of the property or interests exchanged. It is the sense of the Congress that the exchanges authorized pursuant to this section should be completed within ninety days after the date of the enactment of this Act, except that in the case of mineral and geothermal rights, such exchanges should be completed within one year after such enactment.

(c) Subject to valid existing rights and notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Congress finds that the following Federal lands are suitable for exchange under the terms of this section and so much of these lands and interests as the Secretary determines necessary to equal the value of non-Federal land to be acquired pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, shall be made available for exchange:

WILLAMETTE MERIDIAN

Township 10 North, Range 5 East
Section 6 (portion),
Section 7 (portion).

Township 11 North, Range 5 East
Section 28 (portion),
Section 29 (portion).

Township 8 North, Range 4 East
Section 29,
Section 30,
Section 32.

Township 13 North, Range 3 East
Section 6.

Township 14 North, Range 3 East
Section 10,
Section 16,
Section 20.

Township 7 North, Range 5 East
Section 2 (portion),
Section 3.

Township 7 North, Range 6 East
Section 1 (portion),
Section 2,
Section 4,
Section 6,
Section 8,
Section 10,
Section 14 (portion),
Secton 22.

(d) Nothing in this Act shall affect any prior contractual obligation of BN Timberlands, Incorporated or Weyerhaeuser Company regarding lands owned by them and included in an exchange pursuant to this Act nor shall such obligations be transferred by this legislation to the United States.

(e) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, and subject to valid existing rights, national forest system lands described in subsection (c) are hereby withdrawn from all forms of appropriation under the mining laws and from disposition under all laws pertaining to mineral and geothermal leasing and all amendments thereto for two years beginning upon the date of enactment of this Act.

(f) The identification of the Federal lands described in subsection (c) as suitable for exchange does not vest any legal or equitable rights in such lands to owners of non-Federal lands and interests within the monument, nor does the identification of these lands limit the Secretary's discretion to manage these areas in accordance with applicable law.

(g) In recognition of the rapidly deteriorating nature of much of the timber in the monument, any timber acquired pursuant to this section shall be valued at an amount not less than the fair market value of such timber on July 1, 1982.

(h) Lands and interests acquired pursuant to this section shall become national forest system lands under the jurisdiction of the Secretary to be managed in accordance with this Act and other applicable law.

(i) The National Environmental Policy Act (83 Stat. 852, as amended) or regulations issued thereunder shall not be construed in whole or part to require the preparation or submission of an environmental assessment or environmental impact statement for any exchange or acquisition made in furtherance of this Act.

SEC. 8. (a) The exterior boundary of the Gifford Pinchot National Forest in the State of Washington, is hereby modified to include approximately fifteen thousand additional acres in Cowlitz County, as generally depicted on the map referenced in section 2 of this Act.

(b) For the purposes of section 7(a)(1) of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (78 Stat. 897), as amended, the boundary of the Gifford Pinchot National Forest, as modified by this section, shall be treated as if it were the boundary of that forest on January 1, 1965.

SEC. 9. (a) There is hereby established the Mount St. Helens Scientific Advisory Board. The purpose of the Board shall be to advise the Secretary with respect to the management measures needed to protect the natural and scientific values of the monument. The Board may also make recommendations to the Secretary as to research opportunities which may exist within and adjacent to the monument.

(b) The Board shall be composed of nine members, who shall be individuals with recognized professional standing in appropriate scientific disciplines. Members shall be appointed by the Secretary for terms of three years, as follows:

(1) One member from qualified candidates submitted by the Board of Regents of the University of Washington;

(2) One member from qualified candidates submitted by the Board of Regents of Washington State University;

(3) One member from qualified candidates submitted by the Governor of the State of Washington;

(4) One member from qualified candidates submitted by the Commissioner of Public Lands of the State of Washington;

(5) Three qualified members selected by the Secretary, one of whom shall be designated by the Secretary as Chairperson of the Board; and

(6) Two qualified members selected by the Secretary of the Interior (at least one of whom shall be a professional employee of the United States Geological Survey).

(c) The Secretary, or a designee, shall from time to time, but at least annually, meet and consult with the Board on matters relating to the protection of the monument and the research programs and needs of the area.

(d) Members of the Board shall serve without compensation as such, but the Secretary is authorized to pay, upon vouchers signed by the chairperson, the expenses reasonably incurred by the Board and its members in carrying out their responsibilities under this Act.

(e) Any vacancy in the Board shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

(f) The Board shall terminate nine years from the date of its initial meeting.

SEC. 10. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this Act, not to exceed $12,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1982, and such sums as may be necessary for each fiscal year thereafter.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to designate the Mount St. Helens National Volcanic Monument in the State of Washington, and for other purposes.".

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the amendment is an amendment in the nature of a substitute from the committee. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move adoption of the substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1110

(Purpose: To authorize the expenditure of certain revenues from Gifford Pinchot National Forest by Skamania County, Washington)

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of myself and Senator JACKSON and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee text will be considered as original text for the purpose of the amendment.

The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Washington (Mr. GORTON), for himself and Mr. JACKSON, proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1110.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following new section:

"Sec. 11. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of the last paragraph under the heading "Forest Service." of the Act of May 23, 1908 (16 U.S.C. 500 and of section 13 of the Act of March 1, 1911 (16 U.S.C. 500), of the amount which is paid under such provisions to the State of Washington with respect to Gifford Pinchot National Forest, to be expended for the benefit of Skamania County—

(1) not less than fifty percent shall be expended for the benefit of the public schools of Skamania County, as Skamania County may specify, and

(2) the remainder shall be expended for the benefit of public roads and other public purposes of Skamania County, as Skamania County may specify.

(b) Subsection (a) shall apply to any amount paid by the Secretary of the Treasury under the provisions of law referred to in subsection (a) of the end of any fiscal year ending before the date of the enactment of this Act."

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, this amendment involves the internal distribution of funds within Skamania County, among various units in that county.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, I support the amendment offered by my colleague (Mr. GORTON). The purpose of this amendment is to permit Skamania County to use a portion of the timber receipt moneys it receives from the Federal Government for purposes other than schools and roads. Under current law, Federal timber receipts shared with the counties may only be used for schools and roads. This amendment would permit Skamania County to use up to 50 percent of the moneys it receives for other purposes such as search and rescue, police protection, improved water and sewer systems, and other activities associated with the Volcano.

I think this is a good amendment. It is included in the House-passed bill, and I urge my colleagues to adopt it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment?

The amendment (UP 1110) was agreed to.

Mr. JACKSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, at 8:32 a.m. on May 18, 1980, after nearly 2 months of tremors and seismic activity, Mount St. Helens, located in southwest Washington State, exploded in a cataclysmic volcanic eruption that displaced an estimated 4 billion cubic yards of material onto the land and into the atmosphere. More than 235 square miles of National Forest, State, and private lands were devastated by the explosion, hot gasses, pumice, mud flows, and ash. The large ash cloud that accompanied the eruption reached 63,000 feet in elevation and drifted around the world. Thirty-four persons were killed and 28 others are still missing and presumed dead. Along with the human tragedy of the event, over 3 billion board feet of timber was downed or destroyed, anandromous-fisheries were severely impacted, as were a large number of wildlife.

This awesome display of nature's power has attracted worldwide attention. Hundreds of studies have been initiated by researchers in the United States, Canada, Japan, and Germany. The unprecedented circumstances created by the volcano are of immeasurable scientific importance. The unique nature of the eruption—including the geologic events and features and the wide variety of unusual biologic impacts—have made Mount St. Helens an area of intense interest for researchers and the general public. The volcano has also become a worldwide tourist attraction.

The U.S. Forest Service released its final environmental impact statement on a land management plan for Mount St. Helens on October 15, 1981. The Forest Service plan would establish an 84,700 acre National Volcanic Area. I believe that special designation status by statute is necessary to preserve and protect the scientific, historic, and natural resources presented by the volcano. In introducing legislation to that effect, it was my intention and that of Senator JACKSON to offer the Forest Service plan as the starting vehicle for holding hearings so that all interested parties could express their views on boundaries, land management plans, and other significant issues concerning the Mount St. Helens volcanic area. As a result of the testimony we received at the hearings, and countless consultations, meetings and letters, and after careful consideration of the interests of the timber industry, environmentalists, conservationists, scientists, state authorities, and the people of Washington State, Senator JACKSON and I offered a compromise substitute to our original bill. The compromise bill includes an area of 105,400 acres, and is an effort to minimize the impact of timber supplies, private lands, and adjacent communities while at the same time preserving the vital areas around the volcano.

The bill establishes the area as the Mount St. Helens National Volcanic Monument to be administered by the Forest Service, and provides specific management guidance for the area. It directs the Secretary of Agriculture to administer the monument so as to protect the significant geologic, biologic, ecologic, cultural, and human interest features of the area. One of the primary goals of the bill is to facilitate opportunities for continued scientific research in a manner consistent with the perpetuation of the significant features of the area. Another primary objective of the bill is to provide for recreational and interpretive facilities and opportunities for the use of the public, including public access where appropriate.

The bill directs the Secretary to acquire by exchange, purchase, or donation, the approximately 29,000 acres of non-Federal lands located within the boundaries of the National Volcanic Monument. The major landowners in the area, Weyerhaeuser, Burlington Northern, and the State of Washington, have worked closely with the Forest Service to identify specific "pools" of Federal lands from which exchanges will be made. These pools are listed in the bill, and it is stated that the intent of Congress is that these exchanges occur expeditiously. I am pleased to make note of the fact that on May 18, 1982, Burlington Northern donated two unique pieces of property to the U.S. Government: the summit of Mount St. Helens and a 50 acre tract of Spirit Lake.

By designating Mount St. Helens a National Volcanic Monument, the significant geologic features in the impact area of the volcano will be preserved and protected for future generations as well as providing immediate, unique opportunities for public education, interpretation and recreation, and research. After consideration of the competing interests which must be served by this bill, I am confident that the full Senate will approve it.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, on February 24, 1982, Senator GORTON and I introduced S. 2133—a bill to designate an 85,000-acre Mount St. Helens Volcanic Area. The primary purpose of this measure was, and is, to recognize and commemorate legislatively the nationally and internationally significant events which took place at Mount St. Helens on and around May 18, 1980.

As a point of departure, Senator GORTON and I incorporated recommendations of the Forest Service as contained in its October 1981 "Final Land Management Plan for the Mount St. Helens Area" into our bill. At the time we introduced this measure, we indicated that we welcomed suggestions from all parties on how best to improve the draft and make it responsive to particular concerns.

Since February, both Senator GORTON and I have met with many citizens of our State, seeking their imput on this measure. Hearings were conducted both here and in Washington State, and testimony was received from almost 100 witnesses. Similarly, the House has conducted hearings both here and in the field.

I believe that the bill we bring before the Senate today strikes a fair balance. I think the measure is a good compromise that fairly considers the various interests represented here. While no one is totally satisfied with everything in this bill, I think we have been responsive to the main concerns expressed at the hearings and elsewhere.

Our substitute, which was reported favorably from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources by a vote of 20 to 0, encompasses approximately 105,000 acres. By comparison, we received testimony from various groups supporting areas ranging from 40,000 to 216,000 acres. The Forest Service has recommended 85,000, the State of Washington some 112,000. And Congressman BONKER's bill in the House includes approximately 115,000 acres.

The 20,000 acres of additions contained in the bill as reported were added in an effort to include a representative sample of the many areas recommended for inclusion by the State, U.S. Geological Survey, the scientific community, and conservation groups while at the same time minimizing impacts on timber supplies, private lands, mining, and adjacent communities.

The bill before us today designates the area as a "National Volcanic Monument." The bill as introduced called for a National Volcanic Area. The monument is to be administered by the U.S. Forest Service in accordance with applicable existing law and the specific provisions of the act.

Specific language is included regarding such things as timber harvesting, mining, hunting, and fishing, access, water resource development, as well as a comprehensive statement of the purposes for which the area is to be managed. With regard to those matters not addressed specifically in the draft, the U.S. Forest Service is to utilize its existing authorities contained in other applicable law including the National Forest Management Act, the Forests and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act, Multiple-Use and Sustained Yield Act, and so forth.

Finally, the legislation has always contemplated that the vast majority of the private lands within the area would be acquired by exchange. The major landowners, Weyerhaeuser, Burlington Northern, and the State of Washington, have all indicated a strong interest in blocking up Federal and private ownerships in the area. The draft directs the Secretary to acquire the private lands primarily by exchange and identifies several specific "pools" of lands from which the Secretary is to identify specific lands for exchange.

For the most part, these "pools" have been mutually agreed upon by both the non-Federal landowners and the U.S. Forest Service. This language will help insure an expeditious and mutually agreeable exchange without unreasonable administrative delays. This language will help insure an expeditious and mutually agreeable exchange without unreasonable administrative delays.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I urge the Senate to adopt S. 2133 as reported from the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. I think it is a fair and balanced bill that will serve the Nation and the State of Washington well.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the major changes in the bill as reported from the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMITTEE AMENDMENT

During the consideration of S. 2133, the Committee adopted an amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Senator Jackson on behalf of himself and Senator Gorton.

The substitute amendment makes three major changes and a number of minor changes in S. 2133 as introduced. A more thorough discussion of the specific provisions of the substitute may be found in the Section-by Section Analysis portion of this report.

Size

As introduced, S. 2133 would have designated an area of approxmately 85,000 acres as recommended in the Forest Service's Land Management Plan completed in October, 1981. The Committee reported bill includes approximately 105,400 acres.

In contrast, the proposal of the state of Washington would designate a Volcanic Area comprising approximately 113,000 acres. The Mount St. Helens Protective Association has advocated a National Monument encompassing approximately 216,00 acres.

The House version, as reported from the Subcommittee on Forests, Family Farms, and Energy of the House Agriculture Committee and the Subcommittee on Public Lands and National Parks of the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, comprises approximately 115,000 acres.

The 20,000 acres of additions included by the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee in the bill as reported were made in an effort to incorporate a representative sample of a number of the areas recommended for inclusion in the area by the State, scientific community, conservation groups, and others who testified at the hearings in Washington, D.C., and in the State. At the same time, the new boundary was drawn in a manner so as to minimize the impacts on timber supplies, mining, private lands, and the adjacent communities.

The additions to the bill as introduced and the approximate acreages follow:

Miners Creek	1,315
Polar Star	1,475
Upper Green River	1,935
Smith Creek/Muddy River	4,005
South Fork, Toutle River	460
Goat Marsh Research Natural Area	1,000
Goat Creek	6,670
North Fork, Toutle River	260
Kipuka	1,760
Castle Creek	1,500
Total	20,380

The Committee notes that with regard to the three areas recommended for inclusion in the monument by the USGS (Smith Creek/Muddy River, Upper Green River, and South Fork, Toutle River) portions of each were included in the area and portions of each were left out. With regard to those lands not included, the Committee is aware that a joint memorandum between the USGS and USFS was prepared on April 28 which recognizes the research and scientific values of these areas. The Committee urges the two agencies to continue to work together to ensure that the scientific and research needs in these areas are adequately addressed.

Designation

As introduced, S. 2133 would have established an 85,000-acre "National Volcanic Area." This designation corresponds to the one made administratively by the U.S. Forest Service last Fall. As reported, the bill re-designates the area as a "National Volcanic Monument" to be administered by the Forest Service in accordance with the laws generally applicable to the National Forest System and the specific provisions of the Act.

Many witnesses at the hearings in Washington, D.C., and in Washington State urged the Committee to utilize a "National Monument" classification rather than a Volcanic Area. The reasons generally given for urging proposed change included the following:

A reluctance to create a new land classification within the national forest system; and Tourism in the area will be enhanced since the public is more familiar with the concept of a monument than a volvanic area.

Because of these and other concerns, the substitute amendment approved by the Committee changes the designation from a "National Volcanic Area" to a "National Volcanic Monument." As was the case with the bill as introduced, the Forest Service is to administer the Monument in accordance with its existing authorities and the special management provisions of the Act.

Management language

As introduced, S. 2133 provided only that the area was to be managed in accordance with the Mount St. Helens Land Management Plan prepared by the U.S. Forest Service in October, 1981, and other laws applicable to units of the National Forest System.

Much testimony was received during the hearings on S. 2133 urging the Committee to adopt more specific management language for the area. In response to these concerns, the draft includes some statutory management language designed to address several particular management concerns and at the same time retain a high degree of management flexibility for the Forest Service. Many of these provisions were taken directly from the final management plan.

Specific language has been included regarding such things as timber harvesting, mining, hunting and fishing, access, public safety, and buffer zones as well as a comprehensive statement of the purposes for which the area is to be managed. With regard to those matters not addressed specifically in the bill, the U.S. Forest Service is to utilize its existing authorities for management of units of the National Forest System contained in other applicable law including the National Forest Management Act, the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act, Multiple-Use and Sustained Yield Act, etc. to manage the area.

In addition to these major differences, the Committee reported bill also makes several changes in the language regarding the proposed land exchanges in the area; provisions were added establishing a Scientific Advisory Board for the Monument; and a more specific authorization section has been included.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, will the distinguished senior Senator from Washington yield for a clarification of the legislation's intent?

Mr. JACKSON. I yield.

Mr. BAUCUS. As the Senator is well aware, in the 19th century, Congress was quite generous, some excessively generous, in granting vast acreages of public lands to aid in the construction and maintenance of rail service in the West. The Northern Pacific land grant amounted to some 40 million acres. Burlington Northern, successor in interest to that grant, retains over 2 million acres of surface and some 6 million acres of mineral rights. Those holdings have been a matter of substantial concern in Montana and other Western States for many years. Many believe that the grants create a continuing obligation on the part of BN to provide rail service in the region.

I consider the Mount St. Helens legislation to be sound and important. The Senator is to be commended for his efforts to bring the measure before the Senate. My point for clarification is this: I want to be certain that the intent of the bill is not in any way to alter, modify, diminish, or impair any obligations which Burlington Northern may have as successor in interest to the Northern Pacific land grant.

Mr. JACKSON. I can assure the Senator from Montana that this bill does not in any affect whatever obligations BN may have arising out of the Northern Pacific land grant.

Mr. BAUCUS. I thank the Senator from Washington and appreciate the clarification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the companion bill, H.R. 6530, sent to us from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 6530) to establish the Mount St. Helens National Volcanic Area, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to consideration of the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to strike all after the enacting clause of H.R. 6530 and to substitute therefor the text of S. 2133 as reported and as it has been amended by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill (H.R. 6530) was passed.

Mr. JACKSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed.

Mr. GORTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the title to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to designate the Mount St. Helens National Volcanic Monument in the State of Washington, and for other purposes.".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate insist on its amendment to H.R. 6530, and request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McCLURE, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. JACKSON, and Mr. BUMPERS conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I move that we indefinitely postpone consideration of Calendar Order No. 690, S. 2133.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion is agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. Will the distinguished Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENS. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished Democratic whip. I understand he has a resolution which has been cleared on this side.

CONGRATULATIONS TO NASA ON COMPLETION OF SPACE SHUTTLE PROGRAM

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I send a concurrent resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration. It has been cleared on all sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 114) to congratulate the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and all persons involved in the success of the test flight phase of the Space Shuttle program.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, it is my pleasure to introduce, with my distinguished colleague from California, Senator HAYAKAWA, and Senators SCHMITT, RIEGLE, CHILES, HATCH, GLENN, CANNON, GARN, HEFLIN, DENTON, BRADLEY, INOUYE, KASSEBAUM, JOHNSTON, KASTEN, MOYNIHAN, BENTSEN, HAWKINS, DECONCINI, NICKLES, FORD, HOLLINGS, BUMPERS, and LAXALT, this resolution which congratulates the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) and all who have worked so diligently and successfully on the completion of the Space Shuttle program.

It is appropriate to mark the success of the Shuttle this week since July 20 marks the 13th anniversary of the first lunar landing. The astronauts of the Apollo 11 mission were the first men ever to walk on the Moon. The astronauts of this mission, Neil Armstrong, Buzz Aldrin, and Michael Collins carried on the fine traditions established by our very first astronauts. Thomas Mattingly and Henry Hartsfield, who commanded the fourth test flight of the Orbiter, Columbia, as well as the other Shuttle crewmembers, Robert Crippen, John Young, Joe Engle, Richard Truly, Jack Lousma, and Gordon Fullerton, have continued the standard of excellence.

The successful completion of the Shuttle's test program could not take place without the equally dedicated and outstanding work performed on the ground. This resolution commends the thousands of Americans who have worked so hard to make the Space Shuttle program a success.

We should stop to think for a minute of what we accomplished on July 4, when the orbiter, Columbia, touched fown at Edwards Air Force Base after its last test flight.

The Shuttle is a remarkable engineering feat. It operates like a satellite, like a spacecraft, and like a conventional winged airplane. It is truly a craft for all environments. It is a flying space laboratory. It is also the first reusable spacecraft, making space transportation economically feasible for the first time.

Our startling successes with our space program have made us almost blase. But the space program's successes are wonderful. Exciting. Brilliant. Routine access to space, which the Shuttle will now provide, opens vast new horizons for exploration, providing an outlet for the great ingenuity and creativity of the human mind. Space is, as so many have noted, the new frontier. It holds all the challenges and rewards of a frontier—and the risks.

Thus far the risk and the cost have been worth while. We have gained vast knowledge about our world and the universe of which we are small inhabitants. The Shuttle will allow us to continue to expand and stretch our knowledge in a number of ways. The Shuttle's space laboratory will enable us to conduct experiments in space that we cannot do here on Earth. We will be better able to observe the Earth's weather patterns, monitor crops and timber yields, obsrve the environment, provide better communications, discover mineral resources, find new solutions to our energy problems. These are only some of the things we know we can do. Much more awaits discovery.

At a time when affairs on Earth appear bleak, when there is an overwhelming tendency to dwell on all that is wrong with ourselves, with our country, the success of the Space Shuttle serves to remind us and encourage us of what is good, what we can accomplish despite tremendous odds, and what potentially marvelous things the world and the universe hold for us.

This is why I have been and I will continue to be a strong supporter of the U.S. space program. It has been a tremendous resource for our economy, for our quality of life, for our Nation, and for mankind as a whole.

The space program offers us unique opportunities in other ways. It provides great potential for cooperation with other nations. For example, the Shuttle will carry the Spacelab, which was built by a consortium of European nations. Such joint ventures allow us to expand and share our knowledge and to work with all nations. Space remains an area that is not yet distorted and tortured by the horrors of the arms race. I pray that it will continue to be that way.

I am disturbed by the President's recent policy statement, which places such a heavy emphasis on national security. I hope that this statement does not presage a change in our policy so that national security issues come to dominate our space program. Our achievements in space have greatly enhanced our national security, and I favor continued efforts in this area. But I do not support a one-sided space program that ignores the tremendous benefits and possibilities of the nondefense areas.

The last test flight of the Shuttle is over, and it is ready to move into an operational phase. Thus we mark the end of a major research and development effort. The natural question is what next? Unfortunately, this administration has not answered the question. Many had hoped that President Reagan would articulate plans for the next major initiative. He did not.

Given the demonstrated capability of the Shuttle, I would hope and urge the President to continue to support it. The Senate has included funding for a fifth Orbiter in the fiscal year 1983 NASA authorization. I urge the President to agree with this step.

We cannot afford to sit by idly. These feats that we have accomplished have been attained only by great planning and foresight. We should be moving into the next phase. If we do not continue our efforts we can be sure that our leadership in space will shortly be relinquished to our European and Japanese competitors.

This is not just a question of national pride and "being first." It is a question of our economy. Our technological edge is our strongest competitive advantage with our trading partners. We simply cannot afford to lose it. Our space policy plays an important role in maintaining this technological edge. But this administration has chosen repeatedly to cut back on our space efforts. And now we have no clear direction of what the next step to the Shuttle will be. Several experts have proposed that the next step should be a space platform that would ultimately lead to a space station. This possibility should be explored more fully. And we should continue to support the worthwhile initiatives in our space program that have proved to be such a benefit to us all.

My congratulations to all who have participated in the Shuttle program, and my best wishes for continued success.

SPACE SHUTTLE TEST FLIGHT PROGRAM

Mr. HAYAKAWA. Mr. President, today, I salute the most recent of many inspirational achievements of the U.S. space industry. Through the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA), our country has provided example after example of what heights America can reach when its collective energies are summoned. The Space Shuttle test flight program's success is the result of 10 years of development which exhibited for all the world the step-by-step process demanded to produce a near-perfect reusable space vehicle.

89-059 O-86-10 (Pt.13)

Moreover, after a seemingly long period without any manned missions, the U.S. space program has again demonstrated that human beings still play a vital role in successful space exploration. In the final Space Shuttle test flight of Columbia, astronauts Ken Mattingly and Henry Hartsfield essentially "hot-wired" a circuit in order to activate a series of experiments otherwise doomed to failure. Their ability to communicate with ground control and improvise—while floating above the Earth—was a small but significant moment in the test flight program's success.

When, 13 years ago yesterday, Apollo astronauts first set foot on our Moon, the accomplishment should have solidified our belief in mankind's ability to take giant leaps of progress. The Space Shuttle should remind us that we continue to take these giant leaps, but only by setting priorities and staying with long-term goals. We must remember that NASA's projects have been realized only through diligence, perseverence, and no doubt many hours of brainstorming.

We must not expect to reach our goals overnight. In this regard, for their work and example to the Nation and an admiring world, I commend and congratulate those men and women who brought the Space Shuttle to fruition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution with its preamble is as follows:

S. CON. RES. 114

To congratulate the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and all persons involved in the success of the test flight phase of the Space Shuttle program.

Whereas when the Space Shuttle Columbia flew through a blazing re-entry and skimmed to a perfect landing on the 4th of July 1982, at Edwards Air Force Base, California, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration successfully completed the test flight phase of the Space Shuttle and began a new era of operational Space Shuttle missions;

Whereas in four test missions, the Space Shuttle Columbia, a reuseable spaceship designed to provide routine space travel for a wide variety of scientific, commercial, and military payloads at reduced costs and with a high reliability of success, lived up to its promise as the most advanced spacecraft in the world;

Whereas in four test missions, the Columbia was lifted from earth, orbited in the vacuum of space like a satellite, operated a variety of scientific experiments, tested the capability of the remote manipulator system to deploy satellites in orbit and to retrieve satellites, descended into the earth's atmosphere, was piloted by astronauts like a conventional winged airplane, and was landed at Edwards Air Force Base, California, and at White Sands Space Harbor, New Mexico;

Whereas the Space Shuttle Columbia, the newly completed Space Shuttle Challanger, and the sister shuttles Discovery and Atlantis, now under construction, will be able to fly repeatedly back and forth from space as an operational space transportation system;

Whereas the Space Shuttle orbiters will accommodate an unprecedented variety of payloads including a fully equipped scientific laboratory (Spacelab) provided by the European space agency, underscoring the commitment of the United States to international cooperation in space activities;

Whereas using the unique qualities of the space environment (weightlessness and a near perfect vacuum) the Space Shuttle orbiters will be used for experiments to produce special alloys, metals, glasses, crystals, and pharmaceuticals that cannot be performed on earth;

Whereas the Space Shuttle orbiters will place in orbit satellites to observe the earth's weather, provide improved communications, discover new mineral resources, monitor crop and timber yields, help United States forces to navigate, and monitor arms control agreements;

Whereas the Space Shuttle orbiters will also place in orbit the most powerful space telescope and will launch scientific probes to explore the planets;

Whereas the Space Shuttle program is a national enterprise, geographically and technologically, requiring tens of thousands of skilled workers to design, develop, test and evaluate the various Space Shuttle components;

Whereas the Space Shuttle program has been judged by independent research organizations to have a positive effect on the national economy, creating jobs, reducing inflationary pressures and forwarding the development of advanced technologies; and

Whereas the Space Shuttle program is a source of great national pride and the United States now holds world leadership in its proven ability to operate a reusable Space Shuttle: Now therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States congratulates the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the members of the Astronaut Corps, prime contractor Rockwell International, associate contractors Martin Marietta and Thiokel, the thousands of Shuttle subcontractors throughout the United States, and the tens of thousands of dedicated Space Shuttle workers who contributed to the successful completion of the Space Shuttle test flight period and to the entry of our Nation into a promising new era of spaceflight for the benefit of the people of the United States and all mankind.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDER FOR H.R. 5081 TO BE HELD AT THE DESK PENDING FURTHER CONSIDERATION

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 5081, a bill dealing with the Washoe Indian Tribe of Nevada and California, be held at the desk pending further consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER TO HOLD H.R. 5380 AT THE DESK

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 5380 be held at the desk until the close of business tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER TO VITIATE ACTION ON S. 1739

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that action on S. 1739, amendment of the Military Personnel and Civilian Employees' Claims Act of 1964, be vitiated, and I ask unanimous consent also that that bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, may I inquire from my good friend, the distinguished minority leader, if it is now clear to proceed with the Executive Calendar, commencing with Calendar No. 856?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes, all nominations under New Reports, Department of State, have been cleared on this side of the aisle.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the distinguished Senator.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session for the purpose of considering nominations on the Executive Calendar commencing with New Reports.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all of the nominations on the Executive Calendar, commencing with Calendar No. 856 through 859, be considered en bloc and confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are considered and confirmed en bloc.

The nominations confirmed en bloc are as follows:

[NEW REPORTS]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Arthur H. Davis, Jr., of Colorado, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Paraguay.

George W. Landau, of Maryland, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, Class of Minister-Counselor, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Venezuela.

Robert Werner Duemling, of California, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, Class of Minister-Counselor, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Suriname.

Nicholas Platt, of the District of Columbia, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, Class of Minister-Counselor, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Zambia.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the nominations were confirmed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of these nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

ORDER FOR SENATOR INOUYE TO BE EXCUSED FOR THE REMAINDER OF THE WEEK

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), I ask unanimous consent that he be excused from the Senate today and for the remainder of the week. The Senator from Hawaii, as the original cosponsor of the Newspaper Preservation Act, is necessarily absent as he is testifying in Federal court in Hawaii. The case involves a joint operating agreement between the Honolulu Advertiser and the Honolulu Star Bulletin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE RETIREMENT OF AIR FORCE LT. GEN. KELLY H. BURKE

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I would like to bring to the attention of the Congress the scheduled August 1, 1982, Air Force retirement of Lt. Gen. Kelly H. Burke, Deputy Chief of Staff, Research, Development and Acquisition, Headquarters, U.S. Air Force.

The Senate Armed Services Committee has numerous military witnesses appear before it during the course of our annual budget hearings. In my view, General Burke has been a most articulate, eloquent, informed, and respected witness for the U.S. Air Force during his many appearances before the committee. At all times he has demonstrated a complete grasp of the issues based upon a thorough and clear-cut understanding of the needs of his service while mindful of the responsibilities of the Armed Services Committee. There is no doubt that his presence will be sorely missed by the Air Force and by the many Members of this Congress who have looked to him for valued advice and counsel over the years.

My colleagues and I salute General Burke upon his completion of more than 30 years of faithful and dedicated service to his uniform, his God, and his country. All of his many friends in the Congress join me in wishing he and his wife, Denny, continued good fortune and success as they pursue new endeavors.

ED MUSKIE'S EXCELLENT FOREIGN POLICY ADDRESS

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, our erstwhile colleague and later Secretary of State, Ed Muskie, recently delivered a powerful, analytical speech on the status of American foreign policy. I think Ed Muskie's remarks are right on the mark and I wish to share them with my colleagues.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Ed Muskie's speech of July 14, 1982, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICA IN TODAY'S WORLD: ROME'S FUTURE MUST NOT BE HOSTAGE TO CARTHAGE'S RUIN

(Remarks of Edmund S. Muskie, Center for National Policy, Washington, D.C., July 14, 1982)

I am deeply moved and honored by this award. It is of particular significance to me in that a man I deeply admire—my predecessor as a Secretary of State, Cy Vance—is Co-Chairman of the Center for National Policy. He is an all-too-rare example in our system of a public servant who resigned—on grounds of principle—from high office.

And, without that example, I could not have resigned from the Senate—on grounds of duty, I assure you—to become Secretary of State!

Be assured that in and of itself this award does not transform a politician into a statesman. If Harry Truman was right, I would have to be dead for 10 years to accomplish that.

As Secretary of State, I took great consolation from my political career. It served me well in dealing with my counterparts from parliamentary democracies. I felt little need to become a diplomat . . . and those of you who know me recognize the challenge such a transition would have been.

Yet, my chair at State did offer a new perspective on our political process, as it relates to foreign policy. Deep concern about the state of our national discussion on foreign policy issues moves me to address my remarks this evening to both our incumbent leaders and to those who aspire to incumbency.

The Nation's foreign policy machinery recently experienced a traumatic breakdown. Mark Russell may want to re-evaluate his observation: "Who would have thought, between Secretaries of State Kissinger and Haig, the one with the accent would be the one we can understand?" For I never understood Al Haig better than on the day he resigned. He cited no issue of principle, only the pervasive indictment that our highest policymakers had shifted from the careful course of "consistency, clarity and steadiness of purpose."

Succinct and all-encompassing, I could not have said it better myself. I might have been blunter: If we are not going to hell, then where the hell are we going, Mr. President?!

After reading over the weekend the talking paper Secretary-designate Haig prepared for his January 6, 1981, meeting with the President-elect, I more fully appreciated the limitations of my own power at the State Department. The Haig paper provided a novel concept of "Cabinet Government"—one department, indivisible, under God! On reflection, I have decided that I was far too modest when President Carter called. I asked only for the moon!

Many of us have resorted to looking for small signs of hope that the Administration wasn't really serious after all about its foreign policy directions. Maybe the President didn't really mean it when he rejected the Law of the Sea Treaty because he thought "that when you go out on the high seas, you can do what you want." Maybe our backing away from the China policy of the past two Administrations is really a wallposter rumor. Or maybe we aren't really serious about violating SALT II provisions with something called "Dense Pack."

Then the other day my worst suspicions were realized: Herbert Hoover was resurrected as the patron saint of the Commerce Department, presumably as a Republican symbol of fiscal responsibility. I began at that moment to take the President at his word on foreign policy!

To add to your anxiety, my historical research reveals that President Hoover in 1932, in Geneva, proposed a 30 percent overall reduction in offensive armaments. If I told you my real feelings about all this, there might be a run on banks tomorrow and new shovels issued for civil defense. So I won't! But don't wait until the President starts parting his hair down the middle!

II

Seriously though, I find little comfort or humor in Secretary Haig's confirmation of our government's ineptitude abroad. Let us be clear on one point: We don't want Ronald Reagan remembered in foreign policy the way Herbert Hoover was in domestic policy. Yet, I think Ted Sorensen is right when he argues that the Democratic party's search for new directions has focused almost entirely on domestic policy.

This is more than a personality or a party problem. Or Nation is seen to frequently by our friends—and enemies—as inconsistent, unclear and lacking in steadiness. And the unkindest cut of all: We stand accused of acting in a manner contrary to our own interests.

Rather than looking for scapegoats or making excuses, we should step back and examine the collective political process through which the attitudes of our people are formed, and on which our Nation's decisions are based. That is more difficult, but infinitely more cleansing.

I want to talk about American maturity—and American lack of maturity—in international affairs. Most of all, I want to talk about the quality of the dialogue we are carrying on among ourselves and with our global co-habitants. I am worried that we are talking around problems rather than to them, trying to put desire in place of fact, shibboleth in place of practical problem-solving.

We must begin with faith in the wisdom of the American people. Our people have never been afraid of hard choices when the facts are put before them plainly. They do not expect to be talked down to. They are capable of sacrifice, of long-term commitment, if the necessity is explained by credible leadership. They do not want public relations "victories" for their Presidents so much as they want, for their country, competence and vision and compassion on the job. Phil Geyelin had it right the other day when he argued that what we are beginning to see as a wave of criticism of Reagan is not the "denigration of the Presidency," but the public registering its great disappointment with performance.

Thomas Jefferson said in 1820:

"I know of no safe depository of the ultimate powers of the society but the people themselves, and if we think them not enlightened enough to exercise their control in a wholesome discretion, the remedy is not to take it from them but to inform their discretion."

We are at a time in our national history when maturity is to be expected. But familiar elements of immaturity are now being reflected in our political discourse. They are evident in a willingness to declare—quixotically—either our independence from, or our dominance of, the rest of the world. Neither is a viable option today, yet we waste so much energy debating the highly improbable.

Some of us may be too idealistic, some of us too cynical, or too selfish. The maturing of American foreign policy requires us to look at certain facts about ourselves and others.

III

Trying to see the world as it is, if I may use a homely analogy, requires a pair of bifocals. One set of lenses gives us the world in terms of our ideals, the other in terms of power. These are the lenses of idealism and realism, if you will.

We have had debates in the United States about Wilsonianism, about morality in foreign policy. There was a time not long ago when many Americans believed we had lost our moral bearing. Accusations of Realpolitik gone mad were heard widely.

The American people support the proposition that there must be a moral element, a very large moral element, in our foreign policy. If the distinction between repressive "authoritarian" and "totalitarian" regimes means something to the Reagan Administration, it is nevertheless a distinction without a difference to many.

We do believe in freedom, in democracy, we do care what happens to ordinary people, in all lands. We are, frankly, outraged by what happens to the common people in places like Poland, Argentina, South Africa, Afghanistan, Cambodia, and Lebanon. Any American leader—and any foreign leader—who turns his back on this reality of American foreign policy is in for a surprise . . . and a change.

Listen to Cyrus Vance:

"Championing human rights is a national requirement for a nation with our heritage. Without this moral strength . . . it would be impossible to have anything called a 'foreign policy' at all."

Yet, the spectacles or realism have their uses, too. We live in a world of nation-states, and our duty is to defend American interests—simultaneously, one hopes, with the interests of our friends and allies. We need to be aware, looking at the world as it is, that Great Power rivalries will not go away . . . that the role of power will not soon be replaced on the international scene . . . that being strong is still a prerequisite to being free and independent.

But just as contrived perceptions about a weak America do not make America weak—even though perceptions can be dangerous—chest-beating rhetoric does not make America strong. We are never so ineffective in the eyes of the world as we are when our rhetoric exceeds our capacity to act, or goes beyond the better judgment expected of us.

What I fear most about the current Administration is that an old aphorism of Dr. Ben Jonson might come true. He said of public men: "They must create strange monsters, and then quell them . . . to make their art seem something."

It is only in putting the idealistic and the power-oriented views together that we can come to grips with the world and see our own interests more clearly. In that light, several things need to be said about some important foreign policy problems which transcend ideological fixations.

IV

The most troublesome, most vital concern is our relationship with the Soviet Union. Yet this relationship is the most difficult to handle politically.

When we speak of our relations with the other nuclear super-power, what end do we have in mind? When the President speaks about the Soviet Union, he reminds me of the Roman Senator, Cato the Elder, who ended all his speeches with the ringing injunction, "Carthage must be destroyed!" And so it was.

But this is the nuclear age. Ending the competition by eliminating Russia will not work.

Nor can we compel their alien system to change its stripes, or to collapse, by any sudden and immense outpouring of public funds on defense spending—and by peddling arms indiscriminately. The only rational conclusion, therefore, is to carefully try to negotiate a drawdown in the balance of terror so as to avoid armed disaster.

Now, I acknowledge that the cry "Carthage must be destroyed!" sounds more like a screaming eagle than the admonition: "We must be strong enough and wise enough to keep the peace." But we have to recognize that our security is tied to that of the Soviets. We don't want our ultimate fate, and theirs, to be the same—a radioactive ash heap.

Those in the Reagan Administration—especially the President—who now conduct the START negotiations, bear the extraordinary burden before history for having been party to scuttling the SALT process. The current government will have run its course by 1984, and the American people will be entitled to ask: What have they done to build a framework that offers more substantial restraints on the arms race? It will not do to reject the fruits of years of bargaining—turning the 1980's into the "lost decade" of arms control—and to offer nothing more than a propaganda cover for an effort to "win" the next round in the race.

(On the home front, we are seeing Presidential support for a balance-the-budget constitutional amendment serve as a fig leaf for record deficits.)

Those who have caused the arms race to run free now face one test: They will discover soon enough that they have not re-invented the wheel. "How the West was won" is not the way to save Western civilization.

(I am encouraged by Mr. Shultz' testimony yesterday:

"An approach to the Soviet Union limited to the military dimension will not satisfy the American people. We must also make it clear that we are prepared to establish mutually beneficial and safer relationships on the basis of reciprocity.")

V

We must also think long and hard about the policy gap that is developing within the Atlantic Alliance in regard to dealings with the Soviet Union. Historically, we have had our disagreements with the European Allies in peripheral areas—Vietnam and the Middle East come to mind. But never before have our views been so divergent when considering policy toward our principal adversary.

It was the United States, not Europe, that led the West in formalizing detenté with the U.S.S.R. The Nixon Administration never intended detente as a policy of appeasement, it was never meant to be a substitute for a tough, realistic approach. It was instead a pragmatic effort to define the competition in terms acceptable to us.

True, detente was oversold to the American people. It was not a magic formula for a new generation of peace.

But detente made sense because it offered the West some leverage over Soviet conduct, provided the necessary tension was maintained between competition and cooperation. And, if we believe in the superiority of democratic systems, over time it could have worked to undermine the rigidities of totalitarianism.

Is it the policy of the current Administration to bring about a major crisis in the Alliance simply because, to most Europeans, an easing of tensions still makes sense? Are we to judge a country's fidelity to principle on the basis of a narrow U.S. view of Western interests?

The threat to Western unity today is not, in my view, the result of nations pursuing their economic interests. Who is to say whether grain sales or energy purchases are of greater consequence?

The threat to Western unity lies in the failure to accommodate to pluralism. The threat lies in creating unrealistic standards and in seeking to enforce them by untenable means. It is the epitome of hypocrisy for an Administration which espouses the inviolability of the marketplace to seek to disrupt it in Europe.

This is not to argue that the market place should be the sole—or even the primary—determinant of Western interests. We cannot be so relaxed about Soviet intentions as to leave ourselves highly vulnerable to their unilateral action. It is essential that other countries recognize this as well, if they are to protect themselves against potential blackmail.

VI

At this moment in the Middle East, we are facing serious dilemmas as we seek to protect American interests. This, too, may be the result of immaturity: The Administration's initial reluctance to accept an achievement of American policy—Camp David—apparently because it was a legacy of the other party. It stands out even now as President Carter's greatest contribution to history, and for which his country will honor him.

Valuable months were lost and the initiative slipped from our grasp. No more than casual interest was expressed in moving beyond Sinai withdrawal to autonomy talks. Without our influence, the parties reverted to their national tendencies. When the peace process stalled, it was replaced by anxiety, insecurity, and aggressive behavior.

The Reagan Administration constructed a policy of "strategic consensus" on the myth that concern over Soviet influence outweighed historic regional divisions. As we have done so many times in the past, we allowed anti-Soviet preoccupations to obscure a sense of states' primary interests, and we failed to exercise leverage in behalf of our own interest: The maintenance of peace in a vital region.

One sad result is that, in the case of Israel, we hear serious public discussion for the first time about the differences between our respective national interests outweighing the similarities. But there is some wisdom to be extracted from the current tragedy.

Our relationship with Israel has rested on no firmer foundation than a moral one. We have needed no further justification. Though others, such as the vibrancy of her democracy and the influence of her strength, are also valid. Nothing can erase our moral commitment, but harm has been done. Doubts have been raised.

It behooves both our countries to work to contain our differences and to remove the doubt. Israel can do this by leaving Lebanon with all deliberate speed. And the United States can contribute by once again becoming an active partner in the peace process.

VII

Finally, I must comment on the management of foreign policy, or the lack thereof. For the disarray we find here is also a sign of an immature approach.

The role of government is to govern. The American people—especially now that Secretary Haig is gone—have a right to know who is in charge.

I cannot recall in modern times hearing so often the excuse that the President cannot comment because he has not kept up with events while traveling in Air Force One! How many times have we seen him on the evening news caught by surprise by news from abroad? It is almost as if he is saying to us: "How was I to know, I am only playing the part of President?"

The situation reminds me of a "Peanuts" cartoon I was told about the other day. Lucy was using metaphor to explain life to Charlie Brown:

"Charlie, on the great oceans are large ships that carry many passengers. On each ship there is a sundeck, and on that sundeck the passengers arrange their deck chairs. Some place them facing forwards so they can see where they are going. Some place them facing backwards so they can see where they have been. Now Charlie, on the great ship of life, which was will you face your deck chair, forwards or backwards?"

To which Charlie replied:

"I can't even get mine unfolded."

I think it is time our President got his foreign policy deck chair unfolded. Even now, the President acts at times as if he is not associated with the U.S. Government—let alone the head of its executive branch. It is as if he is the good spirit disembodied from the evil flesh of government. So much for the value of the experience of governing that largest state in the union!

This is serious work for serious people. I am afraid I must agree with Norman Podhoretz who recently wrote that President Reagan "has yet to address himself with an equivalent seriousness and energy to the international situation (compared to the domestic economy)."

Let that one sink in for a while. . . .

VIII

The Haig resignation reminds us that there are some old problems in foreign policy management still around. But the more serious problem for the United States is the coming to power in the White House of people who represent a discontinuity in assumptions about the nature of the postwar world and our role in it—when compared with previous Administrations. The only way I know how to cope with this—and I will admit to a paradox, if not a contradiction—is more strenuous efforts at bipartisan consultation. The War Powers Act requirements provide a timely proving ground this week as the executive and legislative branches consider sending Marines into Lebanon. Can Warren Christopher's proposed "compact in foreign affairs" between the branches function in a situation where there is a clear danger of "imminent involvement in hostilities" and the President should want—not just be required—to share the decision on troop commitment with Congress? I hope so. George Shultz' experience should help the President work across the lines in a government where separate institutions share power and in which constitutional law has a central place. There are more years of experience, and collective wisdom, in Congress than can ever be assembled in a four-year Administration.

President Reagan can succeed if he understands that many who did not work for his election are prepared to work for his success as President of all the people. I appeal to him, in the year of the F.D.R. centennial, to study what President Roosevelt did in 1940 in reaching out to construct a bipartisan foreign policy. Reach out now, because the going will get tougher.

As we worry about perceptions of weakness—as we fret about our vulnerabilities and focus on our deficiencies—we would do well to look at ourselves as a nation the way FDR looked upon himself as a man.

Despite his crippled condition, he stood as a confident symbol of what this land ought to be. Haynes Johnson recently wrote from Campobello:

"The FDR legacy most worth remembering involves a state of mind. . . . Millions of Americans never thought of him as crippled. Instead of becoming an object of suffering and weakness, he became the symbol of optimism and strength for a nation experiencing its gravest challenges at home and abroad."

To those here tonight who have embarked, as I have before, on the long road to the White House: have confidence in our people . . . inform their discretion . . . speak to them forthrightly about the realities. And as you campaign for our highest office, remember FDR's advice:

"The future lies with those wise political leaders who realize that the great public is more interested in government than in politics."

Thank you.

JOHN BRAGG: A LEGISLATIVE LEADER

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, our Federal system of Government is changing more dramatically today, and at a faster pace, than at any time in the past three decades.

Some of the changes are positive ones that will help to improve Federal-State-local relations. Other changes bear watching. One thing is clear, State and local governments need strong representation at this time to make sure that they are not overburdened with costs and responsibilities without the authority and revenue sources they need to serve their constituents.

Washington-based organizations such as the National Conference of State Legislatures must provide the leadership to advise the Congress and the President on the impact of decisions about intergovernmental policy.

Because of the dramatic challenges we face today in our system I am pleased to report that Representative John Bragg, the deputy speaker of the Tennessee General Assembly, is a candidate for the office of NCSL vice president. The election is to be held shortly.

Representative Bragg is a close personal adviser on matters affecting the intergovernmental system. As an eight-term member of the Tennessee House, he is held in high esteem by his colleagues in the State. As chairman of the Tennessee House Finance, Ways and Means Committee, he is a leading expert on intergovernmental finance.

But John Bragg's leadership on fiscal issues reaches beyond the borders of the great State of Tennessee. He has long been active on the committees for the National Conference of State Legislatures and the Council of State Governments. He was also on the President's Pension Policy Commission from 1979 to 1981.

Mr. President, I believe that a man of John Bragg's proven stature would serve well in the leadership role he is seeking with the National Conference of State Legislatures. I wish him well in his efforts to attain this post.

With unanimous consent, I request that a résumé of Representative Bragg's activities be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the résumé was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPRESENTATIVE JOHN BRAGG: DEPUTY SPEAKER, TENNESSEE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Representative John Bragg (D-Murfreesboro, Tenn.) is completing his eighth term in the House of Representatives. He serves as Deputy Speaker of the House and since 1973 has chaired the House Finance, Ways and Means Committee. He also chairs the Tennessee State Employee Suggestion Awards Board, and is vice-chairman of the Tennessee Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations. He is a member of the Fiscal Review, Transportation, Calendar and Rules Committees, as well as serving on the Council on Pensions and Retirement.

During his legislative career, Representative Bragg has worked for legislative independence and fiscal responsibility in government. He authored legislation which created annual sessions of the Legislature, the Fiscal Review Committee, the Sunshine Law, and has passed numerous bills strengthening the accountability procedures in state and local government. He was the sponsor of the nation's first child restraint law.

Representative Bragg has been very active in the National Conference of State Legislatures since its inception. He was first Chairman of the NCSL's Task Force on Pension Reform, which was formed in 1973. This Task Force authored the publication, A Legislator's Guide to Pensions. This Task Force is now a full standing committee under the State-Federal Assembly of the NCSL.

He later served as Chairman of the Committee on Government Operations and is past Chairman of the State-Federal Assembly. He is presently a member of the NCSL Executive Committee and a member of its Finance Committee and Federal Turnback Committee.

Representative Bragg is currently serving on a six-man team representing the NCSL in negotiations with the White House on the "new" federalism.

He was a member of President Carter's Commission on Pension Policy during its existence from 1979 to 1981.

Representative Bragg is past Chairman of the Southern Legislative Conference and serves on its Executive Committee. He is a member of the Budget Committee of the Council of State Governments.

A graduate of Middle Tennessee State University in Murfreesboro, Representative Bragg has done graduate work at the University of Tennessee. He has been active in civic affairs. He has served as President of the Chamber of Commerce, the Rotary Club, the Good Shepherd Children's Home, the Blue Raider Quarterback Club, and the Tennessee Press Association. He has been selected by the Tennessee Press Association as "Man of the Year." He has been president of the Middle Tennessee Easter Seal Society. He is a member of the American Legion, the Moose Club, and the Sportsmans Club and has served as Trustee of the Sam Davis Home. He has also been selected by Middle Tennessee State University as a "Distinguished Alumnus" and has served two terms on the MTSU Foundation. He is a Baptist.

A former newspaper publisher, printing executive and bank director, Representative Bragg has served all commercial ties and now serves full time as a "part-time" Tennessee legislator.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

TWELFTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COUNCIL ON ENVIRONMENTAL QUALITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 156

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Environment and Public Works:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am pleased to transmit to the Congress the Twelfth Annual Report of the Council on Environmental Quality.

The American people insist on a quality environment. We also strive for economic progress and the promise of a better life. A clean healthy environment is a fundamental part of that promise.

Our air must be fit to breathe and our water fit to drink. We require standards of environmental quality that will protect the most vulnerable—the very young and the very old, the infirm and the yet to be born. We care about or parks, our wilderness, our wetlands and our endangered species.

We have already made great progress toward ensuring a healthy environment. Our general course has been charted with the passage of numerous Federal and state environmental laws. Our state governments and many localities have strengthened their capabilities for dealing with environmental issues. Many of our industries are coming to view the generation of wastes as lost profit potential. It is now time to make sure that the paths we have chosen are the best ones. It is time to review the environmental regulations and to make certain we are doing the most efficient job possible. Certainly we can afford a clean environment, but we must work for it in the most creative and effective way.

To operate more efficiently, I believe we must take two major initiatives. First, we must create a more innovative and flexible regulatory and economic framework in which our environmental programs operate. Regulations should complement, not stifle, market forces in determining the most cost-effective methods of proper environmental management.

Second, I believe that environmental decisions should be brought closer to the people most affected by them. Particularly in the past decade, the various state and local governments have substantially improved their capability for dealing with environmental issues. Therefore, we should increase our reliance upon that expertise. The Federal government should continue to establish environmental quality standards, assure the enforcement of such standards, help to resolve environmental issues of a regional and interstate character, and continue to develop the scientific and technical information necessary to carry out environmental protection programs at all levels of government.

Working together, we can make the necessary changes to reach our environmental goals, and at the same time use our resources wisely with the help of the free market. As we do, we will create a healthful environment in a healthy economy.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 21, 1982.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

At 2:28 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bills, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 3589. An act to authorize the exchange of certain land held by the Navajo Tribe and the Bureau of Land Management, and for other purposes;

H.R. 5081. An act to declare that the United States holds certain lands in trust for the Washoe Tribe of Nevada and California and to transfer certain other lands to the administration of the United States Forest Service;

H.R. 5380. An act to recognize the organization known as American Ex-Prisoners of War;

H.R. 6409. An act to provide for the participation of the United States in the 1984 Louisiana World Exposition to be held in New Orleans, Louisiana, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 6758. An act to authorize the sale of defense articles, defense services, and unclassified defense service publications to United States companies for incorporation into end items to be sold to friendly foreign countries.

At 4:20 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Berry, announced that the House has passed the following bills, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 4623. An act to amend titles 10, 14, 37, and 38, United States Code, to codify recent law and to improve the Code; and

H.R. 6530. An act to establish the Mount St. Helens National Volcanic Area, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 4623. An act to amend titles 10, 14, 37, and 38, United States Code, to codify recent law and to improve the Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H.R. 6409. An act to provide for the participation of the United States in the 1984 Louisiana World Exposition to be held in New Orleans, Louisiana, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

H.R. 6758. An act to authorize the sale of defense articles, defense services, and unclassified defense service publications to

United States companies for incorporation into end items to be sold to friendly foreign countries; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

HOUSE BILLS HELD AT THE DESK

The following bills were ordered held at the desk by unanimous consent:

H.R. 3589. An act to authorize the exchange of certain land held by the Navajo Tribe and the Bureau of Land Management, and for other purposes.

H.R. 5081. An act to declare that the United States holds certain lands in trust for the Washoe Tribe of Nevada and California and to transfer certain other lands to the administration of the United States Forest Service.

H.R. 5380. An act to recognize the organization known as American Ex-Prisoners of War.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNCIATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents, which were referred as indicated:

EC-3851. A communication from the Administrator of the General Services Administration, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of proposed lease prospectus amendments; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

EC-3852. A communication from the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, transmitting, pursuant to law, a copy of the revised national oil and hazardous substances contingency plan; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

EC-3853. A communication from the Assistant Secretary of the Army (Civil Works), transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to terminate the authorization for Lake Brownwood modification project, Pecan Bayou, Tex.; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

EC-3854. A communication from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting, pursuant to law, a study of skilled nursing facilities; to the Committee on Finance.

EC-3855. A communication from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on State Medicaid compliance with section 1903(g) of the Social Security Act; to the Committee on Finance.

EC-3856. A communication from the Acting Director of the Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of defense articles, services, and training provided to El Salvador under the authority of PD 82-5 dated February 2, 1982; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EC-3857. A communication from the Acting Assistant Legal Advisor for Treaty Affairs, Department of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on international agreements, other than treaties, entered into by the United States in the sixty day period prior to July 15, 1982; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EC-3858. A communication from the Acting Administrator of the Agency for International Development, transmitting, pursuant to law, the semiannual report of the Office of Inspector General, Agency for International Development, for the period October 1, 1981 through March 31, 1982; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-3859. A communication from the Assistant Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, transmitting, pursuant to law, report on the Department's intention to amend a Privacy Act system of record; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-3860. A communication from the Chairman of the Council of the District of Columbia, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of legislation adopted by the Council on June 22, 1982; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-3861. A communication from the Chairman of the Council of the District of Columbia, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of legislation adopted by the Council on June 22, 1982; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-3862. A communication from the Chairman of the Council of the District of Columiba, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of legislation adopted by the Council on June 6, 1982; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-3863. A communication from the Chairman of the Council of the District of Columbia, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of legislation adopted by the Council on June 6, 1982; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-3864. A communication from the Chief Judge of United States Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report on the Ninth Circuit's implementation of section 6 of the Omnibus Judgeship Act of 1978 and other measures to improve the administration of justice within the Ninth Circuit; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following executive reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. GARN, from the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

The following-named persons to be Members of the Board of Directors of the National Institute of Building Sciences:

Charles A. Doolittle, Jr., of Kansas, for a term of three years; and Van Norden Logan, of California, for a term of three years.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. NICKLES:

S. 2760. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to provide payments in lieu of certain social security benefits eliminated by the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1981 in the case of survivors of veterans dying of any service-connected disability incurred before September 1, 1981; to the Committee on Veterans Affairs.

By Mr. PACKWOOD (by request):

S. 2761. A bill to amend the International Safe Container Act; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. BENTSEN:

S. 2762. A bill to amend section 46(d) of the Internal Revenue Code to clarify treatment of expenditures prior to commencement of physical work; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. TSONGAS (for himself and Mr. DURENBERGER):

S. 2763. A bill to provide loans under the Small Business Act for the removal of urea-formaldehyde foam insulation from residences, to provide for certain tax expenditures relating to problems caused by such insulation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Small Business.

By Mr. BAUCUS:

S. 2764. A bill to amend the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 to provide for State collection of Federal royalties, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. MATHIAS:

S. 2765. A bill for the relief of Fermina Llarenas Marinas; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MATSUNAGA (for himself, Mr. WALLOP and Mr. GRASSLEY):

S. 2766. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide for an energy tax credit for property used in producing methane-containing gas for fuel or electricity produced by anaerobic digestion from nonfossil waste materials; to the Committee on Finance.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself, Mr. HAYAKAWA, Mr. SCHMITT, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. CHILES, Mr. HATCH, Mr. GLENN, Mr. CANNON, Mr. GARN, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. DENTON, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. INOUYE, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. BENTSEN, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. FORD, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. BUMPERS and Mr. LAXALT):

S. Con. Res. 114. A concurrent resolution to congratulate the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and all persons involved in the success of the test flight phase of the Space Shuttle program; considered and agreed to.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. NICKLES:

S. 2760. A bill to amend title 38, United States Codes, to provide payments in lieu of certain social security benefits eliminated by the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1981 in the case of survivors of veterans dying of any service-connected disability incurred before September 1, 1981; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

BENEFITS TO SURVIVORS OF MILITARY PERSONNEL

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today to provide certain benefits to survivors of military personnel who have died of service-connected disabilities. These benefits were lost through the repeal of certain social security benefits in the reconciliation legislation, Public Law 97-35.

This legislation would amend title 38, United States Code, to establish a program through the Veterans' Administration to offset the loss of widows' and students' benefits in the social security program which have been repealed or phased out. It would restore support to the widow for the care of a child until 18 years of age. It would make monthly payments available to a student survivor in the amount he or she would have received from social security until age 22.

Certainly, the Congress of the United States desires to keep this country's promises to those who gave their lives in the service of this Nation—the ultimate sacrifice.

This situation is unique for the surviving families of those who die as a result of military activities. The largest group are the dependents of the over 50,000 who died in Vietnam.

Military personnel are unable to obtain civilian life insurance since these policies exclude military aviation, hazardous duty, and combat. Military survivors are prevented by law from suing the Government over a military death.

It is only right that we move to restore these benefits to the widows and offspring of our Nation's heroes. I urge my colleagues to quickly enact this legislation, thereby reinstating our commitment to the survivors of these servicemen.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2760

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That (a) section 411 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) The monthly rate of dependency and indemnity compensation payable to an individual who—

"(A) is the surviving spouse of a veteran who died from a disability which was—

"(i) service-connected; and

"(ii) incurred before September 1, 1981;

"(B) has in her care a child of such deceased veteran who is between the ages of 16 and 18 and is entitled to child's insurance benefits under section 202(d) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 402(d)) for that month; and

"(C) is not entitled for that month to a mother's insurance benefit under section 202(g) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 402(g)) by reason of having that child (or any other child of such deceased veteran) in her care, shall be increased for that month by the amount calculated as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(2) The amount of the increase under paragraph (1) of this subsection in any month shall be the excess, if any, of—

"(A) the amount of the mother's insurance benefit, if any, that the individual would receive for that month under section 202(g) of the Social Security Act (as increased from time to time under section 215(i) of such Act) if such child were under 16 years of age, over

"(B) the amount of any benefit payable to the individual for that month under section 202(g) of such Act (as increased from time to time under section 215(i) of such Act) by reason of having in her care the child of an individual other than such deceased veteran.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be effective with respect to dependency and indemnity compensation payable under section 411 of such title for months beginning after the month in which this Act is enacted, except that in the case of any individual who is entitled to a mother's insurance benefit under section 202(g) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 402(g)) (on the basis of having a child in her care) for the month of August 1981, such amendment shall take effect on September 1, 1983.

SEC. 2. (a) Subchapter IV of chapter 35 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 1738 the following new section:

"§ 1739. Additional payment in lieu of social security student benefit

"(a) The Administrator shall pay each month an amount determined under subsection (b) of this section to any eligible person described in section 1701(a)(1)(A) of this title who—

"(1) is the child of a person who died of a service-connected disability incurred before September 1, 1981;

"(2) has attained 18 years of age and has not attained 22 years of age;

"(3) is not under a disability as defined in section 223(d) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 423(d));

"(4) is pursuing a program of education under this chapter at an institution of higher learning; and

"(5) is not entitled for that month to a child's insurance benefit under section 202 (d) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 402 (d)) or is entitled to such a benefit only by reason of section 2210(c) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982 (42 U.S.C. 402 note).

"(b) A payment under subsection (a) of this section for any month shall be in the amount that the eligible person concerned would have been entitled to receive for that month as a child's insurance benefit under section 202(d) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 402(d)) but for the amendments made by section 2210(a) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 (95 Stat. 841) (as increased from time to time under section 215(i) of the Social Security Act), reduced for any month by any amount payable to the eligible person for such month under section 2210(c) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 402 note).

"(c) A payment under this section to any eligible person is in addition to any other amount payable under this chapter to or on behalf of such person.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting before the item relating to subchapter V the following new item:

"1739. Additional payment in lieu of social security student benefit.".

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall provide to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs such information as the Administrator may require in order to carry out sections 411(e) and 1739 of title 38, United States Code, as added by the amendments made by this Act.

By Mr. PACKWOOD (by request):

S. 2761. A bill to amend the International Safe Container Act; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

AMENDMENT OF INTERNATIONAL SAFE CONTAINER ACT

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President today, at the request of the administration, I am introducing legislation to amend the International Safe Container Act. The proposed legislation would comply with a recent amendment to the International Convention for Safe Containers. That amendment extends the period of time available to owners of containers built before September 6, 1977, to have them examined and safety plated in accordance with the convention. This extension is necessary for two reasons.

First, the United States issued final regulations for approving existing containers and applying safety plates only after about 3 years of the convention's 5-year transition period had expired. The transition period had been intended to give owners 5 years to apply safety plates and otherwise comply with the convention. In view of the fact that any other countries had also issued regulations only after the convention had entered into force on September 6, 1977, the International Maritime Organization extended the deadline for applying plates until January 1, 1985, an extension of approximately 2 years and 4 months. This will give owners in countries ratifying or issuing regulations late a period of time to comply roughly comparable to the original 5-year transition period.

Second, a tremendous increase in the number of containers in use which occurred after the convention protocol was signed in 1972. Between then and 1977, their number has increased 250 percent making compliance within the original timeframe difficult if not impossible. About 500,000 container units were owned by U.S. citizens and companies at the time the convention entered into force on September 6, 1977.

This bill will extend until January 1, 1985, the period in which container owners have to complete the examination and safety plating requirements of the convention. This proposal does not change the original requirements that all existing containers be initially approved by September 6, 1982.

Since this proposal will generate no new costs to the Government and represents the implementation of a position already accepted by the United States, I recommend that it be speedily enacted by Congress.●

By Mr. BENTSEN:

S. 2762. A bill to amend section 46(d) of the Internal Revenue Code to clarify treatment of expenditures prior to commencement of physical work; to the Committee on Finance.

TREATMENT OF EXPENDITURES PRIOR TO COMMENCEMENT OF PHYSICAL WORK

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I am today introducing a bill to amend section 46 of the Internal Revenue Code which would clarify the treatment of investment credits earned by taxpayers engaged in large scale construction projects. Such construction projects are usually undertaken by utilities or similar concerns and involve large investments over a number of years with considerable risk to the taxpaying company. In recognition of these factors, Congress amended the law in 1975 to provide a special investment credit rule for long leadtime property, those taking 2 years or more to construct. Normally, a taxpayer may only claim investment credits for expenditures made to acquire property in the year the property is placed in service. Under the rule adopted in 1975 for long term construction projects, however, Congress provided that taxpayers may claim investment credits for "qualified progress expenditures"—thus the common name of QPE credits—during the construction period as they are made.

The QPE credit provisions of the 1975 law are of great significance in the case of projects which have extremely long construction periods of 5, 6, 7, or more years, such as a synfuel or nuclear powerplant. For projects of this type, the early availability of the investment tax credit has a substantially greater value than the same credit deferred for a number of years. While the QPE credit provisions advance the timing of the allowance of the investment tax credit, they do not increase the total amount of investment tax credit or alter the type of property for which the investment tax credit is available.

Although the QPE credit provisions were enacted in 1975, the Internal Revenue Service first issued proposed regulations relating to the QPE credit in January 1979 and those regulations have yet to be finalized. The proposed regulations raise a number of significant questions involving the application of the QPE credit provisions. One problem that requires immediate clarification because of its effect on financing arrangements for long term construction projects is the treatment of expenditures made prior to the commencement of "physical work on construction." It is unclear under the proposed regulations whether expenditures which are clearly part of the cost of the property but which are made prior to the commencement of physical work on construction are eligible for the investment tax credit at the time made or at a later date.

Preconstruction expenditures include amounts expended for architects' fees, feasibility studies, design and engineering, and other items which may be very significant. They are capital costs, just like steel and concrete, and they often constitute a large portion of the early costs of a large scale project.

The uncertain treatment of expenditures made prior to the commencement of physical work presents a serious problem to taxpayers undertaking such projects. On the one hand, the taxpayer may be eligible to claim the investment tax credit at the same time that design and engineering, architectural fees, and similar expenditures are made during the preliminary phases of a project. On the other hand, the taxpayer may be required to wait some 5, 6, 7, or more years until the asset is placed in service in order to receive the investment tax credit in respect of these early expenditures. All long term construction projects face this uncertainty under the current law and the proposed regulations.

My bill addresses this problem of how to treat preconstruction costs by permitting credits to be claimed at the time work on the project actually commences. Such a rule is sound tax policy and is consistent with the original congressional objective in providing QPE credits for long term projects. Namely, the period a major construction project is in service is fraught with the greatest risks from the taxpayer's standpoint and is a time when the benefits of the investment credit are most needed.

In short, then, my bill makes clear for the Treasury what has been congressional intent all along. We want to encourage those who take long-term risks by permitting them to earn investment credits in the near term. We intend to assist those undertaking colossal construction projects, often costing billions of dollars, by allowing them to earn credits at the time they will help the most—that 5- or 6-year period when costs are accumulating and before the property has begun to earn a return.

My bill accomplishes this purpose by amending section 46(d) of the code to make clear that credits earned through capital expenditures on qualified projects prior to commencement of physical work will be available once physical work has begun.

I hope the Committee on Finance will give this matter its earliest attention and that Congress will act to make clear its purpose in providing QPE credits for long-term construction projects.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(a) Section 46(d)(3) is amended by adding a new subparagraph (C) to read as follows:

"(C) EXPENDITURES PRIOR TO COMMENCEMENT OF PHYSICAL WORK.—For purposes of subparagraphs (A) and (B), expenditures paid or incurred prior to the taxable year in which physical work on construction of progress expenditure property begins shall be taken into account in the taxable year in which physical work on construction of the property begins if—

"(i) the property qualifies as progress expenditure property (determined without regard to such expenditures), and

"(ii) such expenditures are includible in the basis of such property."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to progress expenditure property on which physical work on construction commences after December 31, 1981. In the case of all other progress expenditure property which is placed in service after December 31, 1981, the amendment shall apply as if physical work on construction commenced on January 1, 1982.

By Mr. TSONGAS (for himself and Mr. DURENBERGER):

S. 2763. A bill to provide loans under the Small Business Act for the removal of urea-formaldehyde foam insulation from residences, to provide for certain tax expenditures relating to problems caused by such insulation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Small Business.

UREA-FORMALDEHYDE INSULATION ASSISTANCE LEGISLATION

● Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, today my distinguished colleague, Senator DURENBERGER, and I are introducing a bill to help homeowners deal with health hazards posed by urea formaldehyde foam insulation. In the House, Representative CONTE, of Massachusetts, has already introduced an essentially indentical bill, H.R. 6391.

Mr. President, in the last several years, there has been mounting evidence that gas leaked by urea formaldehyde foam insulation can cause serious health problems. Specifically, it can trigger allergic reactions, respiratory distress, and even cancer. To rectify this problem, Massachusetts, Minnesota, and several other States have prohibited or discouraged the sale of urea formaldehyde foam insulation. In addition, on March 2, 1982, the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission banned the sale of the insulation, effective this August.

Although the ban prevents installation of urea formaldehyde foam, it does nothing to protect those who live in houses already insulated with this material. Our bill would close this gap.

Urea formaldehyde foam is easy to install and difficult to remove. Before installation it looks like shaving cream. Once blown into the wall of a house, it hardens. Then there is no way to remove it without tearing down the foam-filled walls. The cost can run anywhere from $6,000 to $20,000, a cost beyond the means of many homeowners.

Our bill would assist homeowners in replacing the urea formaldehyde foam already in place. Homeowners would be eligible for low-interest disaster loans, up to $10,000, from the Small Business Administration. For homeowners, the removal cost would be tax deductible as a medical expense; the cost of replacement would be eligible for a conservation tax credit. Small businesses hurt by the ruling last March would receive a different kind of relief. Our bill would make them eligible for SBA's economic disaster loan program, which aids small businesses harmed by Federal regulations.

These measures would ease, but not cover entirely, the financial loss confronting persons who bought, manufactured, or installed urea formaldehyde foam insulation before its harmful effects were known. Our bill would aid 1.75 million Americans and hundreds of small businesses nationwide, all innocent victims of this product. In Massachusetts alone, about 5,000 homes are insulated by urea formaldehyde foam, and 100 firms involved in the installation, distribution, and manufacturing of this product have filed for bankruptcy. A predicament of this magnitude cannot be ignored. Our bill is a sensible, pragmatic response.

Mr. President, I believe this legislation is important. I hope that it is the subject of committee hearings and that it receives the careful consideration it deserves.

Mr. President, Representative CONTE'S office has prepared highlights, a summary, and a section-by-section analysis of the House version of our bill, H.R. 6391. I ask unanimous consent that this material be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

Mr. President, the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission has prepared a set of questions and answers on UF foam insulation. I also ask unanimous consent that these questions and answers be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that the full text of our bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2763

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXTENSION OF DISASTER LOAN PROGRAM TO LOANS FOR REMOVAL OF UREA-FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION FROM RESIDENCES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 7(b)(1) of the Small Business Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(C) to make loans (either directly or in cooperation with banks or other lending institutions through agreements to participate on an immediate or deferred (guaranteed) basis) for removal of urea-formaldehyde foam insulation from any residence, including repair, rehabilitation or restoration of such residence which is appropriate as a result of such removal: Provided, That the principal amount of any loan authorized under this subparagraph (C) shall not exceed $10,000: Provided further, That the rate of interest on any such loan shall be the rate prescribed for purposes of section 7(c)(4)(A): Provided further, That such loans shall be available only to the extent that such loss or damage is not compensated for by insurance or otherwise.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Subsection (a) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 2. MANUFACTURERS AND INSTALLERS OF UREA-FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION ELIGIBLE FOR CERTAIN LOANS.

(a) AUTHORIZATION FOR FISCAL YEAR 1983.—Paragraph (5) of section 20(n) of the Small Business Act (relating to program levels authorized for fiscal year 1983) is amended by inserting before "shall" the following: "is authorized to make $10,000,000 in direct and immediate participation loans with respect to the business of manufacturing or installing urea-formaldehyde foam insulation, but, except as so authorized,".

(b) AUTHORIZATION FOR FISCAL YEAR 1984.—Paragraph (5) of section 20(p) of the Small Business Act (relating to program levels authorized for fiscal year 1984) is amended by inserting before "shall" the following: "is authorized to make $10,000,000 in direct and immediate participation loans with respect to the business of manufacturing or installing urea-formaldehyde foam insulation, but, except as so authorized,".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Subsections (a) and (b) shall take effect on October 1, 1982.

SEC. 3. NEW DOLLAR LIMITATION UNDER RESIDENTIAL ENERGY CREDIT WITH RESPECT TO EXPENDITURES FOR UREA-FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The dollar limitation in paragraph (1) of section 44C(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to residential energy credit) shall not be reduced by any energy conservation expenditure by the taxpayer for urea-formaldehyde foam insulation or for the installation of such insulation.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years ending on or after April 20, 1977.

SEC. 4. ALLOWANCE OF MEDICAL EXPENSE DEDUCTION FOR COSTS OF REMOVING UREA-FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of section 213 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, expenses paid for medical care include expenses paid for—

(1) removal of urea-formaldehyde foam insulation from any residence of the taxpayer, and

(2) restoration of such residence which is appropriate as a result of such removal.

(b) CARRYOVER OF EXCESS DEDUCTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If the amount allowable as a deduction under section 213 of such Code on the taxpayer for the taxable year solely by reason of subsection (a) exceeds the modified taxable income of such taxpayer for such year such excess shall be treated for purposes of such section as expenses for medical care paid during the succeeding taxable year and allowable as a deduction under such section for such succeeding taxable year solely by reason of subsection (a).

(2) MODIFIED TAXABLE INCOME.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term "modified taxable income" means taxable income computed without regard to subsection (a).

(c) DENIAL OF DOUBLE BENEFIT.—No amount shall be treated as an expense under subsection (a) if (without regard to subsection (a)) such amount is allowable as a deduction or credit under any provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section shall apply to expenses paid after December 31, 1981, in taxable years ending after such date.

HIGHLIGHTS

On February 22, 1982, the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission voted to declare urea formaldehyde (UF) foam insulation, a popular insulation of the 1970's, to be a health hazard, because of the release of formaldehyde gas into the interior air of houses insulated with UF foam. This follows similar steps already taken by Canada and the states of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Colorado, Minnesota, and several others.

The CPSC found two kinds of effects attributable to formaldehyde gas: acute effects, including eye, nose and throat irritation, persistent cough, respiratory distress, skin irritation, nausea, headaches and dizziness; and chronic effects, including a small but significant risk of cancer. CPSC found that no level of exposure could be considered acceptable.

An estimated 500,000 homes were insulated with UF foam, and residents of those homes are now faced with short and long term health hazards.

The cost of replacement is estimated to range between $6,000 and $20,000, because of the need to knock out either interior or exterior walls in order to remove the UF foam insulation.

In addition to health hazards, many homeowners are faced with a significant decline in property values and/or an inability to sell their homes, causing serious financial hardship.

SUMMARY OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

This bill sets forth measures that the Federal government can undertake to assist homeowners with the burden of replacing UF foam insulation, a substance now deemed to be a health hazard:

(1) Make available low interest loans for homeowners from the SBA disaster loan program;

(2) Allow homeowners to deduct the cost of replacing the foam from their taxable income as a medical expense; and

(3) Allow homeowners an energy conservation tax credit for installation of new insulation without regard to whether a credit was previously claimed for installation of UF foam.

This bill also provides some assistance to small businesses which manufacture or install UF foam and which are now experiencing difficulty because of the ban by authorizing loans to such small businesses under the SBA economic disaster loan program.

H.R. 6391: SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

SECTION 1

This section expands the Small Business Administration residential disaster loan program to authorize loans to help cover the cost of removing urea formaldehyde (UF) foam insulation from homes. The maximum loan permissible under this section is $10,000, and the interest rate on any such loan is the disaster loan program rate for homeowners unable to secure credit elsewhere, currently around 8 percent. This provision would be effective upon enactment.

SECTION 2

This section authorizes $10 million in loans in fiscal years 1983 and 1984 for small businesses engaged in the manufacture or installation of UF foam under the existing, but currently unfunded, SBA economic disaster loan program. It provides a source of funds for small businesses affected by the CPSC ban to make the transition from manufacturing or installing UF foam to another line of business.

SECTION 3

This section provides that the cost of UF foam previously claimed as a tax credit under the residential energy conservation tax credit will not be taken into account in determining whether the homeowner has already used up the allowable tax credit for energy conservation measures (currently 15 percent of the first $2,000 invested, up to maximum credit of $300). This would allow many homeowners who used the conservation tax credit in connection with the installation of UF foam to use it again in connection with the installation of a replacement insulation.

SECTION 4

This section provides that the cost of removing UF foam is deductible as a medical expense for purposes of the Federal income tax. It may be that the cost of removal is already deductible on a case-by-case basis, but this provision would relieve taxpayers of the burden of substantiating the medical justification for the deduction in each individual case. In addition, this section provides for a carryover into future years of unused portions of the deduction. This section applies of UF foam removal expenses incurred in 1982 or thereafter.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON UREA-FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION

In February, 1982, the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission voted to ban urea-formaldehyde foam insulation (UFFI) as a hazardous consumer product. The agency determined that UFFI presents an unreasonable risk of injury to consumers because of the risk of acute and chronic illness from the formaldehyde gas released by the foam insulation, and because it is not possible to predict, prior to the installation, the amount of formaldehyde that will be released from the product. However, in many homes there is a low level of offgassing of formaldehyde; therefore, the risk of injury to people living in these homes is reduced. The ban is not expected to become effective before August 1, 1982.

1. Question. What is urea-formaldehyde foam insulation?

Answer. UFFI is manufactured at the job site by the installer. Urea-formaldehyde based resin, a foaming agent, and compressed gas are fed into foaming equipment to form a product which has the consistency of shaving cream. In retrofit applications, the foam is pumped through a hose and forced into the wall cavity, where it cures and becomes firm. During and after the installation process, formaldehyde gas can be released into the living quarters and inhaled by the occupants.

2. Question. What is the health hazard associated with UFFI?

Answer. Inhaling formaldehyde vapors from UFFI has caused some persons to experience symptoms such as eye, nose, and throat irritation persistent cough . . . respiratory distress . . . skin irritation . . . nausea, headaches, and dizziness. The severity of these illnesses varies from short-term discomfort to serious impairment. Some persons have been hospitalized, primarily for respiratory problems. In some cases, chronic respiratory problems (such as asthma) have resulted from exposure to formaldehyde gas, and existing respiratory illnesses have been made worse by the exposure. Under test conditions, formaldehyde inhalation has caused cancer in laboratory animals, and formaldehyde exposure in the home poses a cancer risk to humans.

3. Question. What is the risk of cancer from formaldehyde emitted by UFFI?

Answer. The cancer risk for any one individual is low. The Commission's decision to ban UFFI was based on all adverse health effects, acute as well as chronic, including that of cancer. The upper estimate of cancer risk from living in an average UFFI home for 9 years after the UFFI installation is about 1 in 20,000. Even though the cancer risk from all UFFI installations is significant, the risk to the residents of each home is low and would vary depending on the formaldehyde levels in that home and the length of time of exposure. In a large number of homes insulated with UFFI, the levels of formaldehyde may be much less than in others, and the cancer risk will be lower. In addition, as the foam ages, it generally emits less and less formaldehyde, and therefore, the additional risk from older installations would be even lower.

4. Question. Is UFFI found in most American homes?

Answer. No. Estimates place the number of UFFI-insulated homes at about 500,000; most of them were insulated after the early 1970's.

5. Question. How can you tell if there is UFFI in the walls?

Answer. If you purchased your home prior to 1970 and have not added insulation, you probably don't have UFFI. If it is a newer home, check with the builder or contact the realtor and/or seller. Ask if foam insulation was ever installed in the walls of the house. If you had insulation added, check with the insulation installer, or read the contract or bill of sale.

6. Question. Under what circumstances should you consider having your home or apartment checked for formaldehyde levels?

Answer. If you are not experiencing any acute health effects, and the foam was installed more than a year ago, it is likely that the formaldehyde levels and the health risks, including those of cancer, are now greatly reduced. If you have experienced the health symptoms previously described, and your physician needs to have the information for diagnosis, you may want to have a test made to determine the concentration of formaldehyde gas. Your might consider the test if you are concerned about the sale of your home which has UFFI, and you wish to demonstrate to a prospective buyer what the formaldehyde level of the home is.

7. Question. If your home has UFFI, how can you tell how much formaldehyde vapor is present in the air of the house?

Answer. Some city, county and state health departments conduct tests at no cost to residents, while others charge a modest fee. In the absence of these sources, you might consider contracting with a commercial laboratory to determine the concentrations of formaldehyde in the air; look in the Yellow Pages under "laboratories" for the names of companies that perform this service. It should be noted that the formaldehyde level in a home is subject to a great deal of variation because the release of formaldehyde from foam insulation is affected by temperature, humidity, and other factors. The preferred method for testing is the chromotropic acid method recommended by the National Insitute of Occupational Safety and Health.

8. Question. At what level of formaldehyde in the home should one be concerned?

Answer. It is not possible to define a level of formaldehyde at which everybody in the population can be assured that he or she will not suffer adverse health effects. The available data indicate that somewhat less than 20 percent of healthy adults may react to formaldehyde at less than 0.25 parts per million. People vary in their susceptibility to formaldehyde, and therefore, any reaction and its severity will differ among people exposed to the same level of formaldehyde. Infants, allergic individuals, those with respiratory problems, and the elderly may respond more severely, or at lower levels.

In general, although the data are not conclusive, healthy adults may not experience acute toxic effects from formaldehyde exposure below 0.1 parts per million. We have, however, received a number of complaints from homeowners who experienced adverse health effects and who reported measurements below 0.1 parts per million. Therefore, if you experience symptoms that you feel may be related to exposure to formaldehyde, regardless of the measured levels, you should consult your physician. Formaldehyde appears to be a weak carcinogen at low doses based on tests in animals. Although data on human beings are still being gathered, in general, as the level of formaldehyde and the time of exposure decrease, so does the possible risk of cancer. Most homes emit the greatest amount of formaldehyde within the first year after installation. As a result, any cancer risk drops off substantially after that time.

9. Question. How long does UFFI continue to release formaldehyde gas?

Answer. Measurements in homes indicate that formaldehyde off-gassing from UFFI continues for years. The levels are usually higher during the initial weeks after installation, and taper off gradually; after the first year, the levels have generally decreased dramatically. However, higher temperatures and humidity can increase the formaldehyde off-gassing rate. In laboratory experiments, formaldehyde off-gassing has continued for at least 16 months.

10. Question. Has any urea-formaldehyde foam insulation been exempted from the ban?

Answer. No. The installation of any type of UFFI in residences and schools will be prohibited beginning at the time the ban becomes effective. However, the Commission may grant exemptions in the future where a particular product can be shown not to present an unreasonable risk of adverse health effects. The ban is not expected to become effective before August 1, 1982. Consumers can call the CPSC HOTLINE to determine the effective date and to find out if the Commission has exempted any products from the ban.

Continental U.S.—800-638-8326.

Maryland residents only—800-492-8363.

Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands—800-638-8333.

Tele Typewriter (TTY) lines are available for consumers who have TTYs.

National (including Alaska, Hawaii)—800-638-8270.

Maryland residents only—800-492-8104.

11. Question. If your home has been insulated with UFFI, but you have not experienced any adverse health effects from the formaldehyde vapors, what should you do?

Answer. If you have not experienced any adverse health effects from the foam insulation, it may well be that the formaldehyde vapors are not entering the house in excessive amounts and, therefore, may not be a serious problem. In addition, formaldehyde gas emitted by UFFI decreases as the foam gets older. You may have concern if you or someone in the home shows symptoms of formaldehyde exposure, i.e., eye, nose and throat irritation . . . coughing . . . shortness of breath . . . skin irritation . . . nausea, headaches and dizziness. If anyone experiences any of these symptoms for prolonged periods (more than a few days), but the symptoms abate when the person is away from home, the problem could be related to the insulation. In that case, see your family physician and follow the doctor's recommendations.

12. Question. Your home was insulated with UFFI, and some members of the family have experienced the adverse health effects associated with formaldehyde vapors. Your doctor has recommended your leaving the house, but this cannot be done. What options do you have now that UFFI has been the subject of a CPSC ban?

Answer. First, you should try to follow your physician's advice. Secondly, you should increase ventilation by opening windows when the weather permits. Thirdly, you should contact the installer who foamed your house as well as the company which provided the chemicals to the installer. You should ask what corrective action the company and installer are prepared to take to relieve the off-gassing problem. If industry representatives do not assist you, you may want to take some corrective actions on your own to minimize the off-gassing of formaldehyde into the house. You may also wish to seek assistance from your local government consumer affairs office, if necessary.

13. Question. What corrective actions can you take?

Answer. Up to now, the U.S. government has not tested the remedies, but the National Research Council of Canada (NRC) has recommended some techniques that offer some relief for UFFI homes. The NRC suggests you check the walls; they should be sealed to prevent infiltration of formaldehyde containing air. Some of the steps which may be taken include: 1) all holes, cracks or gaps in the wall finish may be repaired by caulking or spackling compounds; 2) two coats of vapor-barrier paint may be applied to the walls; 3) mylar or vinyl wallpaper may be installed over the wall to reduce the flow of formaldehyde from the UFFI wall cavity. Special vinyl wallpaper paste and a good grade of canvas backed vinyl wallpaper should be used. Both the paint and the vinyl wallpaper will provide plastic barriers to reduce the penetration of moisture into the foamed wall.

14. Question. Is painting and wallpapering enough to reduce the flow of formaldehyde into the house?

Answer. Not necessarily. Two other areas may need to be closed off to keep formaldehyde gas from entering the living space of the house. For example, electrical outlets may be filled in with UFFI, even if the insulation were properly installed. An inexpensive non-flammable gasket available at hardware stores may be installed under the cover plate to retard the flow of air and formaldehyde vapors into the room. More important, however, is the junction of the wall and the floor where air can leak into the room. Here, the use of caulking cartridges containing butyl or acrylic latex sealants, weatherstripping, or special foam-backed tapes have reportedly been used. However, CPSC has no data on which to judge the effectiveness of these measures.

15. Question. What steps could be taken if the wall is covered with paneling, plywood or another wood product?

Answer. You should seal the joints to prevent the entry of vapors into the house, and coat the wood paneling, etc., with a sealant such as varnish.

16. Question. If the UFFI must be removed from the walls because of ongoing health problems of the occupants, what costs are involved?

Answer. There is no single answer. Based on information obtained by the Commission, costs for complete removal of the UFFI in the walls have run from less than $5,000 to $20,000, with perhaps $6,000 as an average. The procedure calls for removal of interior or exterior wall panels or siding, removal of the form insulation, and installation of new insulation and wall panels or siding. Wood surfaces that came in contract with the form should be treated with a chemical neutralizing agent such as sodium bisulfite. However, this must be done with care and may require the advice of an architect and/or consulting engineer. This process is described in detail in the publication "Building Practice Note, #23" published by the National Research Council of Canada. The Canadian agency is making single copies available without charge to U.S. homeowners who are exploring remedial measures for the UFFI. Single copies may be obtained by writing the Publication Section, M-20, Division of Building Research, National Research Council, Montreal Road, Ottawa KLA OR6, or by calling the Publication Section in Canada at 613-993-2463.

17. Question. Some consumers living in mobile homes have experienced similar health problems as residents of UFFI homes. Is there UFFI in mobile homes?

Answer. In general, mobile homes were not insulated with UFFI. Probably, the mobile homes that have UFFI were those homes where the owners contracted on their own with an installer to have form insulation applied in the walls. If a mobile home resident did not hire someone to foam the walls then the mobile home probably does not have UFFI.

Urea-formaldehyde resin is used in a number of wood products found in mobile homes. This means that there could be formaldehyde in the mobile home even thought there is no foam insulation in the wall. If you experience symptoms, you should report the possibility of formaldehyde exposure to your physician and contact the company who sold you the mobile home. The company may be able to suggest some remedial actions that could be taken to correct the formaldehyde vapor problem in the mobile home.●

By Mr. MATSUNAGA (for himself, Mr. WALLOP, and Mr. GRASSLEY):

S. 2766. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide for an energy tax credit for property used in the producing methane-containing gas for fuel or electricity produced by anaerobic digestion from nonfossil waste materials; to the Committee on Finance.

TAX CREDIT FOR PROPERTY USED IN THE PRODUCTION OF CERTAIN FUELS

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I am today introducing with Senators WALLOP and GRASSLEY as cosponsors, a bill relating to energy tax credits. Through the energy tax credits our Government can and is promoting domestic energy development which lessens our dependence upon foreign oil. All of this helps to hold down the cost of gasoline and heating oil.

The particular energy credit, addressed in our bill, applies to equipment for the production of methane-containing gas for fuel or electricity produced by anaerobic digestion from nonfossil waste material. The energy tax credit is available for this type of equipment at the present time. However, that section of the law expires at the end of 1982. The bill I am offering today would place this equipment in another section of the law dealing with biomass property which expires on December 31, 1985. The anaerobic digestion equipment properly belongs with biomass property. In a real sense this is a technical correction bill.

Our bill would provide that the energy tax credit for anaerobic digestion equipment expire at the same time that the credit for biomass property expires. I realize that there are those who advocate the termination of all energy credits. I do not agree with them, but so long as the law is in effect they too would certainly agree that all equipment which is used for the same objective should be treated alike. The continuation or termination of any energy tax credits should be dealt with fairly and without discrimination.

The anaerobic digestion system is a new and efficient technology to convert waste material into methane gas.

The environmental benefits of this method are very great. The methane gas produced by anaerobic digestion of this waste matter is converted to energy for the production of electricity and for other uses. The protein byproducts are refed to the livestock, and the other byproducts are used for fertilizer and animal bedding.

Mr. President, this system is not a dream. It is not something that is still in the planning stage. It is a reality. For instance, there are dairy farms that are now disposing of all their waste with such a system. While eliminating pollutants, the process also produces electricity needed on the farm.

Mr. President, I hope that early hearings can be held on this bill and that the Senate will give it favorable action.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 1030

At the request of Mr. McCLURE, the name of the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HEINZ) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1030, a bill to protect firearms owners constitutional rights, civil liberties, and rights to privacy.

S. 1931

At the request of Mr. SCHMITT, the name of the Senator from New York (Mr. D'AMATO) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1931, a bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to entitle Civil Air Patrol cadets 18 years of age and older to compensation available to Civil Air Patrol senior members in event of disability or death, and to increase the level of compensation available to both.

S. 2094

At the request of Mr. DANFORTH, the names of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. TSONGAS), and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. BRADLEY) were added as cosponsors of S. 2094, a bill to amend the Trade Act of 1974 to insure reciprocal trade opportunities, and for other purposes.

S. 2174

At the request of Mr. THURMOND, the name of the Senator from Georgia (Mr. MATTINGLY) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2174, a bill to recognize the organization known as American Ex-Prisoners of War.

S. 2214

At the request of Mr. SCHMITT, the name of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. TSONGAS) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2214, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide a partial exclusion for dividends and interest received and to eliminate the deduction for consumer interest paid or accrued.

S. 2585

At the request of Mr. CRANSTON, the names of the Senator from Utah (Mr. HATCH), the Senator from Montana (Mr. MELCHER), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. SASSER), and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. TSONGAS) were added as cosponsors of S. 2585, a bill to provide that the Armed Forces shall pay benefits to surviving spouses and dependent children of certain members of the Armed Forces who die from service-connected disabilities in the amounts that would have been provided under the Social Security Act for amendments made by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981.

S. 2598

At the request of Mr. McCLURE, the name of the Senator from Nevada (Mr. LAXALT) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2598, a bill to provide for the disposal of silver from the National Defense Stockpile through the issuance of silver coins.

S. 2674

At the request of Mr. COHEN, the name of the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SPECTER) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2674, a bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to require a finding of medical improvement when disability benefits are terminated, to provide for a review and right to personal appearance prior to termination of disability benefits, to provide for uniform standards in determining disability, to provide continued payment of disability benefits during the appeals process, and for other purposes.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 214

At the request of Mr. PERCY, the names of the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), and the Senator from Montana (Mr. MELCHER) were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 214, a joint resolution to authorize and request the President to designate the month of November 1982 as "National REACT Month."

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 113

At the request of Mr. SYMMS, the name of the Senator from Montana (Mr. MELCHER) was added as a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 113, a concurrent resolution recognizing and saluting the Benevolent and Protective Order of the Elks for its leadership in voluntarism in the United States.

AMENDMENT NO. 1972

At the request of Mr. FORD, the names of the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON), and the Senator from Virginia (Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR.) were added as cosponsors of amendment No. 1972 proposed to H.R. 4961, a bill to make miscellaneous changes in the tax laws.

AMENDMENT NO. 1973

At the request of Mr. LONG, the names of the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. DODD), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. EXON), and the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS) were added as cosponsors of amendment No. 1973 intended to be proposed to H.R. 4961, a bill to make miscellaneous changes in the tax laws.

AMENDMENT NO. 1977

At the request of Mr. BENTSEN, the names of the Senator from Montana (Mr. MELCHER), and the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. SASSER) were added as cosponsors of amendment No. 1977 proposed to H.R. 4961, a bill to make miscellaneous changes in the tax laws.

AMENDMENT NO. 1978

At the request of Mr. BRADLEY, the names of the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. EXON), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN), the Senator from Maine (Mr. MITCHELL), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. GLENN) were added as cosponsors of amendment No. 1978 intended to be proposed to H.R. 4961, a bill to make miscellaneous changes in the tax laws.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED FOR PRINTING

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT ON A BALANCED BUDGET

AMENDMENTS NO. 1979 AND 1980

(Ordered to be printed and lie on the table.)

Mr. MOYNIHAN submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 58) proposing an amendment to the Constitution altering Federal fiscal decisionmaking procedures.

MISCELLANEOUS TAX ACT OF 1982

AMENDMENTS NO. 1981 AND 1982

(Ordered to be printed and lie on the table.)

Mr. DODD submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 4961) to make miscellaneous changes in the tax laws, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 1983

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. HOLLINGS (for himself, Mr. DODD, Mr. MITCHELL, and Mr. JOHNSTON) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill H.R. 4961, supra.

VETERANS EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT AMENDMENTS OF 1982

AMENDMENT NO. 1984

(Ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.)

Mr. CRANSTON (for himself and Mr. SIMPSON) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (S. 2747) to amend title 38, United States Code, to make adjustments and improvements in the vocational rehabilitation and education programs administered by the Veterans' Administration and the veterans employment programs administered by the Department of Labor, and for other purposes.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION AMENDMENTS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am today submitting for printing on behalf of the distinguished chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee (Mr. SIMPSON) and myself, amendment No. 1984 to S. 2747, the proposed Veterans' Education and Employment Amendments of 1982, which Senator SIMPSON and I introduced last Friday.

Mr. President, the purpose of our amendment is twofold. First, it would clarify congressional intent underlying a provision enacted last year to provide for a 2-year targeted delimiting date extension for certain Vietnam-era veterans. Second, our amendment would provide for an extension, or so-called tolling, or a Vietnam-era veteran's GI bill delimiting period, or a service-connected disabled veteran's vocational rehabilitation delimiting period, when the veteran has been prevented by an alcohol or drug dependence or abuse condition from pursuing a program of education.

TARGETED DELIMITING DATE EXTENSION AMENDMENTS

Mr. President, section 201 of Public Law 97-72, the Veterans' Health Care, Training, and Small Business Loan Act of 1981, which was enacted on November 3, 1981, amended title 38, United States Code, to provide for a one-time, 2-year extension of the GI bill delimiting period—that is, an extension of the 10-year period following discharge during which a Vietnam-era veteran may use his or her GI bill benefits. This extension was targeted on educationally disadvantaged and unskilled or unemployed Vietnam-era veterans and was designed to permit such veterans an additional period of up to 2 years to pursue vocational objective or apprenticeship or other on-job-training programs and, for those without high school diplomas, to pursue high school equivalency courses. As enacted in Public Law 97-72, the extension became effective on January 1, 1982, and will continue until December 31, 1983.

The purpose behind this extension, which I authored in the Senate as printed amendment No. 58 to S. 921, was to provide in a cost-effective manner for a limited extension of the delimiting period for those veterans of the Vietnam era—particularly but not exclusively those who are unemployed and educationally disadvantaged—who have never effectively utilized the GI bill benefits to which they are or were entitled and are in need of certain education or training assistance. The provisions of the targeted delimiting date extension that we enacted last year were similar to those passed by the Senate during the 96th Congress in connection with S. 870, but not then agreed to by the House and hence not contained in the final version of H.R. 5288 as it became Public Law 96-466, the Veterans' Rehabilitation and Education Amendments of 1980.

On March 11, 1982, the Veterans' Administration published a notice in the Federal Register requesting comments on the provisions of DVB Circular 22-81-15, dated December 22, 1981, implementing this targeted delimiting date extension. On March 18, I wrote to Administrator of Veterans' Affairs Robert P. Nimmo, expressing my very deep concerns about the manner in which the VA is administering this new provision. In essence, as I noted in my letter, which I will ask to be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks along with the Administrator's very unsatisfactory response, it is my belief that the VA's interpretation of this provision is unduly restrictive and not consistent with the underlying congressional intent, as evidenced by the legislative history of the provision. As a result, this provision now represents a broken promise of assistance to many Vietnam-era veterans.

Mr. President, my concerns with this matter rest primarily with the eligibility criteria established by the VA for veterans who are, in the words of the statute, "in need of (vocational objective or apprenticeship or other on-job training) in order to achieve a suitable occupational or vocational objective." In implementing the extension provision, the VA has ignored clear congressional intent that the extension was to be focused on the needs of Vietnam-era veterans who are experiencing unemployment problems. Instead, the VA has taken the position that no veteran shall be determined to be in need of such vocational or on-job training unless he or she is found to be unskilled and has adopted very narrow criteria with respect to who is unskilled. Under these VA criteria, no veteran who holds a 2-year degree or has completed 60 hours of college-level courses, or who has ever held, or even qualified for, more than an entry level job, or who has ever had a job requiring more than 3 months of vocational preparation will be considered unskilled. This is so regardless of whether that individual is currently employed or underemployed or able to obtain employment.

Thus, the VA's manner of implementing the provision enacted last year reduces the determination of whether a veteran is "in need" of and thus eligible for training to a mechanical process under which the veteran will automatically be found ineligible if any one of these three criteria apply, and, where that is so, the inability of the veteran to obtain suitable employment and his or her need for training in order to be able to do so are given no consideration. There is no criterion whatsoever for making individualized determinations of eligibility in the cases of unemployed or underemployed veterans who are clearly in need of training despite the applicability of one of these three regulatorily imposed criteria for denying eligibility.

The most unfortunate effect of these criteria is demonstrated quite dramatically in the VA's data, provided on May 21, 1982, on experience under the extension for the first quarter of 1982. Of 2,455 applications received for delimiting date extensions, only 98—or less than 4 percent of those received—were approved on the basis that the veteran was found unskilled; 575 applications or about 23 percent were denied on the grounds that the veteran was not unskilled. There were an additional 1,153 claims still classified as "under development" at the close of the first quarter, generally to determine whether or not the veteran was unskilled.

These numbers contrast sharply with those projected by the Congressional Budget Office last year in connection with its cost estimate for H.R. 3423, the Veterans' Training and Business Loan Act of 1981—title I of which contained the House version of the provision eventually enacted into law. At that time, CBO estimated that 38,900 veterans would receive training under the targeted delimiting date extension and that the cost of the provision would be $52 million in fiscal year 1982 and $90 million in fiscal year 1983. The provision ultimately enacted was no less restrictive than that which formed the basis for these CBO cost estimates.

It should also be noted, Mr. President, that the VA, in its December 29, 1981, press release announcing the availability of the extension stated that:

> As many as 39,000 Vietnam-era veterans are expected to take advantage of . . . [this] extension . . .

Further, in its fiscal year 1983 budget documents, the VA estimated that $48.6 million would be expended for this program in fiscal year 1982, and the VA's fiscal year 1983 budget request included $68.7 million in the VA's readjustment benefits account for this delimiting date extension. Certainly, the way the provision is being implemented by the VA will never permit participation to reach the level assumed in these projections.

It should be stressed, Mr. President, that the VA has had ample opportunity—in addition to the opportunity that my March 18 letter provided—to modify the manner in which they are implementing this provision and has refused to back away from the rigidity and stringency of its approach. At hearings before the House Veterans' Affairs Committee's Subcommittee on Education, Training and Employment on June 17, while the VA agreed to review 10 percent of the claims denied to determine whether they had been appropriately denied and despite the fact that there has been considerable confusion engendered by its implementation of the extension, VA officials basically reaffirmed their support for the current implementing regulations.

Mr. President, it is indeed tragic that this administration has taken the position that its rigid and restrictive implementation of the provisions enacted last year is appropriate and in keeping with congressional intent. In taking that position, the VA is failing to meet the needs of Vietnam-era veterans who are unskilled, unemployed, or underemployed—needs that this Congress clearly felt should be met and needs that are now even greater, as evidenced by the unemployment rates, than they were when this extension provision was enacted.

In June, the rate of unemployment for Vietnam-era veterans, age 25 and older, stood at 8.6 percent—more than 65 percent higher than it was a year ago—representing 706,000 unemployed individuals. Of these 25 and older Vietnam-era veterans, 86 percent are 30 years of age or older. In the case of Vietnam-era veterans ages 35 to 39, those most likely to have been out of the service in excess of 10 years, there were almost two and one-half times the number of unemployed last month than in June of 1981—198,000 in June 1982 as compared to 84,000 a year ago. In addition, there were 239,000 Vietnam-era veterans, ages 30 to 34, and 73,000 age 40 and over who were unemployed in June 1982. Thus, there are more than half a million veterans age 30 or over who are unemployed and who could potentially be in need of the kind of assistance the targeted delimiting date extension could offer.

However, it should be stressed that this program is not intended to exclude veterans who are employed; nor would all Vietnam-era veterans who are unemployed be eligible for the type of training and education available under the targeted delimiting date extension.

As a whole, Mr. President, it is clear that much of the unemployment problem of these individuals is related to the military-service experience of veterans of the Vietnam era. As documented in the March 1981 study prepared for the Veterans' Administration by the Center for Policy Research, entitled, "Legacies of Vietnam: Comparative Adjustment of Veterans and Their Peers," Vietnam veterans have not achieved as high a level of education as their peers and hold jobs that are, on the average, at lower levels than those held by nonveterans of comparable age. The study concluded that, when background differences are controlled, Vietnam-era veterans—and, to the greatest extent, those who served in Vietnam—still show "residual disadvantage in educational and occupational attainment" and that in general "military duty in Vietnam had a negative effect upon post-military achievement."

Mr. President, our amendment would amend the targeted delimiting date extension enacted last year—section 1662(a)(3) of title 38, United States Code—to clarify congressional intent by substantially limiting the programmatic flexibility given the Administrator to make determinations regarding a Vietnam-era veteran's need for training. Our amendment would thus invalidate sections 3.c and 6.b of DVB Circular 22-81-15, the regulatory provisions I have pointed to as inappropriately restricting eligibility for the delimiting period extension, and would instead establish specific statutory criteria for determining the need for training. Under our amendment, the veteran could not be determined ineligible without an examination of the veteran's particular employment and training history; he or she would be found eligible if an examination showed the veteran to be in need of an OJT or vocational program or course in order to obtain a reasonably stable employment situation consistent with the veteran's abilities and aptitudes. In addition, since many of the Vietnam-era veterans for whom this extension provision was designed have been, in my opinion, foreclosed from this opportunity to make appropriate use of their remaining GI bill entitlement, the amendment would extend their eligibility period for one additional year—until December 31, 1984.

Mr. President, I wish to emphasize that this amendment is designed to permit a veteran to be denied eligibility only after a case-by-case determination and to avoid the use of any arbitrary, automatically disqualifying criteria such as those set forth in the DVB circular. I would also note that I gave very serious consideration to a provision that would simply allow any Vietnam-era veteran who has unused GI bill entitlement to use that entitlement for vocational or on-job training during the delimiting period extension without a requirement of a finding that the training is needed by the veteran in order to become employable. That approach would insure that no veteran could be inappropriately denied this training opportunity. However, such an approach would be less cost-effective, and I would support it in the future only if I were convinced that it is the only way to insure that this opportunity is made available to those who do need it for employment purposes. Thus, it is my expectation that the clear and unmistakable expression of the will of the Congress that the enactment of this provision would represent would suffice to convince the administration to implement it in good faith, fully in keeping with congressional intent.

DELIMITING-PERIOD EXTENSIONS NECESSITATED BY ALCOHOL OR DRUG DISABILITIES

Mr. President, our amendment would also provide for an extension or tolling of a Vietnam-era veteran's GI bill delimiting period when the veteran has been prevented by an alcohol or drug dependence or abuse condition, from which the veteran has recovered, from pursuing a program of education. Similarly, the amendment provides for a delimiting period extension with respect to a VA rehabilitation program for a service-connected disabled veteran with a substance abuse problem.

In the GI Bill Improvement Act of 1977, Public Law 95-202, the Congress provided for the granting of extensions of the 10-year GI bill delimiting period in the case of an eligible veteran who is prevented from pursuing a program of education during that period due to a mental or physical disability not the result of the veteran's willful misconduct. Under that law, the delimiting period does not run during any period of time that the veteran is determined to have been unable to pursue training because of the disability.

However, there have been a number of instances in which the VA has denied a delimiting-period extension to an otherwise eligible veteran under this authority on the grounds that the disability on which the veteran based his or her claim was an alcohol or drug abuse or addiction disability, which the VA considers categorically to be a condition due to willful misconduct. The VA has based its denial in these cases on the legislative history of the 1977 provision that addressed the issue of how determinations of disability should be made for the purposes of the extension. In particular, the report of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, Senate Report No. 95-468, on the provision which was enacted as section 203(a)(1) of Public Law 95-202, in discussing the concept of "willful misconduct," stated at pages 69 to 70:

> In determining whether the disability sustained was a result of the veteran's own "willful misconduct," the Committee intends that the same standards be applied as are utilized in determining eligibility for other VA programs under title 38.

The report further referenced VA regulations and manual provisions relating to the determination of willful misconduct for the purposes of determining service-connected disability. Under the VA's interpretation of those standards—38 CFR section 3.301(C) (2) and (3)—alcoholism and drug addiction and injuries proximately and immediately resulting from the effects of the deliberate ingestion of an alcoholic beverage or voluntary use of a drug—such as an injury incurred in a traffic accident caused by the veteran's driving while under the influence of alcohol or a drug—are considered to be the result of willful misconduct.

Subsequently, the Veterans' Affairs Committee closely reexamined the practical consequences of denying a delimiting-period extension in such cases and the differences between awarding such an extension on the grounds of alcohol or drug disabilities and awarding other VA benefits, such as compensation or pension, based on such disabilities. As a result of this reexamination, the committee saw no substantial purpose to be served by denying a veteran a GI bill delimiting-period extension when the veteran was prevented by a drug or alcohol disability, during part or all of the ordinary 10-year delimiting period, from using GI bill benefits and the veteran had recovered from the disability. In fact, in the committee's view, it could be expected that GI bill educational assistance would have considerable value to achieving and maintaining the medical, social, and economic rehabilitation of veterans recovering from disabilities related to alcohol or drugs.

In contrast, the committee noted that some undesirable consequences might flow from a similar rule being applied for purposes of other VA benefit programs, such as service-connected compensation, where the rate and duration of benefits depend directly upon the severity and duration of the disability. If an individual were to be granted disability compensation for alcoholism or drug addiction, there would be a strong financial incentive established—in the form of a higher rate of compensation or the continuation of receipt of compensation—toward the worsening or prolongation of the disability. Either of these factors are to some extent within the control of the veteran because they depend upon the amount, frequency, and duration of his or her consumption of alcoholic beverages or drugs.

Thus, the committee reported in S. 870—and the Senate passed in section 201(2) of H.R. 5288—a provision to establish that an alcohol or drug dependence or abuse disability from which the veteran has recovered shall not, solely for purposes of deciding requests for delimiting-period extensions, be considered to be the result of willful misconduct.

Similarly, in S. 1188, the bill reported by the committee to revise and update chapter 31, relating to VA rehabilitation programs for service-connected disabled veterans, the Senate passed on September 4, 1980, a comparable provision to provide for the tolling of a service-connected disabled veteran's delimiting period for a chapter 31 rehabilitation program on account of an alcohol or drug disability.

However, despite our strongest urgings, the House would accept neither the GI bill nor the rehabilitation program provision for delimiting-period extensions based on drug or alcohol disabilities.

Last year, Mr. President, in connection with S. 921 the proposed Veterans' Programs Extension and Improvement Act of 1981, the Senate again approved similar provisions, and again the House refused to accept them.

I strongly believe both that the opportunity to use GI bill and VA rehabilitation program benefits can be extremely important to the readjustment and rehabilitation of the Vietnam-era and service-connected disabled veterans involved and that the delimiting period extensions for those who were, but are no longer, prevented by alcohol or drug disabilities from using those benefits would be fully consistent with the readjustment and rehabilitation goals of both programs. Hence, the amendment we are introducing today includes delimiting period extension provisions for both programs.

I would like to note that in drafting this amendment, we have recast the provision relating to the GI bill extension so as to indicate, even more clearly than the prior versions, that this provision is not intended to undercut, in any manner, any administrative or legislative provisions expressly or implied to the effect that alcohol or drug abuse or dependence are necessarily the result of willful misconduct. It is simply not necessary to resolve that issue in order to make the extension available. We are thus proposing the enactment of this provision in a form that clearly would avoid this issue and that should thereby enhance the prospects for enactment of this legislation.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, along with my good friend from Wyoming (Mr. SIMPSON) I will be working to have these provisions favorably considered by the Committee on Veterans' Affairs during its markup of S. 2747—scheduled for August 12 after a July 28 hearing—so that they can be incorporated in legislation reported by the committee. I urge my colleagues to join with me in this effort.

At this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD the text of our amendment followed by my March 18, 1982, letter, to which I referred earlier, the VA's April 5, 1982, response, the DVB circular in question, and a followup VA response dated May 21, 1982, containing first-quarter data on the very low utilization of the targeted delimiting date extension.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 7, between lines 19 and 20, insert the following new sections:

CLARIFICATION OF TARGETED DELIMITING DATE EXTENSION

SEC. 107. (a) Section 1662(a)(3) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (C)(i) by striking out "may" and inserting in lieu thereof "shall" and by striking out "only if the veteran has been determined by the Administrator to be in need of such a program or course in order to achieve a suitable occupational or vocational objective" and inserting in lieu thereof "unless the Administrator determines, based on an examination of the veteran's employment and training history, that the veteran is not in need of such a program or course in order to obtain a reasonably stable employment situation consistent with veteran's abilities and aptitudes"; and

(2) in subparagraph (D) by striking out "1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "1984".

(b)(1) Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall publish in the Federal Register, for public review and comment for a period not to exceed 30 days, proposed regulations under section 1662(a)(3)(C)(i) of title 38, United States Code, as amended by section (a) of this section.

(2) Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall publish in the FEDERAL REGISTER final regulations under such section 1662(a)(3)(C)(i) as so amended.

TOLLING DELIMITING DATES BY REASON OF DRUG AND ALCOHOL CONDITIONS

SEC. 108. (a) Section 1501 is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (3) through (9) as paragraphs (4) through (10); and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (2) a new paragraph (3), as follows:

"(3) the term 'medical condition' includes an alcohol or drug dependence or abuse condition of a veteran.".

(b) Section 1662(a)(1) is amended by inserting "(or an alcohol or drug dependence or abuse condition from which such veteran has recovered)" after "misconduct".

On page 17, line 15, strike out "Sec. 302. Except for section 208(b)," and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 302. (a) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b) of this section,".

On page 17, after line 16, insert the following new subsection:

(b) The provisions of sections 107, 108, and 208(b) of this Act shall be effective on the date of enactment.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Washington, D.C., March 18, 1982.

Hon. ROBERT P. NIMMO,
Administrator Veterans' Affairs,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR BOB: I am writing in response to the March 11, 1982, Federal Register notice requesting public comments on the provisions of DVB Circular 22-81-15, dated December, 22, 1981, which implements the so-called targeted delimiting date extension provision enacted in section 201 of the Veterans' Health Care, Training, and Small Business Act of 1981 [1] (Public Law 97-72). The substance of the concerns expressed in this letter were shared in January by Committee Minority staff with Chuck Hagel and Bob Coy.

Under the new provision (section 1662(a)(3) of title 38, United States Code) a veteran whose GI Bill delimiting period has expired or will expire before December 31, 1983, has until that date to use his or her remaining entitlement for vocational training or apprenticeship or other on-job training if the Administrator has determined that the veteran is "in need" of the training "in order to achieve a suitable occupational or vocational objective." That determination is to be made in accordance with regulations that the Administrator must prescribe.

Although the new provision gives the Administrator certain programmatic flexibility in making determinations regarding the veteran's "need" for training, I have very substantial concerns regarding the unduly restrictive manner in which the Circular implements this legislation. As to certain restrictions, I doubt the legal authority; as to others, I seriously question the policy justification, on the whole, I believe the manner in which the VA is implementing this provision is inconsistent with the Congressional intent underlying the provision as evidenced by its legislative history, and represents what will be perceived as a broken promise of assistance to many Vietnam-era veterans.

[1] In the Circular, "Small" is incorrectly omitted.

My specific comments follow:

ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

Section 3.c. of the Circular provides that only veterans who are determined to be "unskilled" will be eligible for vocational and on-job training, and section 6.b. provides that any one (1) who holds a two-year degree or has completed 60 hours of college-level courses, or (2) who has ever held or qualified for more than an entry level job, or (3) who has ever had a job requiring more than three months of vocational preparation will not be considered unskilled, regardless of whether that individual is currently employed or underemployed or able to obtain employment. Thus, the Circular reduces the determination of whether a veteran is "in need" of and thus eligible for training to a mechanical process under which the veteran will be ineligible if any one of these three criteria apply, and, where that is so, the inability of the individual to obtain employment is given no consideration.

This approach is inconsistent with the legislative history of section 201 of Public Law 97-72 in two major respects. First, that legislative history replete with evidence that the purpose of this provision is to help deal with the employment problems of Vietnam-era veterans. The House Veterans' Affairs Committee, on page 5 of its report on H.R. 3423 (H. Rept. No. 97-78), stated, with respect to the provision from which section 201 of Public Law 97-72 was derived, that the purpose was to provide a "means to isolate and target job training and placement for those veterans of the Vietnam-era who are still experiencing employment problems." (Italics added.)

In this same connection, on page 4 of that report, the House Committee expressed its concern for the "needs of . . . veterans who have not successfully readjusted, many of whom are frequently unskilled, unemployed, or underemployed." Those concerns were echoed during the Senate's consideration of its version of the provision (see the debate on Amemdment No. 48 to S. 921 in the Congressional Record, pages S6205-07, daily ed., June 15, 1981). During the floor debate on the Senate provision, I described the extension proposal, of which I was the author, as a means of assisting "unskilled, unemployed Vietnam-era veterans" whose needs could be "seen in the high rate of unemployment that continue to plague this segment of the labor force", and the Chairman of the Senate Committee described the provision as "an effective way to reach and provide assistance to those Vietnam-era veterans who are in need of employment or minimal educational assistance." (Italics added.)

Finally, in October during the Senate debate on final passage of the provision that was enacted, I noted that it "should be of particular benefit to those veterans seeking assistance from vet centers who have employment-related difficulties" (Congressional Record, page 24321, October 16, 1981).

Thus, it is clear that the Congressional intent was to focus the extension of vocational and on-job training assistance on Vietnam-era veterans who are experiencing employment problems. For the VA to ignore those problems wherever one of the three automatic criteria set forth in section 6.b. of the Circular applies, is to ignore or reject the clear legislative purpose of the extension.

The second respect in which the Circular is inconsistent with the legislative history is that the approach taken in the Circular precludes the making of individualized determinations of the "need" for training. As originally passed by the House, the provision in question allowed determinations of need to be made by "a counselor at a readjustment counseling center . . ., a State employment office, a veterans' assistance office, or a Veterans' Administration medical facility . . ." Under the provision enacted into law, the authority to make determinations of need was granted only to the Administrator because of concerns related to the administrative and other problems that could result from granting such adjudicatory authority to various categories of personnel with no adjudicatory experience. There was no intention whatsoever to abandon the individualized approach to making determinations of eligibility.

Thus, although the three criteria discussed above may be appropriate in order to determine who should not automatically be eligible for the extension, they seem to me much too rigorous to cause automatic ineligibility. Moreover, unless there are reasonable policy justifications for these rigid categories of ineligibility, I believe that the criteria in the Circular are vulnerable to challenge on grounds of arbitrariness and capriciousness in agency action.

What is lacking, in order for the Circular to be consistent with the law and Congressional intent, is a criterion for making individualized determinations of eligibility in the cases of unemployed or underemployed veterans who are clearly in need of training despite the fact that one of the existing criteria for denying eligibility applies. Thus, I strongly urge that a new criterion be added providing that if any one or more of these three factors are present, eligibility be determined by examining the veteran's overall employment and training history to determine whether or not the veteran requires training, in order to obtain a reasonably stable employment situation consistent with the veteran's abilities and aptitudes. (Explanatory materials could indicate that a temporary lay-off in a skilled occupation would not provide eligibility in the absence of circumstances indicating that there is no reasonable expectation that the veteran will be able to maintain employment in that or a similar occupation.) In the case of a veteran who has more than 60 semester hours of college credit or has obtained a two-year college degree, guidelines should require that the veteran be referred to a qualified counselor to determine if the credits or the degree represent an attainment of a skill that the veteran is likely to be able to use in the employment market in the foreseeable future. Likewise, notwithstanding the nature of previously held employment, substantial periods of unemployment should also be taken into account as part of making a fair evaluation of the current relevance of the veteran's prior training and experience. Finally, the guidelines should require that consideration also be given to the period of time that has elapsed since the end of any prior training and employment. For example, although as noted in section 6.b.(2)(c) of the Circular, a veteran who had training as an ambulance attendant prior to military service may very well have trained for nine months, ten years later that training may not provide the veteran with a realistic opportunity for employment and should not alone be a grounds for denying the veteran a delimiting date extension.

EXCLUSION OF CORRESPONDENCE TRAINING

I also believe that the blanket exclusion, in section 3.d. of the Circular, of correspondence training benefits during an extension is clearly unauthorized and contradicted by the legislative history of Public Law 97-72. The only specific type of vocational-objective training considered for exclusion by the Congress was flight training, and the legislation as originally passed by both Houses provided such an exclusion. That exclusion was deleted from the provision ultimately enacted on the grounds that, since Public Law 97-35, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981, had terminated GI Bill benefit eligibility for post-September 30, 1981, enrollments in flight training, the exclusion of flight training was superfluous. Further, as the author of the Senate-passed version of the extension provision, I call your attention to my remarks, made during this Committee's April 30, 1981, hearing (excerpt from the hearing enclosed) specifying that it was indeed the intent to permit correspondence training to be pursued under that extension. Nothing in the language or anywhere else in the legislative history of the enacted provision negates that expression of intent.

EXCLUSION OF COLLEGE-LEVEL DEGREE COURSES

With respect to the limitations that have been placed on the programs of study which may be pursued by a veteran during an extension, I would appreciate clarification on the status of certificate programs offered by junior and community colleges. It is my understanding that such vocational-objective programs of study would be approved under the extension if the program met the applicable criteria for VA approval. Is this a correct understanding?

I would also like to know what arrangement would be made to enable a veteran to use the extension to pursue vocational-objective training if he or she (1) resides in a geographically-remote area where there are no tade or technical schools and the local community college offers vocational-objective type training only through associate degree programs or (2) wishes to pursue training that is offered only through a degree program.

In this connection, I note that there is no legislative language or history supporting the blanket exclusion, in section 3.d. of the Circular, of college-degree courses. Indeed, the law expressly provides the extension for pursuit of "a course with an approved vocational objective". As defined in VA regulations (38 CFR 21.4230(b)), a vocational-objective program of education is "one that leads to an occupation" and "may include educational objectives essential to prepare for the chosen occupation". On this basis, it seems clear to me that a program leading to an associate's degree in, for example, auto mechanics or air conditioning repair could be considered vocational-objective training. Why have you determined that such a program should not be covered by the extention?

NEED FOR DATA

Finally, in light of the short, two-year period of eligibility, I am concerned about the time involved in processing applications for extensions. In this regard, I would appreciate receiving from you, on an expedited basis, summaries of the quarterly reports on the implementation of this provision required to be submitted to Central Office by section 12 of the Circular, as well as an indication, on a quarterly basis, as to the average processing time for applications (broken down to show time involved in applications approved and applications denied). Further, in light of the concerns I have raised and the possibility of future administrative or legislative action to modify what I believe are excessively rigid criteria lacking either statutory or policy justification, I urge that steps be taken to assure that records are maintained on those veterans whose applications have been denied so that, if need be, those veterans can be contacted in the future.

Thank you for your consideration. I look forward to hearing from you regarding this matter in the near future.

With warm regards,

Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON,
Ranking Minority Member.

---

* * * * *

been ordered canceled and resolicited causing additional liability to the VA.

It was the advice of both the VA General Counsel and the Justice Department that awards should not be made until after GAO had ruled on the situation. The contracting officer considered the entire situation and determined that to award the contract prior to GAO's ruling and the reaction of the court and the plaintiff to said decision would be imprudent.

Senator CRANSTON. Would you give us the supporting documents and amplify those points for the record?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir.

Senator CRANSTON. To try to get a neutral opinion on these questions, I'm going to submit the issue to the GAO for review. That is as to whether it would have been legal and if so, proper for the VA to have proceeded with the contract award while the challenge of the procurement was pending.

Mr. THOMAS. We could have awarded in light of just the GAO protest. It was because of the litigation that we didn't.

Senator CRANSTON. I would appreciate it if you would provide that for the record.

It's stated in the testimony that you are opposed to any extension of the 10-year GI bill delimiting period on the grounds that such extensions would not be consonant with the readjustment intent of the current GI bill program. However, with respect to those Vietnam-era veterans who are still having difficulties in their readjustment—the veterans on whom the provisions of the proposal I have offered are targeted—it seems to me it is completely consonant.

The CPR study we recently completed for the VA found Vietnam veterans have not achieved as high a level of education as their peers and hold jobs that are, on the average, on lower levels than those held by nonveterans—and the disparities are sharper for combat veterans.

It's all well and good to designate special days to honor these veterans, but what is really needed is some concrete assistance from a scientific viewpoint, Dr. Ewalt, don't you agree that the results of the study raise questions about a continuing readjustment need for certain Vietnam-era veterans beyond the 10-year period?

Dr. EWALT. Yes. I'd like to point out that it's not uncommon in things like fellowships, residencies and what not that are time limited. If the person is ill in the hospital or injured or somehow otherwise unable to function, that time doesn't run for him while he's healing.

It seems that for the sicker ones and more handicapped ones, there would be nothing inconsistent in this. I believe that's contrary to my official position.

Senator CRANSTON. Do you believe the CPR study does indicate such a need?

Dr. EWALT. Yes, I do.

Senator CRANSTON. On page 27 of the testimony, you question whether I intended to include correspondence training in my proposal for targeted delimiting date extension. I'd like to clarify that I certainly did and do intend to include it in this authority and do not support the administration proposal to eliminate correspondence training generally under the GI bill.

The American Legion has indicated in its testimony that it would support enactment of a delimiting date extension tied to a determination by counselors at certain designated facilities, including the vet centers, that a veteran is in need of an extension, thereby turning over to such counselors responsibility for adjudicating individual veterans' entitlement to an extension. Under such a plan, would you see any conflict between the vet center staffs' roles as counselors and adjudicators?

For example, do you see potential harm to the effectiveness of a counselor in the program from having to grant or deny extension requests of a veteran?

Dr. EWALT. The only problem I would have with that is a number of our counselors, in fact a majority are not trained professional people. If our team leaders or other professional person made such a decision, I would have no problems with that and I doubt if we too often would run into conflict.

But if these people we have hired that are not professional people, I believe they would not be competent to make those judgments.

Senator CRANSTON. On another topic, your position relating to consideration of alcohol and drug abuse or dependence disability as "willful misconduct" for the purposes of determining eligibility for an extension of the delimiting period for GI bill benefits, I would note for the record that in June 1979, the VA testified in support of the approach to be taken in S. 458.

The Agency further indicated that it had tried to take corrective action administratively but had been precluded by the legislative history of the delimiting date extension provision.

Furthermore, I would note that when the House refused to agree to the identical provisions passed by the Senate last year, I was advised by the VA that it was conducting a review to determine if there is sufficient latitude under current law to permit me to make favorable determinations in those cases.

Was that review undertaken and, if so, with what result?

Dr. EWALT. I have no information. I'll try to get that.

Ms. SHAEFFER. We did begin to study the willful misconduct issue concerning alcohol and drug abuse. As you recall, Mr. McMichael, the former General Counsel, testified that there was a study going on, and at the time he felt that the Administrator would have the opportunity to consider this subject. However, since that time Mr. Carter has left and Mr. Cleland has also, without the issue having been resolved. I believe the subject is likely to be presented to the new Administrator and recommendations made forthwith.

Senator CRANSTON. How soon is forthwith?

Ms. SHAEFFER. When we get an Administrator might be the better question. At such time, I'm sure the whole process will be reviewed. The recommendations, perhaps, are not as conclusive as you would like.

Senator CRANSTON. It seems to be the VA's position that there really is no distinction between awarding an extension on the grounds of recovery from alcoholism or drug disability and awarding other VA benefits such as compensation or pension * * *.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D.C., April 8, 1982.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Ranking Minority Member,
Committee on Veterans' Affairs,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR CRANSTON: Thank you for your letter of March 18, 1982, concerning implementation of Public Law 97-72, the Veterans' Health Care, Training, and Small Business Act of 1981.

With the amendment to section 1662(a) of title 38, United States Code, which provided an extension to the delimiting period of certain Vietnam-era veterans, I was charged with the responsibility for developing criteria for determining the need for such an extension in accordance with the intent of Congress. In reviewing the history of this law, careful note was taken of the expressed legislative intent to extend the delimiting period to allow pursuit of a program of apprenticeship or other on-the-job training, or a program with a vocational objective if the veteran is in need of such training in order to achieve a suitable occupational or vocational objective, or for pursuit of a program of secondary education. This amendment was viewed as a means to provide a limited extension to veterans who, within their original 10-year delimiting period, were unable to effectively utilize their benefits to achieve the education or skills necessary to gain entrance to the workforce.

I believe the eligibility criteria contained in DVB Circular 22-81-15 focus on those veterans who Congress intended to assist; that is, veterans who lack a high school diploma, or the equivalent, and those who are unemployed or underemployed because they do not possess the education or skills that would provide them with an occupation. We do not believe it was the intent of Congress to provide a general extension of the GI bill to veterans who do possess a relatively extensive educational background, or a marketable skill, but who are experiencing employment difficulties that are more closely related to the Nation's economic problems in general than with their military service. I also believe that the criteria do allow for individualized eligibility determinations. Our procedures also require a formal administrative decision for most cases, approved by at least a section chief. We also provide for the determination to be made by a professional psychologist if requested by the veteran. Although our criteria may appear rigid, it is our administrative experiepce that the more discretion that is permitted in such determinations, the more open we are to charges of arbitrariness and capriciousness.

In considering the limitations of the program, it was determined that training by correspondence should be expressly precluded. This decision was based on the provisions of the Housing and Urban Development and Independent Agencies Appropriations Act which, as you are aware, prevents us from reimbursing veterans who may choose such a mode of training. In addition, courses leading to college degrees were excluded. This exclusion was derived from the wording in the law, itself, which permits pursuit of "a course with an approved vocational objective" (emphasis added). Courses are approved under title 38, United States Code, as leading to either vocational, professional, or educational objectives and the requirements for approval differ widely according to the objective to which the courses lead. Although many programs leading to associates degrees in the applied sciences or arts are closely identified with certain vocational objectives (e.g., auto mechanic), such courses do not meet the requirements of the law for approval as leading to vocational objectives. Some schools, usually junior or community colleges, do offer certificate courses that lead to approved vocational objectives. Pursuit of "certificate courses" is permitted in such circumstances.

We will be happy to furnish you a summary of the quarterly reports which we receive from our field stations. Unfortunately, the summary for the first quarter (January 1 through March 31, 1982) will not include a breakdown of the average processing time since our stations were not requested to document this information. In view of your request, however, we are requiring that this information be furnished in future reports, and that a listing be made, by name and claim number, of those veterans whose applications are denied.

I appreciate this opportunity to respond to your concerns in this matter, and look forward to providing you the further information you requested.

Sincerely,

ROBERT P. NIMMO,
Administrator.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D.C., May 21, 1982.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Ranking Minority Member, Committee on Veterans' Affairs, U.S. Senator, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR CRANSTON: This is in further response to your letter of March 18, 1982, regarding the VA's implementation of section 301 of the Veterans' Health Care, Training, and Small Business Act of 1981.

The report for the first quarter of 1982 is now available and shows that 1302 claims for delimiting date extensions have been processed. Of the claims that have been processed, 13 percent have been allowed, while 60 percent were denied, either on the basis that the claimant was not found to be educationally disadvantaged, or that he or she was not unskilled. There were 351 claims denied for other reasons such as the veteran having no remaining entitlement, or the program for which the veteran requested an extension not being approved for veterans' training. There are 1153 claims that are still being developed, generally to determine whether or not the veteran is unskilled. The next quarterly report will show the average processing time for applications that have been approved as well as those that were denied. I am enclosing a copy of our field station summary for your review.

The Honorable Alan K. Simpson and the Honorable G. V. Montgomery have been provided with a similar report.

Sincerely,

ROBERT P. NIMMO,
Administrator.

Enclosure.

DELIMITING DATE EXTENSIONS

Station name	Station No.	Number of applications received for delimiting date extensions during the current quarter	Number of applications approved for delimiting date extensions during the current quarter for the following reasons—		Number of applications denied for delimiting date extensions during the current quarter for the following reasons—
			Found educationally disadvantaged	Found unskilled	Not found educationally disadvantaged	Not found unskilled	Other reasons for denial (total)
		(1)	(2a)	(2b)	(3a)	(3b)	(3c)
Grand total		2,455	71	98	207	575	351
Eastern region, total		562	29	29	39	118	81
Connecticut: Hartford	308	17					2
District of Columbia: WRO	372	17
Delaware: Wilmington	460	10		2		1	1
Florida: St. Petersburg	317	56	1	2	9	8	3
Georgia: Atlanta	316	83	1	4	2	40	12
Massachusetts: Boston	301	56	1	3	7	2	5
Maryland: Baltimore	313	41		1	2	6	10
Maine: Togus	402	15	5	2	1	4	3
North Carolina: Winston-Salem	318	40	1	6	1	9	11
New Hampshire: Manchester	373	19	2		2	13	1
New Jersey: Newark	309	15			1	1	2
New York:
Buffalo	307	30	3	2	1	1	4
New York	306	4	1			2	1
Pennsylvania:
Philadelphia	310	65	1	1		3	10
Pittsburgh	311	7	1	3	3	3	(1)
Puerto Rico: San Juan	455
Rhode Island: Providence	304	20	3	1	1	5	3
South Carolina: Columbia	319	13	3		1	4	5
Virginia: Roanoke	314	33	2	2	2	4	5
Vermont: White River Junction	405	3					1
West Virginia: Huntington	315	34	4			12	1
Central region, total		1,439	35	49	116	384	183
Alabama: Montgomery	322	98	1	10	22	38	14
Arkansas: Little Rock	350	15	3		2		1
Iowa: Des Moines	333	85	3	1	42	50	5
Illinois: Chicago	328	82			6	8	9
Indiana: Indianapolis	326	139	3		9	(1)	(1)
Kansas: Wichita	452	4				2
Kentucky: Louisville	327	76	2	3	13	33	4
Louisiana: New Orleans	321	14					1
Michigan: Detroit	329	238	3	13	6	66	43
Minnesota: St. Paul	335	104		5		48	3
Missouri:
St. Louis RO	331	16	1	1	4	7
St. Louis RPC	376
Mississippi: Jackson	423	4				1
North Dakota: Fargo	437	26		3	8	9	5
Nebraska: Lincoln	334	17	1			15
Ohio: Cleveland	325	149	1	2		7	24
Oklahoma: Muskogee	351	24	1	2		1
South Dakota: Sioux Falls	438	15
Tennessee: Nashville	320	181	9	9	4	49	22
Wisconsin: Milwaukee	330	152	7	2		34	12
Western region, total		454	7	20	52	73	87
Alaska: Anchorage	363	5					1
Arizona: Phoenix	345	23		1	4	2	10
California:
Los Angeles	344	8			2	1	3

DELIMITING DATE EXTENSIONS—Continued

Station name	Station No.	Number of applications received for delimiting date extensions during the current quarter	Number of applications approved for delimiting date extensions during the current quarter for the following reasons—		Number of applications denied for delimiting date extensions during the current quarter for the following reasons—
			Found educationally disadvantaged	Found unskilled	Not found educationally disadvantaged	Not found unskilled	Other reasons for denial (total)
		(1)	(2a)	(2b)	(3a)	(3b)	(3c)
San Diego	377	11		1	1	3	1
San Francisco	343	103			19	15	(1)
Colorado: Denver	339	22			5	5	10
Hawaii: Honolulu	359	1			1		1
Idaho: Boise	347	9	1	3	2	1	2
Montana: Fort Harrison	436	12		1		1	1
New Mexico: Albuquerque	340	36	1	3		5	12
Nevada: Reno	354	2			1		1
Oregon: Portland	348	51	1	1	8	13	15
Philippine Islands: Manila	358
Texas:
Houston	362	34			2	2
Waco	349	11	1		5	1	4
Utah: Salt Lake City	341	2		1		1	1
Washington: Seattle	346	108	3	8		11	16
Wyoming: Cheyenne	442	16		1	2	12

[1] Illegible.

DELIMITING DATE EXTENSIONS UNDER PUBLIC LAW 97-72

(By Dorothy L. Starbuck)

1. Purpose: This circular provides instructions for extending the delimiting dates of veterans who are in need of training as provided by PL 97-72, "The Veterans' Health Care, Training, and Business Loan Act of 1981."

2. General: a. Public Law 97-72 has amended 38 U.S.C. 1662(a) to provide an extension of delimiting dates under chapter 34 for veterans who do not have a high school diploma, and for those who are found to be in need of vocational or job training because they are unskilled.

b. Payment to affected veterans may be authorized for up to 2 years but not for training pursued beyond December 31, 1983.

c. An application must be made by the veteran for consideration of extending his or her delimiting date; no special review will be made of cases with expired delimiting dates.

d. Following completion of training, the VA will provide the veteran with employment assistance to enable him or her to obtain appropriate employment.

3. Limitations of program: a. The veteran must have had active duty service under conditions other than dishonorable, any part of which occurred during the Vietnam era (August 5, 1964 through May 7, 1975) provided he or she is otherwise eligible.

b. To receive benefits for secondary training beyond his or her delimiting date, the veteran must not have a high school diploma or its equivalent.

c. To receive benefits for vocational, apprenticeship, or other on-the-job training beyond his or her delimiting date, the veteran must be in need of training to achieve a suitable occupational or vocational objective because he or she is unskilled, or unemployed and unskilled.

d. Training with a vocational objective must be residential training in NCD (non-college-degree) courses. Benefits for farm cooperative training may be allowed, but correspondence and flight training are not allowed under the provisions of this program.

e. The length of the extension is governed by the following:

(1) The extension for vocational, apprenticeship, and on-the-job training may not exceed the applicant's unused entitlement, except extensions for vocational training under VAR 11041(D) (1) and (2); and

(2) The extension cannot begin before January 1, 1982, and cannot end after December 31, 1983.

4. Applications: a. Applications for delimiting date extensions under this provision must be made in accordance with the time limits specified in VAR 14131(A). Applications will be made on VA Form 22-1990 or 22-1995, as appropriate. To assist in identifying claims for extensions under this provision, forms should be marked "Extension under PL 97-72."

b. An application may be received that does not indicate that the person is applying for an extension to his or her delimiting date which has passed. These claims will not be denied if there is any possibility that the applicant may otherwise be qualified for an extension. All such claims will be developed as appropriate.

c. Additional development as described in paragraph 5 will be requested by dictated letter.

5. Development: Development must be made on a case-by-case basis since the circumstances in each case will be unique. If the veteran claims to be educationally disadvantaged or unskilled, only the one claimed must be developed. However, if he or she only claims to be unemployed or if he or she does not specify the reason for requesting the extension, the case must be developed for both the possibility of the veteran's being educationally disadvantaged or unskilled.

a. High School Training—Educationally Disadvantaged: A veteran who does not have a high school diploma or its equivalent will be considered educationally disadvantaged for purposes of this program. If recent educational background information is not available, the case must be developed to determine if the applicant qualifies for training. If development is necessary, the applicant wil be informed at that time that benefits are limited to the amount of tuition and fees for the course, not to exceed the single veteran's rate for the appropriate training time.

b. Vocational, Apprenticeship, or On-The-Job Training—Unskilled: There must be a determination that the veteran is in need of training because he or she is unskilled (whether employed or unemployed) as a prerequisite to payment of benefits for vocational, apprenticeship, or on-the-job training beyond his or her delimiting date. To make this determination, the following information must be obtained to the extent that it is not shown by the evidence of record.

(1) Educational and Vocational Training: All educational training received after high school and all vocational training must be indicated to include the following:

(a) Courses or programs pursued at each school.

(b) Whether the courses or programs listed were completed.

(c) Dates or enrollment for each course or program.

(2) Employment History: (a) The job title and a brief description of the type of all work performed with all employers.

(b) Dates of employment for each type of work listed.

(3) Employment Training: (a) A description of all classroom training provided by employers. The description must include the type of training received, the number of hours of each type of training, and the appropriate dates of such training.

(b) A description of all on-the-job training received while serving as a trainee on the job under the instruction of qualified workers.

6. Determinations: Each case will be decided on an individual basis by Adjudication personnel. The applicant may qualify for an extended delimiting date because he or she is educationally disadvantaged or is in need of training because he or she is unskilled. If the veteran requests an extension because of unemployment, evidence must also show that he or she is unskilled.

a. Educationally Disadvantaged: (1) If the applicant does not have a high school diploma or its equivalent, he or she will be considered as educationally disadvantaged and will qualify for an extension to pursue a program of secondary education provided all other requirements are met.

(2) If the extension is allowed to pursue a program of secondary education because the veteran is found to be educationally disadvantaged, the claims folder will be annotated "Delimiting date extended—educationally disadvantaged—PL 97-72."

(3) No formal administrative determination will be required in such cases.

b. Unskilled (whether Employed or Unemployed): (1) If the veteran has never been employed in other than entry level jobs, he or she will be considered to be unskilled for purposes of this program. Provided all other requirements are met, an extension will be allowed for pursuit of a program of vocational, apprenticeship, or on-the-job training. For the purposes of this program, the following rules will apply:

(a) A job requiring 3 months or less vocational preparation will be considered as entry level.

(b) A person who holds a 2-year degree or who has completed 60 semester hours or the equivalent from an institution of higher learning will not be considered to be unskilled regardless of employment history.

(c) A person who has completed a vocational program which qualifies a person for more than an entry level job will not be unskilled.

(d) Trainee positions, such as management trainee positions, in private industry and government which generally lead to more responsible positions are not considered to be entry level although such jobs may require little specific vocational preparation.

(e) To qualify for a farm cooperative program, a person may not have held higher than an entry level position as described in subparagraph (2) below.

(2) As a guide to determining the skill level of most jobs, refer to the publication Selected Characteristics of Occupations Defined in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles which was prepared by the Department of Labor. Copies of this publication are available in the VR&C (Vocational Rehabilitation and Counseling) activity of each regional office. Additional copies may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

(a) In part A of the above publication the training length is provided for each job listed. The training length is represented by an SVP (Specific Vocational Preparation) code shown in the right column for each job. (Appendix A of this circular provides additional assistance for locating SVP codes for specific jobs.)

(b) For purposes of this program for delimiting date extensions, jobs represented by SVP codes of 1, 2, or 3, will be considered as entry level. These jobs require 3 months or less in vocational preparation.

(c) In some situations the SVP codes in this publication may not be conclusive. In these cases other evidence of record should be examined. The preparation time indicated by the applicant for a particular job may not coincide with the SVP code for that job. For example, the applicant states that he or she holds a job as an ambulance attendant (DOT code 355.374-010) which has an SVP code 3. However, he or she claims that training for that job has been 9 months combined classroom and on-the-job training. Since his or her training for this job has been much more extensive than represented by the SVP code, this job will not be considered as entry level.

(3) A decision to grant or deny an extension of the applicant's delimiting date for vocational, apprenticeship, or on-the-job training based on need for training because he or she is not shown to be unskilled will be presented in an authorization determination. (See DVB Manual M21-1, par. 14.34.) The formal administrative decision will require two signatures with the second signature being the approval by a section chief. A formal decision will not be necessary if the claim is denied for some other reason, such as no remaining entitlement or program not approved.

(4) The Adjudication Division will not refer cases to VR&C solely for the purpose of making a determination that the veteran needs training because he or she appears to be unskilled. If a veteran requests counseling and VR&C makes the determination that the veteran is unskilled, based on the criteria specified in this circular, the delimiting date extension will be allowed. No further development on skill level of jobs held will be required and a formal administrative decision as discussed in subparagraph (3) above will not be required. The claims folder will be annotated "Delimiting date extended—unskilled per VR&C—PL 97-72."

7. Award Procedures: a. Beginning and Ending Dates: (1) Beginning Date: The beginning date of any extension under this provision will be the latest of the following dates:

(a) The beginning date of attendance or training as certified by the school;

(b) The veteran's original delimiting date under VAR 11042 or extended delimiting date under 11043; or

(c) January 1, 1982.

(2) Ending Date: The ending date (last date of payment) will be the earlier of the following dates:

(a) The last day of attendance or training as certified by the school or training establishment; or

(b) December 31, 1983.

b. Change of Delimiting Date: Training under this provision will require an extension to the veteran's delimiting date. For this reason the original delimiting date in the system must be adjusted to allow payment of benefits under the extension. The revised delimiting date under the extension will be the NONE date of the award under the extension, but not later than January 1, 1984.

(1) Target Processing: If the award is to be processed in the Target System, the delimiting date will be adjusted on the 310 screen, Chapter 31/32/34 Eligibility, in the DISAB fields.

(a) If the veteran's original delimiting date is earlier than January 1, 1982, enter "1-1-82" in the DATE field. In the MOS and DAYS field enter the appropriate time to generate the correct extended delimiting date.

(b) If the veteran's original delimiting date is on or after January 1, 1982, but earlier than January 1, 1984, enter the appropriate amount in the MOS and DAYS fields to generate the correct extended delimiting date. Make no entry in the DATE field.

(2) Non-Target Processing: Although use of the Target System for award processing is preferable, magnetic diskette or OCR documents may be used.

(a) If OCR processing is used, it is important to ensure that the entry in the DELIMIT BASE field has been processed before the OCR award is submitted.

(b) If magnetic diskette processing is used, the veteran's delimiting date must be extended by using the field DELIMIT BASE (field No. 375). The entry in this field will be: (1) A six-position entry in the month-day-year (MMDDYY) format; (2) a date that is 10 years and 1 day earlier than the NONE date of the award under the extension, or December 31, 1973, whichever is earlier; and (3) made as a part of an original Certificate of Eligibility or as a master record correction.

c. Entitlement: (1) High School Training: Entitlement will not be charged for benefits paid for high school training. However, to be entitled to benefits for such training, the veteran must have remaining entitlement. If entitlement is exhausted, no buy-back of entitlement will be allowed.

(2) Vocational, Apprenticeship, and On-The-Job Training: Entitlement may be extended for vocational training as provided under VAR 11041(D), but not beyond December 31, 1983. No extension of entitlement is permitted for apprenticeship and on-the-job training. No buy-back of entitlement will be allowed if entitlement is exhausted.

d. Rate of Payment: (1) High School Training: Payment will be limited to the cost of tuition and fees charged, not to exceed the single-veteran institutional rate for the particular training time. There will be no charge to entitlement. (See subpar. c(1) above.)

(2) Vocational, Apprenticeship, and On-The-Job Training: The rates of payment will be those as specified in VAR 14136(A) as amended by PL 96-466.

e. Folder-Pull Indicator: In cases where the delimiting date has been extended, the FOLDER PULL REQUIRED field on the Target M24 screen will be set.

8. Notice to Applicant: a. Extension Allowed: If the veterans' application for an extended delimiting date is approved, he or she will be notified by dictated letter of the extension. In addition to the required information contained in generated award letters, the following must be provided:

(1) If the school certifies a beginning date earlier than January 1, 1982, or an ending date later than December 31, 1983, the veteran must be notified of the reason that the award cannot begin earlier or end later than these dates.

(2) He or she must be informed that the extension is based on evidence which shows that he or she is educationally disadvantaged or unskilled, as appropriate under the provisions of law allowing the delimiting date extension. He or she will also be informed that this determination applies only to the specific course or program for which the extension is approved.

(3) The veteran will be informed that employment assistance will be available upon his or her request when he or she completes the course or program.

b. Extension Denied: The veteran will be informed of a denial of the application by dictated letter which gives the reasons for the denial.

(1) If the veteran is not shown to be educationally disadvantaged or unskilled, the denial letter will clearly state that the evidence does not show that he or she is educationally disadvantaged or unskilled, whichever is applicable, under the provisions of law permitting an extension of the delimiting date.

(2) If the applicant has requested an extension for training because of unemployment but the determination is that he or she is not unskilled, the request for an extension will be denied. The veteran will be informed that the extension cannot be allowed solely because he or she is unemployed and that evidence must also show that he or she is unskilled which is not shown by the evidence of record.

(3) A statement of appellate and procedural rights will be enclosed.

9. End Product Code: An end product code of 220 will be taken for approvals and denials of delimiting date extensions under this provision.

10. Change of Program: a. The determination that the veteran is in need of training because he or she is shown to be educationally disadvantaged or unskilled will apply only to the specific course or program for which application is made. Any change of program will require another determination. For example, if a veteran is determined to be unskilled for the purposes of this program, is approved for training in a 12-month automobile mechanics course, and completes 8 months of the course, another formal determination must be made as to whether he or she remains unskilled before an application for further benefits for another program can be approved.

b. The change of program restrictions under 38 U.S.C. 1791 apply to program changes for benefits the veteran received before his or her delimiting date and to changes of program within the extended delimiting period. For example, if the veteran applies for an extended delimiting date but has already received benefits for two different programs before his or her delimiting date, development for a second change of program as specified in DVB Circular 22-80-37 will be accomplished concurrently with any other necessary development as discussed in paragraph 5 above.

11. Awards Terminating on Delimiting Date: Situations will occur in which predelimiting date awards for secondary, vocational, apprenticeship, and on-the-job training will end as of the veteran's delimiting date although the enrollment period extends beyond that date. For example, an enrollment is received for vocational training beginning January 11, 1982, and ending January 11, 1983, but the award terminates benefits as of the veteran's delimiting date on June 2, 1982. The veteran in such cases will be notified when the predelimiting date award is processed that benefits for secondary, vocational, apprenticeship, or on-the-job training, as appropriate to the case, may be continued beyond his or her delimiting date if it appears that eligibility may exist.

a. Secondary Training: (1) The notice concerning extended benefits must inform the veteran that payments for secondary training will be limited to the cost of tuition and fees. To apply for an extension, he or she will be notified to submit the following no earlier than 60 days before his or her delimiting date:

(a) A statement that he or she requests benefits for further secondary training beyond his or her delimiting date;

(b) A statement as to when he or she received or expects to receive a high school diploma or its equivalent; and

(c) A current enrollment certification which certifies attendance beyond his or her delimiting date.

(2) Benefits may be extended beyond the delimiting date if the evidence received indicates that he or she is continuing in training on or after that date; that he or she has not received a high school diploma or its equivalent; and that all other requirements for an extension are met.

b. Vocational, Apprenticeship, and On-The-Job Training: (1) To apply for continued benefits for vocational, apprenticeship, and on-the-job training beyond his or her delimiting date, the veteran will be required to submit the following no earlier than 60 days before his or her delimiting date:

(a) A statement that he or she requests benefits for further vocational, apprenticeship, and on-the-job training, as appropriate in the case;

(b) A statement as to the skills obtained from the beginning of the current course or training program and the information specified in paragraph 5b (if not of record); and

(c) A current enrollment certification that certifies enrollment in training beyond his or her delimiting date.

(2) Benefits may be extended beyond the delimiting date if the evidence shows that the veteran is continuing in training beyond that date; that he or she meets the requirements of being unskilled as of his or her delimiting date as specified in paragraph 6b; and that he or she meets all other requirements for the extension.

12. Statistics: a. A report (including a negative report if no extensions are received) will be submitted to the Field Director (722A) on a quarterly basis. The report is designated as RCS 22-28.

b. Regional offices will report the following information:

(1) Number of applications received for delimiting date extensions during the current quarter.

(2) Number of applications approved for delimiting date extensions during the current quarter for the following reasons:

(a) Found to be educationally disadvantaged;

(b) Found to be unskilled.

(3) Number of applications denied for delimiting date extensions during the current quarter for the following reasons:

(a) Not found to educationally disadvantaged;

(b) Not found to be unskilled;

(c) Other reasons for denial (total number).

(NOTE.—The above statistics will not reflect delimiting date extensions for disability.)

c. This report must be received in Central Office no later than the 10th workday following the end of the quarter. The first report will be due the 10th workday of April 1982 (covering the quarter beginning January 1, 1982). The final report will be due the 10th workday of January 1984 (covering the quarter beginning October 1, 1983).

13. Distribution: Copies of this circular are being distributed to educational institutions.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

SUBCOMMITTEE ON ENERGY REGULATION

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Energy Regulation of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, July 22, at 10 a.m., to conduct a hearing on S. 2500, a bill to amend the Federal Power Act to reduce conflicts in the licensing of hydroelectric powerplants and to expedite the development of and simplify the regulation of hydroelectric powerplants, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON ENVIRONMENTAL POLLUTION

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Environmental Pollution, of the Committee on Environment and Public Works, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, July 22, at 2 p.m., to hold an oversight hearing on the reauthorization of the Clean Water Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS AND GENERAL OVERSIGHT

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Investigations and General Oversight, of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, July 22, at 10 a.m., to hold an oversight hearing on childhood immunization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

HOW TO WIN THE WAR AGAINST POVERTY

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I have long held the belief that we have been winning the war against poverty, but not because of medicare or welfare and other benefits, but because we have had up to now a highly productive economic system.

A recent editorial statement aired on radio station KAIR in Tucson, Ariz., makes the same point in summarizing George Gilder's book, "Wealth and Poverty." Because the message is so clear and correct, I wish to share it with my colleagues, and ask that the editorial may appear in the RECORD.

The editorial follows:

George Gilder in his book "Wealth and Poverty" celebrates the entrepreneur—that dreamer, and doer—who, he says, does more to provide jobs and raise living standards than all the social programs ever devised. And, he says, in a vibrant and free society the greatest single asset is an army of "poor" entrepreneurs on their way to becoming wealthy. But even as entrepreneurs transform capitalism from promise to reality, the social planners have held the high ground. He makes the point that the most serious fraud in welfare is committed not by its recipients, but by its creators who have concealed from the poor the fundamental reality that to escape poverty they will have to work harder than the classes above them. The poor choose leisure not because of moral weakness but because they are paid to. We have regulated and constricted our economy to the point where for both rich and poor, risk is neither encouraged nor rewarded. Yet the natural impulse to take risks has produced new jobs, new ideas, and new wealth of incalculable abundance—proving again and again that the greatest antipoverty program of all is a free economy.●

ENVIRONMENTAL LAW ENFORCEMENT

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I submit for the RECORD a study I released this morning on the mismanagement of the enforcement division of the Environmental Protection Agency.

This study shows that through mismanagement the Administrator of EPA has effectively destroyed its Enforcement Division.

The study follows:

ENVIRONMENTAL LAW ENFORCEMENT—A CASE STUDY IN MISMANAGEMENT

(By PATRICK J. LEAHY, U.S. Senator)

The purpose of this report is to evaluate the effectiveness of the enforcement division of the Environmental Protection Agency since the Reagan Administration has come into office. As a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee and the Senate Judiciary Committee, I have a special interest in ensuring that the enforcement program at the Environmental Protection Agency is effective and fair. And, as a former prosecutor, I know that, unless the public believes that our laws will be fairly enforced, against the powerful polluter as well as against the food stamp cheat, respect for government, which is the basis of our democratic institutions, will suffer.

Thus, I asked my Appropriations Committee staff to determine whether environmental law enforcement efforts at the Environmental Protection Agency have improved or deteriorated since the Reagan Administration has taken office. This study has led me to conclude that the effectiveness of the enforcement division of the Environmental Protection Agency was virtually destroyed by a combination of mismanagement and mixed signals.

SUMMARY

1. Ms. Gorsuch abolished the enforcement division on July 1, 1981, in spite of the fact that a major consultant's report warned her that the "case for making that change now does not overcome the costs of the disruption a reorganization would cause" and that such a reorganization "can be highly damaging to staff morale, productivity, and to an office's key programs."

2. Between July 1981 and May 1982, the enforcement division went through a major reorganization every eleven weeks.

3. For six of the last thirteen months, there was no overall legal director for the Environmental Protection Agency with the result that the two deputies were continually feuding over control of policy.

4. Enforcement policies were so confused that ten months after the first reorganization and four months after the second reorganization, EPA's chief financial officer still had to ask Administrator Gorsuch to decide the basic issue of "what functions should (the Office of Legal and Enforcement Counsel) manage."

5. Management controls and policies were so weak in the critical hazardous waste area that one regional office with severe hazardous waste problems left all inspection to the states, while another region with relatively few problems led the nation in inspections.

6. Because of mismanagement, for six out of the last thirteen months, there were only about ten attorneys in the enforcement section of the Office of Legal and Enforcement Counsel.

7. As a result of the mismanagement of EPA's enforcement division, by any objective measure, enforcement efforts have dropped by 70–80 percent.

The enforcement policies of the new Environmental Protection Agency have been a major area of controversy since Ms. Anne Gorsuch became Administrator on May 20, 1981.

Much of this controversy arose because the new Administrator decided less than a month after taking office to abolish the enforcement division. The Administrator explained that the purpose of this reorganization was more efficient management. Ms. Gorsuch had been extremely critical of the quality of management in the previous administration. She stated: To say that no comprehensive plan of administration existed at EPA would be a polite description of the chaos that existed.

However, her repeated statements implying that previous administrations had been excessively zealous in enforcing the environmental laws raised questions about the intent and the effectiveness of the abolition of the enforcement division.

FIRST REORGANIZATION

On June 12, 1981, Administrator Anne Gorsuch announced a reorganization of the Environmental Protection Agency. The principal feature of the reorganization, which was effective on July 1, 1981, was the abolition of the Office of Enforcement, previously headed by an Assistant Administrator, and the division of its functions among program offices. The reorganization called for the creation of a new Office of Legal and Enforcement Counsel (OLEC), to be headed by an Associate Administrator, that would consolidate all other legal functions of the Agency. The Office of Legal Counsel would defend the Agency in judicial actions brought against EPA. The Office of Enforcement Counsel, within OLEC, was responsible for coordinating all Agency enforcement, reviewing and approving all enforcement actions proposed for litigation, preparing all policy guidance and strategic planning related to enforcement.

The Agency explained the purposes of the reorgaization as follows: The reorganization of EPA will assure that Agency goals are results-oriented in terms of improving the quality of the environment as well as provide for strong and consistent internal management control. The major reorganization objectives are: (1) better articulating and assigning accountability for environmental program results, (2) improving the focus of policy, standards and regulations development, (3) ensuring consistent interpretation and enforcement of regulations, and (4) strengthening management of Agency resources.

Unfortunately, this major reorganization did not achieve these purposes. Instead, the disruption caused by the reorganization itself and the mismanagement of the reorganization severely damaged the credibility of the Environmental Protection Agency's enforcement program.

Two points about this reorganization are especially striking. First, the reorganization was undertaken in spite of the fact that a major consultant's report had concluded that such a reorganization would produce precisely the disorganization and damage to morale that occurred.

Second, in just six months, the reorganization had so clearly failed that it was revoked in large part.

In July 1980, ICF, Incorporated, a well-known Washington consulting firm in the environmental field, completed a report on whether the enforcement functions of the Environmental Protection Agency should be reorganized.

The basic issue examined by that study was whether the enforcement division should be split up and assigned to the program offices. In the ICF report, this was called the "function" approach. This was the theory of the reorganization ordered by Administrator Gorsuch in June 1981 and implemented in July 1981.

In the course of its analysis, ICF conducted 40 interviews, including the Assistant Administrator, Deputy Assistant Administrator, and Division Directors of the Office of Enforcement. Program officials, EPA officials outside of Washington, and Justice Department officials were also interviewed.

The study began with the warning that "The current air, water, pesticides and other enforcement programs managed by (the Office of Enforcement) are very important and . . . could suffer serious setbacks if disrupted unnecessarily." (Page 2)

After the study was completed, ICF came to the following conclusion: "Overall we did not see enough evidence to make a compelling case in favor of a radical organizational change, such as the functional or industry option."

The report not only concluded that a convincing case had not been made for reorganization, it warned that such a reorganization could be "highly damaging to staff morale, productivity, and to an office's key programs." As the report explained more fully: We do not recommend that OE reorganize into a functional structure at this time. The case for making that change now does not overcome the costs of the disruption a reorganization would cause nor do the attitudes of the OE managers favor much change. In our view, extensive governmental organizational changes should be made only when the evidence of the need for change is overwhelming. Extensive reorganizations can be highly damaging to staff morale, productivity, and to an office's key programs. There is a strong consensus against major change right now among the current OE line managers. They are especially antagonistic to a functional reorganization.

Unfortunately, the predictions of the ICF report were true. Productivity of the enforcement division dropped off severely. The contrast is seen clearly by comparing the number of cases referred to the Department of Justice by EPA and the cases forwarded to EPA headquarters from the region from 1977 through 1980, with the number of cases in 1981 when this reorganization was in effect.

	1977	1978	1979	1980	1981
Civil actions sent to Department of Justice	204	363	254	252	78
Cases forwarded from regions to headquarters	242	412	254	313	66

This chart shows that, for the four years between 1977 and 1980, civil actions averaged 278 per year. In 1981, there was a 70 percent drop in such actions. Cases forwarded from the regions during the same period average 306. In 1981, there was an 80 percent drop-off in such activity.

The extent of the mismanagement of this reorganization is illustrated by the fact that, when the July 1981 reorganization took place, only about ten attorneys were left in the offensive enforcement division of the Office of Legal and Enforcement Counsel, while about one hundred were in the defensive portion of the OLEC. The only staff kept in OLEC when the Office of Enforcement was abolished were from the National Enforcement Investigation Center, the Office of Criminal Enforcement and the Special Projects and Policy staff. Although over one hundred people were involved, only about ten were attorneys, and over 90 were in Denver, Colorado.

SECOND REORGANIZATION

Thus, it was not surprising that, on December 27, 1981, a second major reorganization was begun which shifted all enforcement attorneys back to the Office of Legal and Enforcement Counsel. This resulted in shifting back to OLEC about 100 persons who had been assigned to the program offices just six months earlier.

This second major reorganization, known in the Agency as the "OLEC Tap" clearly shows that the initial reorganization, which shifted all enforcement attorneys into the program offices, was a failure.

During the course of the second reorganization, another major management failure became evident—when the first reorganization was ordered, essential budget decisions were not made. As Enforcement Counsel William Sullivan wrote to EPA Chief of Staff John Daniels in February 1982, eight months after the first reorganization: "As you know, when the Office of Enforcement Counsel was established and staffed, it was decided to postpone discussions of pertinent resource considerations."

Enforcement Counsel Willian Sullivan then warned that these budget decisions must be made "in light of the upcoming budget hearings . . ."

As of April 1982, ten months after the first reorganization, and four months after the second reorganization began, the enforcement budget was still not resolved. A memo describing the problem, which involved about 50 key enforcement personnel, makes clear that the problem was at the top of the Agency. The Administrator had still not clearly decided, eleven months after she took office, what the function of the Office of Legal and Enforcement Counsel should be.

As the Comptroller's office stated, "The issue is: What functions should OLEC manage? The resolution of this issue will allow us to solve the resource questions that have arisen."

This basic issue of the budget for resources for the enforcement staff was not resolved until a reprogramming was sent to the Congress on May 17, 1982, after repeated congressional inquiries.

Not surprisingly, the mismanagement of the reorganization also resulted in a failure to assign enough clerical and support staff. On March 19, 1982, office-level directors in the enforcement division, including those involving hazardous waste, Superfund and case development, wrote to the Director of Legal Operations "to emphasize the critical lack of clerical and administrative support for (Office of Enforcement Counsel) operations." There were only six secretaries for thirty-seven attorneys, four supervisors, and their staffs. Calling the situation "intolerable," the division directors warned that the "effectiveness and morale of the attorney and support staff. . ." which are "doing the highest priority enforcement work in the Agency . . ." are being adversely impacted.

LEADERSHIP POSITIONS NOT FILLED

During the same period in which the enforcement office was effectively eliminated and then substantially reconstituted, two other major changes occurred.

First, three months after the reorganization began, Frank Shepherd, the Associate Administrator for Legal and Enforcement Counsel, resigned on September 25, 1981. This left the legal portion of the Agency without an overall director. His position was not filled until March 26, 1982, when Robert Perry was appointed Associate Administrator for Legal and Enforcement Counsel.

During this six-month period, Enforcement Counsel William Sullivan and General Counsel Robert Perry continually jockeyed for power.

On March 29, 1982, three days after his appointment, the now Associate Administrator Perry effectively stripped Enforcement Counsel Sullivan of all his power. Sullivan subsequently resigned. A new Enforcement Counsel has still not been appointed.

Thus, Administrator Gorsuch, during the vital start-up period, and when the enforcement functions were undergoing three major reorganizations, left the Agency leaderless.

THIRD REORGANIZATION: REGIONAL

During this same period of headquarters reorganization and personnel shifts, a reorganization of the regional enforcement offices was also ordered.

On October 15, 1981, Ms. Gorsuch sent a memo to the Regional Administrators directing them to reorganize the regional offices to be more closely alined with headquarters organization. This memo called for the regions to move the enforcement activites of permit issuance and related compliance monitoring to program divisions. Legal work associated with enforcement litigation and current regional counsel activities was to be performed in a newly expanded Office of Regional Counsel reporting directly to the General Counsel in headquarters. This reorganization created some confusion in that regional enforcement lawyers were to answer to the General Counsel (Mr. Perry) in headquarters, not the Enforcement Counsel (Mr. Sullivan) or the Director of OLEC. Second, the regional counsel were no longer to report to the Regional Administrator who remained the person responsible for issuing all enforcement notices, orders and preparation of cases and who is the line supervisor of the regional office.

The October 15, 1981, regional reorganization also delegated substantial responsibility to the Regional Administrators to operate their own enforcemnent programs. This, in turn, was contradicted by a reorganization proposed by Enforcement Counsel Sullivan in a memorandum dated February 26, 1982.

This memorandum caused confusion because it appeared to contradict the guidance Ms. Gorsuch had given the regions in the October 15, 1981, regional reorganization. Memoranda were received from several Regional Administrators demanding to know whether Sullivan's memo represented new guidance from the Administrator.

The final resolution of this matter is not clear.

FOURTH REORGANIZATION

A month and a half after being appointed, Associate Administrator for Legal and Enforcement Counsel and General Counsel, Robert Perry, announced another reorganization on May 14, 1982.

Associate Administrator Perry promised that "the implementation of these recommendations will result in only an insignificant disruption of our work over the next 30 days." However, as of July 7, the Acting Enforcement Counsel was still not able to answer a congressional request from Senator Leahy to describe in detail what staff he had because of "interim 'fine tuning'." He was also unable to provide a detailed description of the restructured Office of Enforcement Counsel. He wrote:

"We do not have any documents which provide the specific information which you requested because we are still working on developing a proposal for the reorganization to which you refer. The documents which we are drafting for this purpose are still in a state of flux while we collect and incorporate suggestions from various specialists in the Agency to make sure that the proposal accounts for all necessary considerations (e.g. Civil Service requirements of labor union matters) and ultimately is feasible to implement."

Thus, the fourth reorganization is not yet complete and a fifth reorganization may be necessary.

ENFORCEMENT EFFORTS DOWN

Just as the major reorganization in 1981 cut enforcement efforts by 70–80 percent, the continued reorganization in 1982 substantially cut enforcement efforts. During the first half of 1982, only 20 cases had been referred to the Department of Justice. Even if the Agency doubles its enforcement efforts in the second half of the year, enforcement will drop 76 percent compared to 1979 and 70 percent compared to 1980.

HAZARDOUS WASTE

The failure of the Administrator to make critical management decisions can also be seen from examining the data in the Administrator's Management Accountability System Report of the Second Quarter 1982 on the hazardous waste program.

This report is of special interest because the Administrator has emphasized on many occasions the importance of the Management Accountability System as a critical management tool and because of the high priority she says the Environmental Protection Agency is placing on hazardous waste enforcement.

A close examination of this report shows two important management failures. First, it raises serious questions about misallocation of resources, and second, it shows that consistent enforcement policies throughout the ten regions have not been established.

The first management failure, misallocation of resources, is demonstrated by a comparison of regional hazardous waste inspection activity. Region VIII is headquartered in Denver and includes Colorado, Utah, North and South Dakota, and Wyoming. It led all the regions in hazardous waste inspections. Region V, which includes the industrial heartland of the mid- and upper-midwest, has six times more hazardous waste facilities than Region VIII. However, Region V did no inspections at all. All inspections were left to the states. This drastic disparity in activity clearly shows that enforcement resources are not being effectively allocated among regions.

This disparity in allocation of inspections exists in spite of the fact that three states in Region VIII have accepted delegation while only two states in Region V have accepted delegation.

An examination of the results of enforcement efforts in the ten regions shows great inconsistency in the enforcement policies applied by the regions.

For example, eight of the ten regions found violations of hazardous waste laws in one out of 16 or fewer of their inspections. Two other regions found a violation in one out of every four-to-six inspections. The region which did the most inspections found only one out of a hundred sites violated the law. The second most active region found about one out of every four violated the law.

This indicates that either resources were badly misallocated, different enforcement policies were implemented in different regions, or both.

After a violation is found, the next step is to issue a compliance order. A similar lack of consistency in policy is apparent in this area. Two regions issued compliance orders for roughly half of the sites where violations were found. Two regions issued compliance orders in every instance where violations were found. Four regions issued no compliance orders, even though violations were identified.

These patterns clearly indicate that, in this high priority area, management priorities and consistent policies have not been established.

THE FUTURE

What does the future hold for the enforcement efforts of the Environmental Protection Agency?

Administrator Gorsuch recently recognized that the Agency's enforcement efforts have been unacceptable since she became Administrator. She stated in a recent meeting with regional administrators, "Frankly, the Agency's enforcement program has not yet lived up to my expectations."

For her own management failures, she again prescribed just the medicine she failed to administer, "improved management techniques."

While these statements that "This Agency will enforce the law" are welcome, they raise a basic question—can she manage the Agency in a competent fashion so that it can achieve this objective?

Over a year ago, just when she was beginning the first of four reorganizations, she pledged that "EPA is committed to a strong enforcement doctrine." In spite of this pledge, mismanagement of the Agency during the following months virtually destroyed its enforcement capability. In light of this record of mismanagement, there is little reason to assume that she will be more successful in the future.●

TRIBUTE TO BERNIE FISHER

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, historically America has been blessed with a legacy of inspiring leadership. But we suffer today from an acute shortage of authentic contemporary heroes—men and women of great courage and conviction who can serve as models for all of us, especially our youth.

We do have some heroes, of course. And one of mine is Bernie Fisher, a retired Air Force colonel who won the Medal of Honor for conspicuous bravery and service that was above and beyond the call of duty during the war in Vietnam.

Several weeks ago, on the Fourth of July, the Idaho Press Tribune published a fascinating interview with Bernie Fisher, giving its readers a chance to share his ideals and reflections on freedom, patriotism, individual responsibility, the role of the family and the moral standards of our society today.

His views are so thoughtful and uplifting that I want my colleagues and their constituents to share them too. I ask that the article by J. E. Vail of the Idaho Press Tribune, "A July 4 Judgment," be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The article follows:

A JULY 4 JUDGMENT

(By J. E. Vail)

The Fourth of July brings out a lot of closet patriots who let fly the red, white and blue in a once-a-year flag-waving exercise.

But for Bernie Fisher—a Medal of Honor winner and former gubernatorial candidate—patriotism isn't something to be stored away and drug out once a year for the national holiday. It's something to be lived out. And it's something he thinks that there may not be enough of today.

"This country really came up hard," Fisher said. "To be founded, it had to be fought for, and it has been an island of freedom for the world.

"And yet, we've got a lot of people who don't even stand when the flag goes by. They don't care," he said. "They wouldn't even care if California was invaded—they wouldn't have an interest in going down and helping them.

"Thank goodness they're not all that way," he said. "There are many people who think a lot of this country. I do. It's the greatest.

"And I say that after looking at other countries," he said. "Czechoslovakia, for example, or Poland. They can arrest you and throw you in jail and they don't have to account for one smidgen of it unless there's publicity.

"You can't do that in the United States," he said.

Despite all the country has going for it, there are things about its government and citizens that worry Fisher.

"It concerns me that we don't have a national objective, a national policy," he said. "We don't know what we want to do.

"Maybe we could contrast that with the Israelis today," he said. "They know what they've got to do to survive.

"But we're lazier. We're foundering," he said. "But if we had to fight, we would.

"But we've got people that don't care about the country and we've got kids that wouldn't be interested in getting into the military," he said. "They avoid the draft. It's a sick kind of environment."

As for Fisher, he hasn't avoided serving his country—from serving in the military to participating in state politics.

Fisher made the Air Force his career. He wound it up in Boise as a group advisor to the Air National Guard, retiring in 1974 after 22 years and a Congressional Medal of Honor.

The medal came in 1966 after Fisher saved the life of a fellow pilot during the Vietnam War battle at A Shau.

According to the official citation, the special forces camp at A Shau was under attack by 2,000 North Vietnamese Army regulars, some of whom had positioned themselves between the camp's airstrip and the fort itself. Other hostile troops had surrounded the camp and were continuously "raking it with automatic weapons fire from the surrounding hills."

Those hills, 1,500-feet high, were obscured by an 800-foot cloud ceiling that day, which limited aircraft maneuverability and forced pilots to operate within range of hostile gun positions. In fact, those guns were able to fire down on the attacking aircraft as they flew under the cloud ceiling.

During the battle, Fisher saw fellow pilot Maj. Dafford Meyers crash land on the battle-torn airstrip. Because he believed Meyers to be seriously injured and in danger of being captured, Fisher went in to rescue him.

According to an account of the rescue published in the June 1966 Air Force Magazine, Fisher spotted Meyers waving to him when Fisher's plane was about three-quarters of the way down the runway.

He stopped about 150 feet beyond and started to unharness his gear to go after what he thought was a wounded pilot. Meyers, who was "relatively unhurt," was "making a fifty-yard dash for the plane."

Just before Fisher was ready to leave the plane, he saw Meyers and "pulled him head first into the plane, turned around, and took off."

To quote from the magazine account: "It (the rescue) was a miraculous feat. All the maneuvering had to be done in a tight, socked-in area. The (aircraft) providing suppressive fire had run out of ammunition at the time Meyers was making his dash to the plane.

"Enemy automatic-weapons fire was coming from the camp area as well from the hills above the camp. The runway jagged with tire-puncturing metal ripped by mortar blasts. When Fisher landed at Pleiku (his home base), his plane had 19 bullet holes in it."

After the camp fell, one of the other Air Force pilots said the battle "was like flying inside Yankee Stadium with the people in the bleachers firing at you with machine guns."

According to the magazine account, Meyers himself told Fisher when he was pulled into the cockpit: "You dumb son of a gun—now neither of us will get out of here."

But they did, and Fisher was cited "for conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty."

Although Fisher was hesitant about discussing his rescue mission, he did have a lot to say about one subject—how government could be made better.

"We should have less government. And I don't mean just eliminate it, but shift it onto the individual rather than onto the agencies," Fisher said. "I don't know if that can be done, but I think it has to be done.

"How it can come about is probably through day after day of doing better, not doing things that would tear other people down," he said.

"One of the big problems is the tax issue," he said. "Federal taxes are extremely high and yet people are saying we should raise taxes. That isn't right.

"We're putting the burden on a few people and a lot of people aren't doing their part," he said. "That state is the same way. Why should we tax people so heavily?

"When you get big money separated from the people who are actually providing it, there's not the interest in it," he said. "Here's an example of that—it's flippant, but it's true.

"If you're on Social Security, for example, it probably takes eight people to support you," he said. "One way of resolving that is, instead of giving you a check, I'll give you a list of eight names.

"You go to those people and tell them you'd like your money," he said. "It would bring it down to a very grassroots level and it would resolve itself."

Another major problem facing the country is a moral one, according to Fisher.

"One of the biggest problems we have in the U.S. today is with moral standards," Fisher said, "When you come right down to it, split homes—children growing up out of where there's love and harmony—are not good.

"I'm on the parole board and no matter how many kids I've talked with in a day, there's a definite blueprint," he said. "I'll say, 'tell me about your father,' even though I've already been through the record.

"And the kid will say, 'Oh, I haven't seen my dad for quite a while,'" he said. "'What about your mother,' I'll ask.

"'Aw, she's getting along alright,'" he said. "'Is she remarried?' The kid says, 'Yeah.'"

"And you look at the record and she's been remarried several times," he said. "What chance does the kid have?

"Sixteen-year-olds now are the worst criminals we've got in this society," he said. "I guess he's going through things in life with masculinity and emotional things and nobody gives a hoot about him.

"That's the kind of environment we're raising our kids in today," he said. "And you hear it time and time again that these kids are our salvation.

"But they really are," he said. "And we're kidding ourselves if we don't think that's true.

"Integrity in the family, dedication to your children and your spouse—those may not be big things, but they're so important," he said. "Most of our community problems stem from infidelity or lack of conern for others or for ourselves.

"If we don't have a good feeling about ourselves and about others, that carries right into everything we do," he said. "We should be so concerned about the people around us and about ourselves that we uplift and not do things that are tearing people down."●

BACCALAUREATE ADDRESS OF A. BARTLETT GIAMATTI, PRESIDENT OF YALE UNIVERSITY

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, recently A. Bartlett Giamatti, the president of Yale University, my own alma mater, delivered a thought provoking address to the class of 1982. I want to take this opportunity to share it with my colleagues. In his address, President Giamatti urges us to beware of the self-righteousness of ideological authoritarianism. He urges what he calls the "middle view" or a centrist approach with a commitment to a process which assures that our beliefs will be tested and the pluralism of our society preserved. He says:

What binds us together as free women and men and as Americans is a shared faith in those processes by which we evolve and test our several beliefs and traditions.

One may debate the merits of some of the conclusions which it reaches, but Giamatti's address articulately presents a point of view which we should contemplate.

IN THE MIDDLE DISTANCE—THE BACCALAUREATE ADDRESS

(By A. Bartlett Giamatti)

On September 5, 1978 we began our voyage together, and I am delighted to see so many of your company gathered here again. I can report that much of me has returned as well. In the interim, I have merely decayed, albeit with an insouciant grace, but you have, impressively and almost without effort, matured. You are now, in the view of the faculty and the trustees, ready for the greater voyage and it is my pleasant duty to be your pilot to the harbor's mouth. There you will set full sail and I, somewhat like Vergil's Palinurus, will be washed head-long overboard, to float ashore on our island in the autumn, barnacled in wisdom, there to guide the next group of impressed young mariners to the point of embarkation. You will be well away by that time, we all devoutly trust.

Over time, these sea changes suffered annually by your pilot do not necessarily produce a figure rich and strange. Rather they tend to rot with motion the pilot's firmness of vision and steadiness of bearing. It is a matter of great consequence to me, and should be to you, for you will also be pilots henceforth, how to keep a clear eye and a moral compass pointing true.

How to keep one's bearings in the tempest ahead, given all the flux and fury of the past and the present, is therefore my theme today. You will, to extend the figure, sail into very savage seas in your voyage. We live in a world where the human race must decide, soon, how not to use the capacity to destroy itself through nuclear weapons that it has exactingly, lovingly crafted. We live in a time when, in the name of nationalist necessity, someone is killed every day. We see resources, human and natural, squandered or jealously sequestered; their consequent maldistribution gives rise to understandable yearnings and tremendous, dangerous tensions. We find in our own country an apparent incapacity to cope with the rhythms and dynamics of our freely-chosen economic system. And in the sphere I primarily inhabit, the world of education, we sense that the public loses faith in education and that a sense of failure mounts. Is that eroding faith, that sense of failure, justified? Is it only another form of apocalyptic wailing to ask how we will educate better or if we educate well at all? Or are there legitimate issues concerning education and our moral bearings which reasonable people must attend to?

I know this is a happy occasion, meant to gather family and friend in a moment of celebration. And I have no wish to dampen the atmosphere. But before any of us, my shipmates, indulges in self-congratulation on how well the University has served you, permit me a few remarks on some of the apprehensions I have. They are apprehensions about the process of education and, because I see education as central to the country's well-being, about the well-being of our culture and its political bearings. My thoughts will have at the outset a personal cast, which I trust you will indulge, because they spring from a recent experience of mine which forced me as I have been forced never before to face up to the consequences of a failure to educate people to think humanely and historically for the benefit of others. I realized how essential to our human freedom and dignity an education rooted in reality, ideas connected to circumstances, must be. But I anticipate.

Briefly stated, this March, on a gray and windy day I went to a place in Jerusalem called Yad Vashem. Yad Vashem is a monument to the heroes and martyrs of the Holocaust and a memorial to the six million Jews systematically murdered by the Nazis. To descend beneath the stark, concrete plaza to the underground museum is to descend into Hell at one remove. It is to go into mass moral chaos and yet it is only a representation, in photograph, artifact and text, of the horror of the camps and the monstrosity of the events and the minds that made them. To be immersed in our human capacity to be inhuman was for me to be flayed. I will not recount the reasons for that sense of being stripped of all customary assumptions and reactions because I do not intend to exploit that horror or the memories of those who died. I do intend, however, to assure you that one may have, as I had, one's certainties challenged and one's faith shaken in a radical way by confronting a reality that is now part of the inheritance of the human species.

Coming up from underground, I was forced to face the consequences of ideology. I had seen close up, even if at a remove, what can result when human beings ignore circumstances; that is, ignore our common moorings in our accumulated, common humanity. I use the word "circumstances" as Edmund Burke used it in his Reflections on the Revolution in France when he said that "Circumstances . . . give in reality to every political principle its distinguishing color and discriminating effect. The circumstances are what render every civil and political scheme beneficial or noxious to mankind." At Yad Vashem one sees the logical extension of abstraction without circumstances, of System without history, of ideology—moralistic, legalistic, internally complete—in the hands, of the true believer; insanity can result and people can die. When timeless dogmas are allowed to run unconnected to time, that is, to the accumulated experience and contending currents of humanity, an ideology can encourage people to murder as easily as it can encourage them to claim nobility. Not every bloodless abstraction will necessarily spill someone else's blood, but every bloodless abstraction, of Left or Right, will necessarily swell toward authoritarianism, and from the urge to control to the self-righteous justification to kill is but a short step.

Why does any ideology tend to be authoritarian? Because any system of ideas that consciously purifies itself of previous condition or prior context—Burke's circumstances—and claims to contain all value must logically also wish to exert complete control. Any scheme for regulating life that systematically asserts it is internally and systematically complete, a law and a morality and a context of value and a machine for living unto itself, must logically will to exercise its power completely, or its claims for itself are invalid. The self-righteousness of all ideologies is a function of their self-perceived completeness; each element reflects the alleged correctness of every other. These closed systems are attractive because they are simple and are simple because they are with such masterly evasions of contradictory, gray, complex reality. Those who manipulate such systems are compelling because they are never in doubt. Burke is clear in warning us against what he calls "the delusive plausibility of moral politicians." It is a warning one ignores only at great risk to one's freedom.

Yad Vashem raised for me those thoughts, among others, and I raise them here, now, because I explicitly and fervently hope your education has taught you what an education must teach—to fashion principles and purposes in context and to treat ideas in reality. I hope your education has taught you to think circumstantially and thus to transcend ideology. It is when I think of how education must be the means to develop resistance to ideology, must be the process for you and your children and theirs to test values and to keep the mind open, connected and growing, that I think of the burdens public education in America bears and how it is periodically asked to bear burdens of an ideological kind. You and I and our children will see again and again the urge to use the schools for ends other than the commencement of the lifelong process of education. And the most recent version of this ideological thrust is the desire of certain "moral politicians" to pass a constitutional amendment allowing voluntary prayer in public schools.

At first glance, this may seem remote from you. But it is not.

I happen to accept the need for prayer and to believe in prayer's efficacy. I believe we Americans are a believing people, though as individuals we do not, and we must not be forced to, believe in the same way nor should we be forced to believe at all. Such are the circumstances of a pluralistic culture, of diverse peoples and religious traditions, and of the protections of the Bill of Rights. I believe it is the federal government's obligation to protect the right to worship or not to worship. I do not believe it is the government's obligation, and it should not become it, to encourage through the Constitution in the public schools organized religious expression.

The public school is not the arena to teach children how to pray or what or whom to pray to. The church or synagogue or house of worship is the place for that teaching and practice. The family is the forum for that teaching and practice. A public school is not a family or a house of worship. Any American government concerned with the integrity of the family and the viability of places of worship must recognize that its obligation is to keep some things separate, like Church and State, and that it has no role sustaining particular religious values. Its role is to preserve and protect a pluralistic environment in which religious practice, in the family and church, can flourish.

We have heard the argument that no child was historically harmed by praying in public school. That argument carries the very accent of the ideologue. It ignores reality—the circumstances of a pluralistic culture, of the protections of the Constitution, of the separation of Church and State, of the proper role of family and organized religious life; and it ignores the actual history of those children who in fact were coerced and made to feel exiles from their fellows and their circumstances by organized school prayer. It self-righteously assumes that whatever someone finds completely agreeable on moral and legal and abstract grounds must necessarily be agreeable to everyone else also. Such an argument reveals the tendency to authoritarian control of any ideology in the assumption that if people are not all the same, they should be treated as if they were for their own good.

Why do I bring up this issue? Certainly not because I believe all theologies are ideologies (which they are not); not because I enjoy being told I am a dangerous secularist (which I am not), or that I am a symbol of the decline of the West (which I could not be even if I did not hold, with Burke, to the relevance of our historical values and inheritance). I raise it because we as Americans, whatever our differences, face a serious set of problems in our schools, problems you will have to live with and try to solve, that will worsen if the schools and the means of education are used as staging areas for particular ideological goals.

When schooling takes second place to ideologically based policymaking, the very process for teaching all of us to think—to accumulate wisdom, to imbed information in values and experience—suffers, and society suffers as a consequence. I fear that the eighties will continue to witness what we see already, a politicizing of the schools for radical goals, cloaked in the rhetoric of morality and equity, in the same way the universities were politicized from the other end of the political spectrum in the sixties and early seventies. Beyond the example of the desire to amend the Constitution to allow prayer in schools, "voluntarily" or not, a larger pattern emerges, as it always emerges. And that is ideologue calling out to ideologue, and opposites turning out to be twins.

My larger point is that in the choosing between ideologues of the Right and of the Left, I choose to eschew both because they are finally, in their desire to control and exclude, not different. If you believe they are, if you believe that an ideologue of the Left is less authoritarian in impulses and acts than one of the Right, look again. I do not believe it.

Let me close, as I opened, on a more personal note. In urging you beyond ideology, in urging you through education to a civic circumstantiality, in urging you to care for the schools and those processes of education which are one of America's main defenses against authoritarian control from within and without, I offer the view of one person, one who is clearly middle-aged, middle-class, middle of the road; a view of one not given to extremes but to the middle. My middle view is the view of the centrist, who would also, as Alexander Bickel from whom I have learned so much—so eloquently put it, fix "our eyes on that middle distance, where values are provisionally held, are tested, and evolve within the legal order—derived from the morality of process, which is the morality of consent. . . ." To set one's course by such a centrist view, my shipmates, is to leave oneself open to the charges, hurled by the completely faithful of some extreme, of being relativistic, opportunistically flexible, secular, passive, passionless, lacking in timeless principle and of possessing characteristics and qualities even less elegant. Be of good cheer, for if the source of these charges is someone selling a System, you can always, with me, find your bearings with Burke, specifically in his sense of the need to embrace the contingent and the circumstantial, the real world of history and competing values and complex solutions, those "opposed and conflicting interests. . . ." which produce "temperaments" (his italics), the tempering, cautionary, staying considerations that finally render "all the headlong exertions of arbitrary power, in the few or in the many, forever impracticable." To act according to an open and principled pragmatism, to believe in the power of process, is in fact to work for the good. I do not simply urge a long night of watching against the ideologue's delusive plausibility. I urge the positive, balanced, continuous operation of the mind and spirit that surges to do the work of civilization from the center without simplistic zealotry.

Ladies and Gentlemen of the Class of 1982: A commitment to believing in process, either of education or law, in no way means one does not hold dear beliefs in equality, in social justice, in the reward of merit, in freedom to speak and worship and assemble. One must have convictions, but one must be willing to submit them to the testing and tumult of the middle distance. What binds us together as free women and men and as Americans is a shared faith in those processes by which we evolve and test our several beliefs and traditions. Fear as Hell the self-inflicted blindness of self-righteousness, where all perspective is foreshortened and all doubt is denied, and keep your eyes on the middle distance, where means and process live.●

DRUNKEN DRIVERS' NAMES PUBLISHED IN ST. LOUIS

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, the public's interest in action to get tough on drunk driving continues to grow. In St. Louis, Mo., the Globe-Democrat for some time has published the names of motorists charged with intoxicated driving. The impact of the Globe-Democrat's practice is covered in the July 12 edition of the Wall Street Journal, and I ask that a copy of the article be inserted in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

In May, the Senate put itself on record in favor of a get-tough approach with passage of legislation offered by Senator PELL and myself. We look forward to favorable action by the House of Representatives at an early date. It is our belief that the State law enforcement strategies encouraged by our bill would exercise a strong deterrent effect on motorists who are prone to driving while intoxicated. The effect of deterrence would be fewer names to list in the arrest columns—and fewer deaths and maimings on the highways.

The article follows:

[Wall Street Journal, July 12, 1982]

IN ST. LOUIS, THEY WRITE A LOT MORE THAN A TICKET FOR DRUNKEN DRIVING

(By David P. Garino)

ST. LOUIS.—Posting bond used to be the main worry of motorists arrested for drunken driving here.

No more. "Quite frequently, when they're arrested, their primary concern is, 'Is my name going to be in the paper?' " says traffic safety Sgt. Richard Swatek.

That's because the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, since late last year, has been publishing a daily list of drunk-driving suspects in its area, stretching to such small towns as Glen Carbon, Ill. "Everybody looks at it," says Sgt. Swatek. "It's like a gossip column."

RID-MO.'S CAMPAIGN

Margaret Charleville, founder of RID-Mo. (for Remove Intoxicated Drivers in Missouri), helped persuade the Globe-Democrat to publish drunken-driving arrests. Her daughter had been killed by a drunken driver. "Some of my friends have told me," she says, " 'We don't take that one drink for the road anymore.' "

"I'm sure publishing the names does a lot of good," says Sgt. Donald Hasseldiek, director of a St. Louis County program aimed at drunken driving. "No one wants his name associated with a criminal offense."

A LOT OF MAD PEOPLE

"We've made a lot of people mad," George Killenberg, executive editor of the Globe-Democrat, says of drivers whose names have been published by the paper. "I appreciate it's an unhappy situation. But what about the 25,000 people buried each year because of drunk drivers?"

Still, other citizens object to the practice or printing suspects' names. "I don't like it," says Charles Todt, president of the local bar association. "Under our system people are considered innocent until proven guilty. I think the damage to a person's reputation is greater than the deterrent effect."

The Globe-Democrat believes it may be the biggest newspaper that routinely publishes names of motorists arrested for drunken driving. However, some smaller newspapers also publish such news. And in Lake County, Ill., last month, the Waukegan News-Sun started printing the names of drivers whose licenses have been revoked or suspended because of drinking.●

HEROISM IN LAS CRUCES, N. MEX.

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, it is not often we get a chance to comment on the good deeds the youth of today perform. In many cases, young people have done good individual deeds, some of which rise to the level of heroism of benefit to entire communities.

Two youths from Las Cruces did just that last month. The two boys, 19-year-old Jacques Telles and his 13-year-old brother Mahonri, watched from a distance as an errant "bottle rocket" firework passed through the window of the First Baptist Church of Las Cruces. The two boys raced to the church, and saw that the curtains had already caught on fire. Jacques, breaking a window, climbed in and started stamping out the fire, while his mother, who saw the two boys climb into the church, called the fire department. By the time police and firemen arrived at the scene, the fire had been extinguished by the two boys, one of whom suffered some cuts from the broken glass. Pastor John Parrott called it "an act of real heroism," and Sgt. Pete Hampton of the Las Cruces Police Department said, "Those kids saved this church from a lot of damage, if not destruction."

I am always glad to hear of the accomplishments of our young people, because they are America's brightest hope and best security for an uncertain future. A deed of heroism such as Jacques and Mahonri Telles performed should not go unnoticed or unrewarded.●

R. H. RENY DEPARTMENT STORES

● Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, part of Maine's charm are the thousands of small businesses throughout the State which make up Maine's economic backbone.

Bob Reny of Damariscotta, Maine, president of R. H. Reny Department Stores, is one of the energetic and dynamic businessmen who make Maine's economy tick. In addition to his tireless work which has built up a network of 11 successful stores in Maine, Bob has been very active in politics and the national business community.

Recently, the Portland Press Herald wrote an article profiling Bob's activities, and I request that the article be included in the RECORD for the benefit of my colleagues. I am proud to count Bob as a good friend and strong supporter, and I know my fellow Senators will enjoy reading about him.

[From the Portland (Maine) Press Herald, June 30, 1982]

MERCHANT HAS SHOPPER'S EYE

(By Bill Caldwell)

Bob Reny, 56, owner of the biggest chain of small-town department stores in Maine, at last has a good-looking office. But these plusher new surroundings make him uncomfortable.

After selling umpteen million dollars worth of sheets, light bulbs, work boots, slickers, sneakers, long johns, lamp shades, dresses, suits and wool shirts to Maine people at low prices over 33 years, Robert H. Reny is moving from a dismal, untidy closet into a decent office. He feels like a fish out of water.

R. H. Reny department stores, which began on a shoestring in a hole-in-the-wall in 1949, are now flourishing in prime locations in Bridgton, Gardiner, Farmington, Dexter, Madison, Pittsfield, Livermore Falls, Bath, Fort Kent, Camden and Damariscotta, where this burly, perpetual-motion Biddeford born Maine merchant began his first store Oct. 6, 1949.

"I opened in a store not much bigger than this new office," says Reny. "I had just half the ground floor of a small, old building on Main Street, Damariscotta. Now we occupy the whole three-story building there and have overflowed into another store across the street. We call that Reny's Underground; it used to be the town's bowling alley."

Reny is now moving his offices and warehouse into the old Castner elementary school up the road in Damariscotta. He bought the unused school from the town of Damariscotta for $88,000 and has added a 28,000-square-foot warehouse to it. During construction last winter, the warehouse collapsed twice under the weight of snow.

"I'd just got out of the Maine Medical Center after four heart bypasses and two days later my new building collapsed. I rushed home for a video camera and shot a movie of it, before it came tumbling down. After I showed the film to the contractor, the Sheridan Corp., there was no problem about them fixing it."

From his vast new warehouse, Reny will keep a boggling variety of cut-rate merchandise flowing to his 12 stores across Maine. But the near-disaster has not slowed Bob Reny. His only concession to four heart bypasses is to do 100 situps and take a three-mile walk every morning.

He keeps right on flying off to make deals in the merchandise markets of New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Miami or wherever the bargain-hunting is hot. He keeps up the drumbeat pace in Maine politics, as chairman of the Republican party in Lincoln County, chief lobbyist for the Maine Merchants Association and for the Maine State Chamber of Commerce (he has been president of both).

On the national business front, Reny sits on the executive board of the National Retail Merchants Association, where this small-town Maine merchant is on a par with the heads of J.C. Penney, Gimbels of New York and Nieman-Marcus of Dallas.

On the side, Reny is on the board of the Damariscotta Bank & Trust (which he helped to start with $750,000 of assets a few years ago and which now has assets of over $10 million); he heads the Reny Realty Co., which handles real estate belonging to existing or future stores in the Reny chain; he owns and oversees the Lincoln Theatre, which once was the opera house and still has silk brocade on its walls and the old outside screen and stage, and is peculiarly located up steep stairs over the Yellowfront Grocery in Damariscotta; he is heavily into home development along the waterfront near Round Pond, as head of the Muscongus Sound Realty Company.

To avoid idleness on Sundays, Reny works at the wharf in Round Pound, selling and boiling lobsters for the Muscongus Bay Lobster Co., in which he is a principal partner. At his farmhouse home on the outskirts of Damariscotta, Reny has an orchard of 500 apple trees; but Michael, one of his three sons, now tends to the apple business.

"Bob and John, my other two sons, aged 30 and 28, are my partners in running the stores. At first, neither of them wanted to go into the retail business, but now they are better merchants than I have ever been," says Reny.

"I did not want them coming into the business as sons of the boss. That can be awkward. So they work here as my full-fledged partners."

When Reny was 23 years old and opened his first tiny store, he was so short of money and merchandise that he had to "do it with mirrors." That meant all the stock he owned was spread out on the tables; and all the hundreds of boxes stacked against the walls, which looked as though they contained lots more merchandise, were actually empty, despite their labels.

"Each afternoon, I'd grab the cash from our day's sales, and rush off to buy more merchandise to stock the store for the next day. I had almost no credit and almost no cash on hand then, and so I had to fake it."

That first year of 1949 in Damariscotta, Reny's did $35,000 in gross sales. On a busy day in 1982, the 12 Reny stores will take in $35,000 in eight hours.

What is the secret of Reny's success? What is making these dozen small-town stores almost recession proof in this poor business year? Reny thinks it is because each store does its basic job of providing each community with a big variety of merchandise at low prices, and then adds a special spice of the unexpected bargain.

The combination draws a stream of customers, on the hunt not only for what they need, but for the excitement of an unexpected, surprise bargain in merchandise they don't see in many small town stores.

"We bring the unexpected into town because one of us is out traveling every week of the year, shopping in the big metropolitan cities, coming back with exciting bargains not regularly seen in Maine.

"Most small-town merchants are able to get away to the markets and manufacturers only four times a year—spring, summer, fall and winter. So their stock stays pretty much the same for 10 or 12 weeks at a stretch. But because we travel constantly, we can inject something new, something unexpected into our stores every week or so. And that is the carrot, the shopping excitement which brings people in. Whenever they come to town, they stop in to see what's new in Reny's."

To keep this interest alive, Reny is forever moving his merchandise back and forth between 12 different stores, so there is always something new and different in each one.

In this retail trade, the action is very fast. Reny admits he has a few special advantages with a 12-store chain: fast turnover, volume, cash flow and ability to act fast in snapping up a bargain thousands of miles away.

"Somewhere across the nation, there is always a whale of a good buy; but to get it, you first have to know about it, and then you have to get there fast, and then you need to be able to buy in volume and pay with cash, fast," says Reny.

After over 30 years in the nation's markets, Reny has built thousands of contacts. He keeps them fresh by spending at least four hours daily on the phone, chasing down rumors and opportunities for a fast, good deal.

For example, he recently got a phone call at home after dinner, bout 9 p.m. The tip came from Chicago, saying the prestigious men's store, Morry's was ready to liquidate a huge stock, but that if Reny wanted a slice of the action he'd have to be in Chicago by noon the next day. He dashed to Portland, caught a daybreak flight to Montpelier, thence to Detroit, thence to Chicago, where a Morry's representative met him at the airport.

He looked over the stock in the warehouses, ate a business lunch with the people involved and made them an offer of half a million dollars immediately as they drove him to the airport.

By the time he arrived back in Maine, a message was waiting for him saying they'd accept his offer. And that night a tractor-trailer was on its way from Maine to pick up the goods.

Barely 72 hours later, the inventory of a top big-city store went on sale in small-town Maine for 20 cents on the dollar. Reny gave his customers the fun bargains they relish.

Reny says he can play an unusual trump card which gives him an edge over competitors when prestigious big-city stores must move out their inventory. These stores know Reny will haul it far away to Maine. And this is a telling tool, because to protect their exclusive image, the leading stores in Chicago, or on the Cape, in Boston or Washington, in Philadelphia or New York, don't want to see their merchandise on sale anywhere near their territory.

So Reny's stores in small-town Maine have an added appeal as a buyer. Furthermore, out-of-state manufacturers and merchants like Reny's "money-on-the barrel" way of doing business; so they often offer him an inside track on buying out a warehouse at bargain prices.

Often deals of this kind must be made over the phone, and completed so fast that there is no time to dicker, to inspect, to get approval from a committee or board.

"I've got to believe they are telling me the truth about their stock; and they've got to believe me when I say I'll buy it all at such-and-such a cash price. We've both got to be confident that a word over the long-distance phone is as good as any legal document. One bit of fudging or fakery by either side, and the bad news spreads and that's the end."

In Bob Reny's new office, phones ring constantly and in staccato sentences the wheeling-dealing is consummated or canceled fast.

When the phone stops, Reny dashes out to his warehouse to help unload and inspect a new shipment. He takes time to swap news and stories with truck drivers and kids playing ball out back in the old school baseball diamond.

It's a surprise the doctors had to make only four bypasses on Robert Reny's heart.●

ANOTHER BLITZ ON INEFFICIENCY

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, as all of us in the Senate are discovering, President Reagan's attacks on inefficiency in Government, overstaffing in Government, overspending in Government, are not meeting with a great deal of success. I think one of the most glaring indications of this type of problem was contained in an article in the July 19 Business Week entitled, "Another Blitz on Inefficiency," which gives a little peek at the type of trouble that Mr. J. Peter Grace, chairman of W. R. Grace & Co., is running into as he tries to perform this valuable duty for his government.

I ask that this article appear at this point in my remarks.

The article follows:

ANOTHER BLITZ ON INEFFICIENCY

When President Reagan asked J. Peter Grace in early March to lead a business executives' task force aimed at pinpointing inefficient government programs, the W. R. Grace & Co. chairman recalls, "the President told me, 'Pretend you are going to merge with these departments, and run the same yardstick over them.'" Grace, often loudly critical of government waste, would hardly seek such a merger. But four months after accepting Reagan's assignment, he has begun to apply the yardstick with relish. "Every type of organization has some inefficiency in it," Grace declares. "And the bigger it is, the more inefficiencies it has."

Armed with a Presidential order opening government agency books to his task force, Grace has recruited the leadership for a team of 2,000 executives from industry, finance, and accounting, all vetted for signs of conflict of interest. In his missionary vigor, Grace, 59, already has members of Congress yelping for his resignation over a misguided remark about food stamps, and a number of bureaucrats are determined to see that his task force does not get into their files.

The executive committee of the Private Sector Survey on Cost Control in the Federal Government, as the task force is called, now includes more than 100 chief executives and other leaders, among them Chairman Clifton C. Garvin Jr. of Exxon Corp., Chairman Willard C. Butcher of Chase Manhattan Bank, and former Transportation Secretary William T. Coleman Jr. The board is ready to put management expertise to work in what one White House official calls a "blitzkrieg on the bureaucracy." The stakes are high: A recent estimate by the Congressional Budget Office puts waste and inefficiency in government at $10 billion annually.

AN UNEVEN RECORD

With a private foundation that aims to raise $16 million in contributions and services to back it, Grace launched his effort in late June by interviewing Reagan appointees and bureaucrats and weighing government practices against industry techniques. The executive committee has been divided into 35 teams—22 of them looking at specific agencies and 13 others "cross-cutting" to examine more widespread issues such as personnel, procurement, and research and development. By December, the group hopes to have recommendations for Reagan.

Task forces like Grace's, however, have an uneven record. A group headed by former President Hoover in the 1950s succeeded in little more than putting all government procurement under the General Services Administration, and an effort ordered in 1967 by Reagan, while he was governor of California, found only $25 million in actual savings. A Nixon Administration task force led to the creation of the Environmental Protection Agency and a strengthened Office of Management & Budget, but its blueprint for reordering domestic Cabinet departments was shelved.

The Grace task force got off to a slow start itself. White House officials delayed the creation of the agency teams for several weeks for a rigorous review of their members' stockholding records. Also reviewed was whether their companies had contracts with agencies they would be examining. Says Richard A. Hauser, Reagan's deputy counsel: "Our goal is to protect the integrity of the task force early so that it's not questioned later."

Some task force groups are clearly made up of uninvolved parties. For instance, one of the three panels assigned to the Health & Human Services Dept.—a major focus of the Grace effort—is headed by the chairmen of Signal Cos., a manufacturer of industrial equipment, and Wheelabrator-Frye Inc., an engineering company. Other appointments, however, may raise eyebrows. The Agriculture Dept., for example, is being examined by executives from companies that include Continental Grain, Quaker Oats, General Foods, and tractor manufacturer Deere & Co. At the Energy Dept., one team member is Walter D. Pettis, a Milliken & Co. executive who until recently was a top aide to Energy Secretary James B. Edwards.

UNDER ATTACK

To insulate task force members further, White House officials plan to require that they sign conflict-of-interest disclaimers. Officials at each agency will also review specific assignments in their areas. Monsanto Corp., for instance, has been restricted by Energy Dept. officials from reviewing work in the nuclear weaponry field because it is a contractor at Energy's weaponry research facility at Miamisburg, Ohio.

Grace himself has come under increased attack since a May 27 speech in Dallas in which he described the food stamp program as "a Puerto Rican program." A 148-member congressional coalition is demanding Grace's resignation.

But even if he resigns, Grace has set the task force's tone. Through a constant stream of communications to members, he has cited trends in the growth of government, loss of U.S. productivity, swelling budget deficits, and wasteful government activities. "President Reagan is trying to save us," he wrote in one memo.

Briefing task force members in May, Grace charged that 70% of the 340,000 federal employees are "personally aware of some type of illegal or wasteful activity." At the Veterans Administration, he said, more than $37 million in unwarranted payments was made in 1981, and, due to inefficiency, the Labor Dept.'s claims-processing staff completes a daily average of only 20 worker-compensation claims per staffer. Similar inefficiencies eat up as much as 6% of some agency funds, White House officials believe. The task force is charged to find them.

But it faces an uphill fight. Civil servants at the Defense and Energy Depts. are in some cases denying task force members access to classified material, and other agencies report similar problems. In a recent memo, in fact, Energy Secretary Edwards reassured his senior staff that "as (Presidential Counselor Edwin) Meese said to me, 'There will be no attempts to surprise anyone * * *. It is not an attempt to criticize individual performance but rather to improve overall efficiency and cost control.'"●

THE REAGAN PLUTONIUM POLICY

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, recent press accounts make clear that the Reagan administration is actively seeking to reverse the bipartisan policy of the past 7 years and to launch this Nation, and much of the industrialized world, on the road toward the widescale use of plutonium—a nuclear weapons material—for the generation of electric power. Yesterday's Wall Street Journal carried an extremely thoughtful piece on the perilous consequences, and the discredited rationale, of this course of action by Victor Gilinsky, a member of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission long active on nonproliferation matters. I commend this analysis to my colleagues' attention and, I shall submit it for the RECORD following the remainder of my remarks.

Mr. President, I also commend to my colleague's attention a very thoughtful op-ed article from the New York Times, written by Congressman JONATHAN BINGHAM, which deals with the same subject. Congressman BINGHAM has continually been in the forefront of those in the Congress who have worked to prevent the spread of nuclear weaponry to more and more nations around the world and I am glad to include his views in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

One point that is sometimes lost sight of in the debate over plutonium's use as a nuclear fuel is that it is intended to serve as a direct substitute for enriched uranium in nuclear power reactors. Thus the more the Federal Government encourages plutonium use, the more it serves to establish a market for a fuel that will be in head-to-head competition with our domestically produced and enriched uranium. Although today plutonium fuel prices would far exceed those of uranium, Reagan administration plans to subsidize plutonium production at the Barnwell, S.C., reprocessing plant could greatly reduce this gap.

That the Reagan administration's "plutocrats" should be so actively seeking to promote plutonium use at this time is particularly dismaying in light of the depressed state of the U.S. uranium industry that has been triggered by a severe oversupply of uranium on world markets. As a result of this oversupply:

International spot prices for uranium have dropped from $43 per pound in 1979 to $19 today;

Over 8,000 out of 22,000 U.S. uranium miners have been thrown out of work; and

As of mid-1981 some 61 uranium mines and 16 uranium mills in the United States had been shut down or had operations significantly curtailed.

Moreover, the U.S. uranium industry is facing extremely tough competition from foreign producers, to the point where serious consideration is being given to imposition of a uranium import quota by a House-Senate conference now considering the 1982-83 NRC authorization. And, I would add, our enrichment plants are operating well below capacity.

However one analyzes the causes of the distress of our uranium industry, one thing is plain: It does not need the additional concern that 10 years from now, perhaps, there will be significant quantities of Government-subsidized plutonium overhanging the uranium market. In this respect, the Reagan administration's proplutonium policies have a distinctly antiuranium ring.

[From the Wall Street Journal, July 15, 1982]

THE ADMINISTRATION'S RISKY PLUTONIUM POLICY

(By Victor Gilinsky)

In 1976, during the closing days of his administration, President Ford called for a halt in the world-wide rush to use plutonium as a nuclear fuel, until the "world community can effectively overcome the associated risks of proliferation." He added, "...avoidance of proliferation must take precedence over economic interests."

Nuclear programs around the world called for using plutonium—a byproduct of reactor operation—as a substitute for uranium. Mr. Ford's concern stemmed from the fact that plutonium is also a nuclear explosive. At issue were amounts equivalent to thousands of nuclear weapons.

To persuade other countries to follow suit, he effectively took the United States out of the plutonium business. His decision was vigorously protested by the nuclear bureaucracy and commercial interests at home and resisted by our trading partners and allies abroad. The West Europeans and Japanese continued with their programs to reprocess spent fuel to extract plutonium, and unremittingly pressured President Ford's successors to lift restrictions on foreign reprocessing of U.S.-supplied fuel. In the face of these demands, Mr. Ford's policy has been steadily eroded.

RELAXATION WILL WHET APPETITES

The Reagan administration has recently decided to deal with "the world as it really is" and is planning to ease nuclear export controls on plutonium for selected countries which appear to pose little "proliferation risk." The details remain secret, but broadly speaking, this means not only releasing our legal holds on foreign reprocessing of U.S.-supplied fuel but also allowing these countries access to the separated plutonium.

The rationale for the administration's new policy seems to be that, if we accept our close friends' use of plutonium, they will be more inclined to help us keep plutonium away from other countries. Unfortunately, it isn't likely to work out that way. Instead, the new policy will probably lead to easier access to plutonium—and hence nuclear explosives—around the world.

It will be difficult to hold the line between those contries whose use of plutonium we accept and those whose use of plutonium we oppsoe. The relaxation of our policy toward several "low risk" states will whet appetites in nuclear bureaucracies everywhere. Coupled with the administration's encouragement of plutonium use domestically, the new policy will enhance the attractiveness of plutonium and can only encourage increased trade in this dangerous commodity. Ironically, this comes at a time when falling uranium prices have destroyed the economic argument for shifting to plutonium.

It is doubtful that advanced industrial states will now be more inclined to constrain the use of plutonium among their Third World customers. It is hard to imagine that they will resist commercial temptations in the future any more than they have in the past, particularly when it appears that the United States is now resigned to wide-scale plutonium use, is downplaying the proliferation dangers and may even be positioning itself to get in on the reprocessing trade. Nor should we deceive ourselves that plutonium separated from U.S.-supplied fuel will stay bottled up in Europe and Japan. In the process of separation, the plutonium loses its national identity and effective control by any one fuel supplier becomes impossible.

It is also unrealistic to expect that we ourselves will resist demands for equal treatment from countries excluded from the first round of plutonium approvals, particularly when they insist they meet all safeguards and requirements of the International Atomic Energy Agency. In fact, the IAEA system does not (and cannot!) protect plutonium in national hands. However, since this is seldom acknowledged publicly, it will be difficult for us to explain why some countries are eligible for plutonium use and others are not. On the other hand, if we were candid about the inadequacy of IAEA plutonium safeguards, how would we explain that we accept the assurances of some friends and allies (for example, in Western Europe and Japan) but not of others, that plutonium will not be misused? (One has only to think of the reaction of strategically important countries such as Mexico or South Korea.)

Moreover, once down this road, we will be tempted frequently to offer entry into the magic circle. Whenever some diplomatic prize is at stake, we can be sure there will be attempts to rationalize that the country in question poses "no proliferation risk." The trouble with the "no proliferation risk" standard is that governments that seem "safe" one day can be replaced by governments which are not, whereas nuclear explosive remain explosive for thousands of years.

To repeat the obvious, the dangers lie in the fact that plutonium can be transformed into weapons—by the IAEA's own reckoning—in a matter of days. In a March 2, 1982, letter to congressional oversight committees, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission put it this way: Because plutonium "can be transformed readily into weapons, we cannot count reliably on inspection alone to provide warning of diversion of HEU (highly enriched uranium) and separated plutonium in time to prevent weapons assembly if the necessary preparatory work has been done."

Nor should we imagine that our own intelligence agencies can fill the safeguards gap. Because plutonium can so easily and quickly be made into weapons, we cannot count on getting intelligence warning of diversion in time for preventive action. As for detecting earlier evidence of a weapons program, this often turns out to be ambiguous and the subject of disagreement among intelligence agencies. (We can't even decide whether there was a nuclear explosion in the South Atlantic in 1979.)

We would not deal so casually with nuclear weapons themselves. No one would seriously propose that occasional counting of warheads by the IAEA would provide any measurable level of protection against their use. Nor would we distribute the weapons, even to Europe and Japan, without U.S. control. Yet strip away the electronics (some of it now available off the shelf), and peel off the layer of high explosives, and you have the nuclear explosive material whose widespread use we are cheerfully contemplating. We ought to treat the plutonium in commercial channels just as carefully as if it were bomb material—which it is, if its owner so decides. There is no hint that the problem is seen in this light by the administration.

AS THREATENING AS THE PIPELINE?

Perhaps that is because the new policy is not, in fact, aimed at preventing the spread of nuclear weapons. The objectives appear, rather, to be diplomatic and commercial: first, to remove a source of "sterile friction" between ourselves and our allies—"sterile" presumably because the spread of nuclear weapons is seen as inevitable; second, to get the commercial reprocessing business back on the track from which President Ford derailed it in 1976.

Faintness of heart mixed with a little greed have often been dressed up as a political realism: "If we don't do it, someone else will"; "The U.S. no longer has any leverage"; "We have to demonstrate we are reliable suppliers"—of everything, apparently, to everyone, no matter what the security consequences.

The president did not buy this approach in opposing the European/Soviet gas pipeline on grounds of international security. It is difficult to see how that security is any less threatened by the spread of nuclear bombs to more and more countries.

DON'T LET ARMS RACE MUSHROOM

(By Jonathan B. Bingham)

WASHINGTON.—Horrified by a world in which two nations are unable to halt a lethal arms race? Imagine trying to work out arms control among half a dozen or more third world countries convinced that it is in their national security interests to build up nuclear arsenals.

Unless the exporters of nuclear technology and fuel become increasingly circumspect, this horrendous task could soon be necessary.

Argentina and Brazil, rival South American neighbors, have ambitious nuclear power programs that seem to have military as well as commercial ends. Significantly, neither country has agreed to inspection of all its nuclear facilities—so-called full-scope safeguards—by the International Atomic Energy Agency, which is responsible for verifying that nuclear fuel and technology are used strictly for commercial purposes.

Similarly, South Africa, Israel, Iraq and Pakistan—all nations facing sharp regional tensions—are widely believed to be pursuing a nuclear weapons capacity through their commercial nuclear programs. Again, none has agreed to full safeguards.

In recognition of the dangers, the Reagan Administration has advanced a quid pro quo formula for nuclear trade: The United States will be a reliable supplier of nuclear fuel and technology if recipient nations, many of them also nuclear suppliers, cooperate in curbing nuclear sales to countries that present proliferation risks.

Unfortunately, that policy has to date added up to all quids and no quos.

Last year, just before the economic meeting of heads of state in Ottawa, the Senate and the House, without a dissenting vote, passed resolutions calling on President Reagan to work out concrete ways to restrain all nuclear suppliers. The President, however, did not raise the issue at Ottawa. Instead, he joined in a final declaration that skimmed over dangers.

Before the Versailles economic meeting this year, the House and Senate again unanimously passed resolutions calling on the President to discuss nuclear-supplier restraint. This time the declaration did not mention the issue.

Meanwhile, South Africa, unable to receive nuclear fuel it contracted to buy from the United States because of its record in the fight against the spread of nuclear arms, has bought uranium from Switzerland and other European countries. France is fabricating the uranium into fuel assemblies. Brazil, in a similar situation, has acquired nuclear fuel from West Germany for a new reactor. In neither instance did the United States try to dissuade its allies from helping these countries. In fact, the United States waived a $20 million penalty against Brazil for putting uranium that had not been enriched by the United States into its reactor, contrary to agreement.

Now the Administration has approved a policy to permit the export of reprocessing technology, used in extracting plutonium from nuclear fuel, to Japan and Common Market countries and to allow them to reprocess American-supplied nuclear fuel without obtaining American approval in each case. Republican and Democratic administrations have opposed such moves because plutonium is the material from which modern nuclear weapons are made.

While the Administration has been explicit in saying what concessions it intends to make to other countries, it has yet to indicate what cooperation it wants in return.

Fortunately, it is not too late. The United States should ask suppliers to agree not to export nuclear fuel and technology to any country that does not have nuclear weapons and that does not permit full-scope inspection of its nuclear plants.

As a collateral measure, the United States would also need to urge nuclear suppliers to provide more money to the international inspection agency. Today, the agency's $30 million annual budget, smaller than that for the Portland, Ore., Police Department, is inadequate. A small contribution from each supplier nation could double its money.

These proposals could be expected to have wide acceptance. Canada and Australia as well as the United States already require full-scope safeguards as a condition of their nuclear exports. West Germany has promised similar restrictions providing that all other suppliers agree to them. Even the Soviet Union, also a nuclear supplier, has indicated a willingness to go along under such conditions. At the very least such proposals would signal our concern, which has not been given concrete affirmation by this Administration.

To continually miss the opportunities for voicing these concerns and for pressing a proposal for restraining nuclear trade is to risk an even more difficult challenge later—arms control negotiations on a far wider scale than any of us care to contemplate today.●

TURKISH OCCUPATION OF CYPRUS MUST END

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, yesterday, July 20, marked the eighth anniversary of Turkey's invasion of Cyprus, and offers an opportunity for me and my colleagues to once again express our outrage over the continuing Turkish occupation of Cyprus.

For 8 years, over 200,000 Greek Cypriots, more than half of the population of Cyprus, have been displaced from their homes and businesses, and, in many cases, separated from their families. More than 40 percent of the Island is still occupied by Turkish soldiers, and once-prosperous cities lie in ruin.

I continue to be deeply concerned and troubled by the nearly 2,000 Greek Cypriots who have been reported missing since the 1974 hostilities. Most of these individuals are not missing in action. Rather, indisputable evidence tells us that they were arrested by Turkish soldiers or armed Turkish Cypriots acting under the direction of the Turkish Army. Almost half of the people listed as missing were unarmed civilians taken abruptly from their homes or places of refuge. Many of the missing were detained in Turkish prisons or concentration camps long after the cessation of hostilities.

Among the 2,000 people reported missing since 1974 is an American citizen named Andrew Kassapis. Andrew and his brother-in-law, a Greek Cypriot, were seized in their home and taken away by two armed Turkish Cypriots. They have never returned and no definitive evidence of their fate has ever developed. Although the United Nations has created the Commission on Missing Persons to investigate the whereabouts of those who disappeared following the Turkish invasion, meetings of the Commission have been irregular and, thus far, unproductive. The bright spot in Andrew's case continues to be the unyielding efforts of his parents to learn of information about their son. The Kassapis family has gone to exhaustive lengths in Cyprus, Turkey, and at home in Wayne, Mich., to learn of their son's fate.

The plight of Andrew and his family is common to the families of nearly 2,000 other missing persons in Cyprus, including 7 Americans. Clearly, prompt action must be taken to enlighten these families of the condition of their missing loved ones, and to subsequently work toward the release of those believed to be held in Turkish prisons and concentration camps.

Mr. President, while I am heartened by the tireless efforts of the living victims of the Turkish siege to reunite their families and return to their homes, I believe the United States must be a strong partner in those efforts. While humanitarian aid provided by the United States has made possible the building of homes and schools and the development of basic handicraft industries on the island, more is needed. The United States must take an active role in encouraging reconciliation among all the conflicting parties so that all Cypriots can live and work together in a peaceful, stable environment. Only when this goal is achieved will Greek and Turkish Cypriots alike be assured a meaningful existence and will U.S. interests in achieving stability in the Eastern Mediterranean be realized.

The plea, Mr. President, of thousands of Greek Cypriots shall not go unheard. Let this be the year that marks the end of the Turkish occupation of Cyprus and the year in which a final determination of the fate of missing civilians is made.●

RAYMOND DONOVAN

● Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, a new musical playing in theaters across the Nation spells out in song the pluck of that famous cartoon character, "Annie." One of the songs from "Annie" is entitled "You're Never Fully Dressed Without A Smile."

I submit that the pluck of "Annie," and the smile, can be seen today in the real world of Washington. It can be seen in the person of Raymond Donovan, President Reagan's plucky Secretary of Labor.

Mr. President, there was an interesting interview with Secretary Donovan published in the Washington Times on Monday, July 12. The interview, by Times correspondent Jeffrey St. John, tells of the ordeal Secretary Donovan and his family experienced over a period of many months. But more than that, it tells of the fortitude of Ray Donovan. And it tells of his strong belief in America and its system—a system that works because of the American character.

Through this difficult period Ray Donovan has maintained his sense of humor. In fact, I regret the RECORD cannot show the photograph that accompanied the newspaper interview—proof that Ray Donovan is among the most "fully dressed" and pluckiest persons seen in these parts lately.

Mr. President, I ask that the interview be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The interview follows:

INTERVIEW: DONOVAN'S COMMITMENT OVERCOMES ADVERSITY

(Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan, survivor of an 18-month investigation which he terms a "witchhunt," knows what it is like to be on the Washington firing line. He and his family have been subjected to severe scrutiny and allegation, and they have come through it all victorious.

(Here for the first time since a special prosecutor refused to prefer criminal charges, Donovan answers questions put to him by Washington Times correspondent Jeffrey St. John. The interview was granted to discuss the secretary's ordeal of the last few months, and the effect it has on him and his thinking. He said he would discuss the substantive allegations against him in a future interview.)

Q: Mr. Secretary, what are your own thoughts as to why all this took place, only in the end to be cleared by the Special Prosecutor?

A: My family and I have sat around the kitchen table and in the living room many an evening, as we read allegations in newspapers and magazines, we have asked ourselves that same question. There are a lot of people I know who did not like the Reagan agenda and, therefore, my agenda. There was certainly a sense of political opportunism, I think, involved. Certain people made allegations to serve their own purposes. Perjury got a free ride. One of the common threads that runs through all of these allegations is that they are all hoodlums. That in itself is interesting.

Let me put it to you this way: I don't have all the answers, but there were some people that had a spot picked out on their wall for a Pulitzer Prize in seeing Secretary Donovan fall. I believe that there is a Pulitizer Prize awaiting someone who can answer these whys.

Q: Are you saying they were actually after President Reagan? If so, why?

A: President Reagan as a candidate made promises to the American people that were difficult to keep and he kept them. It had to do with budget cuts. And God knows we here at the Labor Department are second to none in our contribution in the budget cut area, in deregulation. And in the overall Reagan program there were difficult decisions to make in order to turn this country around. We've made them. It has not been covered well, naturally, because of the focus on me.

Q: Most of the people were under the assumption that in the last eighteen months you have spent every waking hour defending yourself.

A: I did not miss a day in the office. I allowed myself five minutes a day to feel sorry for myself. Maybe that's why I look as well as I do. To me an honest man, and I am one, who falls prey to self-pity really destroys himself. And I wasn't going to let that happen. Through prayer and support of friends, that is what kept me going.

We have done a tremendous job here in eighteen months. We have taken on the tough ones, be it in the budget cut area or in deregulation . . . to get the bang out of the buck is why we are here. I am extremely proud of what we have accomplished. Under fraud and abuse we had 180 indictments and 144 convictions in the area of program fraud and white collar crime. A total of 133 indictments and 88 convictions in the area of organized crime influence in labor management field have been secured.

Q: What made you stick it out? Why didn't you just say, "Look I don't need this"?

A: That crossed my mind, Jeffrey, it crossed my mind when I saw my family hurt, phone calls to the children at home yelling "Mafia" in the phone. And those unmentionable things that you can't even drag out of your children.

Q: Did that go on through this entire ordeal?

A: It did. But we took it a day at a time and continued to gain strength from our friends and through prayer. But also asking ourselves why did you come? And I came for Ronald Reagan and for America. I have that simple agenda. Once I was challenged and once my name was abused, a team of twenty mules couldn't have pulled me out of this town. For myself and for my family, yes.

Running through my mind all that time was that terrible expression, when I would be at a cocktail party, someone would say "well, Ray, it comes with the turf." Character assassination, witchhunts come with serving your country? That infuriated me because it shouldn't come with the damn turf! I reject that. And the cruel thing here, and the thing that bothers me the most, is how many good Americans won't come now to serve their country because they don't want to expose themselves to this type of witchhunt. As I go across this country I am going to try and convince the American people to use my experience in a positive sense.

Q: If another Raymond Donovan came along and there seemed to be the prospect that he was going through the same ordeal that you've been through, what would you tell him?

A: Before or after he accepted the nomination? I would ask you first, how strongly committed are you to what you're about to embark upon? What are your motives? Are they strong enough to hold you in good stead? In my case, it was my tremendous concern and love for my country, and total dedication to Ronald Reagan and what he stands for. If you felt that strongly I would say, come on in. And that, and friends and prayer should suffice.

I think one of the basic things I left out here, because I don't like too much to talk about my personal life, but strong family ties are critical. My wife and children and brothers and sisters, and my new brothers and sisters in this department—I would tell you that the love, and I'm not afraid to use the word, and dedication and support that I got in this department, that alone is almost worth the pain.

Q: Is there one singular thing that you now know about Washington, that you did not know before?

A: I probably expected to find more patriots here than I found. And I'm not ashamed to use that word. I found such dedicated people willing to serve this government in the Labor Department—and I choose that obviously that's what I know best. And in the career ranks too. And I should stress that, I found tremendous dedication. And we over the past eighteen months have opened up the doors and windows of this agency and I've said in the past that I'm Secretary of all labor. Some people thought that took courage to say, I thought it was the obvious thing to say, because that's what my oath says. And the Labor Department represents all working Americans, and I was pleased to find that kind of dedication, and willingness to follow my lead.

Q: Is there any significance to the fact that the union leaders were neither vocal in support nor vocal in opposition? There was just silence throughout your entire ordeal.

A: I wouldn't want to characterize it. I had made the same observation, but that is public utterances, or lack thereof. I can tell you that I had been extremely touched by the phone calls, telegrams and letters that I have gotten from organized labor across the country. Let me tell you one thing about the working man. He resents injustice, maybe stronger than most Americans. Particularly in the building trades where I come from. And their sense of injustice, they were outraged, not that they agreed with every decision I made here, obviously. But they admired my guts, told me to hang in there, and this type of support you didn't read in newspapers. But it's here . . . letters and telegrams.

Q: Americans tend to have a characteristic trait which is: you don't kick a guy while he's down. Was that prevalent in the correspondence and the phone calls you got?

A: The American people do have that attitude. What was prevalent, and it was almost a common theme, despite what they were reading, they were able to come to their own conclusions. And in these letters I find "I didn't believe it, I'm glad you had the guts to hang in, and please stay"—that was the main theme. Plus, I think a willingness that some in this city didn't seem to have, to let the justice system move to its conclusion. As it finally did. And the letters I get just add to my commitment to stay here. I know the job isn't done, and the American people do too. There's a sense of responsibility that's been heightened as a result of this.

Q: What would you tell the American people about the ordeal of Raymond Donovan?

A: That the American system works, it's painful, but it works. And those who try to use it for their own ends eventually fail. I will not kid them that it's easy.

I continue to use this phrase to myself; I want to be able to go home someday and hear on the streets again the phrase "only in America." You don't hear it enough anymore. It's a dream that's kind of tarnished or thrown in the closet. That's what motivates me. This is the greatest country in the world and it's only in America where miracles take place, all kinds. And I am honored that the President chose me and put me in such an important post to be part of it. That's why I stayed. There was the constant support of the President, in small ways, and he was under a lot of pressure here obviously. Maybe that was part of the plan. But he's let me know. He bled with me through the whole six months. He would let me know by a wink, or a thumb's up that he had faith in me. And believe me, Jeffrey, that was critically important at various stages.

Q: Throughout all of this some had suggested that you would be cleared by the Special Prosecutor and then with good grace you would resign. Why have these predictions not come true?

A: I am not going to resign. Those predictions are either imaginary or hoped for on the part of others who would like to see me out of public life. There were predictions after my confirmation hearings that I wouldn't make it through September 1981. Then they were taking bets that I wouldn't make it through December 1981. These things amuse me.

Q: Yes, but the line of reasoning was that Ray Donovan is not guilty of allegations made by crooks, gangsters and perjurors. But his effectiveness as a cabinet official of the President has, unfortunately, been compromised. Therefore, you should resign.

A: Those who say that may mouth a belief in the American system but they are not true believers in the American system of justice. But I will take it a step further. I am a political asset to the President of the United States. I was and I am and I will be.

Q: What did your political enemies want to prevent Ray Donovan from doing for the Reagan administration?

A: A simple answer would be, prevent me from doing what I am doing. I am not sure that anyone had a specific set of policies in mind, like the dramatic changes we have made, positive changes we have made in the OSHA (Occupational Safety and Health Administration). I think it was broader than that. Being Secretary of Labor in a Reagan administration is a very sensitive post I hesitate to get into the specifics. Maybe we can do that in another interview.

Q: Mr. Secretary, does not your ordeal present a serious problem of not so much the responsibility of the press but the use of the press as a weapon to destroy a man's character?

A: That always existed with the First Amendment. That type of tool can be used for good and it can be used for evil.

Yes, it concerns me. And what also concerns me is what seeems to be an accepted practice in this city as a whole, forgetting my case as a prime example. This city seems to live on leaks to the press, and that combination can be a devastating one, if not controlled, particularly the role of unsubstantiated data, FBI or otherwise, that people seem to pass out in this town like they would be passing out a hymnbook. The town may have lost a sense of decency. They say it's as a result of Watergate, or still breathing Watergate air here in the town. I guess that's partly true. But damn it, someone better start addressing this, or the town becomes uninhabitable for good people.●

CERTIFICATION ON EL SALVADOR

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I have joined Senator GLENN and several other of my distinguished colleagues in introducing Senate Joint Resolution 208, a resolution requiring the President, when he makes his second certification on El Salvador, to certify that:

Government of El Salvador (1) has made good faith efforts since the first certification was made to investigate the murders of six United States citizens and to bring to justice those responsible for those murders, and (2) has taken all reasonable steps to investigate the disappearance of journalist John Sullivan in El Salvador in January 1981.

This resolution is not the first such statement by the U.S. Senate. Last year legislation, adopted by the Congress incorporated the requirement from a bill which Senator TSONGAS and I introduced requiring that further U.S. aid be conditioned on concerted and significant efforts by the Government of El Salvador to comply with internationally recognized human rights, substantial control of security forces, continued progress in implementing essential economic and political reforms, as well as progress in resolving these murders. Again in December the Senate adopted a resolution which I introduced calling strongly for meaningful actions by the Government of El Salvador to bring to justice those responsible for the murders and endorsing our Government's full cooperation to that end.

It is appalling that after 19 months the murders of the four churchwomen remain unresolved. Indeed, there has been only halting, almost meaningless progress. Today I received a report from the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights, entitled "Justice in El Salvador: A Case Study." It is an excellent review of the background of these murders and the frustrated efforts of the families to seek the most basic information and progress on the case. The report documents repeated delays by the Government of El Salvador in bringing those responsible to justice and concludes that "several factors suggest a trial may never occur." And finally, and most unacceptable of all, it reports that actions of our own Government have abetted the delays, and in certain cases, actually "obstructed attempts by the churchwomen's families to monitor the case."

I ask that the full text of this report by the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. I urge my colleagues to consider this important report and to support early passage of Senate Joint Resolution 208.

The report follows:

JUSTICE IN EL SALVADOR: A CASE STUDY

PREFACE

In order to justify ongoing U.S. military aid to El Salvador, President Reagan must certify to the Congress, on July 27, 1982, that there has been a genuine improvement in human rights conditions in that country.[1] The House of Representatives last week voted overwhelmingly to renew a requirement that, as part of his certification, the President must affirm that "good faith efforts" are being made to bring to justice those responsible for the killing of four U.S. churchwomen, in December 1980, and two U.S. agrarian reform workers, in January 1981. (H.J. Res. 494, as amended, also requires that the President certify progress in the investigation of the unexplained disappearance of U.S. journalist John Sullivan in December 1980.) In the coming days, the full Senate is expected to consider similar legislation.

The following report examines the investigation into the brutal slaying of the U.S. churchwomen, on a dirt road fifteen miles from El Salvador's International Airport. In the nineteen months which have elapsed since this tragedy, progress on the investigation has been lamentably slow. In May 1981, six members of the country's National Guard were arrested in connection with the crime. Nine months later, in February 1982, a criminal court judge assumed jurisdiction over the case; he is now conducting his own inquiry—a prerequisite to a potential future trial.

Footnotes appear at end of article.

State Department officials in the past few days have indicated that a trial date may be set for early September,[2] yet past experience suggests that this assurance may be motivated by immediate political factors rather than by a genuine likelihood of imminent action. In January of this year, two days before President Reagan's required certification of progress in the investigation, Salvadoran Defense Minister Garcia announced that a trial would be held "within a very few days."[3] Six months have elapsed—and millions of dollars of additional U.S. military assistance have flowed to the Salvadoran government—since that announcement. Jose Napoleon Duarte, former President of the Salvadoran junta, estimated last month that the trial may not be scheduled for a year or more.[4]

State Department assurances notwithstanding, there is reason to believe that the five National Guardsmen currently under investigation may never be tried and punished. Recent statements by current Salvadoran officials, most notably Roberto D'Aubuisson, President of the Constituent Assembly, reveal little interest in prosecuting the case and a general hostility to disciplinary actions against members of the security forces.

Of equal concern is the refusal by both U.S. and Salvadoran authorities to explore evidence suggesting that higher military officials or private individuals may have participated in the crime. Some of the unexplored leads include: a string of death threats against the religious missionaries in the weeks preceding the crime; an intercepted radio or phone communication between airport military personnel a few hours before the women were abducted; numerous unidentified fingerprints on the women's van; and reports that the killers were in possession of large amounts of money in the days following the killings.

Regrettably, the U.S. government has obstructed attempts by the churchwomen's families to monitor the case. Since December 1980, the U.S. Embassy in San Salvador has had access to a substantial amount of evidence pertaining to the investigation. Moreover, the FBI has, at a number of stages, provided technical and advisory services to the Salvadoran government. Yet repeated efforts by the families to obtain information in the possession of the U.S. government have been vigorously resisted. On behalf of the families, the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights has, over the past year, filed Freedom of Information Act requests with four federal agencies in order to gain access to documents relevant to the investigation. To date, only a fraction of these documents has been made available.

The killing of the churchwomen serves as a dramatic case study. The failure to bring this case to trial, nineteen months after the tragic event, is reflective of a general breakdown in the rule of law in El Salvador. Over the past few years, government forces have tortured and killed thousands of unarmed civilians, yet a recent survey has revealed that, during a 28-month period ending in February 1982, only 84 military personnel were dismissed from the services on account of homicide charges. The Salvadoran government has not revealed whether any of these individuals have been subsequently prosecuted in a civilian court.[5]

This report, initially prepared for the families of Maura Clarke, Jean Donovan, Ita Ford, and Dorothy Kazel, summarizes the current status of the investigation. In our work on behalf of the four families over the past nineteen months, the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights has received particular assistance from the Congressional offices of Mary Rose Oakar, Richard Ottinger, Gerry Studds, Peter Peyser, Edward Kennedy and Christopher Dodd. We are deeply grateful for this support.

A special note of appreciation is also owed to Sister Helene O'Sullivan of the Maryknoll Order for invaluable help in pursuing our investigation.

The report was written by Philip Warburg and James Zorn of the Lawyers Committee.

INTRODUCTION

In the nineteen months since four U.S. church-women were killed in El Salvador, sources close to the investigation have presented widely differing reports on the progress which has been made. These conflicting accounts have left many basic questions unaswered and have raised serious doubts about the integrity of the investigatory process.

The information currently available indicates that six low-ranking members of the Salvadoran National Guard were almost certainly involved in the killings. Four of these men were arrested in May 1982; two were arrested in December 1981.

What remains unclear is whether these six men acted independently or were under orders from their superiors. Also unclear is the extent to which Salvadoran or U.S. government officials have attempted to conceal information which would help facilitate a full and fair investigation.

This report seeks to examine these questions. It is divided into six sections: the first recounts the events surrounding December 2, 1980; the second a summary of the investigation which was carried out under the auspices of the Salvadoran military during 1981. Section III explores the status of the current investigation before criminal court judge Bernardo Rauda Murcia. Section IV examines a series of questions which remain unanswered, including circumstantial evidence suggesting broader ties to the planning, execution, and later concealment of the crime. Section V analyzes the role of the United States government in this investigation. Section VI provides a brief summary of the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights' ongoing concerns about the case.

I. RECONSTRUCTION OF THE TRAGIC EVENTS OF DECEMBER 1980

Sisters Ita Ford and Maura Clarke were members of the Maryknoll Order, assigned to the town of Chalatenango, El Salvador, to assist in the diocesan project for the resettlement of refugees. Sister Dorothy Kazel, an Ursuline nun, and Ms. Jean Donovan, a lay volunteer, were performing similar work for a parish in La Libertad, El Salvador.

In the early evening of Tuesday, December 2, 1980, Sisters Ford and Clarke, returning from an annual Maryknoll meeting in Managua, Nicaragua, arrived at the El Salvador International Airport. They were met by Sister Kazel and Ms. Donovan.

On the morning of Wednesday, December 3, 1980, Father Paul Schindler, an American citizen of the La Libertad parish, expecting Ms. Donovan and Sister Kazel at a meeting, informed authorities of their failure to appear. After spending the day searching for them, he discovered their Toyota van ten miles northwest of the airport. Stripped of its license plates and destroyed by fire, the van's identity could only be confirmed by its engine number.

That same morning, the bodies of the four women were discovered along a rural road by a resident of Santiago Nonualco, a village located in mountainous terrain fifteen miles northeast of the airport and twenty miles from the site of the burned-out van. Shortly after the villager had contacted local authorities, two National Guardsmen and three Civil Guards arrived at the scene and ordered the assembled villagers to dig a common grave for the women. The villagers later described the women as "blond foreigners." A local Justice of the Peace, summoned to the burial site by the Militia Commander of the Canton San Francisco Hacienda, certified the deceased as "unknowns" and authorized their immediate burial.

It was not until the morning of Thursday, December 4, 1980, that U.S. Ambassador Robert White was informed by a parish priest that the bodies of the four women had been found. Ambassador White set out immediately for the gravesite, where he was joined by Father Schindler.

Reports collected by Ambassador White, the local Justice of the Peace, and others indicated that the women had each been shot once or twice in the head. The clothing of the women was in disarray; two or three of them had been stripped of their underwear. It was reported that one of the women was found nude below the waist and that a villager had replaced her pants before burial. Some at the disinterment claimed that the women's wounds appeared more extensive than reported and that their bodies were badly bruised.

Following the disinterment, Ambassador White drove with the Justice of the Peace, Juan Santos Ceron, to San Salvador. Enroute, Santos acknowledged that, in authorizing the informal burial of the unidentified bodies, he had been following a procedure commonly performed under the direction of the security forces. He estimated that he was called upon to authorize such burials two-to-three times per week.[6]

II. THE INVESTIGATION: A SUMMARY OF ITS "PROGRESS"

Almost from the outset, the investigation of these murders has been characterized more by efforts to create the impression of progress than by actions to achieve it.

One early report described the creation of a Salvadoran investigative commission shortly after the women were killed:

"After days of stonewalling, the Salvadoran government belatedly named a "high level civilian and military commission" to "find the guilty people and punish them." But the three military members of the new four-man commission included two close friends of Defense Minister Garcia and a first cousin of Police Chief Lopez Niula." [7]

Throughout the investigation, and despite efforts to convey the opposite impression, it was evident that the military, not the civilian government, exercised ultimate control over the case. In late February 1981, President Duarte determined that the Special Investigative Commission had completed its preliminary investigation. At that point, he announced that the Salvadoran Attorney General was to be placed in charge of the case.[8] Despite this publicly announced transfer of responsibility to a civilian authority, the Salvadoran military command continued to play the central role in the investigation. When six members of the Salvadoran National Guard were apprehended in connection with the killings in the spring of 1981, they were placed under military arrest and were held at the National Guard headquarters in San Salvador, rather than in an ordinary penal institution. Moreover, it was Defense Minister Garcia—not the Salvadoran Attorney General—who confirmed rumors of these arrests with an official press statement on May 9, 1981.[9]

The arrests of the guardsmen came within two weeks after a conversation, on April 28, between Secretary of State Haig and President Duarte, in which Haig emphasized the importance of this case and the investigation of the killing of two U.S. agrarian reform workers in January 1981.[10] A subsequent State Department cable to the Embassy in San Salvador reiterated Haig's message:

"The investigation of the murders, which are now reach (sic) a critical stage, will be presented as a major issue in Congress's consideration of our assistance for this year and next. The Secretary wanted to emphasize that his own efforts to defend our policy will be greatly eased if he can point to significant progress on these investigations, particularly of the murders of the churchwomen." [Emphasis added.][11]

When President Duarte met with the families of the churchwomen in September 1981, he again insisted that Defense Minister Garcia was not in charge of the investigation and that the case was in civilian hands.[12] Nevertheless, three months later, when another investigative effort was undertaken, it was a security force officer—Major Adolfo Medrano of the National Guard—who presided over the gathering of all testimony. In December 1981, Major Medrano began taking formal depositions from witnesses and potential suspects, a process which continued until early February 1982, when the case was transferred to a civilian court.[13]

A turning point in the case came in December 1981, when two of the original suspects were released and two new suspects were arrested. One of those arrested was Carlos Joaquin Contreras Palacios, a 25-year-old former guardsman and a recently born-again Christian. Having apparently undergone a crisis of conscience, Contreras confessed his own direct participation in the murders and tied four other guardsmen to the crime.[14] The story presented by Contreras was substantially corroborated by the other guardsman arrested in December, Salvador Rivera Franco.

A narrative of the crime

In the testimony of Contreras, Rivera, and several other guardsmen, the murder of the churchwomen is portrayed as a act of wanton violence carried out by a small group of low-level guardsmen under the command of a brutal sub-sergeant. From the various depositions taken under Major Medrano's supervision, the following picture emerges:

"Mid-afternoon on December 2, 1980, Jean Donovan and Sister Dorothy Kazel drove to El Salvador's international airport in a white Toyota van, to meet a number of nuns who were returning from a Maryknoll conference in Nicaragua. Finding only two of the four expected women on the flight, Ms. Donovan and Sr. Kazel left the airport with these two individuals and returned later in the day to meet a second flight from Nicaragua. Sisters Ita Ford and Maura Clarke were on this plane.

"According to the testimony, Ms. Donovan and Sr. Kazel had somehow aroused the suspicion of one of the airport guardsmen on their first visit to the airport; their handbags were thought possibly to contain weapons. The guardsman relayed his suspicion to his commanding officer, subsergeant Colindres, who advised him to keep an eye on the two women.

"When Ms. Donovan and Sr. Kazel returned to the airport later in the day to pick up Sisters Ford and Clarke, the guardsman again notified Colindres, who took immediate action. He ordered five guardsmen to change into civilian clothes and accompany him, armed with government-issue G-3 rifles, on an unspecified assignment. Colindres next ordered the guardsmen on duty at the airport entrance to halt all outgoing traffic for several minutes, with the exception of the vehicle driven by the American churchwomen. He then headed out along the airport access road in a National Guard Jeep, with his five cohorts.

"When the churchwomen's van approached Colindres' impromptu checkpoint, he and another guardsman searched the van and interrogated the women. After a few minutes, he told one of his men to drive the van, with the women as passengers, in the direction of the nearby town of Rosario de la Paz.

"On the outskirts of Rosario de la Paz, the National Guard Jeep, which had been escorting the women's van, broke down and had to be abandoned at a National Guard outpost in the town. Rivera Franco was left to guard the Jeep—thus separating him from the soon-to-be murder party—while the rest of the men drove off with the women in the Toyota van.

"Several miles outside of town, Colindres directed the guardsman driving the van to turn off onto a secondary road. At an isolated spot along this road, he ordered the car stopped. It was here that he instructed his men to shoot the women, an order which they obeyed after sexually abusing the women.

"Having committed the murders, the guardsmen left the women's bodies in a roadside ditch and headed back to Rosario de la Pax in the Toyota van. They found Rivera Franco waiting with two other men, one of whom was a driver for the airport Customs Police; Colindres had phoned the Customs Police earlier to request help with the broken-down Jeep.

"Colindres then ordered Rivera and the two men to follow him in the Customs Police blue pick-up truck. Driving the Toyota van to a deserted location, the guardsmen unloaded the vehicle's contents into the Customs Police truck, poured kerosene on the van, and set it afire.

"According to airport guards, who witnessed the murderers' return, the Customs Police truck entered the airport grounds with its radio blaring and its headlights flashing. Witnesses also saw a number of items being unloaded from the truck and carried into the National Guard barracks—a jack, a tire, and several cartons of English-language printed matter.

"In the days following the murders, Colindres and other guardsmen were seen in possession of a number of articles linking them to the murders—large amounts of cash, women's watches and clothing, a tire, and an automobile jack. Colindres himself was rumored to have suddenly acquired $5,000 in cash, some of which he used to buy a television and new living-room furniture.

"Speaking to another guardsman several days after the crime, Colindres is reported to have expressed confidence that the murders would go unpunished. 'They were subversive women,' he said. 'I don't believe there will be any problem.' "[15]

Preparations for criminal prosecution

On the basis of this rendition of the crime, the military officials supervising the investigation initiated legal action against the six suspects. On January 26, 1982, two days before President Reagan was required to certify that good-faith efforts had been made in solving the murders, Defense Minister Jose Guillermo Garcia announced that the six guardsmen would go to trial "within a very few days."[16]

On February 8, General Carlos Vides Casanova the Director of the National Guard, dismissed the suspects from the Guard, as Salvadoran law prohibits the trial of military personnel for murder, and remanded them to the jurisdiction of the criminal court of Zacatecoluca.[17] After reviewing the available evidence, presiding Judge Bernardo Rauda Murcia decided, on February 13, that five of the former guardsmen should be held for possible future indictment, while the sixth, Salvador Rivera Franco, should be released and charges against him dismissed.[18]

Judge Rauda's overt rationale for dismissing the charges against Rivera Franco was that he had been left behind by Colindres to guard the broken-down Jeep and had not been directly involved in the murders. In all likelihood, another motive for the judge's decision was procedural: Salvadoran law prohibits a defendant's testimony from being used to incriminate co-defendants; with Rivera Franco no longer a defendant, his testimony became admissible as evidence against the other guardsmen.[19]

III. JUDGE RAUDA'S INVESTIGATION: OBSTACLES TO THE PURSUIT OF JUSTICE

Five months have passed since Judge Rauda ordered the continued detention of the guardsmen, yet there continues to be no clear indication of when the case might be brought to trial. Despite considerable evidence linking the five guardsmen to the murders, several factors suggest that a trial may never occur.

Perhaps the most troubling obstacle facing Judge Rauda in his handling of the case is intimidation by government security forces and paramilitary activists. Rauda is the third judge assigned to this case; both of his predecessors have removed themselves for unexplained reasons.[20]

In El Salvador, judges and trial lawyers are often, themselves, the targets of official violence. The Americas Watch Committee/American Civil Liberties Union January 1982 Report on Human Rights in El Salvador notes that Salvadoran judges and trial lawyers "have increasingly become the targets of officially condoned harassment and violence."[21] In a recent report on this subject, the International Commission of Jurists reported that: "[t]he judiciary has been made impotent by fear, while magistrates who have attempted to investigate crimes attributed to the security forces or right-wing groups have been immediately attacked, and several of them have been murdered."[22]

A case in point is the assassination attempt on March 26, 1980, against Judge Atilio Ramirez Amaya, who had to flee the country because of his participation in the investigation of the murder of Archbishop Romero.[23] reports an even more "horrifying example of the practices of paramilitary groups which still operate with impunity in El Salvador." According to this report:

The ICJ's Center for the Independence of Judges and Lawyers in a recent publication

"[F]ive relatives of a judge of San Salvador, including two adolescents and a woman of 28, were assassinated on April 14, 1981. Their heads were severed from their bodies and laid at the doorstep of the Judge's home."[24]

Salvadoran judges—those who survive—seem to find ways to avoid the full prosecution of homicide cases. A journalist who interviewed Judge Rauda last month reported:

"Out of sixty murder cases pending in Judge Rauda's court in the past year, not one was closed. This, he says, is not to mention the five or six bodies he inspects each week—new murders in which no investigation is even opened."[25]

Nationwide data on the number of Salvadoran security forces brought to trial and convicted of homicide are not available, presumably because such figures would reveal an appalling paralysis within the Salvadoran criminal justice system. In an effort to foster the impression that abuses within the armed services do not escape punishment, the Salvadoran government has recently released the results of a 28-month survey revealing the numbers of security force personnel accused of crime who were dismissed from the armed services and delivered to civilian courts. While the study lists 84 homicide suspects who were handed over to civilian authorities, no indication of their subsequent handling by the courts is included.[26]

Procedural requirements have provided Judge Rauda and the Salvadoran government with a convenient pretext for prolonged delay in scheduling a trail. According to Salvadoran law, evidence gathered under military auspices may not be used against a defendant in civilian court. Once the case was transferred to his court, Judge Rauda was therefore compelled to collect anew all testimony and material evidence pertaining to the case. The process of re-gathering testimony is reportedly well under way: sworn depositions from at least forty witnesses are presently at hand.[27] A second legal requirement, however, has provided cause for yet further delay: all evidence to be used in criminal proceedings must be obtained under the supervision of the judge within the territorial limits of El Salvador.[28] This law, according to one State Department source, has been used to disqualify ballistics tests which the FBI performed, using machinery which is permanently installed in the FBI's Washington headquarters. Unresolved negotiations regarding the possible replication of these tests is one current obstacle to a speedy trial.

In recent days, the U.S. State Department has indicated that a trial might be scheduled as soon as early September.[29] These indications come less than two weeks before Presient Reagan must certify that the government of El Salvador is making significant efforts to comply with internationally recognized human rights, and if pending legislation is enacted, that it also is making good-faith efforts to bring the churchwomen's murderers to justice.

The State Department's forecast for a trial is reminiscent of an announcement made by Salvadoran Defense Minister Jose Guillermo Garcia two days before the President's January 1982 certification. On January 26, General Garcia announced that the six suspects in the murders would go on trial "within a very few days."[30] No trial has been held in the last six months, and former President Duarte reecently predicted a year's delay before a trial.[31] Moreover, given Judge Rauda's past record with homicide—not one of sixty murder cases closed in the last year[32]—President Duarte's prediction may be unduly optimistic. When viewed against this backdrop, the State Department's forecast for a trial in the next few months reflect immediate political factors, rather than a genuine commitment on the part of the Salvadoran government to hold a trial.

The acusador particular

Several months ago, the U.S. State Department informed the families of the churchwomen that they could be represented in Salvadoran criminal court proceedings by an attorney who, in effect, would be a co-accuser with the Salvadoran Attorney General. As originally described by the State Department, this private prosecutor, or acusador particular, "can do anything which the [public] prosecutor could do—present evidence, file appeals, and participate in the trial."[33] With these powers, according to the State Department, "[t]he acusador particular can play an extremely important role in the prosecution . . . the introduction of an effective lawyer into the case through this mechanism can be the deciding element in a successful prosecution. [Emphasis added.][34]

In stark contrast to these earlier representations, the State Department recently has changed its assessment of the acusador's powers and potential role. Department officials now acknowledge that the acusador cannot present evidence, argue before the jury or cross-examine witnesses.[35] With such limitations, the acusador surely cannot be "the deciding factor in a successful prosecution."

Moreover, in the case of the churchwomen's murder, intimidation threatens to limit further the effectiveness of the acusador and has already hampered efforts to identify an attorney willing to assume the position. Assisting in the prosecution of a case against government security forces entails considerable risk, as evidenced by the resignation under alleged threats of two judges assigned earlier to the case. Even if the families are able to locate an attorney who agrees to function as acusador particular, this individual may be unwilling to raise a number of important issues relevant to the case, especially where higher military or government authorities appear to be implicated.

Despite the constraints likely to be experienced by an acusador particular in this case, the presence of such a figure at the trial proceedings might, at a minimum, provide an independent record of events. The families of the churchwomen have requested that the State Department provide them with the names of Salvadoran lawyers who have expressed a willingness to consider the job.[36] They are currently awaiting a response.

IV. THE UNEXPLORED QUESTION OF BROADER INVOLVEMENT

Since the days immediately following the murders, there has been an accumulation of evidence suggesting the involvement of higher military authorities or private individuals in the planning, execution, and later concealment of the crime. To date, neither the Salvadoran government nor the U.S. government has been willing to pursue a vigorous investigation of this evidence. Instead, both governments have seen fit to assert that responsibility for the crime lies solely with the arrested guardsmen.

On September 30, 1981, more than four months before the Salvadoran military authorities completed their investigation, U.S. Ambassador Deane Hinton stated that the investigation should be limited to the six detained guardsmen "who were acting on their own."[37] Ambassador Hinton made this statement at the September 1981 meeting between President Duarte and the churchwomen's families; his words reflected clear U.S. endorsement of the Salvadoran government's refusal to explore the possibility of broader ties to the killings. At the same meeting, Mr. Duarte offered a practical argument favoring a limited investigation: he warned that, if the investigation pointed to senior military officials, no Salvadoran judge would be willing to preside over the case.[38]

When the six guardsmen were transferred to civilian custody in February 1982, Duarte once again revealed his eagerness to limit the scope of the investigation. "I am convinced that no others participated," he said at a news conference. "I have the moral conviction that these are the guilty parties."[39]

One person who challenges this viewpoint is the former U.S. Ambassador to El Salvador, Robert White. In an interview published in July of 1981, Ambassador White voiced his concern that the efforts of military and civilian authorities to conceal the burial of the churchwomen pointed to a broader involvement in the murders themselves:

"I seriously doubt that there are only six guardsmen involved. If there were, there wouldn't have been enough incentive for the cover-up to have taken place. An arrest of six enlisted men to allay public opinion is a very simple thing to accomplish . . ."[40]

Later that month, Ambassador White reiterated his views in a hearing of the House Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs:

"There has been nothing but a footdragging on the part of [the Salvadoran] government. And this will continue, because no murders are investigated. And the reason is that if you investigate the murder of the American churchwomen, you are going to find that it was not the responsibility of four or six or eight enlisted men, but that it involved orders from responsible officers."[41]

Pre-murder threats

Among the clues suggesting possible broader complicity in the murders is a series of events which occurred in the weeks preceding the crime:

1. At a meeting of the Salvadoran Cabinet in November 1980, Defense Minister Jose Guillermo Garcia attempted, in a half-hour presentation, to convince his colleagues that nuns and priests in the north of El Salvador were "influencing people to struggle against the government." To reinforce his claims, Garcia introduced a weeping ten-year-old boy from Chalatenango, the town where Sisters Ita Ford and Maura Clarke had their mission. The boy provided information to the assembled Cabinet officials which Garcia regarded as proof that nuns and priests in the region were collaborating with leftists. Garcia reportedly urged his colleagues, "We've got to take steps against the missionaries."[42]

2. In early November 1980, a sign was tacked to the door of the parish in Chalatenango, issuing the grim warning: "Anyone who enters this house will die." The message was signed by a group calling itself the Mauricio Borgonovo anti-communist brigade.[43]

3. On the day of the murders, a threatening letter was received by Father Efrain Lopez, a member of the Chalatenango parish staff. The letter, signed by a man who identified himself as Roberto Fogelbach Perez, Coordinator of the Anti-Communist Front, urged the parish staff to "put an end to your wicked activities . . . or . . . you will find that you will no longer be allowed to remain."[44]

4. Another member of the Chalatenango parish staff was approached on the day of the murders, at a local movie house. This individual was reportedly shown a piece of paper containing a list of names, including Ita Ford and Maura Clarke, and was told: "Here is a list of the people we are going to kill—and today, this very night, we will begin."[45]

While the State Department has confirmed certain of the above occurrences, possible linkages between these events and the killings have not been vigorously probed. The FBI has lifted fingerprints from the sign which had been posted on the parish door, yet no attempt has been made to match these prints with those of guardsmen or non-military right-wing activists in the area.[46] The name and organization cited by the author of the threatening letter also offer clues which neither the U.S. nor the Salvadoran government has pursued.

Intercepted radio transmission

An intercepted radio transmission is another unexplained occurrence conceivably related to the killings. On the afternoon of December 2, just a few hours before the women were abducted, a radio communicaton between military units near El Salvador's international airport reportedly contained the words: "No, she didn't arrive on the flight. We'll have to wait for the next."[47] Sisters Ita Ford and Mura Clarke did, in fact, arrive on a later flight than expected on the afternoon of December 2. Whether the intercepted radio transmission indicates a premediated plan by Salvadoran military personnel to track down one of these women on her arrival is a question which remains unanswered.

The man who originally informed the U.S. Embassy of the radio transmission is a high-ranking Christian Democrat in El Salvador. While further information in this man's possession might help to clarify the relationship of the transmission to the murders, he has chosen to remain anonymous, allegedly because of a fear of reprisal. The sensitivity of this particular issue was highlighted by U.S. Ambassador Deane Hinton, in a letter to Congressman Robert A. Roe: "The reluctance by the source of the airport conversations report to testify openly is one of many examples of individuals who, aware of the consequences of speaking openly about a subject which others want to remain hidden, opts for saying nothing."[48]

The questioning of Sr. Maria Rieckelman

While the exact relevance of the radio transmission to the case remains uncertain, it is noteworthy that airport guardsmen revealed through other actions, on the day of the murders, a particular attentiveness to North American women passing through the facility. Another participant, along with Ita Ford and Maura Clarke, in the Maryknoll Sisters' annual meeting in Nicaragua was another Maryknoll Sister, Maria Rieckelman. When Sr. Rieckelman's return flight to the United States stopped over in El Salvador on the morning of December 2, three Salvadoran guardsmen armed with hip guns boarded the plane and interrogated several of the passengers in transit. Sr. Rieckelman was approached twice by these guardsmen, who expressed repeated interest in the destination of her travels.[49] When asked, in February 1982, whether the guardsmen who boarded Sr. Rieckelman's flight have been located and interviewed regarding their motives and concerns on that occasion, the U.S. State Department said that they had not identified these individuals.[50]

Cortez and the Hans Christ connection

Another suggestion of broader involvement in the killings has surfaced through the allegations of a Salvadoran expatriate referred to in news articles and State Department memoranda as "Cesar Cortez." Information about Cortez has come through intermediaries and is therefore incomplete and impossible to verify. Yet, according to these sources, Cortez claims that he was an accessory to the murders, serving as the driver for three non-airport-based National Guardsmen and two hacienda police officers who participated in the killings. Cortez also alleges that he received his orders from Hans Christ, the businessman implicated in the January 1981 murders of two U.S. agrarian reform workers in El Salvador, Michael Hammer and Mark David Pearlman. Cortez makes yet a further claim—that Hans Christ was in communication with U.S. military officials immediately preceding the killing of the U.S. churchwomen.[51] To date, the Lawyers Committee has been unable to obtain sufficient information either to refute or confirm any of these allegations.

According to the State Department, Cortez initially sought to meet confidentially with officials in the U.S. Embassy in Mexico City. In an unsigned letter, he identified himself as "the only witness to the violation and murder in cold blood of the nuns and the social workers [Hammer and Pearlman]," and asked U.S. authorities to "notify me in the Mexican newspapers if they want to see me in the U.S. Consulate, and if the meeting will be confidential."[52] The U.S. Embassy apparently responded by placing paid advertisements in leading Mexico City newspapers. Presumably fearing for his safety, Cortez chose not to appear at the Embassy, but instead revealed his story through an intermediary.

While Cesar Cortez has been beyond the reach of U.S. and Salvadoran officials, the same has not been true for Hans Christ, who has been living in Miami for the past several months. In that city, he has waged a long legal battle to oppose an extradition request filed by the Salvadoran government, which seeks his return to El Salvador as a suspect in the Hammer and Pearlman murders. In February, 1982, at a meeting between the families and Assistant Secretary of State Thomas Enders, the State Department was asked why Christ had never been interviewed about the churchwomen's case. In April, the State Department informed the families: "We are discussing with the FBI the possibility of a formal interview with Hans Christ."[53] Today, more than five months after the meeting with Assistant Secretary of State Enders, no such interview has taken place.

Further clues, further evasions

The failure to probe Hans Christ's knowledge of and possible involvement in the churchwomen's murders is a reflection of a general unwillingness, on the part of both U.S. and Salvadoran authorities, to interrogate possible accomplices other than the arrested, low-level guardsmen. Other manifestations of this unwillingness include the following:

1. The FBI failed to question rigorously the sergeant who was Colindres Aleman's commanding officer. Colindres, the principal actor in the killing according to the government's investigation, was a subsergeant in December 1980. His commanding officer, a sergeant whose name is being withheld by the State Department, has subsequently retired and is living in the United States. When interviewed ty the FBI on February 10, 1982, the sergeant admitted that Colindres had confessed to the murders; this is a confession which Colindres has not given under formal questioning.[54] The State Department has not indicated when the sergeant heard Colindres' confession, but it seems likely that Colindres informed his immediate superior of the crime shortly after its commission, in the hope of gaining support for his efforts to conceal the crime. If this is the case, the sergeant is guilty—along with the Salvadoran military and civilian officials who participated in the hasty burial of the women on December 3, 1980—of attempting to conceal a multiple murder.

It is unclear whether the sergeant was specifically asked about his own possible involvement, not merely in concealing but also in planning and officially or unofficially authorizing the crime. On this issue, the State Department has ambiguously reported that "the interviewed sergeant did not say that he had any prior knowledge of the murders."[55] This response may, in fact, imply that a question on the matter was never posed. The sergeant, in any case, was never given a polygraph examination.

2. National Guard Lieutenant Daniel Mejia, the officer in charge of the district which included the airport, has not been interviewed by U.S. or Salvadoran authorities.[56] Information in Lt. Mejia's possession could provide important clues regarding higher-level instigation or endorsement of the murders.

3. Three U.S. military officers who were serving in El Salvador in December 1980, and whose names have been raised in connection with the case have been cleared by the FBI, although the FBI has refused to divulge the means by which it has established their non-involvement. In February 1982, the families of the churchwomen requested that the FBI explore the possibility that three high-level U.S. military officers, Colonels Cruz, Cummings and Bosch, were in communication with Hans Christ in the days immediately preceding the murders.[57] On April 13, the State Department replied that "none of the three military officers . . . held any discussion of the churchwomen, by name or in general, with Salvadoran government officials or members of the 'oligarchy' prior to the murders."[58] When questioned by the Lawyers Committee about the manner in which the officer's innocence was ascertained, a State Department official close to the investigation indicated that the FBI had explicitly requested that its means of questioning the colonels be kept confidential.[59] It was made clear, however, that the colonels had not been subjected to polygraph examinations.

4. In its polygraph examination—with FBI technical assistance—of the six guardsmen arrested in the spring of 1981, Salvadoran military investigators only questioned one of the guardsmen, Sub-sergeant Colindres Aleman, regarding the involvement of higher officials. Even the examination of co-lindres on this issue was restricted to a single question: "Did you receive instructions or orders to attack [atentara] those women?" Colindres' negative response to this question, one of the only responses he gave which registered "no deception" on the polygraph, seemed to satisfy his interrogators on this crucial, highly complex issue.[60]

5. The FBI has neglected to analyze the fingerprints of area security forces, thereby leaving unidentified 12 of the 13 prints found on the churchwomen's Toyota van. In the spring of 1981, the FBI compared the fingerprints found on the van to those of the six guardsmen then held in connection with the killings. One of these prints, found near the door handle of the vehicle, corresponded to the right thumb impression of Sub-sergeant Colindres Aleman.[61] Subsequently to this initial, limited analysis, the FBI has made no effort to compare the remaining twelve fingerprints to the prints of other security forces personnel who were stationed in the vicinity of the airport on December 2, 1980. In a confidential cable dated March 13, 1981, the American Embassy in El Salvador referred to "roughly 85 [security force] people in the area of the airport on the evening of December 2." [62] In justifying the FBI's failure to obtain and analyze the fingerprints of these individuals, the State Department tried, a year later, to minimize the total number of security forces of possible relevance to the case. In a statement released to the families of the churchwomen in April 1982, the State Department claimed that "at no time on the night of December 2, 1980, were there 85 guardsmen present around the airport." The Department referred instead to a "total airport detachment of the National Guard" amounting to 24 men.[63] In establishing this new, vastly reduced estimate of security forces in the airport area, the State Department was choosing to ignore a number of relevant groups: the airport-based Customs Police, at least one of whom is thought to have assisted the murderers in disposing of the churchwomen's van; [64] hacienda police officers stationed in the general area, whom Cortez implicated in the murders; [65] and detachments of additional National Guard forces. The relevance of investigating neighboring National Guard units is underscored by the fact that Colindres and his men actually visited one such outpost immediately prior to murdering the churchwomen: according to the evidence gathered by the Salvadoran military investigators, the guardsmen deposited their broken-down Jeep at a National Guard post in Rosario de la Paz before continuing toward the scene of the crime in the churchwomen's van.[66] Despite these circumstances, the State Department seems decidedly unwilling to push for a broader examination of fingerprint evidence.

6. There has been insufficient follow-up investigation concerning early references to a red Toyota ¾-ton pick-up truck seen leaving the scene of the crime, and to a possibly corresponding red paint smear found on the churchwomen's white Toyota van. On December 19, 1980, the Special Investigative Commission reported that "a red Toyota ¾-ton pick-up was seen leaving (the crime scene) at about 11:00 p.m. on December 2" and that "a red splotch on the burned van" of the churchwomen was being checked to determine whether the paint splotch "could be the result of a collision between that van and the red Toyota pick-up."[67] By February 1981, the Maryknoll Sisters' Office of Social Concerns, which has been actively monitoring the investigation, received word from a source which it considered reliable that the FBI had matched the red splotch on the burned van with a red Toyota pick-up belonging to the Sheraton hotel in San Salvador. It should be noted that this hotel, of which Hans Christ is a partowner, was the scene, a month later, of the brutal murders of the U.S. agrarian reform workers, Michael Hammer and Mark David Pearlman.

Subsequent to the FBI's alleged matching of the paint splotch and a Sheraton truck, the State Department has claimed, in a communication with the families of the churchwomen, that "the FBI could not determine the source of the paint scraping."[68] Some individuals close to the investigation believe that references to the blue Customs Police truck, which appear in formal depositions taken in December 1981 by the Salvadoran military, may have been fabricated in an attempt to explain away the Investigative Commission's initial references to a red vehicle.

7. There has been no explanation of guardsmen's references to large quantities of cash in Sub-sergeant Colindres' possession in the days following the murders. In their sworn testimony before Major Medrano, several National Guardsmen stationed at the airport at the time of the killings recalled rumors, shortly after the killings, that Sub-sergeant Colindres had suddenly gained possession of approximately $5,000 in cash. Colindres' alleged purchases of new living room furniture, a television, and other luxuries in the days following the murders tended to confirm this rumor in the eyes of a number of guardsmen.[69] On the basis of careful research, the Maryknoll Order has established that the two Sisters arriving in El Salvador were carrying only $175 in cash.[70] These facts raise the possibility that Colindres may have been paid a substantial sum of money for his services as a killer. Neither the U.S. nor the Salvadoran government has given this evidence adequate attention.

V. THE ROLE OF THE UNITED STATES

From the morning of December 4, 1980, when Ambassador White was told about the deaths of the churchwomen, the United States has monitored and assisted in the investigation. Initially the case was treated as a matter of top priority at the highest levels of the government. Subsequently, however, the government's commitment to a full and fair investigation has diminished dramatically.

The Rogers-Bowdler mission

Faced with preliminary evidence suggesting the involvement of Salvadoran security force personnel in the killings, President Carter decided, on December 5, 1980, to suspend all military and economic assistance to El Salvador pending a further investigation.[71] The following day, he dispatched to El Salvador a three-person investigative team headed by Assistant Secretary of State William Bowdler and William Rogers, a private attorney and former Assistant Secretary of State. The mission was charged with a dual function: to serve as a preliminary factfinding group into the deaths of the churchwomen; and to examine the structure of the government security forces in El Salvador, with a view toward helping to bring them under closer control.

Shortly after its return to the United States, the Rogers-Bowdler mission reported to the President:

"We made every effort . . . to persuade the authorities of El Salvador of the need for as complete and thorough an investigation as possible, so that those responsible could be brought to justice." [72]

The mission relayed the Junta's expression of "profound regret" regarding the murders and its promise to pursue the investigation "wherever it led anywhere in the country at any level." [73]

The mission also reported the following:

". . . because local authorities, certainly the National Guard and Civil Guard soldiers present at the informal burial on December 3, and possibly their local commander, knew at least after the fact that four women had been brutally murdered and had cause to believe that they were Americans—yet provided no information to our Embassy, there is a high probability that an attempt was made to conceal the deaths." [Emphasis added.] [74]

The mission recommended that the United States "provide maximum cooperation" to the Special Investigative Commission and urged that the FBI "participate directly in the work of the Commission" because "[d]oing so would enhance the prospects of its legitimacy as well as chances for ultimate success." [75]

Although it viewed the creation of the Commission "as a positive response to the tradegy," the mission warned the President:

"We entertain no illusions. The investigation of crime even in our own country is not always climaxed by success. And the processes of law and civil justice are not very evident in El Salvador at the present time." [Emphasis added.] [76]

Resumption of military aid

Despite obvious problems with the investigation, the U.S. government resumed economic aid to El Salvador on December 17, 1980.[77] One month later, and a week before Ronald Reagan became President, the State Department announced that military aid to El Salvador would also be resumed. In justifying this action, the State Department issued a press statement asserting that progress was being made in the investigation.[78] This position conflicted sharply with the judgment of Ambassador White, the senior official within the State Department who was most familiar both with El Salvador and the circumstances surrounding the crime. In testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee on February 25, 1981, White revealed his misgivings. Referring to the State Department's initial decision to suspend United States assistance to El Salvador, he commented:

". . . the agreement that was reached was that we would wait a month and then decide whether a serious investigation was under way or not.

"During that time, our reporting from the embassy consistently showed that there was no such—there was no serious investigation under way.

". . . there was no serious investigation into the death of the nuns, and as far as I am concerned there never has been and I know of no evidence to say that that situation has changed." [79]

In a subsequent cable to the Department responding to criticism for his previous public comments, Ambassador White wrote the following:

"All the evidence we have . . . is that the Salvadoran government has made no serious effort to investigate the killings of the murdered women." [80]

Diminishing U.S. commitment to a full investigation

As the investigation moved ahead at a glacial pace, State Department officials sought to diminish its importance. On one level, they emphasized that the U.S. government was continuing its pressure for a thorough investigation and stressed that progress in fact was being made; on another level, the same officials endorsed the Salvadoran government's refusal to explore questions pertaining to broader involvement in the killing.

Robert White, who had been replaced as Ambassador in February 1981, criticized the State Department on this point. Mr. White's own involvement in the case from December 3, 1980, until his dismissal, led him to conclude that there was no serious investigation in progress. When questioned by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on April 9, 1981, Mr. White recounted one conversation he had with a State Department official:

"When I suggested that the Acting Assistant Secretary of State telephone me to say [how] we could reconcile our two positions—that was in my last days at the Embassy—that it was their position that progress was taking place in the investigation, that my position was that no serious investigation was underway, well, his point is that you can have progress in an investigation and still not have a serious investigation underway. To me this is fundamentally dishonest."[81]

When Michael Donovan, Jean Donovan's brother, voiced the families' concern about the apparent lack of progress, Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Thomas Enders responded:

"Let me again assure you that we will do everything possible to ensure that all those responsible for this terrible crime are brought to justice."[82]

Yet, two months earlier, in a February 17 meeting with the families, Mr. Enders discounted evidence suggesting the possible involvement of higher-ranking officials.[83] He echoed Ambassador Hinton's statement, made to the families in a meeting on September 30, 1981, that the investigation should be limited to the six detained guardsmen.[84]

Similarly, in their respective meetings and correspondence with the families, both Assistant Secretary Enders and Ambassador Hinton eagerly sought to quell questions concerning the apparent lack of progress in the case. As Ambassador Hinton wrote to William Ford, Ita Ford's brother, on March 11, 1982:

"My hope is that my responses will serve to allay the doubts and concerns which you have and which are shared by other family members. . . ."[85]

In one telephone conversation, Ambassador Hinton suggested that "rough stuff" might be an appropriate interrogation technique to push the investigation ahead, and asked Mr. Ford whether the families would endorse such an approach.[86] Mr. Ford later recalled the conversation and offered his own observations:

"Ambassador Hinton, during that conversation, said that eyewitness evidence or a confession would be necessary to convict the six, and he asked my opinion of the use of "extraordinary means" to get that information. When I asked Ambassador Hinton if he wanted my approval for the United States to conduct or supervise the torture of the six, he suggested there was no other means of getting information. I do not know whether Ambassador Hinton was telling me that the United States uses or condones torture in El Salvador, or whether he was trying to get me to say I wanted the men tortured, but either alternative is sickening."[87]

During the first months following the killings, both Secretary of State Alexander Haig and U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick made highly inflammatory remarks about the churchwomen. On December 16, 1980, while she was still U.N. Ambassador-designate, Mrs. Kirkpatrick told an interviewer:

". . . I don't think the government [of El Salvador] was responsible [for the murders.] The nuns were not just nuns; the nuns were political activists.

"We ought to be a little more clear-cut about this than we usually are. They were political activists on behalf of the Frente and somebody who is using violence to oppose the Frente killed them."[88] [Emphasis added.]

After much pressure from the families and Members of Congress, Ambassador Kirkpatrick finally sought to clarify her statement following several months of silence. In a letter to Senators Percy and Pell, she wrote:

"My point was that order had broken down in El Salvador, that murders were being committed by traditionals, murders were being committed by revolutionaries, murders were being committed by simple criminals and that more and more people and institutions were polarized and drawn into the civil war. Under these circumstances any kind of identification or perceived identification with one of the contending sides involves one in the conflict . . . Thus the nuns, two of whom I said were reported to have just returned from Nicaragua and to have ties in the Santanista [sic] junta, were perceived not just as nuns teaching school children but as political activists on behalf of the Frente."[89] [Emphasis added.]

Assistant Secretary of State Enders reiterated Ambassador Kirkpatrick's clarification in a letter to Michael Donovan on April 20, 1982. In his letter, Enders explained that "her comment was taken out of the context of a broader discussion of the character of the struggle in El Salvador."[90] He added that her words were "spoken as a political analyst attempting to describe dispassionately a tragically violent scene."[91]

Even more disturbing than Ambassador Kirkpatrick's statements were allegations made by Secretary of State Alexander Haig, in testimony before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs:

"I would like to suggest to you that some of the investigations would lead one to believe that perhaps the vehicle that the nuns were riding in may have tried to run a roadblock or may have accidentally been perceived to have been doing so, and there may have been an exchange of fire. And perhaps those who inflicted the casualties sought to cover it up. This could have been at a very low level of both competence and motivation in the context of the issue itself." [Emphasis added.][92]

Despite State Department confirmation that there was no evidence to support Secretary Haig's hypothesis,[93] the Secretary has not retracted his remarks.

Freedom of information requests

From the time the U.S. Embassy in El Salvador learned of the women's disappearances on December 3, 1980, the U.S. government has been privy to most of the information gathered in the Salvadoran government's investigation, including a substantial amount of informantion obtained with the active assistance of the FBI. The families of the churchwomen have filed requests under the federal Freedom of Information Act (FOIA)[94] with four federal agencies, to gain access to documents containing this information. The four agencies are the Department of State, the FBI, the CIA and the Defense Intelligence Agency. The families seek access to government documents in the hope of ascertaining what has delayed the investigation and whether it has been complete and accurate. Each of the four agencies has exhibited great reluctance to release the requested materials.

The families filed their FOIA request with the Department of State on June 29, 1981, seeking access to all agency cables, memoranda, reports, letters, or other records which relate either to the deaths, or to any investigations into those deaths.[95] To date, a total of 133 documents have been released, while the State Department continues to resist the release of 74 other documents dated prior to the filing of the FOIA request.[96] While a State Department official close to the investigation has acknowledged that new materials pertaining to the case have arrived "on a daily basis" over the past several months,[97] no document dated more recently than June 29, 1981, has been released.

Subsequent requests for information were filed with the FBI, CIA and Defense Intelligence Agency on March 11, 1982.[98] To date, the families have received only two documents—newspaper articles—pursuant to these requests.[99] The government's lack of cooperation and attention to this case is perhaps best illustrated by a letter from the CIA to the families on April 8, 1982. It notes:

"Before we can conduct a meaningful search of our files under the names of the four individuals, we need to have [the murdered churchwomen's] full names and basic biographic data. At the very least, we need the date and place of birth for each individual. Without such information it will be difficult if not impossible for us to distinguish between individuals with the same or similar names. We will also require proof of death, such as a copy of their respective obituaries or death certificates."[100]

The agency also requested the families to provide notarized statements attesting to kinship before it would grant a search and reproduction fee waiver.[101]

On June 18, 1982, nearly a year after the families filed their FOIA request with the State Department, 91 members of the House of Representatives sent a letter to the four agency heads on behalf of the families. The Representatives noted that the families' requests "have been met with incredible delays and unresponsiveness," and urged the agencies to expedite their processing of the FOIA requests and to release all documents relating to the deaths and the subsequent investigation.[102] On June 30, 1982, William H. Webster, Director of the FBI, responded to Representative Richard Ottinger, one of the letter's originators, by repeating the FBI's refusal to release any documents. Mr. Webster asserted that all relevant FBI documents are exempt from FOIA disclosure provisions for one of two reasons: first, they are properly classified in the interests of national defense or foreign policy; or second, "to release information would impede the ability of law enforcement personnel to conduct a thorough examination and effective prosecution, and might well preclude a fair and impartial trial."[103]

Presidential certification

On December 29, 1982, Congress adopted legislation authorizing appropriations for fiscal years 1982 and 1983 for foreign military and economic aid.[104] The legislation authorized the President to extend military aid to El Salvador only if he first certified to Congress that, among other things, the Salvadoran government "has made good faith efforts both to investigate the murders of the six United States citizens in El Salvador in December 1980 and January 1981 and to bring to justice those responsible for those murders."[105]

On January 28, 1982, in compliance with the legislation's deadline, President Reagan certified to Congress that the Salvadoran government had met all of the conditions precedent to continued military aid, including those relating to good-faith efforts in solving the murder of the four churchwomen.[106]

Two days earlier, the Salvadoran government announced that the suspects would go on trial "within a very few days."[107] This announcement was simply incorrect. Under Salvadoran law an extensive, time-consuming judicial investigation must take place before any trial can be held. Six months later there is still no trial scheduled.

VI. CONCLUSION

Based on its examination of available information pertaining to the killing of the four U.S. churchwomen and to the subsequent investigation of these crimes, the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights concludes:

(1) There is little doubt that the women were killed by members of Salvadoran security forces.

(2) While the five former National Guardsmen now in custody clearly were involved in the killing, there is unexplained circumstantial evidence suggesting that they may have been acting in collusion with their superiors.

(3) Despite assurances in January 1982 that the trial of the suspected guardsmen would take place "within a very few days," no trial has occurred and no date has been set for such a trial.

(4) Reasonable estimates, including the prediction of former President Duarte, indicate that the investigative process of the court proceedings against the former guardsmen may not be completed for some months; moreover, there is a distinct possibility that no one will be tried and punished for the murders.

(5) The general breakdown in the judicial process in El Salvador has seriously impeded progress in this case. Presiding Judge Bernardo Rauda Murcia and the prosecuting attorney are and will continue to be hampered in their pursuit of justice by actual or anticipated intimidation from government security forces and paramilitary death squads.

(6) Leaders of the current government of El Salvador, particularly the President of the Constituent Assembly, Roberto D'Aubuisson, are hostile to the investigation or punishment of any security force members in this case.

(7) There has been an unwillingness on the part of both the Salvadoran and U.S. governments to pursue evidence suggesting that higher-ranking military officers or paramilitary groups may have been involved in the killings. This evidence includes the following:

At a cabinet meeting in November 1980, Defense Minister Jose Guillermo Garcia stated that the church workers in the north of El Salvador "were influencing people to struggle against our government." According to accounts of this meeting, he urged his colleagues: "We've got to take steps against the missionaries."

In early November 1980, a sign was tacked to the door of the parish in Chalatenango, where the churchwomen were working, warning: "Anyone who enters this house will die." This ominous message was signed by the Mauricio Porgonovo anti-Communist brigade, a paramilitary force.

On the day of the murders, a member of the parish staff received a letter from another warning that the church workers must "put an end to your wicked activities."

On the same day, another member of the parish staff received a list of names, including Ita Ford and Maura Clarke. He was told: "Here is a list of the people we are going to kill—and today, this very night, we will begin.

(8) Neither government has actively pursued a number of important clues:

The FBI has failed to question adequately the sergeant immediately superior to Subsergeant Colindres Aleman, the alleged principal actor in the killing according to the Salvadoran government's own investigation. This man is now living in the United States.

Neither the FBI nor Salvadoran authorities have interviewed Lt. Daniel Mejia, the officer in charge of the district which included the airport on the night of the killings.

The FBI has failed to interview Hans Christ, the Salvadoran businessman implicated in the killing of Michael Hammer and Mark Pearleman, and whose name has been linked to this case. Mr. Christ also is living in the United States.

The FBI has failed to obtain or examine fingerprints and ballistics samples from 79 of the 85 security force members who were in the area of the airport on the night of the killings.

The FBI has completed its investigation of three United States military officers who were then serving in El Salvador, but refuses to divulge the means by which it has established their non-involvement.

(9) In recent months, officials of the United States government, particularly those of the Department of State, have sought to downplay the importance of this case by suggesting that the investigation is progressing smoothly; that only the five low-ranking guardsmen are culpable; and that, in any case, the nuns were political activists supporting the leftist rebels against the Salvadoran government.

(10) Agencies of the United States government have exhibited great reluctance to comply with Freedom of Information requests for documents in their possession containing information on the killings and the subsequent investigation.

Based on these findings and unresolved issues, the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights further concludes: there has been insufficient progress in the investigation into the killings from the beginning; in the last six months, the government of El Salvador has not made good faith efforts to investigate the murders and bring to justice those responsible; there is no basis to warrant certification by the President on this matter.

FOOTNOTES

[1] International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1981, Public Law 97-113, § 728(d).

[2] Telephone conversations between Philip Warburg of the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights and Peter Romero, Salvadoran Desk Officer, U.S. Department of State, July 14, 1982.

[3] "Trial is Due for Six Suspects in Salvador Slaying of Nuns," The New York Times, January 27, 1982.

[4] "Salvador Land Redistribution Plans Have Been Shelved, Duarte Asserts," The New York Times, June 7, 1982, p. A6.

[5] An Americas Watch Report—U.S. Reporting on Human Rights in El Salvador: Methodology At Odds With Knowledge (New York, N.Y., June 1982), p. 75. Appendix D: U.S. Embassy in San Salvador Report on Security Forces Personnel Dismissed from the Armed Forces, Oct. 15, 1979 to Feb. 26, 1982 as Provided by the Salvadoran National Police.

[6] The reconstruction of events has been prepared from several accounts, including: William D. Rogers, William G. Bowdler, Luigi R. Einaudi, "Report to the President of Special Mission to El Salvador," December 12, 1980; John Dinges, "New Evidence on Missionaries' Deaths in Salvador Suggests Official Plot," Pacific News Service, July 3, 1981; and an unpublished report of the "Cleveland Team," December 7, 1980.

[7] "Aftermath of Four Brutal Murders," Time, December 22, 1980, p. 40.

[8] FBI Status Report on the Investigation, April 10, 1981. This report appears in the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights, A Report on the Investigation into the Killing of Four American Churchwomen in El Salvador (New York, N.Y., September 1981), Appendix F.

[9] "6 Salvadorans Held for Murders," The Washington Post, May 10, 1981.

[10] U.S. Department of State, cable from Secretary of State Haig to U.S. Embassy, San Salvador, April 1981.

[11] Ibid.

[12] Duarte's comments on this matter were recorded in minutes of a meeting held at the home of Archbishop Thomas Hickey of Washington, D.C., on September 30, 1981. The minutes were taken by William P. Ford, brother of slain Sister Ita Ford.

[13] Translated transcripts of the depositions were made available to the churchwomen's families by the U.S. Department of State, February 17, 1982.

[14] "Salvador Jails Two For Murder of Nuns," the Washington Post, Februry 9, 1982.

[15] This narrative was constructed from the translated transcripts of the depositions taken by Major Adolfo Medrano, from December 1981 through February 1982, supra note 13.

[16] "Trial is Due for Six Suspects in Salvador Slaying of Nuns," The New York Times, January 27, 1982.

[17] "Six Salvadoran Soldiers Face Court in the Slaying of American Nuns," The New York Times, February 11, 1982; "Salvadorans Arraigned in Nuns' Deaths," The Washington Post, February 11, 1982.

[18] "Ex-Guardsman Freed in Nun Deaths," The Washington Post, February 14, 1982, p. A35; "Judge in Salvador Frees One of six in Nuns' Deaths," The New York Times, February 14, 1982

[19] U.S. Department of State, "Status of the Prosecution," February 17, 1982.

[20] "Salvadorans Arraigned in Nuns' Deaths," The Washington Post, February 11, 1982. See Julia Preston, "Report from San Salvador on New Information in the Investigation of the Four U.S. Nuns Killed in El Salvador" ("All Things Considered," National Public Radio, June 20, 1982).

[21] Americas Watch Committee and The American Civil Liberties Union, Report on Human rights in El Salvador (New York: Vintage Books, 1982), p. 102.

[22] Ibid., p. 102. Quoted from International Commission of Jurists (ICJ), "Human rights in the World: El Salvador," 26 ICJ Review 3 (June 1981), p. 6.

[23] Ibid., p. 102.

[24] Ibid., p. 103. Quoted from International Commission of Jurists Center for the Independence of Judges and Lawyers (CIJL), "Case Reports: El Salvador," in 7 CIJL Bulletin 15, p. 26.

[25] Julia Preston, "Report from San Salvador on New Information in the Investigation of the Four U.S. Nuns Killed in El Salvador" ("All Things Considered," National Public Radio, June 20, 1982).

[26] Americas Watch Report, supra note 5.

[27] Ibid.

[28] Telephone conversations between Phillip Warburg of the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights and U.S. Government officials close to the investigation, June 1982.

[29] Telephone conversation between Philip Warburg of the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights and Peter Romero, Salvadoran Desk Officer, U.S. Department of State, July 14, 1982; conversation between William P. Ford and Thomas O. Enders, Assistant Secretary of State, July 15, 1982.

[30] "Trial is due for Six Suspects in Salvador Slaying of Nuns," The New York Times, January 27, 1982.

[31] The New York Times, June 7, 1982, supra note 4.

[32] See text accompanying note 25, supra.

[33] Department of State, "Status of the Prosecution," February 17, 1982.

[34] Ibid.

[35] Telephone conversation between Philip Warburg of the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights and Peter Romero, Salvadoran Desk Officer, U.S. Department of State, July 14, 1982.

[36] See Letter from Philip Warburg, Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights to Jeffrey Smith, Assistant Legal Adviser for Law Enforcement and Intelligence Affairs, U.S. Department of State, July 2, 1982.

[37] Mary McGrory, "Pressure Over Missionaries' Deaths Is Only Card Duarte Holds," The Washington Post, October 1, 1981, p. A3.

[38] William P. Ford unpublished minutes of meeting between President Duarte and the churchwomen's families, held at the home of Archbishop James Hickey of Washington, D.C., September 30, 1981.

[39] "Judge in Salvador Frees One of Six in Nuns' Deaths," The New York Times, February 14, 1982.

[40] John Dinges, "New Evidence on Missionaries' Deaths in El Salvador Suggests Official Plot," Pacific News Service, July 3, 1981.

[41] Testimony of Robert White to the Subcommittee on International Development of the House Committee on Banking, Finance, and Urban Affairs, July 23, 1981.

[42] John Dinges, supra note 40.

[43] John Dinges, supra note 40. This sign was handed over to the U.S. Embassy in San Salvador at some point prior to April 13, 1982. See U.S. Department of State, Responses to 17 of 23 questions posed by the churchwomen's families at a meeting with State Department officials, on February 17, 1982. Attachment to letter from L. Craig Johnstone, Director of Central American and Panamanian Affairs, U.S. Department of State, to William P. Ford, April 13, 1982.

[44] The text of this letter, in Spanish and in translation was given to the families of the churchwomen on February 17, 1982, by the U.S. State Department.

[45] John Dinges, supra note 40.

[46] U.S. Department of State, Responses to 17 of 23 questions posed by the churchwomen's families at a meeting with State Department officials, on February 17, 1982. Attachment to letter from L. Craig Johnstone, Director of Central American and Panamanian Affairs, U.S. Department of State, to William P. Ford, April 13, 1982.

[47] "Two Jailed for Murder of Nuns," The Washington Post, February 9, 1982.

[48] Letter from Deane R. Hinton, U.S. Ambassador to El Salvador, to U.S. Congressman Robert A. Roe, November 9, 1981.

[49] The Washington Post, February 9, 1982, supra note 4.

[50] Transcript of Sr. Maria Rieckelman's taped response to a series of questons posed by Sr. Helene O'Sullivan, Maryknoll Sisters, Office of Social Concerns, Ossining, New York. Interview conducted in February 1982.

[51] Amos A. Kermisch, "U.S. seeks shadowy witness who said he saw nuns slain," The Plain Dealer, Cleveland, Ohio, January 21, 1982, p. 1 ff.

[52] U.S. Department of State, cable from Secretary of State Alexander Haig to U.S. Embassy in Mexico, September 1981. Reference to anonymous letter received in Washington, D.C., dated July 21, 1981.

[53] U.S. Department of State, supra note 46.

[54] Ibid.

[55] Ibid.

[56] Ibid.

[57] Meeting of Churchwomen's families with State Department officials, February 17, 1982.

[58] U.S. Department of State, supra note 46.

[59] Telephone conversation between Philip Warburg, Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights, and Jeffrey Smith, Assistant Legal Adviser for Law Enforcement and Intelligence Affairs, U.S. Department of State, July 1, 1982.

[60] U.S. Department of State, Reponses to remaining six of 23 questions posed by the churchwomen's families at a meeting with State Department officials, on February 17, 1982. Attachment to letter from L. Craig Johnstone, Director, Office of Central American Affairs, U.S. Department of State, to Mrs. Judy Keough (sic), June 29, 1982.

[61] U.S. Department of State, supra note 46.

[62] U.S. Department of State, confidential cable from U.S. Embassy in San Salvador, March 13, 1981. Declassified and released to churchwomen's families on June 23, 1982, pursuant to the families' Freedom of Information Act request, filed June 29, 1981.

[63] U.S. Department of State, supra note 46.

[64] National Guard testimony, supra notes 13 and 15.

[65] Amos A. Kermisch, supra, note 51.

[66] National Guard testimony, supra notes 13 and 15.

[67] Letter from Sister Helene O'Sullivan, Maryknoll Sisters Office of Social Concerns, to U.S. Congressman Michael D. Barnes, May 28, 1982. Attachment: "The Red Toyota ¾ Ton Pick-Up: One Example of the Lack of Progress in the Investigation into the Deaths of the Four Churchwomen in El Salvador.

[68] U.S. Department of State, supra note 46.

[69] National Guard testimony, supra notes 13 and 15.

[70] Financial accounting documents provided by Sister Rose Anna Tobin, Maryknoll Sisters, Balboa, Panama.

[71] See U.S. Department of State, Press Statement, January 14, 1981.

[72] "Report to the President of Special Mission to El Salvador" (Rogers-Bowdler Report), December 13, 1980, at 7, as transmitted in a U.S. Department of State cable from the Secretary of State to the U.S. Embassy in El Salvador, December, 1980.

[73] Ibid.

[74] Ibid.

[75] Ibid., p. 9.

[76] Ibid.

[77] See U.S. Department of State, Press Statement, January 14, 1981.

[78] Ibid.

[79] Testimony of Ambassador Robert White before the Subcommittee on Foreign Operations of the House Appropriations Committee, February 25, 1981.

[80] U.S. Department of State cable from Ambassador Robert White to the Secretary of State, date unknown.

[81] Testimony of Robert White before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, April 9, 1981.

[82] Letter from Thomas O. Enders, Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, to Michael R. Donovan, April 20, 1982.

[83] On February 17, 1982, members of the families, their attorney, and a representative of the Maryknoll Order met with Mr. Enders and other State Department officials.

[84] See Text accompanying note 37, supra.

[85] Letter from Ambassador Deane R. Hinton to William P. Ford, March 11, 1982.

[86] See Letter from Ambassador Deane R. Hinton to Representative Robert A. Roe, November 9, 1981, p. 4.

[87] Letter from William P. Ford to Representative Gerry E. Studds, August 7, 1981, at 3.

[88] "Ambassador Kirkpatrick: Reagan-Appointed Democrat Speaks Her Mind on World, Domestic Politics," The Tampa Tribune, December 25, 1980.

[89] Letter from Jeane J. Kirkpatrick to Senator Charles H. Percy and Senator Claiborne Pell, date unknown.

[90] Letter from Thomas O. Enders, Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, to Michael R. Donovan, April 20, 1982.

[91] Ibid.

[92] Testimony of Secretary of State Alexander Haig before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, March 18, 1981.

[93] See Letter from David E. Simcox, State Department Bureau of Inter-American Affairs, to William P. Ford, April 16, 1981. Mr. Simcox wrote, "the suggestion that the car was attempting to run a roadblock was only one theory and not a fact."

[94] Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. sec. 552, et seq., as amended.

[95] Letter from Michael H. Posner, Executive Director of the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights, to U.S. Department of State, June 29, 1981.

[96] To date, the State Department has identified 208 of its documents that are relevant to the killing. On December 23, 1981, the State Department released 99 documents, 9 of which were subject to deletions, and on June 23, 1982, it released 34 documents, 23 of which were subject to deletions. Letters from John R. Burke, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State, to Michael H. Posner, Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights, December 23, 1981, and June 23, 1982.

[97] Telephone conversation between Philip Warburg, Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights, and Peter Romero, Salvadoran Desk Officer, U.S. Department of State, June 30, 1982.

[98] Letters from Michael H. Posner, Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights, to FBI, CIA and Defense Intelligence Agency, March 11, 1982.

[99] Letter from Donald W. Goodman, Chief of Staff, Defense Intelligence Agency, to Michael H. Posner, Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights, April 16, 1982.

[100] Letter from John E. Bacon, Information and Privacy Coordinator, Central Intelligence Agency, to Michael H. Posner, Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights, April 8, 1982.

[101] Ibid.

[102] Letter originated by Representative Richard L. Ottinger, Mary Rose Oakar and Peter Peyser, to William Webster, Director, FBI; William J. Casey, Director, CIA; Lt. Gen. James A. Williams, Director, Defense Intelligence Agency; and Alexander Haig, Secretary of State, June 18, 1981.

[103] Letter from William H. Webster, Director, FBI, to Representative Richard L. Ottinger, June 30, 1982.

[104] International Security and Development Cooperaton Act of 1981, D.L. 97-113, 95 Stat. 1519.

[105] Ibid., P.L. (97-113 sec. 728(e).

[106] See The White House, Justification for Presidential Determination to Authorize Continued Security Assistance for El Salvador, January 28, 1982.

[107] "Trial is Due for Six Suspects in Salvador Slaying of Nuns," The New York Times, January 27, 1982.●

ORDERS FOR THURSDAY

ORDER FOR THE RECOGNITION OF SENATOR CHILES

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after the time for the two leaders under the standing order, there be a special order entered for the Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES) for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the time of the special order tomorrow there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for a period to expire at 9:45 a.m. during which Senators may speak therein for not to exceed 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 9 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, there is an order to convene tomorrow morning at 9 a.m.; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. STEVENS. Is there any further business to come before the Senate?

If there be no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess in accordance with the previous order.

There being no objection, at 6:58 p.m., the Senate recessed until Thursday, July 22, 1982, at 9 a.m.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 21, 1982:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Arthur H. Davis, Jr., of Colorado, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Paraguay.

George W. Landau, of Maryland, a Career Member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of Minister-Counselor, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Venezuela.

Robert Werner Duemling, of California, a Career Member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of Minister-Counselor, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Suriname.

Nicholas Platt, of the District of Columbia, a Career Member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of Minister-Counselor, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Zambia.

The above nominations were approved subject to the nominees' commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, July 21, 1982

The House met at 11 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

As we bow our hearts in prayer, we are conscious that we do so in a land where we can express our faith and experience the freedom so precious to us. Yet, even as we thank You, O God, for this gift, we remember those peoples who live in oppression and cannot enjoy the liberty by which we have been blessed. Protect, guard, and give hope to those people whose human rights are denied, and may they sense our prayer of support and fellowship as they seek to know more fully those good gifts that You have given through Your creation. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. WEBER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WEBER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 358, nays 26, answered "present" 1, not voting 49, as follows:

[Roll No. 196]

YEAS—358

Addabbo	Beard	Brinkley
Akaka	Bedell	Brodhead
Albosta	Benedict	Brooks
Alexander	Benjamin	Broomfield
Anderson	Bennett	Brown (CO)
Andrews	Bereuter	Broyhill
Annunzio	Bethune	Burton, Phillip
Anthony	Bevill	Butler
Archer	Biaggi	Byron
Ashbrook	Bingham	Campbell
Aspin	Bliley	Carman
AuCoin	Boggs	Carney
Badham	Boner	Chappell
Bafalis	Bonior	Chappie
Bailey (MO)	Bonker	Cheney
Bailey (PA)	Bouquard	Clausen
Barnard	Breaux	Clinger
Coats	Grisham	McHugh
Coelho	Guarini	McKinney
Coleman	Gunderson	Mica
Collins (IL)	Hagedorn	Michel
Collins (TX)	Hall (OH)	Miller (CA)
Conable	Hall, Ralph	Mineta
Conte	Hall, Sam	Minish
Conyers	Hamilton	Mitchell (NY)
Corcoran	Hammerschmidt	Moakley
Courter	Hance	Molinari
Coyne, James	Hansen (ID)	Mollohan
Coyne, William	Hansen (UT)	Montgomery
Craig	Hartnett	Moore
Crane, Daniel	Hatcher	Moorhead
Crane, Philip	Heckler	Morrison
Crockett	Hefner	Mottl
D'Amours	Heftel	Myers
Daniel, Dan	Hendon	Napier
Daniel, R. W.	Hertel	Natcher
Dannemeyer	Hightower	Neal
Daschle	Hillis	Nelligan
Daub	Holland	Nelson
Davis	Hollenbeck	Nichols
Deckard	Holt	Nowak
DeNardis	Hopkins	O'Brien
Derwinski	Horton	Oakar
Dickinson	Howard	Oberstar
Dicks	Hoyer	Obey
Dingell	Hubbard	Oxley
Dixon	Huckaby	Panetta
Donnelly	Hughes	Parris
Dorgan	Hunter	Pashayan
Dornan	Hutto	Patman
Dougherty	Hyde	Patterson
Dowdy	Ireland	Paul
Downey	Jeffords	Pease
Duncan	Jenkins	Perkins
Dunn	Jones (OK)	Petri
Dwyer	Kastenmeier	Peyser
Dymally	Kazen	Pickle
Dyson	Kemp	Porter
Early	Kennelly	Price
Eckart	Kildee	Pritchard
Edgar	Kindness	Pursell
Edwards (AL)	Kogovsek	Quillen
Edwards (CA)	Kramer	Rahall
Edwards (OK)	LaFalce	Railsback
Emery	Lagomarsino	Rangel
English	Lantos	Ratchford
Erdahl	Latta	Regula
Erlenborn	Leach	Reuss
Evans (DE)	Leath	Rhodes
Evans (GA)	Lee	Ritter
Evans (IN)	Lehman	Roberts (KS)
Fary	Leland	Roberts (SD)
Fascell	Lent	Robinson
Fazio	Levitas	Roe
Fenwick	Lewis	Rogers
Ferraro	Livingston	Rostenkowski
Fiedler	Loeffler	Roth
Findley	Long (MD)	Roukema
Fish	Lott	Rousselot
Fithian	Lowery (CA)	Roybal
Flippo	Lowry (WA)	Rudd
Florio	Lujan	Russo
Foglietta	Luken	Santini
Foley	Lundine	Sawyer
Ford (MI)	Lungren	Schneider
Frank	Madigan	Schulze
Frost	Markey	Schumer
Fuqua	Marlenee	Selberling
Garcia	Marriott	Sensenbrenner
Gaydos	Martin (IL)	Shamansky
Gephardt	Martin (NC)	Shannon
Gibbons	Matsui	Sharp
Gilman	Mattox	Shaw
Gingrich	Mavroules	Shelby
Ginn	Mazzoli	Shumway
Glickman	McClory	Shuster
Gonzalez	McCollum	Siljander
Gore	McCurdy	Skeen
Gradison	McDade	Skelton
Gramm	McDonald	Smith (AL)
Green	McEwen	Smith (IA)
Gregg	McGrath	Smith (NE)
Smith (NJ)	Tauke	Whitehurst
Smith (OR)	Taylor	Whitley
Snowe	Thomas	Whittaker
Snyder	Traxler	Williams (MT)
Solarz	Trible	Wilson
Spence	Udall	Winn
St Germain	Vander Jagt	Wirth
Stangeland	Vento	Wolf
Stanton	Volkmer	Wolpe
Stark	Walgren	Wortley
Staton	Wampler	Wright
Stenholm	Watkins	Wyden
Stokes	Waxman	Wylie
Stratton	Weaver	Yatron
Studds	Weber (MN)	Young (FL)
Stump	Weber (OH)	Zablocki
Swift	Weiss
Synar	White

NAYS—26

Atkinson	Gejdenson	Mitchell (MD)
Barnes	Goodling	Murphy
Beilenson	Harkin	Roemer
Coughlin	Hawkins	Sabo
Dreier	Hiler	Schroeder
Emerson	Jacobs	Walker
Evans (IA)	Johnston	Washington
Fields	LeBoutillier	Young (AK)
Forsythe	Miller (OH)

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1

Ottinger

NOT VOTING—49

Applegate	Fowler	Rinaldo
Blanchard	Frenzel	Rodino
Boland	Goldwater	Rose
Bolling	Gray	Rosenthal
Bowen	Jeffries	Savage
Brown (CA)	Jones (NC)	Scheuer
Brown (OH)	Jones (TN)	Simon
Burgener	Long (LA)	Smith (PA)
Burton, John	Marks	Solomon
Chisholm	Martin (NY)	Tauzin
Clay	Martinez	Whitten
de la Garza	McCloskey	Williams (OH)
Dellums	Mikulski	Yates
Derrick	Moffett	Young (MO)
Ertel	Murtha	Zeferetti
Ford (TN)	Pepper
Fountain	Richmond

□ 1115

So the Journal was approved.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

VIOLENCE CANNOT BE RATIONALIZED

(Mr. BIAGGI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, for the past 5 years, I have served as chairman of the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs which today has 126 members. Our purpose is to try and advance a stronger U.S.

role in the ongoing struggle for peace and justice in Northern Ireland.

From the outset, and in fact, throughout my 14 years in Congress I have condemned the use of violence in Northern Ireland. I rise today to denounce two especially despicable acts of violence which took place yesterday in London. The provisional IRA took credit for 2 bombings which killed 8 soldiers and 2 horses and injured 51 persons including more than half who were innocent bystanders.

Violence of this type cannot be rationalized—nor should it be. The goal of peace, justice, and human rights will never be achieved by violence whether civilian or official. I renew my call for all sides to end violence and instead work for an immediate and lasting political solution to this longstanding crisis.

ODE TO THE BOHEMIAN CLUB

(Mr. PEYSER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, I was reading in the paper about some of our leaders going off to camp the other day and so I felt I would express my feelings in verse. This is the "Ode to the Bohemian Club":

ODE TO THE BOHEMIAN CLUB

With deficits high and unemployment still growing
I was pleased to see where our leaders are going Messrs. Meese and Smith with Weinberger in tow
Will go to camp with men who earn lots of dough
They call it a club where intellects meet
To hear them all talk must be a real treat
They don't allow women to work or to play
You can bet how they feel about old ERA
It seems that the men like to walk around bare
Sipping their drinks in the cooling night air
To the ladies I say and I don't mean to be rude
Count your blessings for not seeing Ed Meese in the nude

LABOR WOES CONTINUE

(Mr. WEISS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, figures released yesterday by the Bureau of Labor Statistics have reaffirmed that Reaganomics is not working. The Bureau announced that nearly 23.4 million Americans were unemployeed at some point during 1981, the first full year of the Reagan Presidency.

This means that one in every five potential workers were without work for some time during the year. Predictably, the number of black Americans unemployed for a portion of 1981 reached record levels of over 30 percent. None of these statistics include people so discouraged that they did not even look for jobs in 1981.

As each day passes and more cold statistics are revealed, it becomes clear to all of us that the President's economic program is failing. His administration preaches the tenets of supply-side economics—but it ignores the evidence that investments in human capital have been at least as important as sustaining our economic growth as investments in physical capital.

We now have the largest number of unemployed, involuntarily part-time and discouraged workers who have dropped out of the labor market at any time since the beginning of World War II. With the Reagan administration continuing its senseless assault on employment training, youth employment, and jobs programs—and with Congress blindly condoning the assault—the situation promises only to worsen.

PRESIDENT'S APPROVAL OF SALE OF SENSITIVE TECHNOLOGY TO ARGENTINA SHOULD BE REVERSED

(Mr. FOGLIETTA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, President Reagan approved the sale of sensitive technology to Argentina that takes Argentina one giant step closer to building a nuclear weapon. This is a terrible mistake. America has never, and should never, be in the business of adding members to the so-called nuclear club.

Mr. Reagan's decision violates the spirit of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978. Mr. Reagan's decision reverses 37 years of American policy.

Argentina is not willing to submit to International Atomic Energy Agency supervision of her nuclear facilities. Argentina refuses to state categorically that she is not building, and will not build, nuclear weapons.

The sale of a process control system for use in an Argentinean heavy water production facility is an unwise and dangerous move. I am today introducing, with my friend and colleague, Mr. MARKEY, a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that this decision must be quickly reversed. I urge every Member's support of this resolution.

Thank you.

75TH ANNIVERSARY OF WORLD SCOUTING ORGANIZATION

(Mr. DENARDIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DENARDIS. Mr Speaker, it is a great privilege for me to congratulate and commend the World Scouting Organization on its 75th anniversary.

As an organization which teaches young boys citizenship and leadership abilities, the Boy Scouts, involving 13 million young men and leaders belonging to units in more than 110 countries, are guided by their motto "Be Prepared" and "learning by doing is the method used to teach them."

Sir Robert Baden-Powell of Great Britain founded the Scouting movement in 1907. Three years later William D. Boyce founded the first Scouting unit in the United States. Today, there are more than 5 million people belonging to the Boy Scouts of America.

The purposes and beliefs of the Boy Scouts throughout the world are the same. Each national organization belongs to the World Scouting Conference which meets every 2 years for the purpose of electing leaders and unifying the goals of the organization as well as giving Scouts from all over the world the opportunity to meet one another and exchange cultures.

This year, I am proud to say, the World Scouting Organization will be holding their diamond jubilee in my congressional district. It will be sponsored by the Quinnipiac Council Inc., Boy Scouts of America, spanning 16 communities in south-central Connecticut.

Once again I wish to congratulate the Scouting movement on this anniversary and thank the movement for the example it has set for us all.

□ 1130

THE IMPACT OF THE 747 AND THE C-5 DECISION

(Mr. MORRISON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I am concerned that some Members of the House may be misled by information they have received related to the impact in their districts of the 747—C-5 decision coming up today.

Let me cite my own case as an example. The letter I received starts out by saying:

Jobs and businesses in your district will suffer a direct adverse impact if an amendment to H.R. 6030 is not defeated.

The letter goes on:

If such an amendment is passed, it will mean that the C-5B aircraft will not be procured and, as a result, it will have a real monetary impact on these people in your district.

Then it lists the name of the company, "26,600,000."

I followed through, because I knew the company involved is supportive of the use of 747's for our military airlift. The facts are that this company would be encouraged to bid, in competition with hundreds of others, for work on the C-5. Now, that is how it should be, but I was concerned that the Lockheed Co., may be unintentionally misleading Members into the belief that certain dollar volumes and certain jobs automatically come to their districts if they vote to build the C-5B.

I am sure that the same dollar volume that shows for my district will also appear in letters to numerous other Members; so please be informed, but do not be misled by this tactic.

THE COWARDLY IRA

(Mr. DOUGHERTY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday a group of cowards in London exploded some bombs which killed British soldiers and innocent civilians. These cowards did this in what they said was in the name of patriotism and in the name of a United Ireland.

Mr. Speaker, as the grandson of Irish immigrants, I rise today to condemn the actions of the IRA in their uncalled for and deadly launching of the attack on innocent civilians and members of the British Army.

The actions by the provisional wing of the IRA, Mr. Speaker, have done the cause of Irish unity a great disservice. I also feel, however, Mr. Speaker, that it is necessary for those of us in this Congress to take to the well and to publicly condemn those in this country, particularly those active in the Irish-American community who support the provisional IRA, who see the Irish Republican Army as some type of a patriotic organization.

Today I call upon the leaders of the Irish-American community in the United States to disassociate themselves publicly and permanently from the cause of the Irish Republican Army.

CARIBBEAN BASIN INITIATIVE

(Mr. EVANS of Delaware asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EVANS of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, today is Caribbean Basin Initiative Day and representatives from 16 Caribbean nations will participate in a series of events to focus national attention on the President's Caribbean initiative.

The economic and national security interests of our own Nation—important to every citizen of the United States—are closely bound to the stability and development of the nations in this region. The Caribbean Basin is absolutely vital to the economic well-being of America. Nearly half of all our trade travels through the Panama Canal or the Gulf of Mexico. Two-thirds of our imported oil—the lifeblood of U.S. industrial production—follows this same route. Support for the policies of the Caribbean Basin Initiative—is critical to American security, American jobs, and the preservation of those essential freedoms Americans have cherished for so many generations.

WITHDRAWAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 443

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name may be withdrawn as a cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 443, which deals with a subject very much on the minds of all Americans: Nuclear war.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

ERLENBORN WITHDRAWS AS COSPONSOR OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 443

(Mr. ERLENBORN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI) invited other Members to cosponsor this resolution, he described it as, "* * * embodying the following basic ingredients of a sound nuclear arms control and national security policy." He then listed the seven basic ingredients. They included an immediate beginning of the strategic arms reduction talks (START) and continued Soviet and United States adherence to present limitations and controls as embodied in SALT I, SALT II and the ABM treaty. No mention was made in the resolution itself of a freeze on nuclear weapons at existing levels. Thus, it was with great hope that I joined as a cosponsor.

As chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman took House Joint Resolution 443 before the committee, amended it, and then introduced a clean bill (House Joint Resolution 521), which the committee ordered reported. The new bill is far different from its predecessor. It starts by having the United States and the Soviet Union agree upon a verifiable nuclear freeze and goes on to mandate U.S. approval of the controversial SALT II agreement.

The new resolution puts us in the position of accepting nuclear superiority in Europe. The end result, I fear, will be failure to achieve the aim of all of us, worldwide nuclear arms reduction.

Because the two resolutions will henceforth be identified with each other, I must dissociate myself from this impractical attempt to address the challenge of preventing nuclear war. Approval of House Joint Resolution 521 may make us feel better, but at the real cost of giving away our negotiating power to bring about a reduction in the nuclear threat to the world.

We must, however, address the challenge. Therefore, I have joined in cosponsoring House Concurrent Resolution 297, which does not suffer the fatal flaws of the new Zablocki resolution.

SOME SOBER AND RESPONSIBLE WORDS ON THE IRA

(Mrs. FENWICK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself with the remarks of my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DOUGHERTY).

I do not think we often hear such sober and responsible words, coming as they do from one whose devotion to the cause of the Irish people and whose affection for the Irish people is well known in this country and I am sure in Ireland itself.

We do not often hear words as sober and responsible as these. I think we do honor to this House and certainly to the gentleman who gave us that statement and honor to the people of North Ireland particularly, who have suffered so much and who know themselves exactly what this kind of outrage means in the life of a community.

We can take comfort from this statement—all of us who abhor violence, who are determined to turn our backs from it, who are determined to seek justice for all people, including those of Ireland. It is good that we have heard what we have heard here today.

NO SENSITIVE NUCLEAR EQUIPMENT TO ARGENTINA

(Mr. MARKEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I join the gentleman from Pennsylvania Mr. FOGLIETTA) in introducing a sense of the Congress resolution that the Department of Energy should withdraw its authorization of the export of a sensitive computer control system for Argentina's heavy water plant.

Mr. Speaker, this authorization marks another serious undercutting of past administrations' efforts to stem the flow of sensitive nuclear materials to Argentina, which by all reliable estimates is marching steadily toward the capability of building a nuclear bomb.

To sell sensitive nuclear equipment to Argentina, a nation that has refused to accept full international inspections of its nuclear materials is ludicrous, Mr. Speaker. Argentina has refused to sign the 1968 Nonproliferation Treaty. It has refused to ratify a treaty which would prohibit nuclear weapons in Latin America. And it has refused to rule out the possibility of acquiring nuclear bombs.

Just recently, Adm. Carlos Castro Madero, chairman of Argentina's Atomic Energy Commission, has said that Argentina reserves the right for itself to undertake the development of euphemistically so-called nonproscribed military uses. He was speaking about nuclear bombs.

Is this the kind of nation we should be selling sensitive nuclear equipment? Are we to ignore completely the implications of the Falkland Islands crisis, which showed how a military conflict could easily turn into a nuclear conflict.

Previous administrations, realizing the dangerous implications of Argentina's nuclear program and its goal of nuclear independence, have tried to pressure that country to put all of its nuclear facilities under the inspections and controls of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Now the Reagan administration has pulled the rug out from under those efforts. The Department of Energy has authorized the sale of a computerized process control system to Sulzer Brothers in Switzerland for ultimate use in the Argentine heavy-water production facility.

Mr. Speaker, our resolution calls on the Department of Energy to withdraw that authorization. I urge my colleagues to support this resolution. It is time Congress drew the line on this administration's cavalier attitude toward the export of sensitive nuclear material abroad, material that could be used to constract nuclear weapons.

TWELFTH ANNUAL REPORT OF CONTROL ON ENVIRONMENTAL QUALITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, Wednesday, July 21, 1982.)

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT, 1983

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 6030) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1983 for the Armed Forces for procurement, for research, development, test, and evaluation, and for operation and maintenance, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the Armed Forces and for civilian employees of the Department of Defense, to authorize appropriations for such fiscal year for civil defense, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PRICE).

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 6030, with Mr. AUCOIN (Chairman pro tempore) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Tuesday, July 20, 1982, title I was open to amendment at any point and pending was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES).

The Chair recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, at the outset, let me congratulate and thank my colleague, the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. BYRON) for the coauthorship of this initiative which is before us this morning; my appreciation to the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. DENARDIS), and the gentleman from New York (Mr. GREEN) for their total participation and support for this initiative.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to urge my colleagues to join in supporting this amendment to strike and defer procurement funding for the first nine MX production missiles.

As a member of the Armed Services Subcommittee on Procurement and Military Nuclear Systems, which has jurisdiction for the $1.14 billion now requested to start building the MX, I have spent considerable time examining our military needs—our strategic requirements—and the resources necessary to build and maintain a strong and credible deterrent.

All of us support a modern and credible defense capability for the United States. We all agree that our top priority must be to preserve peace and freedom throughout the world. But to deploy expensive systems of marginal capability or questionable survivability, does not serve our national interest, nor promote stability throughout the world.

The MX program as it currently exists now represents a "build first, justify later" mentality this Nation can no longer afford.

It is not the missile itself which is now in question. Under this amendment, work on its research and development continues. Rather, it is the proposal for missile basing, specifically the interim deployment in Minuteman III silos, which forces the presentation and adoption of this amendment. In countless hearings over the past 5 years, where officials from the Defense Department and Air Force have testified, one point was reiterated over and over.

That point was simple. The MX missile would be effective only if its basing system was survivable—and to be survivable—the missile and basing system had to be mobile.

In Armed Services hearings held last October, the chairman and the ranking minority member conceded that MX missiles in Minuteman silos will be just as vulnerable as the Minuteman missiles now in those silos.

One area where I must respectfully disagree with my colleagues on the committee is their rationale for proceeding with MX this year. The committee report states that "nuclear weapons are the currency of superpower status," and that even an appropriate and justifiable delay in the MX program "would send to the Soviet Union a signal" that in some way the United States was not serious in its commitment to rebuilding its defenses.

This might be true if MX existed in isolation—if it were the only weapon in the Defense budget. This is not the case. It appears that some colleagues are more interested in the perception of MX, than in its actual production, deployment and military value.

They fail to realize that the U.S. commitment to rebuilding its defenses cannot be disputed. This authorization bill requests funding for the B-1 bomber, and the advanced technology bomber. This bill requests funding for a new Trident submarine, the Trident I and Trident II sea-launched ballistic missile. And this authorization bill requests funding for air, ground, and sea-launched cruise missiles.

Let there be no mistake, all of us are serious and committed to rebuilding our forces where necessary.

Adoption of this amendment of MX will not compromise existing strategic capability, for the interim MX deployment plan now on the books, and endorsed by the President's National Security Adviser as recently as May 22, does not enhance our strategic deterrent, nor promote the survivability of our land based missiles.

Last October, the Reagan administration canceled the controversial multiple protective shelter basing system for MX. All of us remember that program. It involved the racetracks in Utah and Nevada. Two hundred MX missiles were to be deployed and shuttled among 4,600 different shelters.

At the time of cancellation, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger explained that the multiple protective shelters were not survivable nor worth the investment required. "It uses up the resources that would be available for other systems," was the Secretary's direct quote.

Instead of MPS, the Reagan administration announced a series of modifications to existing Titan and Minuteman silos to accommodate the deployment of MX. At the same time, the Air Force was to proceed with additional research and development on alternative permanent basing systems. Incidently, at that moment in October, the Secretary of Defense indicated that the most promising long-term basing system was something called the continuous patrol aircraft, a system which would keep MX missiles airborne, 24 hours a day.

However, there were problems almost immediately. On two occasions after the October announcement, the administration modified the interim MX deployment plan. First, they decided not to use the Titan silos. Then, plans to reconstruct and harden Minuteman silos to 5,000 pounds per square inch were abandoned.

The MX interim deployment plan, which existed in March of this year, was to deploy 40 missiles in existing Minuteman III silos. The Air Force projected the cost of the interim basing of these 40 missiles in the Minuteman silos at $4.3 billion. That translates into deployment costs of $100 million per missile.

The Senate Armed Services Committee, expressing their doubts on the interim deployment plan, removed the MX production funding from their fiscal year 1983 authorization, cutting the $1.4 billion for procurement and an additional $715 million in research and development for the interim basing. The Senate Committee made reference to the unfavorable cost estimates for the interim MX/Minuteman deployment plan, and expressed concern at the excessive vulnerability of these high-value, militarily important weapons in so small a number of relatively easily destroyed shelters.

On the basis of the Senate cut, the Department of Defense decided to make a last stand to attempt to preserve the MX funding, and the search for a permanent MX basing system was on, and it seems we have had a different basing plan presented each month.

The first "permanent" basing system to be publicly reported was something called modular array basing, or MAB for short. This plan was reported by the Air Force magazine in March of this year; right about the time of the Senate cut. Under this basing system, the modular array basing, 200 MX missiles were to be deployed at or very close to existing military bases.

Next, was a proposal reported in April. This time the plan was to orbit MX missile warheads in space. Under this proposal, which was being studied by the Air Force Ballistic Missile Office at Norton Air Force Base in California, the missiles would be launched into orbit at the first sign of a Soviet attack. These warheads would orbit high above the Earth, where they could either be activated and released toward their targets, or recalled to "fall harmlessly into a remote area."

Then in May, we heard the first reports about the closely spaced basing, or dense pack as it is called by the press and public. This basing plan involves clustering 100 missiles in hardened silos in an area 10 to 15 square miles. Under this plan the fratricidal effects of exploding nuclear weapons would hypothetically prevent the destruction of the missile cluster.

Later, as additional information surfaced, the dense pack plan was amended to include a ballistic missile defense system, and the construction of a second and third missile cluster to add elements of deceptive basing.

Members of Congress, the public, and even the administration could only ask, "What Next?"

With all this confusion, the President's National Security Adviser, Judge William P. Clark, briefed members of the Armed Services Committee on MX basing and the President's National Security Decision Directive 35. Later Judge Clark made a public address at the Center for Strategic and International Studies at Georgetown University.

In his Georgetown remarks, Judge Clark stated that the President would make a decision on a permanment basing system for MX by the end of the year. Of the proposed permanent basing system for MX by the end of the year. Of the proposed permanent basing systems, closely spaced basing was the most promising. But neither the White House—nor Department of Defense—made a formal commitment to dense pack. The President was committed to proceeding with the MX/Minuteman deployment until the permanent basing system was available.

Judge Clark also indicated that the President's memorandum terminated consideration of the continuous patrol aircraft as an MX basing option. As I mentioned a moment ago, the CPA was last year's most promising long-term MX basing mode, according to Secretary Weinberger.

The experts agree that Minuteman III basing of MX is no answer. Congress, for more than 5 years, has been told by scientists and military leaders alike that Soviet ICBM accuracy was making fixed silo based ICBM's vulnerable. This nonsurvivability of our silos, that is the so called window of vulnerability.

The window of vulnerability is not the result of a lack of capability on the part of U.S. missiles. Instead, the vulnerability stems from a lack of survivability in our missile silos.

□ 1145

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

(On request of Mr. STRATTON and by unanimous consent, Mr. MAVROULES was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I thank my chairman, and I yield to him at this time.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman from Massachusetts is making a very fine statement, as he always does in our committee and elsewhere.

The thrust of the gentleman's statement, as I gather, is really directed against what he just referred to as the confusion and the mixup that attend the basing mode of the MX missile; but as I understand the gentleman's amendment, what he is proposing to do is not only to cut out money for the basing mode but he is also cutting out all of the money for the production of the missile. Am I correct in that?

Mr. MAVROULES. That is absolutely correct, Mr. Chairman. And I do appreciate the chairman getting me the extra 5 minutes.

What I am saying to the gentleman and all Members of Congress, particularly in our committee, they have been playing around with this missile now, the basing of this missile, for the last 5 years.

I have indicated to the gentleman and to other Members chronologically the fact that they have not a base mode at this point that they can offer to our committee and to Members of Congress that would deserve that kind of funding.

Therefore, I am recommending the elimination of $1,140,000,000.

Mr. STRATTON. The gentleman is aware, is he not, that the MX, even if we get started with it right away, will not be deployed until 1986? Does the gentleman not have enough confidence in the scientific and technological genius of America, when we can put a man on the Moon, that by 1986 we will have developed a basing mode?

Mr. MAVROULES. I have tremendous confidence in the technology of the United States, Mr. Chairman, and if I did not, and feel we did not have proper deterrents in other areas—we can get into that later on in the day—I would not be proposing this amendment this morning.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. HOPKINS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman: If I understand his amendment correctly, it only seeks to delay the actual production of the MX missile until a basing mode can be determined; is that a correct assumption?

Mr. MAVROULES. That is correct.

Mr. HOPKINS. So the gentleman is not canceling the MX; he is only delaying it until a basing mode can be determined for the MX missile?

Mr. MAVROULES. The gentleman is correct, my dear colleague and friend, Larry.

Let me also say to the gentleman that I do not have in my amendment the elimination of funding for research and development.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think that is an important point.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MAVROULES. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding further to me.

Let me ask the gentleman if he has any knowledge about the configuration of the missile? Would it be different, that is, would the configuration be different, if it is launched from a silo than it would be if it is launched from a racetrack or from an airplane, or would it be the same?

Mr. MAVROULES. I think what we ought to be talking about is the basing system, itself. Has the Pentagon or this administration or the last administration, for that matter, been able to come before us with a basing mode and say to us, to you and to me in briefings and intelligence briefings, that we have a system that will work? Until we get that answer, I think the gentleman's question is premature.

Mr. HOPKINS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ROEMER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, in trying to understand the gentleman's amendment and its thought-provoking nature, my question is: Does the gentleman oppose the MX or does he oppose the attending confusion over the basing mode decision? Or are they one and the same? Can the gentleman differentiate between the basing mode and the effectiveness of the missile?

Mr. MAVROULES. My amendment refers strictly to the basing mode.

I was asking the Members of Congress to give consideration to the elimination of $1,140,000,000. At no time—at no time—do I mention or state the reduction or the elimination of research and development funds, and I think that answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. ROEMER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, if I may tag onto the question that my colleague from Kentucky inquired about, what I understand is that we go ahead with research and development, but that in fact we would not move ahead, as a Congress, until the administration comes to us and says this is the basing mode, and then we have a chance to approve that. Is that correct?

□ 1200

Mr. MAVROULES. That is exactly correct.

Mr. SIMON. If that is what the amendment does, it seems to me that it makes eminent good sense, because we have had so many basing modes and so much money tossed around needlessly that I would hope that the gentleman's amendment might be approved by this body.

Mr. MAVROULES. I certainly thank the gentleman for his comments.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. COURTER and by unanimous consent, Mr. MAVROULES was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I appreciate the fact that the gentleman is very concerned about this issue, as I am as well.

It is my understanding that the gentleman's concern, he is alleging that he is concerned about basing mode only. However, his amendment speaks to the deletion of funds for the production of the missile as well, is that correct?

Mr. MAVROULES. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. COURTER. If the gentleman is concerned about basing mode, why then does his amendment reach out further than that in order to delete production funds?

Mr. MAVROULES. I can ask the gentleman the question in reverse and say to the gentleman, if you build a missile, where are you going to put it, in a warehouse?

Mr. COURTER. The gentleman from New York indicated, I think fairly clearly, that the missile will not be deployed until 1986, and certainly I think the gentleman probably received a letter from the President of the United States indicating that most certainly by December of this very year a decision with regard to basing mode would be completed. I would be satisfied if the President said some time during the next 24 months, 2 years, because simply the issue of basing mode does not have to be answered today in order to proceed with the missile.

Mr. MAVROULES. The gentleman and I know, we sit on the same committee, and I certainly respect his views and where he is coming from. Members of Congress have been hearing this argument for the last 5 years, and meanwhile the U.S. taxpayers were paying for a program perhaps which some day and one day may not be effective. We do not know that in the future. I have heard the argument on more than one occasion that the Minuteman III silos would be vulnerable—and this goes from past administrations—by the year 1984, and suddenly this administration comes in and says that now they are vulnerable in 1986, a 2-year jump.

If indeed our silos are vulnerable, why are we making a decision? Why would we make a decision to put the MX missile in the Minuteman silos? Is that not vulnerable?

What I am saying to the gentleman is, we have got to synchronize our methods and our programs. If we have a basing mode that we can put the missile into, then I would not be offering this amendment at this point.

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Chairman, was it not correct that the Secretary of Defense, Mr. Weinberger, before the Armed Services Committee in May of this year made the statement, and I quote:

"If we do not deploy the MX in Minuteman II silos, it will be necessary to warehouse the missiles."

Mr. MAVROULES. It is my understanding that that statement was made.

Mrs. BYRON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I think one problem this Congress has had is that we have not been able to divorce the basing issue from the missile itself. If we look at the MX missile, if we call it the Minuteman IV instead of the MX missile, it would be very reasonable to go on with production. I think that the gentleman understands that I believe it was 1969 when we built our last Minuteman missile, and at that time they had a life expectancy of some 7 years.

The Minuteman has three warheads. The 308 SS-18 missiles the Soviets have developed during the time we were negotiating SALT I and SALT II with them have 10 warheads. The MX missile really is still not in the same position that the SS-17's, SS-18's, and 19's are. If you completely forgot about the basing mode and said that perhaps we will never find a situation in which we can put the MX missile in an invulnerable position, it would still be a good position for this Congress to go ahead with it.

Mr. MAVROULES. Let me reply, if I may. If we find that that decision has to be made, it would be ineffective and the system itself would not be useful, then perhaps we should be talking about putting tax dollars into other systems rather than the MX missile system.

The point I want to make, and make it very clear, very clear, if indeed the silos are vulnerable by between 1984 and 1986, why are not they vulnerable for the MX missile which will be in those silos? That is the question I ask of the gentleman.

Mr. HUNTER. I think that the gentleman is going to find that practically every portion of the triad is taking on increased vulnerability. Probably in the near future we may see our submarine force taking on vulnerability. I would say that it is important for this reason: The Soviets developed the SS-17, 18, and 19 with the intent of basically taking the field away from us in ICBM's. I think termination of the MX missile, going ahead with research and development, stopping procurement, would basically concede the field to the Soviets, and I think the last 10 years of Soviet reaction to our unilateral——

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. HUNTER and by unanimous consent, Mr. MAVROULES was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. HUNTER. I think historically, and I think the gentleman will concur with this, when we have reduced our military systems, and I am looking at our decision to terminate the B-1 bomber in 1976, our decision to negotiate SALT I and SALT II in the late 1960's and early 1970's, actually resulted in the Soviets increasing and accelerating their development of strategic systems, and I see the same thing happening here.

Mr. MAVROULES. Now the gentleman is getting into the entire defense posture of this country.

Mr. HUNTER. That is what we have to look at.

Mr. MAVROULES. Let me ask the gentleman a question and give him an answer to the same question, because he is talking about submarines, bombers, communications, and technology. Would he trade what we have with the Soviets? Before he answers that, I am going to say that I would not for purposes of a deterent and defense posture for this country. That is my question to the gentleman.

Mr. HUNTER. My answer to the gentleman is this: I would not trade what we have with the Soviet Union today, but I think by 1986 or 1987 it might be a pretty close call. I probably would be in the affirmative.

Mr. MAVROULES. My dear colleague and friend, I say to you that I have far more confidence in the technology of this country than I do in the technology of the Soviet Union.

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the sponsor of the amendment for putting it forward. It has been something I and many Members have wrestled with; that is, that is why I am a cosponsor and in favor of continuing the research and development of the missile, but we have serious problems in spending money when we do not know where it is going to be based. We have heard over 34 different basing modes put forth. They talk about the air, sea, and land. They have all been rejected. The latest, of course, was the hardening that was rejected because they could not base the missile in a hard enough silo because they could not harden the old silos enough.

The fact is, I think it is somewhat ironic that yesterday this Congress and the Armed Services Committee made a difficult choice as to where to cut the defense budget. I know it was a hard choice for the different subcommittees and committee members. The fact is, we made some serious cuts in areas that I do not think we should have cut. I do not think we should stop production of the F-16. We should buy as many as we can at the cheapest price we can as soon as we can because the F-16 is the best plane in the world.

I do not think we should cut manpower; I do not think we should be cutting spare parts, I do not think we should be cutting these different things, maintenance funds.

The problem is that there is only so much money, and I think what we are trying to do in this amendment is to say that we go on with R. & D. The President still has his bargaining chip for the START talks. We can have the technology and go ahead with that. We can discuss basing modes and other things in the future, but we are not going to spend such an incredible amount of money in such a ridiculous fashion to talk about producing something that we have no idea how it is going to be used in this country. I think we have to make some tough choices as we do in the budget for every other area. Money from the MX can be spent in other areas that can make us superior, and I still maintain that in the conventional areas we do have a need to get much stronger as far as our armed services in this country are concerned.

Mr. MAVROULES. I thank the gentleman.

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. A lot has been made of the money we would save for the taxpayers in making this reduction, but I am sure the gentleman is aware that contracts would have to be renegotiated, subcontractors would have to be dealt with at a cost of $250 million to $300 million. If we do intend to go on with the production of this missile, which I feel we all want to do, I would be inclined to say in answer to the question to my friend from California, I would certainly trade some of the missiles we have with the Soviets today. I think their technology, their accuracy, their throw weight, is far better than ours. But the money part of it, absolutely we would be losing money.

Mr. MAVROULES. I thank the gentlewoman very much for her comments. Let me reply in kind, if I may. When I talk about the entire defense posture of the United States I do not refer solely to the missile. I refer to the submarine force and the Air Force.

If it were true that we were going to lose $200 million if this indeed goes through, we can save the country $1 billion.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman made a couple of points. I would like to see if he agrees with this. (a) The gentleman does not oppose the MX missile.

Mr. MAVROULES. I have made my position very clear on that before.

Mr. ROEMER. (b) To this point in our taxpayers' lives, we have spent some $4 billion——

Mr. MAVROULES. We have spent $5.4 billion.

Mr. ROEMER. And in this next fiscal year we are looking at an expenditure of nearly $4 billion more on the MX if we combine all the elements, and the gentleman is leaving three-quarters of that proposed fiscal year 1983 budget alone.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. ROEMER and by unanimous consent, Mr. MAVROULES was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. ROEMER. On the fiscal year 1983 budget, as I understand it, the gentleman is not dealing with research and development. He leaves that untouched. Am I correct on that?

Mr. MAVROULES. That is correct.

Mr. ROEMER. He targets his amendment only to that portion of the budget, something over $1 billion but less than $1.5 billion in terms of production of the MX itself, so the vast majority of the fiscal year 1983 funds for the MX are untouched in his amendment. Is that not true?

Mr. MAVROULES. That is true.

Mr. ROEMER. The final point: How in the name of science and technology can we divorce the basing or delivery capability of the weapons systems from the systems themselves? That is the question the gentleman has raised for this Congress. That is the question the President of the United States, the Department of Defense, this administration, and this Congress must look at. Why should we spend all these dollars for this system? Why should we spend the production dollars for this system unless we know its capability? I think the gentleman's amendment is to the heart of the matter. We do not know, and until we do we should say no.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MAVROULES. I thank the gentleman for his remarks.

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I might say that the minority vice chairman of the Procurement Subcommittee, the gentlewoman from Maryland, raised a good point, that if we go ahead in the future and delay it would cost more, but I counter by saying that that is true of anything we delay. It is true if we delay bridges, construction of highways in this country. It is true if we delay the F-16 purchases or the second Trident submarine. All those things are true, and so I think that argument does wash out. While it is valid, it is valid to the other ways that this money might be spent.

Mr. MAVROULES. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague for yielding. I just wanted to remind this House that the gentleman in the well has a very powerful ally in the U.S. Senate, Senator JOHN TOWER, of Texas.

Mr. MAVROULES. I thank the gentlewoman.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding the second time. After having heard some of the comments that were made by Members on, I would imagine, both sides of the aisle, there seems to be, I believe—and this is of course my opinion—a misinterpretation of this amendment. A number of people are saying that we can go forward with research and development. You know, "I am really in favor of the MX, we should have it, but nevertheless I am in favor of this amendment."

I think where I come from, very frankly, is the fact that the gentleman's amendment, because it cuts production as well as basing mode, devastates the program, and therefore those people that are alined with many Members of this House that do not want to go forward with the MX and think it is a mistake, therefore should vote for the amendment. But, those people that believe that the MX is important should vote against the amendment because the gentleman's amendment, really, I think, is a camouflaged amendment.

□ 1215

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, if I may respond in kind so I may put my position before the people and make it very clear, from day one we have had 34 or 35 different versions of a basing mode for the MX missile. Is it not time that we took a firm position and said to this administration—and even the last one—and to the Pentagon that enough is enough; we are going to hold this money until you finally come up with a program that is workable for that missile?

So long as we continue to fund these programs, they will continue to spend the money, and they are not coming up with any answers.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES) for offering this amendment.

I would simply like to remind the House of some circumstances a few years ago. At that time, when the MX program was in its infancy and we were considering the so-called race track mode, a number of people inquired, "Why do we have to create a whole new missile for the race track mode? Why don't we just take the Minuteman missiles we now have and put them in the race track mode?"

And we were told at that time, "Oh, you can't do that. The Minuteman is designed for a vertical configuration in a silo, and you can't just take a missile that is designed for a vertical configuration, turn it on its side, and expect it to work; the cost of retrofitting the Minuteman to run on its side instead of standing up and down would be prohibitive."

Yet what we are being asked to do in voting this money is to vote for a missile without knowing whether it is going to be a vertical missile, a horizontal missile, up in the air in a plane, or down under water strapped to a submarine. Plainly different basing modes require different missiles.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES) has expired.

(On request of Mr. GREEN, and by unanimous consent, Mr. MAVROULES was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. GREEN. Mr Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, it seems to me that the very argument of those who were advocating the MX a few years ago now work against them. The very argument that the MX supporters used against those who proposed using the Minuteman on the race track configuration—that different basing modes require different missiles—now comes back to prove how foolish it is to try to proceed with construction of MX missiles when we do not know their basing mode.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the comments the gentleman made, and I would also like to thank him for his support in bringing this proposal to the floor.

Mr. DENARDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. DENARDIS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I thank him for his leadership in advancing this amendment.

There seems to be a question of intention behind this particular amendment. There are certainly those who oppose the MX missile per se, and there are others who oppose further large expenditures on the MX because of the lack of an adequate or effective basing and deployment mode.

I think that proponents of the MX, some of whom are proponents of the MX at any cost, are trying to undermine support of this particular amendment by suggesting that some sponsors and some supporters of this amendment may be hiding behind a real opposition to the MX. I do not know if that is true or not. I think, however, that that is not the real issue.

The real issue, as stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts, is that this particular decision or policy is bad defense policy. And I would add that at this particular time, this sensitive time in terms of international relations, it is bad arms control policy as well.

There is an old aphorism which goes: "If it isn't broke, don't fix it." A version of that, appropriate in this case, might be stated: "if it won't work, don't build it."

Mr. Chairman, I think that is the essential thrust of the gentleman's amendment which I am privileged to cosponsor.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that support very much.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES) has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MAVROULES was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, just to make sure I understand what the gentleman's amendment would do, I would like to try to clarify the differences between what his amendment would do and what the Senate has done, what Mr. TOWER, the chairman of the Senate committee, has done.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, I will try to answer that for the gentleman. They went one step further. They took out also $715 million in research and development.

Mr. ASPIN. And the gentleman does not?

Mr. MAVROULES. My amendment does not do that at all.

Mr. ASPIN. Basically, as I understand it, what they did in the Senate Armed Services Committee and what they did on the floor of the Senate was to take out money for the procurement of the missile or the MX system, and they also took out some R. & D. money.

Mr. MAVROULES. Exactly.

Mr. ASPIN. They did that on the grounds that we really ought to have a basing system before we go ahead and approve them. And there was some kind of an agreement or some kind of report language in which the administration is to come forward with its basing system by December. The gentleman's amendment, as I understand it, just applies to the procurement part of it?

Mr. MAVROULES. Exactly.

Mr. ASPIN. But what the gentleman is saying is that we should take out the money for the basing, the procurement money on the grounds that we do not know what the Senate or the administration is going to come up with for a basing system.

In other words, what we really ought to do is to take a similar position to that of the Republican-controlled Senate and say, "Listen, what we really ought to do is hold back on this until we decide what we are going to do;" is that what the gentleman is saying?

Mr. MAVROULES. Yes, only not as excessively.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES) and the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. BYRON) for their amendment, and I would just like to read a number of quotes that have been offered by various people inside and outside the administration on this issue, because the greatest argument for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentlewoman from Maryland is in the words of the advocates of this program; they provide the best argument for condemning it.

First, the President of the United States:

> While it is my intention that the MX not be a bargaining chip in the START talks, we need to secure the powerful leverage that a commitment to produce the MX would provide as we begin arms reduction talks.

This is from a letter that the President sent to Chairman PRICE on July 15. Let me try to translate that quotation: "We won't give it up, but we expect the Russians to give up something in return. If we attempt to spend money on a system that we are not going to build, they will reduce something."

Now, unless the Russians are a lot stupider than I think, they are just not likely to buy the leverage argument.

The next quotation:

> The MX is too important to allow the risk of technical debates to delay the introduction of the missile into the force.

This is by William Clark from a speech on May 22.

The translation of that is this: "We have to build it and stop worrying about trivia, like whether it works or not." And this guy says he wants a balanced budget.

Last, from the Price-Dickinson "Dear Colleague" letter:

> The MX will restore credibility to our objective to deter nuclear war.

This says we will deter nuclear war if we build a system that is inherently vulnerable.

So, as we see, there is enormous confusion on the part of the people supporting the MX. Is it a bargaining chip? Is it not a bargaining chip? The President obviously believes that it is. Mr. Clark does not believe it is a bargaining chip. He thinks we should go ahead and build it regardless of whether or not there is a basing mode.

The amendment is not for the termination of the program, which is frankly what some of us would like, but rather, a delay in the program until the basing system or something coherent that can be called a basing system is offered. That is not very much to ask. It is not, as the gentleman has pointed out, what the Senate has wanted, and I think it is the least that sanity would require, that we wait until we know where we are going.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for offering his amendment.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. DOWNEY) for his comments.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding for the second time.

I would like to recite a small piece of history in regard to the missile development, the Soviets versus the United States, and ask the gentleman a question.

In 1976 the Soviets produced some 300 ICBM's; the United States produced none. In 1977 they produced another 300, we produced none. In 1978, 1979, and 1980 the Soviets produced 200 ICBM's in each year. As I have noted earlier, the Minuteman that we build had a projected life cycle of about 7 years. The last one was produced in 1979.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. HUNTER, and by unanimous consent, Mr. MAVROULES was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman would yield further, my question to my colleague is simply this: Disregarding the basing problem with the MX and looking simply at Minuteman, does the gentleman agree that in the near future we should replace these aged, very small, compared to the Soviet system, Minuteman missiles which are presently in the silos?

Mr. MAVROLUES. Mr. Chairman, it is very difficult, and I will try to be direct in my answer to the gentleman's question.

Let me refer the gentleman to a conversation that took place on this floor just late yesterday afternoon. When the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WEAVER) asked our distinguished ranking minority member a question relative to what one submarine could do with 196 warheads on it, perhaps the question should have been asked, what can 10 submarines do with perhaps 1,500 warheads, and what kind of deterrent damage can this country do?

When we start talking about missiles—and we should not; I think it is a disservice to the country—we should be talking about complete and total deterrent capabilities for this country, and we do not do that. I think that is where we are missing the boat.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I think it is an interesting question that the gentleman from California (Mr. HUNTER) raises.

The Soviets have a number of design bureaus that routinely crank out missiles. As a matter of fact, when I asked a defense planner why it was that, with only marginal improvements in accuracy, 20- to 25-percent improvements in accuracy, the Soviets had to build a whole new missile, he said, "Well, that's just the way the Soviet system works."

In the United States the missiles the gentleman mentioned, the Minuteman I and the Minuteman III, have undergone various stages of improvement in the NS-20 Trident system and the MARK-12A warhead, so the Minuteman III which was last deployed in 1969, is hardly what one would consider an ancient missile. It is still a capable missile system and as a matter of fact has undergone two upgrades as I mentioned, and the third, a command buffer to improve its targeting. So it is not the same missile that was in the hole in 1969. It is far more accurate, far more reliable. It is a far more capable missile.

So while we do not build new missiles every time we want to make a marginal improvement, as do the Soviets, we do make important changes in the Force to make sure that our deterrent in cases of land-based missiles remain survivable.

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I yield to the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Chairman, let me bring up one point that was discussed earlier, and that was the fact that if this amendment passes, we would lose $200 million in contracts. At the same time there is no single hearing to my knowledge that has been held on the cost of the other basing modes, and so consequently we have no idea what we are getting into as far as changing the basing mode; is that not correct?

Mr. MAVROULES. The gentlewoman is correct.

Mrs. BYRON. So, we are going into something where we have no idea of the kind of cost and expenditure that would be involved?

Mr. MAVROULES. In my opinion, there is no question about that.

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, if I may conclude, let me present two brief quotes: In January 1979, our colleague on the Armed Services Committee, Mr. STUMP, asked Secretary of Defense Harold Brown:

Is it not true that the basing option more than the missile determines the vulnerability or nonvulnerability of the system?

Secretary Brown responded:

The vulnerability does depend on the basing option, yes, indeed.

One year later, in early 1980, the Commander of the Strategic Air Command, Gen. Richard Ellis, told the Armed Services Committee that despite the uncertainties of the MX basing plan, work should proceed on missile research and development because there was time to work basing problems out.

Well, that was 2½ years ago. Today, we are no closer to an MX basing decision than we were in January 1980.

Our decision is straightforward and simple. We must defer MX deployment and production until we have a final decision and review of the permanent basing plan.

Let us strike and defer this $1.14 billion. It makes good sense and can be accomplished without compromising our strategic capabilities.

In this vote, we can demonstrate our commitment to rebuilding our military forces. And, we can also demonstrate our strong desire not to waste money.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. STRATTON AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MAVROULES

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STRATTON as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. MAVROULES: Page 6, after line 21, insert the following:

(c) Of the funds authorized to be appropriated in this section for missiles for the Air Force, the sum of $1,141,900,000 is available only for the Advanced Intercontinental Ballistic Missile (MX) program. Of such amount, $259,900,000 is authorized for basing and deployment and may not be obligated until the President completes his review of alternative MX missile system basing modes and notifies the Congress, in writing, of the basing mode in which the MX missile system will be deployed and 30 days of session of Congress have expired after the receipt by Congress of such notice. For the purpose of determining days of session of Congress under the preceding sentence, there shall be excluded any day on which either House of Congress is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a day certain or an adjournment sine die.

□ 1230

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES) has made it perfectly clear that although his concern is with the basing mode and the complexities of the basing mode, and the changes that have been taken over several years, he is not opposed to the missile itself.

But for someone who is not opposed to the missile he is doing a good deal of damage to it because, as was just reiterated in his final remarks, he is eliminating $1.14 billion for the production of the MX.

There are three basic weapons systems which virtually all of the defense experts, except possibly some of the experts in this body, recognize as absolutely necessary to achieve a balance with the Soviet Union with respect to nuclear military strength.

The first of those is the B-1. The second is the Trident submarine. The third is the MX.

I would like to point out, because unfortunately, there does seem to be a kind of party bias as regards military spending that the MX missile happens to be a Democratic missile. A lot of people on my side of the aisle have been criticizing the President of the United States because, they say, he is beefing up the arms race, and is expanding the production of unnecessary weapons.

The fact of the matter is that the MX missile is a weapon that was begun under the Presidency of President Carter. As a matter of fact, the need for that particular weapon system was brought out, I might say in all humility, by the Armed Services Committee which, in a study produced in 1977, pointed out, with the help of figures placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by the gentleman from New York (Mr. DOWNEY), one of our experts in this body on military affairs. He had put in the RECORD a nonclassified estimate of the number of Soviet missiles, their accuracy and throw weight and also the yield of those weapons.

On the basis of this open information our committee staff demonstrated that the Soviet Union would have, within a couple of years, the capability of wiping out 75 percent of our land-based Minuteman missile force with a single first strike and still have enough left over to represent a formidable foe.

The Secretary of Defense at that time, Harold Brown, who was not always in agreement with some of the views of the Armed Services Committee, said that our committee was all wet.

But within another year and a half the Secretary of Defense had come around to exactly the same position. He agreed that the U.S. land based missile force was vulnerable and would be vulnerable because of increased Soviet numbers, yield, and accuracy. It was then that the Carter administration began the construction of the MX missile and came up with the first basing mode known as the racetrack mode.

So I think we ought to realize that in order to correct the imbalance which was recognized, even under the Carter administration. So we have here a very important weapon system which we ought not to tamper with unjustifiably or irresponsibly.

While I would agree with my distinguished friend from Massachusetts that there has been a foulup in deciding on a final basing mode, nevertheless it seems to me that it would be a mistake for us to take the money for production at this time. That would surely do irreparable damage.

I think we need to recognize that we are dealing with a very sensitive situation when it comes to missiles.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) has expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. STRATTON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. STRATTON. I take it that the few Members who are in the Chamber, and we welcome them here at this particular time, have had a chance to see outside the mockup models of the Soviet SS-17, SS-18, and SS-19 that are out there in comparison with the MX.

We are told by the nuclear freeze people that this MX is a terrible weapon, an Armageddon weapon, that is going to blow us all to kingdom come. But when you go out and take a look at those missiles—I wish we could bring them in here so that you could look at them again. The MX looks like the baby of the whole family.

The SS-18 is twice as big as the MX and the others are also bigger than this MX.

Not only is it bigger, but it has twice the explosive power.

Most important of all is that the SS-18 out there is already deployed. There are 300 of them in place in the Soviet Union, targeted against the United States and targeted against NATO.

As for the MX, we do not even have a single one in production and the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts would eliminate any possibility of our getting any production of an MX for at least another year unless we can defeat this well-meaning but very damaging amendment.

It has been some years since we have had babies in the Stratton family. But with five, we have had some experience. I am sure that any of the Members who have had babies lately realize that if you are expecting a child it is only good sense to go out and buy a bassinet, buy the bathtub and some of the other equipment that are necessary when the baby comes along.

I do not recall, although my wife sometimes accuses me of being a little bit stingy, that I ever said, "Look, why don't we wait until we see whether we have really got a baby before we go out and buy all that expensive equipment."

Yet that is precisely what we are suggesting with the Mavroules amendment with the MX missile. If we start to build this tomorrow it is still going to be 1986 before it will be in place.

So it seems to me that for us, with this tremendous outsized missile which we have to counter, we ought to get started as soon as possible. This is the proposal that is being made by our committee. Let us get going.

The statement is being frequently made, that we do not have an invulnerable method of basing and, therefore, we somehow have to wait until the Pentagon can develop an invulnerable method of basing. I think we may have gotten a little bit too dependent on our scientists. We have to have everything 100 percent perfect. But the truth is that we are never going to a basing mode if we continue to insist that it be absolutely invulnerable.

What do the Soviets do about their basing mode? Is theirs 100 percent invulnerable? We did not have an invulnerable basing mode when we first deployed the first Minuteman. Yet those Minuteman missiles have deterred the Soviet Union from attacking us for a long, long time.

I think there are a number of basing modes that have been mentioned that are pretty good. I did not think the racetrack was too bad. There are several others that are reasonably good.

But if we are going to insist on absolute perfection in the basing modes of our missiles we are asking the impossible. We are the ones that are gilding the lily. We are the ones that are going that extra 5 percent.

Let us get started on producing the missile now and certainly we can make a basing decision within a very short time. The President of the United States has already said that he expects to have a recommendation by the end of December.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) has again expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. STRATTON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. STRATTON. What my substitute does is to restore the money Mr. MAVROULES cuts out for production and fences in the money which has been included in the bill for the basing mode which the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES) is opposed to, and I think for good reason.

My substitute says that $1.14 billion is available for the missile, of which only $259 million is authorized to be appropriated for basing and deployment, but may not be obligated until the President completes his review of alternative MX missile basing modes and notifies Congress in writing of the basing mode in which the MX missile system will be deployed, and 30 legislative days have expired after the receipt by Congress of such notice. That gives us 30 days, if we do not like his proposed basing mode, maybe we can do something about it.

But I think we ought to disabuse ourselves of the idea that we have to have something absolutely invulnerable when it comes to MX.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRATTON. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. COURTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I congratulate the gentleman for the amendment.

I just want to make sure I understand exactly what the gentleman has done here. I would hope, therefore, the gentleman from New York would remain on his feet.

During the prior debate on the Mavroules amendment it became obvious to me that there are a number of Members of this body that are in favor of the missile itself, are in favor of the MX missile, who want to see it deployed in the most reasonable and best basing mode we can find but wants some mechanism to hold the feet of the administration, the Department of Defense, to the fire in order for them to make an important decision in a timely fashion as to what that basing mode would be.

I would ask the gentleman from New York whether he feels that his amendment accomplishes that?

Is it not true that this amendment does not permit the obligation, that is the spending of money on this basing mode until the administration comes forward with a decision as to how that missile will be based?

Mr. STRATTON. What it does is to fence in the money for a basing mode that is in the bill at the present time, $259 million, so that it would not be spent until the President indicates to us that he has selected a mode, and 30 days had elapsed.

But the other money for production, which is the thing that is vitally needed and ought to begin right now, should indeed have started a year ago, should have started 2 years ago, will not be touched by my amendment and production can begin.

Mr. COURTER. I thank the gentleman.

If the gentleman would yield for 1 minute further, I think the amendment is such that for those Members of this body that had a problem with regard to MX funds as stated because of their concern about the basing mode would be eminently now satisfied because of the gentleman's amendment.

I congratulate the gentleman and I will certainly vote in favor of the amendment.

□ 1245

Mr. STRATTON. I thank the gentleman for his support.

Let me say that I intend to offer the same amendment with respect to the R. & D., that insofar as R. & D. money for the basing mode is available, that money will also be subject, under an amendment that I will offer at a proper time, to being fenced in.

Let me just make two other points in that connection. Everybody, I think, knows by now that the President said in his letter to the Congress: "As you review this issue I want to assure you that we intend to propose a final basing mode for the MX by December."

And let me make one other point, because I think it is tremendously important, and we ought not to sluff it off. It is that the attitude of this Congress and the attitude of the American people are of profound importance in the nuclear arms negotiations that are going on in Geneva. Ambassador Rowny, who is in charge of the American position negotiating in Geneva in the START talks, has indicated that any delay of the MX would give ammunition to the Soviets, and would encourage them to bargain much harder because they would see the prospect of accomplishing their objective without having to give up anything.

I do not think we want to undercut the position of our negotiators in Geneva this soon. But there is no question that if the newspapers tomorrow say that the House has cut out the MX, Brezhnev and Ustinov and Gromyko and everybody else in the Soviet Politburo are going to be laughing and dancing in the streets. That is surely the last thing we want to do.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. HILLIS and by unanimous consent, Mr. Stratton was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. HILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRATTON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HILLIS. First of all, I want to begin by commending the gentleman on his statement, and particularly the remark that he has just concluded, with the possible effect that this could have on the most important START negotiations in Geneva. I think the gentleman is exactly correct.

The question that I wanted to ask my chairman was that I could not help but note the beginning of the bill this year, in the 5-minute rule, was considerably different than ever before, when the committee itself moved that there be reductions in certain fields. Certainly the opening reduction was a reduction in sizable expenditures by the Navy in the Trident program. While it was explained that there were reasons to stretch out the building of another Trident missile submarine, does it not seem that that, coupled with this, if this amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts were to pass, would be a signal of a general slowing of the modernization of the triad, first at sea and then on land?

If you couple those together—and I do not know if the gentleman agrees that there might be a coupling—it would be double the wrong signal to send to Geneva.

Mr. STRATTON. I think the gentleman is absolutely correct, and I gather there may even be some Members of the House who would like to eliminate the B-1, so that would eliminate all three of the weapon systems that we vitally need to restore the nuclear balance with the Soviet Union.

Mr. HILLIS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRATTON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HERTEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I think the problem with the amendment to the amendment is, very simply, that we have already discussed the fact that there have been 34 different methods, some seriously, some not so seriously put forth. Some have been rather ridiculous. They have been rejected, even though certain segments of the Congress have backed some of those basing modes, as the chairman points out.

What we are talking about here in this amendment, we are saying 30 days. I do not think that this Congress would have the opportunity to look at a basing mode within 30 days, both Houses, 535 Members. The other basing modes have been debated for years, the racetrack basing mode was debated for a long time, and then they talked about balloons, they have talked about all of the different things that the chairman is aware of. So I do not think 30 days would be adequate. I think, in fact, that it is odd that the administration said they are going to wait until December to issue another basing mode. I think it is ironic. It is after the election. I do not think there should be a bipartisan debate. But I think it is odd that we are talking about putting some money in, having 30 days to look at it, when they have failed so very often. And I would think that that would not add to our credibility with the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union—and it appalls me—is laughing at us for the fact that we have put forth 34 different methods that have been rejected. I do not think that they see any great resolve by the Members of this Congress in that kind of evidence at all, and I think that it is time that we send the administration a message to say, "Let us get serious about this, let us include the Congress, let us have a decent, suitable, invulnerable to the extent that it can be—because I agree with the chairman, none will be perfect—basing mode, and let us work together on it, let us not have ultimatums of December and 30 days, and that type of a thing, after so many failures, because that reduces our credibility in this country."

Mr. STRATTON. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts is suggesting that in one hasty 15-minute vote we should wipe out a whole weapons system. That certainly is not what we want to do. I think the 30 days that my amendment proposes is adequate.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRATTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MAVROULES. I thank the chairman for yielding.

It is not 15 minutes; there has been 4 hard years of study put into my proposal that is before the House this morning.

I have a basic question for all of us. And I do not take a back step to anyone in the U.S. Congress when it comes to national security, and that includes my distinguished chairman. The point is, if you recall, this administration came into office in January 1981. The same problem was before us, and they said to us, "Wait until July of 1981, and we will come up with a base mode for the MX missile."

They did not do that.

Then they said to us, "We will come up with a base mode in October of 1981."

They could not do that. They could not produce.

Now they are saying to us again, and the President writes a letter to all Members of Congress, saying, "Give me more time and I will have a base mode sometime before the end of the year 1982."

The basic question is this——

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is in a sense remaking his speech again and not responding to my point.

Mr. MAVROULES. Well, SAM, I am responding to you. I am going to ask a basic question.

If we are going to discuss basic defense posture for this country, why is it always we go on to the MX missile and we do not talk about the Air Force and we do not talk about the submarine force?

Mr. STRATTON. It is because of the size of the missiles that we saw out there in the Speaker's lobby. That is why. Our defense is based on the threat.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) has expired.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) be given an additional 4 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman that references to Members should not be by familiar name but by reference to the gentleman from the State of New York or the gentleman from the State of Massachusetts, rather than their familiar names.

Mr. STRATTON. What does the Chair say that I had said?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair will simply advise all Members that references to Members shall not be by their familiar names, under House rules.

Mr. STRATTON. I never used any familiar name.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair is not addressing the gentleman from New York. The Chair is addressing all Members, on the basis of what he has heard in the discussion.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to retract that statement and refer to my dear friend as "my colleague from New York."

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be recognized for 5 additional minutes?

Mr. MAVROULES. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) is recognized for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. STRATTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES).

Mr. MAVROULES. I thank my distinguished Chairman.

Really, if we are going to look at the MX missile that we have out here and we look at the SS-17 and the SS-18, really, if you are going to go by size, then we should not even be building the MX missile.

If we are going to use that as an argument, the MX missile is not that much bigger in posture than what we have in the Minuteman, so I think that is a very poor analogy to use, what we have out in the hallway.

If I may just sum up, Mr. Chairman—and I know where the gentleman is coming from. I think we are both going in the same direction but by different methods. We have waited 5 years, 34 different base modes have not been effectuated in this Congress.

My argument is this: Why can we not wait until they come up with one base mode, if it is workable, if indeed we have one that can be workable? That is all I ask. And defer the money.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRATTON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ASPIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Let me just ask a couple of questions here of the gentleman from New York as to what his amendment does.

As I understand it, the Procurement Subcommittee and the full committee already has taken some money out for the basing system already; is that correct?

Mr. STRATTON. That is correct. We took $282 million out, and we are now taking out another $259 million. We are fencing it out, I should say.

Mr. ASPIN. Fencing out. And as I understand it, that still leaves $23 million. I am just adding up the numbers here. It seems to me we still have got some mint money in there that is not fenced off. I would just like to know why we fenced off the amount that we have and why we have not fenced off all of it.

Mr. STRATTON. The money that has not been fenced out was for the development of the warhead.

Mr. ASPIN. The warhead. Could the gentleman tell me, because I looked in the report and I could not find any explanation, when we took out the $282 million already in the committee from the basing system, what were we taking out, and what was the justification?

Mr. STRATTON. I think the justification was simply that the basing mode we understood was controversial. As the gentleman from Massachusetts has pointed out on a number of occasions, we have not made a final decision. And this was a part of the reduction which the subcommittee was proposing in an effect to get down to the spending level requested by the Budget Committee. If we are going to come up, as the President now has indicated, with a decision by the end of December, then that remaining money will certainly be required.

Mr. ASPIN. But what is the difference? Why half? I mean what is the half we have taken out? I am trying to get some idea of what we have cut out already before we fence off what we have done.

Mr. STRATTON. I am not sure that I would be prepared to indicate precisely all the items that $282 million was addressed to. I think we simply cut the total more or less in half. It was the interim basing money, money that was directed toward the Minuteman silos basing mode.

Mr. ASPIN. They had some money, then, in the procurement section that would be for the interim basing. I mean some procurement money for the interim basing, which we have taken out already. Am I stating this correctly?

Mr. STRATTON. That is right.

Mr. ASPIN. The money that is left is procurement money for the basing system, the proposed basing system. Now what we are saying is that we are going to fence that off, all but $23 million of it, and the other $23 million is for warheads. Is that correct?

Let me ask, the gentleman from New York referred to a further amendment that he is going to offer on the R. & D. What would the R. & D. amendment then be, consistent with what the gentleman is doing on procurement.

Mr. STRATTON. That would fence off the money in R. & D. that is, R. & D. for the permanent basing mode.

Mr. ASPIN. For the permanent basing mode?

Mr. STRATTON. Or any basing mode.

Mr. ASPIN. The gentleman is not going to have any R. & D. on any basing until we have decided on one? I thought the R. & D. was supposed to be to help make the decision.

Mr. STRATTON. The R. & D. was for the missile.

Mr. ASPIN. I thought the R. & D. money was to do research so that we could choose an alternative.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. ASPIN and by unanimous consent, Mr. STRATTON was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. ASPIN. If you fence it off, how can you spend it in order to determine what the best basing mode is?

□ 1300

Mr. STRATTON. There are $75 million in R. & D. for research as to which method would be the most invulnerable. We would hope that they would begin to realize that there are limits to 100-percent invulnerability.

Mr. ASPIN. Let me ask further, what would be anticipated, what could we do, if under the gentleman's amendment suppose you are fencing off just the R. & D. part and just the procurement part, for the basing mode, until the decision is made, until 30 days has elapsed. What we are really doing is adding 30 days. Presumably they are not going to spend the money if they have not got a basing method in any case. So that part of the language does not seem to be relevant. But the 30 days is relevant.

What we are saying by this amendment is that we will put a hold on their ability to spend that money for 30 days while they notify Congress.

Suppose we do not like the basing mode? What action do we take at that point?

Mr. STRATTON. If the gentleman from Wisconsin does not like it he could offer an amendment.

Mr. ASPIN. An amendment to what?

Mr. STRATTON. To a piece of legislation to ban the expenditure of that money.

Mr. ASPIN. That means it would have to come through Congress, through the House, through the Senate, a conference and approved, all in 30 days.

Mr. STRATTON. That is the way it always works.

What we are trying to do with this amendment is to do what the gentleman from Massachusetts says that he wants to do. He says he is for the missile but wants to eliminate all of the money for production of the missile. We are simply saying you can go home and tell them that you have prevented Congress from spending all of this money for a basing mode that nobody knows what it will be, and this could be called a great saving of the taxpayer's money. It is conceivable that if all of that would be put into certificates of deposit the interest collected over that time would be a considerable sum.

But we do not think that we ought to destroy the missile itself which is certainly what is going to happen if we cut off the production as the gentleman from Massachusetts proposes. We are simply going to be adding another year before it would be available. The costs will go still higher. And we would be sending a signal to NATO. So the whole business would be slowed down for a substantial time simply because one gentleman says that he is in favor of the MX but just wants to wait until we get a better basing system. That is like trying to bring home a baby without the appropriate accouterments to take care of it.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, if I could continue my dialog with the gentleman from New York on this issue, it seems to me that the question is whether 30 days has any meaning here.

The amendment that the gentleman is offering is one way of going about it.

The gentleman from Massachusetts has offered a different way, which I parenthetically point out is the way that the senior Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would prefer to go, which is the same as the gentleman from Massachusetts. So there are two different approaches.

What I am asking here is really whether this approach, which the gentleman from New York is offering, is in fact a realistic approach?

Is it realistic to say that if we do not like the basing mode, and having 30 days to proceed, that we can, in fact, get a piece of legislation introduced, passed through the subcommittee of the Armed Services Committee, passed through the full Armed Services Committee, passed on the floor of the House, passed through the subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee, passed through the full Senate Armed Services Committee, passed through the Senate, go to conference, come out of conference and passed in both Houses?

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STRATTON. I would think that if the basing mode was egregiously inadequate to individuals on the Armed Services Committee, who are particularly knowledgeable about these matters, it would be no problem in getting a resolution of disapproval through very quickly.

Obviously, all of those in the Chamber who are against the MX in principle would go along with it and those who felt that the basing mode was really terribly destructive and against the interests of the country, would also go along with it.

Mr. ASPIN. If I could reclaim my time.

Let me ask the gentleman what would be the option for a person who is not on the Armed Services Committee and objected to the basing mode? What would be his options?

Mr. STRATTON. He would have the opportunity to appear before the committee. He could take the well of the Chamber to advise other Members that in his judgment this was not an adequate basing mode. He could file an appropriate resolution which would immediately be considered by the Procurement Subcommittee of the Armed Services Committee—all of the conventional outlets that are available to any knowledgeable Member of the House.

Mr. ASPIN. Let me say to the gentleman that there is no guarantee in this language that there would be a vote on the issue at some time during those 30 days.

Mr. STRATTON. This is not an unusual format in legislation.

Mr. ASPIN. No; but let me point out——

Mr. STRATTON. This idea of 30 days is frequently added.

Mr. ASPIN. If the gentleman would let me reclaim my time.

Mr. STRATTON. The gentleman asked me a question and I was responding to it but——

Mr. ASPIN. I would like to reclaim my time.

The point that I am making is that the alternative is to take the money out entirely and wait and put it in next year's bill where everybody on the floor will have a chance to vote for it.

We are setting up a procedure under the amendment of the gentleman from New York whereby unless you are on the Armed Services Committee, you have no chance; even if you are on the Armed Services Committee and happen to not be in the majority on the Armed Services Committee, you do not have a chance.

This matter under the gentleman's amendment will be voted on and something will be done about it only if the President comes up with a basing proposal which meets the disfavor of a majority of the members of the Armed Services Commmittee. It will go to conference and there will be a vote in the Senate only if it also reaches the disfavor of a majority on the Senate Armed Services Committee.

There is no opportunity under the gentlemen's amendment for most Members of this body to have another vote on this issue.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to concur completely with my colleague from Wisconsin.

Let us face it. If any one of us introduces a resolution to get a water easement through for the Ogallala Indians, we are not going to get it through this Congress in 30 days, much less something that would reverse a decision as fundamental as this.

And the second point I think we have to keep in mind, and it is the point that my colleague from Massachusetts makes and the point that the senior Senator from Texas, Mr. TOWER, makes, and that is we are talking about one of the largest expenditures in the history of this Congress and we ought to know what we are doing before we vote the money; that does not seem to me to be an unreasonable request.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ASPIN) has expired.

(At the request of Mr. DOWNEY and by unanimous consent, Mr. ASPIN was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MAVROULES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Let me see if I can put this in perspective for all of us to truly understand.

I think this Congress and the Armed Services Committee, for that matter, in all fairness has been conned by administrations and the Pentagon for too long.

If the Members vote for my amendment, then I think that is the correct vote this morning, and against the substitute, the Members are truly sending a message to the Pentagon and to the administration that we are not going to take any more.

If the Members fence that money—let us not kid ourselves, the money is there—and it is certainly not going to come up in 30 or 60 days. So I would urge that we vote against the substitute and support my amendment.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DOWNEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding and I think he has pointed out that there is not only a question of 30 days in the requirement for the Armed Services Committee to do something, but the gentleman from Massachusetts also has a deletion of funds that the gentleman from New York is not addressing.

Aside from that question, you want to have the Congress of the United States involved in a more intimate way.

The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON), the ranking minority member, during the phase when the MX missile was going to be based on airplanes, I believe went to the White House and explained that that would not meet with the favor of the Congress.

The Congress has played a critical role that the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES) only seeks to enhance in terms of making the Pentagon understand that since there is no place to put this missile, as currently is the case, that we are not going to provide money for a missile we do not know in the various basing modes that have been offered could be survivable.

What the gentleman from New York's substitute has attempted to do is just delay the process of the expenditure of money 30 days. It does not deal with the question of funding. It only deals with the question of who is and who is not going to try to stop this basing mode. If it ultimately winds up to be the turkey that it has been in the past we are precluded, as the gentleman points out, from making decisions.

One other thing that strikes me as unusual. The gentleman from New York said that we have relied too much on scientists to develop this missile and perfect a basing mode. Who else are we going to rely on? Who else is in position to determine, in light of all the data, the decision as to what is a sound and what is not a sound basing mode?

I think that the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES) makes the appropriate points, as does the gentleman from Wisconsin, that the Mavroules amendment will force the Pentagon to make a decision on a basing mode and then get the money, not have the money and send us up a basing mode that may or may not work and give us 30 days to try and stop it. That would not be tenable position for the Congress and it is indeed not what the Republican Senate found to be an acceptable position.

Mr. DENARDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. DENARDIS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I concur with the gentleman in his argument that the 30-day period and the procedure involved in the amendment of the gentleman from New York is faulty and inadequate for the importance of this particular matter.

I would go further and say that the amendment of the gentleman from New York treats the basing mode question as a relatively minor consideration in the whole MX debate.

A missile is not a weapon unless it can be defended from attack and launched when necessary. Therefore, the basing mode question is quite as important as any other aspect of the mechanics or technology of the missile itself. We should, therefore, have adequate time and opportunity to examine the basing mode question.

We have already learned that the interim basing plan is defective; it leaves the MX vulnerable if the Soviets strike first; it is to be very costly, and it has been rejected as a permanent long-term solution to the problem.

Now the closely spaced basing or so-called dense pack system is being revealed as also a very defective system. It is based on an unknown quantity called fracticide. It may be vulnerable to a variety of attack scenarios, including the pin-down attack by large warheads or sequential attack.

We have information which is going to be made public very soon that the Soviets could fire space bursts above the atmosphere creating a canopy of electromagnetic pulses that could fatally damage the metal casings and the vital circuitry of any MX missile that passed through it.

We are going to see more about this in the next couple of days because a number of people have been doing some very detailed and intensive research.

Therefore, the question of providing only a 30-day response time to such a serious and highly involved and technical question is wholly inadequate.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ASPIN) has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. ASPIN was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, let me make one further comment to the gentleman's point.

I think, as the gentleman from New York pointed out, 30 days is a device that has been used and sometimes it is very appropriate. I, for example, will be offering an amendment at some point about a 30-day notice on the President changing his position on following the SALT accords. If you want the Congress involved in the decision, 30 days is not enough. If you do not want the Congress involved in the decision, then 30 days is plenty. In fact, 30 days is probably more than enough.

But I think that what we are saying here is that the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES) wants the Congress involved with the decision. The gentleman from New York, by proposing 30 days, does not want the Congress involved in the decision.

Mr. HAGEDORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. HAGEDORN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I do not, over the years, recall very often voting with the gentleman from Wisconsin and against the gentleman from New York, but I think in this instance today, when we consider more than a billion-dollar expenditure and admittedly an important part of our nuclear arsenal, that we ought not to be buying a pig in the poke as far as the basing mode.

I think essentially this Congress ought to have the full right to consider it and make sure that it is before this House of Representatives and the Congress itself to ultimately make that decision on how it is going to be deployed. Needless to say, we have had various proposals already suggested, none of which made very much sense, or technologically to the state of art, in which they are usable and, therefore, I think we ought to excise the money from this bill today and wait until an appropriate time in the future. If we can come with a basing mode, then we will look at maybe a supplemental to provide the money for the MX.

I do not think there is going to be anything before this Congress in another year and, therefore, we can cut more than $1 billion out of outlays and do something about reducing the tremendous debt load, and I will also say, reduce the defense expenditures which the American people I think believe that we have reached the point where we have to rein in some of this spending, when this economy is in the serious rescission that it is in today, and this is the first place to start.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of both the Simon-Green amendment to delete $715 million in R. & D. funds for interim basing research and the Mavroules-DeNardis amendment to defer $1.14 billion for procurement of the first nine MX missiles until a survivable, permanent basing mode has been developed.

It makes no sense to spend money to procure these weapons before a workable basing mode has been established. These amendments will not affect funding for continued research on long-term basing options for the MX, which I strongly support. The MX missile is an important weapon system that will significantly enhance U.S. security when it is viably deployed in an effective basing system.

However, until that time, I believe we owe it to the taxpayers of this country not to spend their money on a chicken that has not yet hatched, and if we are truly serious about bringing reason to all aspects of the Federal budget, including defense, support of these amendments is the only reasonable choice, and one that the Senate has already made.

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mrs. HOLT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to respond, and I know the gentleman from Wisconsin, who is very astute and very reasonable in analyzing our defense posture of this country, will certainly agree with me.

□ 1315

The production of the MX is the thing that we are concerned about. The pacing item for deployment is production and that is what we are concerned about. We are not going to put the missile into anything until 1986 and if we do not go on producing it and we do develop a deployment procedure, we will have nothing to deploy. My concern is that we are going to delay it by a year and we can never make up that year.

We should go on with the production. We should come up with a deployment procedure and we will certainly be in better shape to negotiate with the Soviets if we do that. I am sure that the gentleman from Wisconsin must agree that the production is the important thing.

Mr. ASPIN. If I could just respond in two ways. No. 1, I would feel better if the amendment of the gentleman from New York struck the basing money.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. DWYER). The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

(At the request of Mr. STRATTON, and by unanimous consent, Mr. ASPIN was allowed to proceed for 4 additional minutes.)

Mr. ASPIN. Just to respond to the gentlewoman from Maryland and then to yield to the gentleman from New York, I would feel better if the amendment of the gentleman from New York struck the basing mode money and left in the procurement money and make that the difference between his amendment and that of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I concede enough of the point to recognize that.

Second, I would, though, like to say that the problem with proceeding with the production of the missile without knowing the basing mode does have some risks in the sense that depending upon the basing mode, you may have a very different missile that you want to produce. If you are going to drop the missile out of a plane in the concept of the continuous air patrol, that might be a very different looking missile than if you have a deep, deep tunnel basing mode which digs itself out and fires. In other words, the missile might look different depending on the basing mode.

Beside that point, I think the point of the gentlewoman has at least the validity that I would feel better if the amendment of the gentleman from New York struck the basing mode without this 30-day proviso, but just struck the basing mode, but left the money in for the procurement.

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentlewoman.

Mrs. HOLT. I am sure that the gentleman will concede that the departments, the scientists, the people who are doing the research and development on this have explored carefully many deployment modes. We have been saying that we have had a circus, that it has not been very effective; but I think there has been some very definite in-depth research into the various deployment systems, so we are not talking about finding something entirely new.

Mr. ASPIN. Exactly.

Mrs. HOLT. That research and development has been done, so they are going to come up with one of these plans, that we know, and then we can go on and do the research and development on that.

Mr. ASPIN. I agree. I do not think there is going to be anything new, any new basing mode that has not been thought of that could come up; although I am surprised that the dense pack came along, when I believed that we had thought of everything and all of a sudden dense pack came forth and that was a new idea; so it is not impossible that there is going to be a new idea. What may turn out is that the missile that we want to procure might be different. I mean, the type of missile that we would procure to put it into a dense pack might be different than the type of missile that we would procure for the racetrack system, for example.

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I would like to yield to the gentleman from New York, but let me yield just briefly to the gentlewoman from Maryland, because she has been waiting.

Mrs. BYRON. I would like to ask the other gentlewoman from Maryland if, in her estimation, has a production line begun on this missile?

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, no; but we should continue to go forward with that production line because any time that we lose means that we are going to have to lay off people. We are going to have to close down the lines that are being prepared for production.

Mrs. BYRON. We are extending and stretching out many of our production lines for cost.

Mrs. HOLT. And that is a good reason for not stretching out this one.

Mrs. BYRON. When we have a production line that has not opened yet for a missile that cannot be deployed until 1986 or 1987, which we have testimony that states it will have to be put into a warehouse unless we go in the Minuteman silos, which are not hardened.

Mrs. HOLT. We have 14,000 people employed that will have to be unemployed. We will have to put that team back together again if we do start production.

My point is that we are far enough along with it that we do not want to delay that production.

Mrs. BYRON. In the Mavroules amendment, do we not still have the R. & D. the continuation of that phase?

The only thing the Mavroules amendment does is to eliminate the funding for the production of the first nine missiles for a production line that has not opened up yet, for a missile that, when it is produced, will have to be put into storage until it can be deployed and until we can finally come up with an answer for a mode of deployment.

Mrs. HOLT. If the gentleman will yield further, that is where I disagree with the gentlewoman, is that it will not have to be put into storage. It will not be final production until 1986. We will have a place to deploy it by that time. I feel confident that that is the direction in which we are moving.

Mrs. BYRON. Where will we put it?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened long and hard to this debate. I feel constrained to point out a few things that I think are valid and necessary. We are talking about matters that involve a complex weapons system; but we are also talking about matters economic; We are talking about matters political; and we are talking about the whole quantum of the defense of the United States of America as regards one leg of our strategic triad.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts who offered the original amendment, for which has been offered a substitute by the gentleman from New York which I support, has in the past been one of the staunchest defenders of keeping production lines going so we do not lapse a team, or lapse a line and so we do not get a team going to make a weapons system and then stop it or stretch it out, because the gentleman knows as in the F-18, the cost may double or triple or quadruple the more you stretch it out.

So with that as production rationale, we should more ahead with the production of the MX missile.

It has been said in this debate this morning that, "Oh, the MX isn't that much bigger than the Minuteman III." Well, my colleagues, face it, if you look out here in the Speaker's lobby, you will see that the MX missile's bus carries 10 warheads to the Minuteman's 3, to the Titan's 1. The Titan is really worn out; obsolete all through. They are there for some kind of bargaining chip, but they are not really usable.

The Minuteman III was produced so long ago that it is deteriorating and is vulnerable. Our intelligence folks have finally observed that the Soviet missiles, the SS-18, are accurate now, more accurate than any missile in the world today and we have nothing to defend against it at present. There are military needs and the MX is not just an old follow-on Minuteman III.

The gentleman from Wisconsin had the temerity to state and I know the gentleman is speaking from his heart, that maybe we might develop some now kind of basing system that will require the change of the shape of the missile.

Now, my colleagues, nothing could be farther from the truth. If you really want to kill MX just change the shape of the MX and I guarantee that you will not have any program at all.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts is entirely correct that the adoption of his amendment with the rejection of the substitute amendment of the gentleman from New York will send a message to the administration, pardon me, friends and colleagues, but you are damn right it will, it will send a message to them that this Congress does not have the will to defend this country with a needed military weapons system.

It will also, however, send a signal to the Soviet Union, as was stated by the gentleman from New York, that there will be laughing and dancing in the streets of the Kremlin because the United States, as was told Members of this body by our negotiators in Geneva not too long ago, that the Soviet negotiators were telling our negotiators that the United States does not have the will to produce a new missile and that there are not going to be any MX's because there is no support in Congress. What kind of signal is that?

It will also send a signal to our friends in NATO who, incidentally, are being asked by the United States of America to install our missiles on their soil, that we cannot even install a missile on our own soil. Talk about sending signals, that is a signal for you.

So we have to consider the economics of not stretching this thing out to the breaking point. We have to consider the military, that our ICBM structure is deteriorating and we have to recognize the fact that militarily we must send signals so that our negotiators will have the bargaining chips that they so urgently need to come to some kind of arms reduction with the Soviet Union, which is essential.

Now, we talk about leaving decisions to scientists. Dear colleagues, better we leave them to scientists than leave them to the Congress of the United States to design things, because even though I oppose what I call the Swiss Cheese mode of basing or the Wormy Bark method of basing, I almost got talked into Big Bird. I thought Deep Throat was pretty cute for a while and Deep Southside was pretty good. I thought Big Bird was OK for a while, but Deep Throat Southside has a lot of potential, too.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BADHAM was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. BADHAM. Now, when we discuss multiple point shelters, or MPS or Swiss Cheese or Wormy Bark, or whatever you want to call it, with these tunnels running all over everybody's landscape, try to discuss that with someone from NATO, a NATO parliament, and they would say, "You mean that the people of the United States have the right to object to a basing system for a missile when you are going to come over here and put Pershing II's all over our landscape?

Now, the substitute amendment by the gentleman from New York makes eminent sense, because the first MX is going to fly the first quarter of next year, probably in January from Vandenberg, and it is ready for production now. The team is together. The tooling is together. It is a ready bird, ready to fly, and it is going to fly the first quarter of next year. If we delay this, we are making a big mistake.

So in the wisdom and the clever drafting of the gentleman from New York, he suggests properly that we put a fence around that money, that we authorize its appropriation but say it cannot be appropriated until the President comes to us in writing and says, "Here is the way we are going to base MX."

I think it is about time we did have an administration that is willing to make decisions, and this one is.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

My point before, the gentleman mentioned the economic problem that we have in starting and stopping various systems and the gentleman mentioned, I think, a couple birds. I just would like to mention one more and that, if it has not already been mentioned, was the B-1. We started and stopped that. There was a time when we were supposed to be able to procure 244 B-1's for slightly over $22 billion and now today we are talking in terms of 100 planes for $20 billion. If we go into this syndrome of starting and stopping the MX, the cost is just simply going to escalate.

Mr. BADHAM. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. The gentleman is absolutely right and I hope that is shared by the gentleman from Massachusetts, to whom now I, of course, yield.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman very much and I want to thank the gentleman from California for yielding.

I just want to ask a very simple question. The gentleman made the statement that we would be sending the wrong signals to the administration and perhaps the Soviet Union.

The gentleman realizes, of course, the Soviet Union recognizes the fact that we have gone up about $60 billion in defense spending for the fiscal years 1982 and 1983 and, therefore, it shows signs that this country means what it says.

Second, the gentleman talked about the bargaining chip and I have heard that phrase used so many times about a bargaining chip and perhaps we should or we should not use it at the START talks in Europe.

You would have more of a bargaining chip if you threw in two submarines than an MX missile that has no basing mode for it. I wish to share that with the gentleman.

I ask the one question, if I may, does the gentleman not feel they take us seriously when we go up in defense spending by $60 billion in the course of 2 years?

Mr. BADHAM. I thank the gentleman for his question. I really do not know if the gentleman has talked to the Soviets. I have talked to Soviet negotiators in Geneva and I will tell you, they as much as a Soviet leader can, laugh and giggle when we talk about a $60 billion increase, because they do not believe we are going to spend the money and that is what we are doing right here this morning, giving them cause for the belief that we will not spend the money.

Mr. MAVROULES. but the fact is, we are spending the money. We are talking about one little part of the Triad and a small part of it, because we referred to the basing system.

Mr. BADHAM. Well, if I can reclaim my time, do not think that the Soviets are not watching, because they are.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman.

□ 1330

Mr. STRATTON. I want to congratulate the gentleman on a very articulate and a very forceful statement. I associate myself with his views.

I think the gut issue is really posed, very clearly now. The Senate has already knocked out money for the procurement of the MX missile. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts also knocks out that money for procurement.

Unless the substitute which I offered is approved, the MX missile, for all intents and purposes, is wiped out and one of the three elements, needed to establish or reestablish a balance with the Soviets, is missing.

So I think we ought to make it clear what we are doing today. If the House really wants to be responsible for destroying this weapons system, so be it.

Mr. BADHAM. I thank the gentleman for his contribution because the gentleman makes the point extremely well.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

First of all, I rise with a great deal of thought and consideration because I am a member of the Committee on Armed Services. I have the utmost and greatest respect for my subcommittee chairman and my committee chairman.

There are a variety of motivations that could be ascribed to the supporters of this amendment. Some believe that the MX program is not necessary. Some believe that stopping this program will somehow stop the nuclear arms technology race. And some believe that we are dedicating too many dollars to defense relative to the remainder of the budget. I am not one of those.

As a member of the Committee on Armed Services, and a supporter of the MX program, it is not without a great deal of thought and deliberation that I co-offer this amendment. This year the committee broke from its past rationale on the MX program. I am now urging my colleagues to support the Mavroules-Byron amendment to maintain the consistency of the Committee on Armed Services.

The MX program is really two separate systems. One is the missile itself; the other is the basing mode for the missile. The committee has recognized from the very beginning that the success of the MX program depends not on the missile but on the basing mode.

As a supporter of this system, it is important to me that the MX missile be deployed in a survivable MX basing mode. This land-based modernization program must not be comprised by the least survivable basing system. I submit that this amendment harms neither the progress of the program not infringes on the perceptions of our resolve to meet the threat we face.

As a member of both the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, I have probably had a more concentrated involvement with the MX program than any other Member on the floor here today. From a technical aspect, a basing aspect, a strategic aspect, supporting this amendment will not deter the progress of the MX program.

I have been to Vandenberg Air Force Base twice in the last 15 months to tour the facilities. I have talked to the engineers, I have interfaced with the contractors on the status of this program.

The testing is on schedule. It will continue to be on schedule with the first test firing in January of 1983. This amendment will not change the fact that the testing program will have at its disposal the initial eight MX missiles as provided for under the research and development section of this bill. This amendment will not change the fact that the $2.6 billion in R. & D. for this year will provide enough money for the research and development of at least three basing concepts.

It was with careful study to insure that the progress of the program be maintained while we work out a survivable basing mode that I am comfortable with this amendment. I am convinced that the remaining R. & D. money will provide the continued development of both the MX missile and the MX basing mode.

There is a persistent perception that the MX missile must be produced to insure that the Soviet Union has a reason to negotiate in Geneva. It is suggested that producing the MX and committing it to just any basing mode will provide the incentive and produce a bargaining chip.

The two basic assumptions are that procurement of the missile shows resolve and that the negotiations will relieve the need for ICBM modernization. Both are misguided perceptions.

The capacity of our land-based system to act as a deterrent to aggression must be maintained. As General Rowny has written:

> The simple fact is that instead of having more ICBMs for the Soviets to shoot at, we propose to have fewer such missiles but they will be less vulnerable.

Survivability and endurance are the keys to land-based deterrence.

The MX missile is our land-based modernization program, but the MX missile will not survive, endure and deter if it is in a vulnerable Minuteman III silo. It is not the missile but the basing mode that provides the credible land-based deterrents, and it will be the determination of the President and the Congress on the basing mode that will provide the Soviet Union with an indication of our resolve. The MX missile cannot be a bargaining chip unless its capabilities are housed in a survivable basing mode. We cannot have a land-based deterrent until we have a survivable basing mode.

As General Rowny wrote on June 6 of this year:

> The administration has recognized from the outset that no achievable arms control ageement could by itself make our ICBM forces invulnerable. Its approach, therefore, is to lessen their vulnerability through a suitable basing scheme.

I suggest that if we want to provide a bargaining chip, if we want the START negotiations to achieve reductions in nuclear forces, the decision that is most important is one that will significantly alter the use of Soviet resources and that is making a decision on a survivable basing mode. There is no incentive for the Soviet Union, with our "deployment of high-value, militarily important weapons in so small a number of relatively easily destroyed shelters."

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentlewoman from Maryland has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mrs. BYRON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mrs. BYRON. This was properly acknowledged by the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Finally, in a time of budget constraints, we can ill afford not to give close scrutiny to the defense budget. This amendment is a commonsense approach to reducing premature and, therefore, unnecessary defense spending and placing a priority on the defense dollars that are available.

First, by deferring the dollars for the procurement of the first nine MX missiles now, we do not interrupt or stretch out an ongoing production line. This amendment saves $1.14 billion in authorization in the best of ways: It prioritizes the production program before it gets started.

Second, this amendment is sound defense spending in that it synchronizes the production of the missile with the development of a suitable, survivable basing mode. The fact of the matter is, regardless of the basing mode selected, it is unlikely that it will meet the 1986 IOC as presently contended.

The interim basing plan was recommended because it was the only alternative available for basing when the MX missile is ready in 1986. The Secretary of Defense stated: "We had to put (the MX) somewhere or put it in a warehouse."

Third, we can defer these defense dollars at this time without significantly impacting on our national security posture. In fact, just the opposite was alluded to in 1979 by Paul Nitze, now in Geneva for the arms control talks:

> Deployment of a larger missile in the Minuteman silos does nothing to solve the silo vulnerability problem and, in addition, has the negative feature of a threatening but vulnerable U.S. first-strike counterforce capability. Accordingly, it would increase crisis instability and the prospect that deterrence would fail.

We do have a small window where we can rely on our existing strategic forces. But it is big enough to enable us to make the right basing decision and to get the capability of the MX into a system that will enhance its purpose.

The intent of this Congress, and this amendment, "is to insure that the MX missile is deployed at the earliest possible time in a survivable basing mode, at the least cost to the taxpayer and with the smallest, least disruption of the development and production program for the missile itself."

The right time to spend the $1.14 billion for procurement is when the MX missile can meet the deployment timetable in a survivable basing system and not produced for storage.

I urge your support for this amendment and I urge the defeat of the substitute.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all other amendments end in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman advise us as to what is meant by "all other amendments" so that we can get a further definition?

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I mean the amendment, the substitute, and any amendments thereto. This amendment.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Members standing at the time the unanimous-consent request was made will each be recognized for 1½ minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to point out that the initiative that resulted in the abandonment of the MX racetrack basing mode and the discovery of the basic flaws in it which led President Reagan to abandon it did not come from the Pentagon, it did not even come from the Armed Services Committee; it came from the House itself and from some of the other committees of the House, as well as the debate on the floor.

My subcommittee spent 2 years studying the basing mode because it happened to impinge on our jurisdiction. As a result of that, we brought to the attention of the executive branch and the Congress, on a totally bipartisan basis, the basic flaws in the racetrack basing mode.

So I suggest to you that any amendment such as the Stratton amendment that would remove that final decision from the Congress would be doing a disservice to the country and probably a disservice to our national defense.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. PEYSER).

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal of the debate today by experts from both sides of the aisle. I am not an expert on either side. I happen to support the Mavroules amendment because it makes good sense.

I would like to talk for a moment as a taxpayer because, as we all know, in listening to some of the discussion between my friend from Wisconsin and my friend from New York (Mr. STRATTON) if one looks back on the record on that it will be found at several points there was discussion that said, "Well, what does that $28 million do?" Then there was the statement, "Well, that may take care of this part of it, but we have another $75 million that is going to do something else."

Then the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ASPIN) said, "Well, what about the $280 million?"

And the response was, "Well, that $280 million is going to be used to back up another part of the program."

It sort of gives one the feeling, as a taxpayer, that the millions and millions and millions of dollars that are going around in this program, nobody really has a complete handle on what is happening and this is one of the best reasons I can think of today for voting down the Stratton amendment and voting for the Mavroules amendment. We will not be committing $1 billion-plus to a system that we are not even sure where or how it is going to be housed.

The taxpayers, I think, around this country will appreciate your vote.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. HARTNETT).

Mr. HARTNETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Mavroules amendment and in favor of the substitute.

Once again we hear the charge that the MX is a destabilizing weapon and that this program should be terminated.

One would think that it was the United States rather than the Soviet Union that used, or more properly stated abused, the period of détente during the 1970's to engage in the most massive buildup of military equipment during this century.

It is the Soviet Union not the United States who owns the world's largest and perhaps the most accurate intercontinental ballistic missile—the SS-18. It is the Soviet Union not the United States who currently has three new generations of intercontinental ballistic missiles in various stages of research, development, and test.

It is the Soviet Union not the United States who owns the world's fastest submarine—the Alpha, the world's largest ballistic missile submarine—the Typhoon, and the world's biggest cruise missile carrying submarine—the Oscar. Let us set the record straight, the Soviet Union not the United States is the root cause of strategic instability. We will create even greater instability if we fail to proceed with the MX system.

If you want the ICBM leg of our Triad to atrophy then vote for this amendment.

If you want insure Soviet strategic superiority during the 1980's, then vote for this amendment.

If you want to turn the strategic arms reductions treaty (START) negotiations into a de facto victory for the Soviet Union, then vote for this amendment. However, if you want to maintain strategic balance; and if you favor a strategic deterrent force that will continue to be as effective as our Minuteman, B-52, and Poseidon forces have been in preventing a nuclear war, then I urge you to vote this amendment down.

Thank you.

□ 1345

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. DENARDIS).

Mr. DENARDIS. Mr. Chairman, Malford MacKinder, the famed British expert on geopolitics, in the early part of this century wrote about the mistakes that nations make by cranking up faulty or ill-conceived military programs into "Going Concerns" which go beyond the point of any midcourse corrections. He goes on at great length reviewing the military history of the Western World, and points out how some of the great nations of the West have met great harm and disaster by establishing "Going Concerns" which could not be reversed or altered.

It is important that we not make the MX missile a "Going Concern" based on faulty premises. I commend the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MAVROULES, in taking the initiative of having us pause, take time, reexamine the very essential question of the basing mode.

A missile is not a weapon unless it can be adequately defended and successfully and prudentally used, and it is extremely doubtful that the MX will ever have that capacity within reasonable cost limits. Moreover, we will begin to produce and stockpile an expensive missile as a "Going Concern" with a future use that could be as dangerous as it is costly.

I oppose the Stratton substitute amendment which destroys the intent of the Mavroules amendment, which I am cosponsoring, and turns the basing mode decision over to the Pentagon without an adequate opportunity for the Congress to decide critical issues connected with the MX.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. BYRON).

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Stratton substitute. At the same time, I strongly support the Mavroules amendment.

(By unanimous consent, Mrs. BYRON yielded the remainder of her time to Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana.)

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Montana (Mr. WILLIAMS) for 2½ minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. Mr. Chairman, perhaps it would be some what instructive for me to share with my colleagues the feeling of citizens of one State. My fellow citizens in Montana have quietly endured our nuclear inheritance. Montana is the sixth-largest nuclear power in the world.

Members will remember back to October of 1962. During the Cuban missile crisis, John Fitzgerald Kennedy told the Soviet Union that he had "an ace in the hole."

The ace in the hole to which he referred was the then recently completed 10th Strategic Missile Squadron, Minutemen I located in Montana.

Under the earth of our Big Sky was buried the first land-based nuclear missiles. Today, we have 150 Minuteman II's and 50 Minuteman I's, and we have been proud of the part that we have been able to play in the defense of this Nation, and we have a long heritage of commitment.

During both World Wars I and II Montana sent more of its citizens to fight per capita then did any other State in the Nation. Many never returned to Montana's mountains and wheatfields.

Today, Montana has the Nation's leading percentage of its young citizens signed up for the military registration. Montanans have always contributed to the national defense because we know that what is good for America is good for Montana.

But now, with the notion of putting the MX in the Minuteman III silos has come a turning in Montana, and it is no wonder. Montanans have witnessed the basing and policy reversals to two administrations and the Congress, and we have been troubled by it.

We have heard about clustering and hardening and big bird and rattle space, and it does not bother us that we are so much confused by these terms as it does that those who are offering the missile are confused; and that the confusion is indicative of the disagreement about the missile basing mode and the missile's survivability. We are concerned about its eventual cost, because e hear $50, $60, $75, and $100 billion at a time when this Nation is economically on its knees. We are concerned that this missile will decrease nuclear stability. We worry that it is not a deterrent, that it is a first strike weapon which will increase escalation.

Let us put this matter of nuclear escalation into perspective. In 1960, the U.S. Defense Department decided that 400 equivalent megatons would inflict sufficient damage to the Soviet Union. In order to be assured of a fully capable deterrent this Nation decided to put 400 equivalent megatons on land-based, 400 more on sea-based, and 400 more on air-based, thus being able to destroy the Soviet Union thrice over. We have since increased that initial megatonnage of 1,200 by three times. We now have a nuclear arsenal of 3,500 megatons. Three times what we originally envisioned needing to destroy the Soviet Union thrice.

All Americans, including of course Montanans are correct in questioning adding even more terror to that arsenal.

Let us halt with the production of the MX. Let us pause at least long enough to determine an acceptable basing mode.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY).

Mr. SANTINI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I yield to the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. SANTINI. Mr. Chairman, the House of Representatives is once again considering one of my favorite topics—the MX missile. Since I have some very strong feelings on this subject, I would like to take a moment to express my views on the entire project, but most particularly the amendments to delete $2.4 billion in funds from the Department of Defense authorization bill for interim silo basing.

From racetrack to dragstrip to dense pack, the MX basing story has kept Nevadans in suspense for almost 3 years. When we started out in 1979, it unquestionably looked as if the MX shell game was going from the drawing board to the desert of Nevada.

I adamantly opposed the Air Force's grand design to carve out an area the size of Ohio, criss-crossed by 10,000 miles of roads for MX. We won a tremendous victory in 1981 when the President announced no MX for Nevada. But the summer of 1982 brings Nevadans a new MX threat. MX missiles would be racked up like so many billiard balls in tight formations called dense packs. And guess what area is a leading contender for the latest MX honors? Nellis Air Force Base.

Whatever the name of the MX basing game, my State may well be the loser. This Nation could foolishly invest billions of dollars and part of our State for an infant concept, dense pack, which may not even work.

Mr. Chairman, I find myself in the summer of 1982 voting against the Mavroules-Simon-Green amendments to delete $2.4 billion for interim MX basing funds. I do so somewhat reluctantly since the supporters of this amendment have been my allies in struggles in previous years to kill the shell-game basing for MX. Nevertheless, I must vote against today's amendment to delete interim Minutemen silo basing for MX because I believe rejecting interim MX basing will hasten the final arrival of MX in Nevada.

At the very least, interim MX basing in silos would buy the United States some time to make deliberative policy judgments about final MX basing. If interim silo basing is killed, it is my firm belief that this Nation will rush headlong into dense pack basing, an infant concept which has received only months of study.

There is no doubt in my mind that once again Nevada is the key target for permanent MX basing. The Air Force has changed the name of the game, but many of the old shell game elements still lurk in the background. When the U.S. Senate debated this subject last December, some very familiar terms like "mobility" and "deceptive basing" crept back into the record. I do not believe MX in the dense pack formation will be confined to 15 square miles. I think if this Congress supports dense pack, it will likely come home to roost in Nevada; it will expand; and I think it is extremely likely that it will contain many of the old MPS (shell game) features which were rejected just last October when the 4,600 shelters game was turned down.

I must, then, vote against the amendments to delete interim Minuteman silo basing. My own personal preference for MX basing is still an air mobile or submarine system. It seems to me that after years of study and 35 different MX basing proposals including everything from sandy silos, to railroad launching to multiple protective shelters, the only clear lesson we have learned is that in reality all of the land-based ICBM proposals have serious vulnerability problems. It makes no sense to me to leap into dense pack basing without some very serious study. Interim minutemen silo basing. While far from perfect, could at least provide increased deterrence while buying the United States some time for a thorough investigation of this latest MX deployment scheme.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Maryland and the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I support the substitute offered by Mr. STRATTON. The thing that concerns me is, this amendment would delay the MX at least a year on production, research, development. In other words, it is really kind of a back door way to eliminate the MX missile production.

I would hope that the President of the United States would move ahead on some type of basing mode. I really do not have any problem with the basing of the MX missiles. I think it would help to deter the Soviets if we can get a modern, sophisticated missile such as the MX in the ground and ready to be fired.

Anybody that has participated in war, conventional—thank God none of us have participated in nuclear war—knows that everything goes wrong in a conventional war, and I am sure the same thing would happen in a nuclear war. It would be impossible to totally hit the targets and knock out all MX missiles no matter how they are based. We could have as many as 100 MX missiles in the ground with 1,000 warheads in the near future. There is no way the Soviets could knock out all of these missiles. So, I think it would deter war instead of starting any type of nuclear war if we move ahead with updated missiles. So, I think the Stratton amendment makes sense. I think it would be a serious mistake to eliminate and stop the production of the MX missile.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. AUCOIN). The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. COURTER).

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, about an hour or two hours ago the gentleman from New York (Mr. DOWNEY) quoted a letter President Reagan has sent to the chairman of the Armed Services Committee (Mr. PRICE). From the second page of that letter, I will read parts that were not read by the gentleman from New York. It says, and this is the President talking:

> As you review this issue, I want to assure you that we intend to propose a final basing mode for MX by December.

That is of this year. Continuing:

> Some Members of Congress have expressed concern over the approval of basing funds before the basing mode is announced in December. I recognize that concern and will cooperate fully if the Congress wishes to place restrictions on the use of these funds until the basing decision is made in December.

That, Members of this body, very frankly, is the Stratton substitute. I think it is consistent with the desire of the administration. He is clearly saying that we have not yet decided on what basing mode we are going to have but we will in a short period of time. What the Stratton substitute simply does is to prohibit, to fence in that money which would otherwise be used for basing mode, deny the beneficial use of that money until the administration finally in fact decides to come up with one plan on basing.

So, therefore, for those Members of this body obviously who do not want the MX, they are not going to vote in favor of the substitute of the gentleman from New York, but those of us who are in favor of the MX, and for those of us who are in favor but concerned about basing mode, they should vote for the substitute of the gentleman from New York.

(By unanimous consent Mr. GREGG yielded his time to Mr. DICKINSON.)

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON).

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague from New Hampshire, and I thank the chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I had planned to speak on this to some extent when the research and development portion comes up, but these two are linked and I thought I would take part of my time and discuss a part of the subject now.

I think, if the Members will step back and look at it objectively, they will see that what we are doing is haggling or nickeling and diming this weapons system to death. I know this is not the intention of the author of the amendment, Mr. MAVROULES, for whom I have the highest regard, and certainly I do not impugn his intentions or what he is trying to do, but what I am saying is that the net effect is going to be to add millions and millions to the already overburdened weapons system, or else kill it.

We have already deleted $330 million out of the funds for this system in procurement. We have already taken over $150 million out in research and development. We did this in committee. So then we come to the floor, after having made the basic cuts, where yesterday we took over $3 billion in cuts, and then in the consideration of our committee and with the Department of Defense agreement we are bringing forth the bill that is presented to the Members, and we feel that it is essential that we go forward with this.

I am in favor of fencing these funds. This is also what the President has proposed. He said this would create no problem for him. But, the fact is that today, this day, General Rowney and Mr. Nitze, our negotiating team, are in Europe negotiating the START talks. They are sitting down to negotiate with the Soviets what we will have in terms of intercontinental ballistic missiles and other strategic weapons.

Those who have visited over there were told by General Rowney that the Soviets laugh and say, "Well, you have really nothing to bargain with because your people are not going to back you when it comes to the MX missile. Your Congress will not back you in what you are trying to do."

I think that if nothing else comes of this, we in this House must back up our negotiating team. We must get a little starch in the backbone, so to speak, to give them credibility with the Soviets and to show that we are, in fact, serious; that if, in fact, they will not come and negotiate with us in a meaningful way, we are going forward to build this weapon system. But if today we serve notice that we are not serious or that we are not going to back them, then we are pulling the rug out from under them to start with.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chairman recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES).

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, let me just kind of sum it up, if I may. At this time I would like to highly congratulate and commend all the Members who took part this morning in a very lively and good debate. It is good for us all to get our feelings out into the open and make the public more aware of what it is we are trying to do here in the Congress of the United States.

The one point I would like to make to finish up on, and I have been into it before, is that we are talking about one weapon system here, or part of a weapon system. I do not buy it when people say to me that we are sending the wrong signals to the Soviet Union. If the MX and its entire system was one isolated system, I can understand that kind of thinking. Let us talk about the submarine system, let us talk about the Navy, and let us talk about the Air Force.

If you do not think for one moment that the Soviet Union realizes we mean what we say, then you are mistaken. Do not let a red flag scare you away from my amendment. We have testing going on at this moment and the very near future on the MX missile itself. Does that not tell the Soviet Union something?

Let me just finish up by stating this: You talk about another basing mode sometime in September or October.

□ 1400

We were told that four or five times in the past by the last administration and by this one. How many times are we going to be fooled in putting money back into this program until they take it seriously at the Pentagon and at the White House?

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Members to think of that when they vote on the amendment and when they vote on the substitute.

● Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the Stratton amendment. Instead, I will support amendments to defer spending for procurement of MX missiles until an acceptable permanent basing mode is approved.

I can see little sense in voting to authorize about $1 billion to buy nine missiles for which there is no basing mode. A number of possible modes have been proposed. The best known of those modes, the Minuteman silos or the race tracks, have been rejected.

In a year when we are trying to reduce expenditures in every cost function, I cannot vote to spend money for an undefined program, especially in a function where enormous spending increases have been approved for the past 2 years.

When we are cutting programs across the board, it is pretty hard to vote for a program that probably would not be approved this year. If a basing mode is selected, this Congress can always pass a supplemental appropriation.●

(By unanimous consent, Mr. PRICE yielded his time to Mr. STRATTON.)

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON).

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, the vote that will be taken at the conclusion of these remarks will probably be one of the most important votes that this House will be called upon to take in this Congress.

I think it is important that we do not throw out the baby with the bath. Reference has been made to what the other body did. The Senate did take out all of the procurement money for the MX, but they took it out for a particular purpose, to show their displeasure with the Minuteman interim basing mode and to force the administation, to hold the feet of the administration to the fire, to come up with a permanent basing mode. In a very large measure, as shown by the President's letter that the gentleman from New Jersey read just a moment ago, the Senate action has had precisely that result. I think, now, judging from what we know of the opinions of the Senators, the Senate Armed Services Committee would want us to put money back in for the MX so we can have something to bring to conference with, and so that conferees from both Houses can discuss these issues in detail.

If the substitute amendment is rejected, however, we will not be able to go to conference on this matter.

It is just that simple. We are simply trying in this substitute to prevent any premature expenditure of money on the basing mode. But the place where we ought to make the final decision on whether this important weapons system should stand or fall should be in the conference itself.

Reference has previously been made as to whether 30 days is long enough to provide the House and the Senate with a fair opportunity to respond. I would point out that these 30 days will occur at the end of December. And we all know that we will probably have another 30 days at the beginning of January when we are not doing very much. So it is within that time that we will have an ample opportunity to make up our minds based on what the conference recommends and the President decides.

So the point I want to make is this: Let us not kill the MX now. That would be a tragedy. I say to the Members, particularly those who are not here in the Chamber, before you vote, do not vote until you go out in the Speaker's lobby and take a look once again at those Soviet missiles. That is a true image of the relative sizes of our two missiles, and what we are talking about is providing an adequate defense against the SS-18, the SS-17, and the SS-19.

So, Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will sustain the substitute so that we can make this decision in the proper way and not in this hasty manner on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 212, noes 209, not voting 13, as follows:

[Roll No. 197]

AYES—212

Annunzio	Boner	Conable
Archer	Bouquard	Corcoran
Ashbrook	Breaux	Courter
Atkinson	Brinkley	Craig
Badham	Broomfield	Crane, Daniel
Bafalis	Brown (CO)	Crane, Philip
Bailey (MO)	Broyhill	Daniel, Dan
Bailey (PA)	Butler	Daniel, R. W.
Barnard	Campbell	Dannemeyer
Beard	Carman	Daub
Benedict	Carney	Davis
Benjamin	Chappell	Derrick
Bennett	Chappie	Derwinski
Bereuter	Cheney	Dickinson
Bethune	Clausen	Dornan
Bevill	Coleman	Dougherty
Bliley	Collins (TX)	Dowdy
Dreier	Kramer	Perkins
Duncan	Lagomarsino	Price
Edwards (AL)	Latta	Quillen
Edwards (OK)	Leath	Railsback
Emery	LeBoutillier	Regula
English	Lee	Rhodes
Erlenborn	Lent	Ritter
Evans (DE)	Levitas	Roberts (SD)
Evans (GA)	Lewis	Robinson
Fary	Livingston	Rogers
Fazio	Loeffler	Rose
Fiedler	Lott	Roth
Fields	Lowery (CA)	Rousselot
Fish	Lujan	Rudd
Flippo	Luken	Sawyer
Fountain	Lungren	Sensenbrenner
Gephardt	Madigan	Shaw
Gibbons	Marlenee	Shelby
Gilman	Marriott	Shumway
Gingrich	Martin (IL)	Shuster
Ginn	Martin (NC)	Siljander
Goldwater	Martin (NY)	Skeen
Gonzalez	Martinez	Skelton
Gradison	Matsui	Smith (AL)
Gramm	McClory	Smith (OR)
Grisham	McCloskey	Smith (PA)
Hall, Ralph	McCollum	Snyder
Hall, Sam	McCurdy	Spence
Hammerschmidt	McDade	Stanton
Hance	McDonald	Staton
Hansen (ID)	McEwen	Stenholm
Hansen (UT)	McGrath	Stratton
Hartnett	Mica	Stump
Hatcher	Michel	Taylor
Hefner	Miller (OH)	Thomas
Hendon	Mitchell (NY)	Trible
Hightower	Mollohan	Vander Jagt
Hiler	Montgomery	Walker
Hillis	Moore	Wampler
Holland	Moorhead	Weber (MN)
Holt	Morrison	Weber (OH)
Hopkins	Mottl	White
Hubbard	Murtha	Whitehurst
Huckaby	Myers	Whitley
Hunter	Napier	Whitten
Hutto	Natcher	Williams (OH)
Hyde	Neal	Wilson
Ireland	Nelligan	Wolf
Jeffries	Nelson	Wortley
Jenkins	Nichols	Wright
Johnston	Oxley	Yatron
Kazen	Parris	Young (AK)
Kemp	Pashayan	Young (FL)
Kindness	Patman

NOES—209

Addabbo	Dellums	Gejdenson
Akaka	DeNardis	Glickman
Albosta	Dicks	Goodling
Alexander	Dingell	Gore
Anderson	Dixon	Gray
Andrews	Donnelly	Green
Anthony	Dorgan	Gregg
Applegate	Downey	Guarini
Aspin	Dunn	Gunderson
AuCoin	Dwyer	Hagedorn
Barnes	Dymally	Hall (OH)
Bedell	Dyson	Hamilton
Beilenson	Early	Harkin
Biaggi	Eckart	Hawkins
Bingham	Edgar	Heckler
Boggs	Edwards (CA)	Heftel
Boland	Emerson	Hertel
Bolling	Erdahl	Hollenbeck
Bonior	Ertel	Horton
Bonker	Evans (IA)	Howard
Brodhead	Evans (IN)	Hoyer
Brooks	Fascell	Hughes
Brown (CA)	Fenwick	Jacobs
Burton, Phillip	Ferraro	Jeffords
Byron	Findley	Jones (NC)
Chisholm	Fithian	Jones (OK)
Clinger	Florio	Kastenmeier
Coats	Foglietta	Kennelly
Coelho	Foley	Kildee
Collins (IL)	Ford (MI)	Kogovsek
Conte	Ford (TN)	LaFalce
Conyers	Forsythe	Lantos
Coughlin	Fowler	Leach
Coyne, James	Frank	Lehman
Coyne, William	Frenzel	Leland
Crockett	Frost	Long (LA)
D'Amours	Fuqua	Long (MD)
Daschle	Garcia	Lowry (WA)
Deckard	Gaydos	Lundine

Markey	Rahall	Solarz
Mattox	Rangel	St Germain
Mavroules	Ratchford	Stangeland
Mazzoli	Reuss	Stark
McHugh	Richmond	Stokes
Mikulski	Rinaldo	Studds
Miller (CA)	Roberts (KS)	Swift
Mineta	Rodino	Synar
Minish	Roe	Tauke
Mitchell (MD)	Roemer	Traxler
Moakley	Rostenkowski	Udall
Moffett	Roukema	Vento
Molinari	Roybal	Volkmer
Murphy	Russo	Walgren
Nowak	Sabo	Washington
O'Brien	Santini	Watkins
Oakar	Savage	Waxman
Oberstar	Scheuer	Weaver
Obey	Schneider	Weiss
Ottinger	Schroeder	Whittaker
Panetta	Schulze	Williams (MT)
Patterson	Schumer	Winn
Paul	Seiberling	Wirth
Pease	Shamansky	Wolpe
Pepper	Shannon	Wyden
Petri	Sharp	Wylie
Peyser	Simon	Yates
Pickle	Smith (IA)	Young (MO)
Porter	Smith (NE)	Zablocki
Pritchard	Smith (NJ)	Zeferetti
Pursell	Snowe

NOT VOTING—13

Blanchard	Clay	Rosenthal
Bowen	de la Garza	Solomon
Brown (OH)	Jones (TN)	Tauzin
Burgener	Marks
Burton, John	McKinney

□ 1415

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Jones of Tennessee for, with Mr. Rosenthal against.

Mr. Tauzin for, with Mr. Blanchard against.

Mr. Burgener for, with Mr. Clay against.

Mr. Solomon for, with Mr. McKinney against.

Messrs. LONG of Louisiana, JAMES K. COYNE, ROSTENKOWSKI, and ALBOSTA changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

Mr. DERRICK changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment offered as a substitute for the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MAVROULES), as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ENGLISH

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ENGLISH: Page 8, after line 12, add the following new section:

ENHANCEMENT OF NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENSE COMMAND LOW LEVEL RADAR CAPABILITIES IN FLORIDA

SEC. 109. The Secretary of the Air Force, using funds available under section 103, may acquire one tethered aerostat radar set (of the type currently in use at Cudjoe Key, Florida) for deployment at Kennedy Air Force Station, Florida. Concurrently with such procurement, the Secretary shall provide for necessary improvements to the radar set to be acquired and the existing set at Cudjoe Key, Florida. Such improvements and the operation and maintenance of such radar sets may be provided using funds available under this Act.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Government Information and Individual Rights of the Committee on Government Operatons, I have recently conducted a series of hearings on the capabilities of our military forces to assist in the interdiction of drugs in Florida. At these hearings, which were designed to promote cooperation under posse comitatus, we received testimony from the principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower, Reserve Affairs and Logistics, which highlighted the lack of low level radar coverage in Florida.

We also heard from the Deputy Chief of Staff (operations) of the Tactical Air Command, who stated that there was a military requirement for such low level coverage. The Air Force currently has a system in operation which covers the area of extreme southern Florida, but there is a significant gap in the Norad array north of Miami.

This gap is of obvious military interest to the Air Force because of the proximity of Cuba. My amendment would authorize the Air Force to obligate funds, pursuant to their stated needs and intentions, to procure a second low level radar system at Kennedy Air Force Station. No new money is being authorized.

A secondary benefit of the expanded low level radar coverage, in addition to the obvious military benefits, will be to assist the U.S. Customs Service in identifying aircraft which deliberately fly at very low altitudes to escape radar detection. These aircraft more often than not contain narcotics being smuggled in from Colombia.

Mr. Chairman, we are very excited about the potential which the posse comitatus amendment to last year's DOD authorization bill represents. The Vice President, who is the head of the task force created by the President in Florida to combat violent crime and drug smuggling, has made good use of the resources of the military to assist our sorely beset law enforcement officials. We are now presented with another opportunity to help them, this time by simply authorizing the Air Force to obligate money within their existing authorization. I emphasize that there is testimony which underlines the military requirement for such an expanded radar system.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has been kind enough to show me his amendment in advance and I have had an opportunity to review it. I can say on behalf of the committee that we would be glad to accept it.

We are in support of this amendment. Mr. ENGLISH's subcommittee did an outstanding job in assessing the first year of DOD support for civilian law enforcement, particularly in the most active arena, "Operation Florida."

In their deliberations, the subcommittee found that in increasing seek skyhook radar coverage in Florida, we could reach a number of goals.

The first is to plug large holes in our low altitude air defense radar coverage in Florida, satisfying a long-standing military requirement. The second was to avoid degradation of naval readiness, in the event of long-term use of E–2C Hawkeye aircraft for this role. And the third, a spinoff benefit, would be to enhance our ability to detect airborne drug smugglers attempting to fly into Florida from Latin America via the Caribbean.

It is due to Mr. ENGLISH's emphasis on efficient DOD implementation of the posse comitatus provision that the Customs Service's Air Operations Division will be able to test a Blackhawk helicopter during fiscal year 1983.

I want to compliment Mr. ENGLISH for his subcommittee's fine work and urge adoption of his amendment.

Mr. ENGLISH. I appreciate that.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLISH. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, we feel, after examining the amendment, that it would add to the bill, and we would be glad to accept it on this side.

We are in support of Mr. ENGLISH's amendment. Not only does it close the existing gaps in our air defense, but it simultaneously reinforces DOD's capability in support of the very real war on drugs taking place in Florida.

I think that this is an excellent example of the kind of innovative steps we can take to enable DOD to actively implement the posse comitatus provision and at the same time increase our military and naval readiness.

I, too, commend Mr. ENGLISH and urge adoption of his amendment.

Mr. ENGLISH. I appreciate the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLISH. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KINDNESS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to express a commendation to the gentleman who is the chairman of the Subcommittee on Government Information and Individual Rights for his efforts in this area in helping in drug enforcement in the south Florida area in particular and this step will be a great one in that direction. I commend the gentleman for it.

89-059 O-86-12 (Pt.13)

Mr. ENGLISH. I certainly want to commend the ranking minority member of the subcommittee for his fine support in this area also.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ENGLISH).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DICKS

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DICKS: Page 6, line 13, strike out "$17,243,400,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$16,733,400,000".

Page 8, after line 12, insert the following new section:

PROCUREMENT OF COMMERCIAL CARGO AIRCRAFT

SEC. 110. (a) None of the funds appropriated pursuant to the authorization of appropriations in section 103 for procurement of aircraft for the Air Force may be obligated or expended for procurement of additional C-5 aircraft.

(b) Of the amount authorized to be appropriated in section 103 for procurement of aircraft for the Air Force, $350,000,000 is authorized for procurement of the most cost-effective commercial wide-body cargo aircraft. Any such aircraft shall be procured through competitive bidding. In procuring such aircraft, the Secretary of the Air Force shall give priority to procurement of aircraft which (1) are available as surplus to the requirements of their present owners, (2) are suitable for conversion to military cargo configurations, and (3) were owned by a domestic company on the date of the enactment of this Act.

□ 1430

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKS was allowed to proceed for 10 additional minutes.)

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I am presenting this amendment on behalf of myself and the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. RHODES). I know there has been a lot of discussion over the last few weeks, since the Senate voted by 60 to 39 to substitute existing wide-bodied commercial aircraft for the C-5, about this whole question of airlift. I want to try to go back and briefly describe the history of how we got to here.

Back in the middle 1970's, the Army was very concerned about having intratheater capability, the ability to move ammunition and war materiels intratheater from one battlefield to another. And out of that came the competition to build the advanced medium STOL transport, the so-called YC-14, which was a Boeing plane, and the YC-15, which was a plane built by McDonnell Douglas. It is important to understand that today the C-17 is, in essence, a bigger version of the YC-15 which was built and demonstrated back in the middle 1970's.

A decision was made not to go forward with an intratheater airlifter but to go forward with a new modern airlifter because of the Rapid Deployment Force. And that competition was the so-called CX competition. Last fall a decision was made that the winner of that competition was McDonnell Douglas on the C-17, a very capable airplane that can carry all sizes of equipment long ranges to a foreign battle area and then from that foreign battle area, or port, or airfield, up to the forward edge of the battlefield, something that the C-5 cannot do.

Now, the reason that I raise this is because I think it is important to understand the history of this. The decision was made. It was supported by the Army, by the Air Force, and by the Marine Corps. A presentation by Verne Orr was made on January 8 to Mr. Carlucci in which all of the services came forward and said, "This is the plane we want, the C-17." They were unanimous. There was no dissent. There was no discussion of the C-5. In fact, in the briefing they pointed out all of the deficiencies of the C-5. And yet Mr. Carlucci, for reasons that I do not think any of us fully understand, decided not to go forward with the C-17 but to have a sole-source procurement of 50 C-5's. Lockheed had come in with a proposal for 50 C-5's. And that decision was then transmitted in the President's budget.

Now, about the same time, the Boeing Co. came in with a second unsolicited proposal. They said, "Wait a minute. You are really not going to go back and open up the C-5 line which has been down for 9 years, you are really not going to go back and build a plane that will cost in then-year dollars $182 million per plane, not going to go back and build a plane that has a 76-hour maintenance requirement, for every hour a C-5 flies in the air." They came in and said, "We have a more cost-effective way to do this job." They said, "Why not use either new 747-F's, at a firm, fixed price of $58 million, with a guarantee over the next 20 years for operation and maintenance costs, logistics cost, or use existing wide bodies, either 747s or DC-10's that are available on the commercial market. Those planes go from about $30 million to $32 million, with a $12 million modification. That gets up to $44 million." And they said, "Under our estimates, you can save approximately $7 billion over the next 20 years in terms of the procurement price of those airplanes and the 20-year operational cycle of those airplanes versus going ahead and building a plane, the line which has been shut down for the last 9 years, that will cost us $182 million over the next 20 years."

And that was the proposal as it was presented to the Senate.

Now, the Senate voted to do basically what the Dicks-Rhodes amendment calls for. They voted to substitute commercial cargo aircraft, to give the taxpayers a savings at a time when all of us know we must make reductions, not only in Government spending, but in defense spending as well.

Now, just a few months ago the selected acquisition report was published. It shows that the cost of all of our major weapons systems has increased from $318 billion up to $455 billion, an increase of $137 billion.

We simply do not have enough money to buy every major weapon system that any general over at the Pentagon thinks is necessary. This gives us an opportunity, a unique opportunity, to buy an airplane off the shelf—which has a mission capable rate of 90 percent compared to 53 percent for the C-5, which has a maintenance per man-hour of 20 hours, every hour in the air, versus 76 on the C-5. It gives you a chance to buy that kind of an airplane at a substantial reduction to the taxpayers.

The Air Force has done everything it can to distort the Boeing presentation. They have said even though the Boeing plane can carry more oversize and bulk cargo than can the C-5, that you are going to need more 747's than C-5's. They have said, "We cannot have contractor logistics support for the next 20 years"—even though they are doing it on the KC-10's and have testified that that reduces the cost by 50 percent of that support—because they were embarrassed by the major cost differences between the two proposals.

So the Members are going to hear a lot today that it is only $1 billion over the next 20 years—and, by the way, we can get the wide bodies 3 years earlier—and they are going to say there is only 1-year difference. I will just tell the Members, and I have been through this with the Air Force before on the B-1 and the advanced technology bomber, they will say anything or do anything to sell their proposal up here on Capitol Hill. I hate to have to say that, but in my view it is very, very true. And I have studied this issue very carefully.

Now, we all recognize that we need to take care of airlift, even though only 6 percent of all of the equipment that we are going to send out with the Rapid Deployment Force is going to go by air, 90 percent to 94 percent is going to be pre-positioned or go by ship. So even though it is only 6 percent, we think that the right option for our country—and I want everyone to listen to this because it is terribly important—the right option for our country today is to buy some existing wide bodies that we can get right now at a very bargain basement price that will add bulk and oversize capability which, by the way, is 85 percent of what the RDF is composed of, and then buy the plane that won the competition last year, the C-17. It is by far the superior airlifter in terms of outsize equipment. So we have a near-term program and a long-term program. I know many of the Members are concerned about the issue of outsize capability, and I am concerned about it, as well. Yet when you look at the CMMS, only about 14 percent to 27 percent of what has to be moved is outsize equipment. And we believe that if you dedicate your existing 77 C-5's to that outsize equipment, which is, by the way, what MAC is supposed to do, you have enough planes in the near term to handle the outsize equipment, the tanks, the infantry-fighting vehicles, and the helicopters, and you really need additional capability to handle bulk and oversize.

The 747 can fly further and faster. It is a better bulk and oversize airlifter than a C-5. Why do you want to spend $182 million to do the same job that the 747 or the DC-10 can do for $44 million? It just does not make sense. And then, when you make the decision that you want a new outsize airlifter to replace the C-141's and the C-130's, which have to be replaced, then build a C-17.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Kansas, who has been a leader on this issue.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to talk to the gentleman about the cost issue and ask him a couple of questions.

Mr. DICKS. The cost issue is one of the most important issues, and I would like my colleagues to listen to the cost issue. It is very important.

Mr. GLICKMAN. This is a very complicated issue—outsize, oversize—and, of course, the Pentagon feels strongly about this issue, as do certain Members of Congress.

As I understand it, the C-5 would cost $128 milion, more than twice the cost a a new 747, and the cost difference between the C-5 and the 747 over a 20-year life cycle is $7.9 billion based upon the guarantees included in the Boeing offer; is that correct? That is, by going with the C-5 option, by voting down the Dicks-Rhodes amendment, we will be spending nearly $8 billion more. Is that a correct statement?

Mr. DICKS. That is exactly correct. And those numbers have been verified by aeronautical systems within the Air Force, but they were changed by the top leadership of the Air Force because of the political considerations.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Well, I would like to ask the gentleman, the Pentagon claims the cost difference is only a little more than $1 billion. Is that a legitimate statement?

Mr. DICKS. No. The Boeing costs include all engineering changes required to make the aircraft ready for the military airlift mission. The price they offered includes all technical data and documents and training for flight crews and maintenance personnel. The guaranteed life-cycle costs also include spares and all peculiar support equipment. Yet the Pentagon insists on adding 14 percent to 747 flyaway costs to cover these very items.

Second, the Boeing offer includes a commitment to demonstrate fuel consumption of 2,865 gallons per hour based on typical MAC usage of the aircraft. With over a decade of commercial service, the fuel consumption of a 747 cargo aircraft is easily calculated. But, the Pentagon came up with a fuel consumption rate of 3,900 gallons, which was not even based on missions. It included a comparison to the E-4, which is an entirely different airplane with a large amount of heavy electronic equipment.

Third, the Pentagon rejected the Boeing guarantee for providing contractor logistics support without any specific analysis. This concept is already in use for the KC-10, the C-9, the T-43, and the E-4 fleets. Air Force testified before the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee that it was yielding 50 percent savings for the KC-10. The 747 as a successful commercial aircraft has a worldwide support system already in place. It is the height of folly not to take advantage of it.

Finally, the Pentagon increased the number of 747's they claim are needed to equal the bulk and oversize capability of 50 C-5's.

Mr. GLICKMAN. We are all concerned about the budget picture and I wonder if we can get the comparison for the outlays of the two proposals, the C-5 versus the 747 for 1983, 1984, 1985, and future years?

Mr. DICKS. The C-5 program proposed by the Pentagon would include outlays of $182 million in fiscal year 1983. Our amendment would provide about $90 million or one-half of the outlay level.

Over the fiscal year 1983 to 1985 period the DOD plan and our amendment would be about equal but in that period—listen to this—only two C-5's would be delivered and 33 747's would be delivered.

Mr. GLICKMAN. I thank my colleague.

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LEVITAS. I thank the gentleman for yielding and I sincerely appreciate that because I think if we are to debate this matter it requires a debate, not just between the people who are in agreement, but between those who have different points of view and I will extend the same courtesy to the gentleman.

Mr. DICKS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LEVITAS. I would like to take up the point just raised by the gentleman from Kansas in his colloquy with the gentleman from Washington, that there is a somewhere between $6 and $7 billion saving over a 20-year life cycle.

Now according to the information that has been made available to me—a letter from Maj. Gen. Guy L. Hecker—that is disputed and the fact is, according to the Air Force figures, that the figures referred to by the gentleman from Kansas were prepared by the Boeing Co. and did not take into account many of the considerations which the Air Force would take into account, such as a 25-percent lower fuel cost, the number of 747's that would be required, and the fact that the Boeing figures assume that there would be civilian contractors to maintain the 747's even though they would be used in areas of major conflict and severe battle conditions.

Now, I recognize that the cost issue is one part of it, because it does not make any difference how much you save if the item would not do the job—and we are going to get into that later on.

Is it not a fact that the figures that the gentleman from Kansas referred to were figures supplied by the Boeing Co. which are disputed by the Air Force?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS) has expired.

(At the request of Mr. LEVITAS and by unanimous consent, Mr. DICKS was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DICKS. The proposal was presented and it carried with it a firm fixed price guarantee for either 48 new planes or 50 used planes with a 20-year contractor logistics support contract which is being used on the KC-10's which we are also buying under this bill.

The proposal was made. There is a substantial cost difference in the terms of the purchase of the airplanes—I think about $4.4 billion. And the contractor logistics support. When you add those two together you get up to about $12.1 billion versus about $20 billion. It is a $7.9 billion difference. That is why we are raising this issue. We think we have a more cost-effective proposal.

True, the Air Force does change the Boeing proposal, but in my judgment, that was done so that the cost comparisons would not be so great—and I can point out last year where we went through the same thing on the B-1. We were told that the B-1 would only cost $20 billion and the SAR just came up and it is $28.9 billion.

The Air Force has a way of fudging numbers in order to make what they want look good and make what the other person wants look bad.

This is a classic example of the Air Force changing the basic Boeing proposal on rather questionable grounds, in my judgment.

Mr. LEVITAS. I would say to the gentleman that I am not going to carry a brief to defend the credibility of the Defense Department on every issue, but I would suggest without being overly cynical about the subject that perhaps the Boeing Co. in a strong desire to get this contractor to have the 747's might present figures which themselves are questionable or be selective in their use of data.

Mr. DICKS. The Air Force Aeronautics Division said that the Boeing numbers were legitimate and those numbers were changed by top Air Force officers who added 45 percent to the operation and maintenance costs, for example. They increased the cost of the planes by 14 percent.

What I am trying to explain to the gentleman is that they did this to make the cost comparision more attractive from their perspective, and in my view the Boeing proposal which is a firm fixed price guaranteed on the price of the new planes and a firm fixed price guaranteed up to the next 20 years for operation and maintenance, is a valid proposal that would work and I am surprised that the Air Force would not go along with it on the basis that they could save this much money and get a much better airplane than the C-5, at an earlier date.

One of the things that we have been trying to get contractors to do—I know the gentleman from Georgia has been concerned about waste in Government as the gentleman from Washington has—is to get them to make firm fixed-price commitments.

Now, to turn the tables a little bit. Lockheed has given a firm fixed price of $128 million, but that is not in then-year dollars. As we understand it, that price could go up as much as $182 million per plane, according to the evidence we have before the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee. On the rewinging they would only give a 1-year limited guarantee. They would not warranty the rewinging of the C-5 wings nor would they give that in terms of the new planes. And here is Boeing willing to give a 10-year or 20,000-hour guarantee for this equipment. They are willing to give a firm fixed-price guaranteed logistics support and they are willing to give that kind of a waranty on the used planes for structural life.

The gentleman knows the problems we have had with the C-5 over the years. The fact that we had 20 deficiencies when the plane was delivered; the fact that we have had to spend $1.6 billion to rewing the plane; the fact that we had this terrible maintenance per man-hour rate of 76 hours for every hour in the air, and a mission capability rate of 53 percent. This plane has been an embarrassment. I cannot believe that we could possibly consider going back to build this kind of a plane, reopen the line that has been down for 9 years, when we could go forward with the C-17, which is a much more capable outsized airlifter and get existing wide bodies in the near term. That is a program that is good for this country and I would suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that when he looks at the fact that when the plane was built we were supposed to get 120 of them, we had a $2 billion overrun and the number was reduced from 120 down to 81.

Now we have the same leadership of the same company running this program today. I do not see how we can be assured that we are going to get anything better today than we did back in 1972.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS) as expired.

(At the request of Mr. LEVITAS and by unanimous consent, Mr. DICKS was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I thank the gentleman for yielding and the other points which the gentleman has made, which I take serious exception to, the C-5 is an outstanding plane, which has proved itself time and time again in the defense of this Nation and in the assistance of our allies. And the other question about contracts and so forth we will get into. I want to confine our discussion on this point to the cost issue which the gentleman from Kansas, and the gentleman from Washington discussed.

The Boeing Co., who understandably will present figures most favorable to its own position, has presented figures which the Air Force, who has the responsibility of living with this over the years, disputes.

Under the information that the Air Force has provided, in fiscal year 1983, the outlays for the C-5B would be $182.2 million as compared to $563.7 million. In fiscal year 1982, $629.4 to $1.5 billion. In fiscal year 1985, $1.4 billion to $1.6 billion.

Mr. DICKS. I think where the gentleman is being misled—I do not mean that with any discourtesy implied—the fact is that we will get out planes in the inventory 3 years earlier. Therefore, they will be operating and there will be operation and maintenance costing that will go along with the operation of those planes.

When you look at a procurement versus procurement dollars for purchasing the planes, our number is less than your number. I think that is where the gentleman is confused. I also think it points up the very strength of our proposal, that is, we get our airplanes earlier. By 1985 we will have 33 of these wide bodies in the inventory while there will only be 2 C-5's. In fact we spend $5.6 billion of money to get one C-5 before anything comes in. So the reason that the numbers the gentleman has are inaccurate is because they carry O. & M. money, and I think we want this additional capability because that is what the Joint Chiefs all say—we want extra near-term capability to be able to move that bulk and oversized equipment.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, there has been an awful lot of confusion about the numbers that have been used. I am confused myself.

So what I did, I asked two auditors who had one time worked for the GAO to take these figures and tell me what they really mean. So let me read what they say on the three points that the gentleman from Washington made, life cycle cost, maintenance costs and operating cost per cargo ton mile.

No. 1, he says:

> The Boeing proposal is based upon 48 aircraft with a life cycle cost totaling $9.8 billion. However, the number does not meet the requirements of the Air Force. to achieve this requirement an additional seven 747's must be needed, bringing the total to 55 aircraft.

So the life cycle costs for the 55 747's total $15.1 billion and the difference between the Boeing proposal and the Air Force suggested life cycle cost is $900 million.

Differences between the Boeing proposal and the Air Force adjusted life cycle cost are due to: First, increased acquisition cost of seven additional 747 aircraft ($1.1 billion); and second, increased operating and support program cost ($4.2 billion).

The up front money will be $2 billion more, but the 747 is not a bargain at any price and for this purpose.

Mr. Chairman, it has been stated that the C-5 requires an inordinate amount of maintenance compared to a commercial 747.

The C-5 is the largest and most complex wide-body airplane commercial or military, and would naturally require more maintenance than less capable airplanes.

Measuring the maintenance man-hours against the number of the hours the airplane is flown can be misleading. Commercial airplanes are kept flying at the maximum number of hours they can be profitably scheduled because these flying hours generate revenue and profit. Military airplanes are flown the minimum number of hours required to maintain flying crew proficiency and training, because military flying generates cost not revenue. The same airplane in commercial and military service will therefore have significantly different maintenance man-hours per flight-hour experience. A 747 in commercial service requires only 20 maintenance man-hours per flight yet the Air Force 747's based at Andrews AFB require over 85 maintenance man-hours per flight-hour.

This assertion falls in the category of comparing "apples and oranges."

In discussing the benefits of the 747 over the C-5B, it has been charged that the cost of operating the C-5A was $1.15 per cargo ton-mile, while the cost of operating a commercial 747 was 21 cents per cargo ton-mile. This leads to the conclusion that the C-5B is six times more expensive to operate on a cargo ton basis. This is misleading and erroneous.

C-5A actual operating cost data for fiscal year 1981 was $1.15 per cargo ton-mile, the peacetime cost.

The peacetime cost for 747's and 707's that the Air Force charters to haul cargo is 69 cents per ton-mile. The difference in cost is that the Air Force is manned—even in peacetime—for wartime surge capability—expensive but necessary. Commercial airlines do not have this manning requirement nor do they incur other similar costs such as training.

The estimated cost for operating the C-5A in wartime is 42 cents per cargo ton-mile. This is based on flying with heavier loads, more hours per day, and with more difficult flight profiles.

The cited cost of 21 cents per cargo ton-mile for a 747 is a revenue cost which comes out of a Civil Aeronautics Board report. It is not comparable to the other figures since it is unknown what factors have been put into it or left out.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that one point?

Mr. DAN DANIEL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The big difference here is that a 747, when you talk about the oversized and bulk gear, can carry 135 tons compared to 100 tons by a C-5, and that is why we believe——

Mr. DAN DANIEL. How many tons of what?

Mr. DICKS. Of oversized and bulk cargo.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. That is what we are talking about.

Mr. Chairman, on the maintenance cost, the 747 versus the C-5, here is what he says:

It has been stated that the C-5 requires an inordinate amount of maintenance compared to a commercial 747. Of course, commercial airlines keep flying at the maximum number of hours they can be profitably scheduled. Of course flying hours generate revenue and profit. Military planes are flown the minimum number of hours simply because they do not generate revenue.

Here is the important point. According to what the auditor said, the 747 commercial plane requires only 20 maintenance man-hours per flight yet the Air Force plane, 747, based at Andrews Air Force base, requires over 65 maintenance man-hours per flight-hours.

Now the operating costs per mile.

In discussing the benefits of the 747 over the C-5B, it has been charged that the cost of operating the C-5A is $1.15 per cargo mile. This leads to the conclusion that the C-5B is six times more expensive to operate on a cargo-ton basis. This is misleading and erroneous. The peacetime cost for 747's and 707's that the Air Force charters to haul cargo is 69 cents per ton-mile. The estimated cost for the operating of the C-5A in wartime is 42 cents per cargo ton-mile.

So, I think the point, Mr. Chairman, is that we spend entirely too much time in this body and in our committees preparing for peace. We want peace but we have to prepare for war. That is how you deter aggression.

One other point that I would like to make on my own—this has nothing to do with the auditor's report—we have some serious budget restraints. If we buy the 747, which will not do the job, we have to have $2 billion more up front and again the 747 will not meet our requirements.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

May I say this is based on GAO's study in connection with the Yom Kippur war as an example of readiness and this is a quote:

In GAO's opinion, however, the relatively small quantities of outsized equipment delivered in this manner—had no decisive effect on the war's outcome and the ton-mile costs for the C-5 . . . and the C-141 aircraft were 40 cents and 20 cents respectively. At the same time, a commercial cargo configured 747 provided service at a ton-mile cost to the command of only 11 cents.

This is by C-5's—

I repeat, that is a part of the cost here—40 cents per ton-mile for the C-5 and 11 cents per ton-mile for the 747.

□ 1500

Mr. DAN DANIEL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington a question. According to my information, the question of fixed-price proposals the gentleman brought up a moment ago, let us accept the word of a Boeing spokesman at a midday news conference in Atlanta. The spokesman said, "We are way, way away from being anywhere near talking hard figures."

Does the gentleman know where that comes from?

Mr. DICKS. I have no idea. I did not attend that.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

(At the request of Mr. DICKS, and by unanimous consent, Mr. PRICE was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. PRICE. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. All I can say, what I know about is the letter that was sent to Kelly Burke and to Mr. TOWER and to the Members of Congress, the chairmen of the various committees, presenting this firm fixed price on new planes and on the 20-year operation and maintenance of it.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD at this point a copy of a letter that I would be glad to provide my colleague which details this 20-year program.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair will advise the gentleman from Washington that that permission needs to be sought in the full House.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, one other point I would like to make, since this has been raised. This plane is not in competition with the C-17. I am a strong supporter of the C-17. As a matter of fact, before this debate concludes, we are going to offer a motion to put some line item money in this budget authorization for the C-17; but that plane is to replace the C-41 and the C-130's which are probably 4, 5, or 6 years from now; so we are not talking about the C-17 in this bill, because we are supporting the C-17.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that point briefly?

Mr. PRICE. I yield.

Mr. DICKS. I had a hearing with Mr. Carlucci. I asked Mr. Carlucci the question, "Will this slow down the decisions to go forward with the C-5? Would it slow down the C-17?"

I said, "There is no question, though, that you are stretching out the C-17 program."

Mr. Carlucci said "no." Then he checked the record and put "yes." "In other words, you are slowing it down?"

Mr. Carlucci said "no" at the hearing. He changed the record to "yes."

There is no question about it. The difference in funding profile is about $7 billion. The chairman of the board of McDonnell Douglas said:

If you give me the same funding profile that you are giving the C-5, I will deliver that plane in 1987 at the same time you get your first C-5.

In my view, the C-17 is far superior. In the short term, we can use existing wide bodies, which are highly capable and much less expensive to the taxpayer.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BADHAM AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DICKS

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BADHAM as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. DICKS:

Page 6, line 13, strike out "$17,243,400,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$16,383,400,000".

Page 8, after line 12, insert the following new section:

PROHIBITION OF FUNDS FOR CERTAIN AIRLIFT AIRCRAFT

SEC. 110. None of the funds appropriated pursuant to an authorization of appropriations in section 103 shall be available for purchase of new strategic airlift aircraft for the Air Force other than KC-10 aircraft.

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have offered a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

It is my estimate the nearest thing that we will ever have on the floor of the Congress to "a deal that you cannot refuse." This is an amendment to reduce the procurement figure for fiscal year 1983 by $860 million and in so doing does not cut into sinew or muscle of the defense establishment. It does not shut down a production line. It does not stretch out a delivery system. What it does, and we were talking earlier this day on another subject, it sends a signal to the Pentagon and to the White House saying in polite terms to the Pentagon, "Gentlemen, get your act together on strategic airlift."

Now, I think there is no question, I hope there is no question in the mind of any Member of this body, that strategic airlift is one of the top requirements today if we are going to have any kind of a credible defense that will allow for force projection anywhere in the world. We need sealift and we need strategic airlift and we do not have sufficient today.

Well, then, why does the gentleman from California, a strong advocate of a strong defense, want to cut $860 million out of the procurement budget? I will explain that, by giving you a little history that I think you all should be aware of, but should be brought again to mind.

Sometime ago, the Air Force and the Department of Defense came before the Congress and they said, "We need a new advanced tanker cargo aircraft and we need it now."

There was a competition and the winner of that competition was the McDonnell Douglas DC-10 airframe modified to be an aerial tanker and cargo plane which came to be known as the KC-10.

Now, I go back that far to show you how bad the Pentagon can do from time to time. The KC-10 airframe was bought under terms that were so favorable that any individual or corporation buying automobiles would have jumped at it and the Pentagon did jump at it and then they backed away. They lost the good terms economically that they had with McDonnell Douglas and stretched out the program, which will make it cost more. We are still buying KC-10's; and we should be. That is why I have excised the KC-10 from this substitute for new strategic aircraft for the Air Force, other than the KC-10. The KC-10 is bought. It is being delivered on time, on schedule, and on the money. It would have been even better if the Department of Defense had been paying attention to economics.

Now comes the need for strategic airlift of outsized cargo, oversized cargo, and an ultimate replacement for the C-141 and C-130's. DOD had a competition called CX which left a very unpleasant taste in the months of the Members of this body and particularly the members of the Committee on Armed Services, because it was presented so poorly that it looked like another C-5 that they were buying and nobody wanted that.

So we had the CX competition. The proposal by the Air Force, the presentation was poor and they admitted it, and so we killed it. Then they came back the next year and finally the Secretary of the Air Force and the Secretary of Defense ended the argument, we thought, by saying that the competition between Lockheed, Boeing, and McDonnell Douglas is over and what will be called the C-17 has won the CX competition.

I will have to say that I was one of those Members who thought CX as the specifications came to our committees was one of the dumbest ideas since the C-5; but I went out on my own to go to one of the manufacturers.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BADHAM was allowed to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.)

Mr. BADHAM. I went out on my own to McDonnell Douglas and had a briefing on the congressionally mandated mobility study which was the grandfather of the CX and strategic airlift. I went through what the requirement was and I went through what the presentation was and I became a convert to the C-17. I wish more of my colleagues had at the time, but the competition was over. It was ended. We were going to ask for money for the C-17, when all of a sudden now came Lockheed with an unsolicited proposal to give us—another CX? No. Another freighter? No. Give us some more C-5's.

I cannot believe it; so I went over and talked to the gentlemen at the head of the Pentagon and they told me that the competition that was ended really had not ended at all, but after the competition ended and they got a CX candidate, which was named C-17 and was awarded to McDonnell Douglas, they said, "Now, that plane has to compete with every other airplane that is flying," presumably the C-5, the 747, L-1011, anything there is.

□ 1510

I could not believe that. This was a backward look, if you will to the previous administration's vacillation on ordering weapons systems.

I objected to that, but my objection was, apparently, not well enough heard. It was not heard in Seattle, Wash., I can tell Members, because after the sole-sourcing, of 50 more C-5's now came Boeing with a further unsolicited proposal. I do not know who might be next in this business of unsolicited proposals, but I say it is about time the Air Force gets off its landing gear and starts making some decisions.

Now, the body of this substitute helps the administration and the Department of Defense make that decision. Again I say, without stopping a production line, because there is no production line for C-5, there is no real production for 747's because they are sitting in parking lots all over the world, and there is no production line for C-17's.

But by delaying for 1 year and telling the Pentagon to get its act together so that the next time they come to us, they offer us something we need and give us something we can use.

Now the final argument in favor of my substitute: There will be no delay. The Air Force, the Army, the Marine Corps, the Navy, all want C-17, and if there is any high-ranking uniformed person in the U.S. military who tell you differently, he either does not know the facts or he is kidding you, because that is the word we have gotten.

The first C-17 will roll out between 4 and 6 months later than the first new C-5 rolls out. So we are not talking about a great delay. The Air Force would have us believe that since the first C-5, new, that rolls off will be immediately operational because they have 77 C-5's—after they get the new wings on—whereas, once the first C-17 rolls off you have to have 11 more of them before you can put them in a squardron and call that an operational unit, and that will take 3 to 4 years, they say.

Let us tell the Department of Defense to tell us what they need and that will be the C-17, and we will give it to them.

I would like to just make one more comment before I yield to the gentleman. In the testimony before the Committee on Armed Services, we heard from the Commanding General of the Miltary Airlift Command, General Allen. When asked by the ranking minority member of the committee, Mr. DICKINSON, "Well, General, what really are your choices; how will you use 747's if we give them to you?"

General Allen thought for a moment and he replied, "You mean what are my 'druthers,' 1, 2, 3?"

He said, "Yes, what are your druthers, 1, 2, 3? How would you use 747's? If we gave them to you, that is?"

His reply was, "My first choice would be to sell them to private industry, the airlines. My second choice would be to give them to the Guard. And my third choice, and last choice, would be to try to find some way to absorb them in the military airlift fleet."

That is not a very good argument for 747. C-5 does not have all that great an argument. C-17 has the best argument. But I think by eliminating this money, we would get the C-17 as soon as we would any other good airplane.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I know the gentleman would not want to mislead this body. There is one point I would like to make with respect to the production line of the C-5: 51 percent of that production line is now in operation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. BADHAM) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BADHAM was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BADHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding further to me.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman knows that they continue to make spare parts, they are in the modernization or rewinging program. So 51 percent of that production line is now in operation.

On the other point the gentleman made about the confusion at the Pentagon, let me read what the Commander in Chief says about the C-17:

Finally, we plan to use available fiscal year 1981 funds in the CX program to continue research and development on C-17, thereby preserving the option of developing the C-17 for procurement in the late 1980's, to provide out-size capability and be a potential replacement for the C-130 and the 141.

Members just heard the gentleman from Virginia say a few moments ago that before this debate concludes today we will offer an amendment, that is, before the debate concludes on this bill we will offer an amendment which will line item funds for the C-17.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. BADHAM. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

I think the gentleman and I are not that far off as far as misleading is concerned. My statement that a production line was not open for C-5, part of it may be open to rebuild the wings, but we have not produced a C-5 in over 9 years, as the gentleman knows.

I do not think anybody on this floor could be considered a stronger supporter of, as you called him, our Commander in Chief, certainly, than I. I am not saying that he is wrong; because he is right; he says we need a C-17, we need airlift, and I think somebody over at the Pentagon may have misled him a little bit, rather than the other way around.

Mr. GINN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GINN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, by his own statement, my distinguished colleague points out there is a serious need today, now, for increased airlift capability.

What we are trying to do is to provide that airlift capability as soon as possible. We are not here today fighting the need for the CX or the C-17 down the road. I think, as I understand it, it will be designed, it will be built, it will then be tested, it will then have crews developed for it. All of that takes time. We do not have that time for the immediate future.

It is not needed until the C-41's and the C-130's become obsolete. No question about it, when you compare the C-5 and the 747 that the C-5 is a proven military product. It has performed in the Mideast war. I think it helped end that war in some 7 days when it landed and tanks rolled out. It did not have to have expensive unloading equipment to help unload as does the 747.

There is no comparison between the C-5 and the 747 when you look at the facts. As the debate unfolds, we will attempt to clear up some of the distortions, some of the misrepresentations of fact, in fact, that have occurred with regard to the C-5.

Mr. BADHAM. Let me thank the gentleman for his contribution, and I will have to say that this gentleman agrees with the gentleman that should it come to a comparison between 747 and C-5B as a military aircraft for the airlift mission, the gentleman is right; there is absolutely no comparison.

But I hesitate, to quote the words of another gentleman from Georgia who is no longer here, "Why not the best?"

Mr. GINN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BADHAM. I yield further to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. GINN. Mr. Chairman, we are trying to give the gentleman the best now, while we wait and develop the C-17 as, in fact, it is needed.

The gentleman knows this decision was not made by the gentleman from Georgia nor any of the Georgia delegation Members. It was made by the President of the United States. It was made by the Secretary of Defense, by the Deputy Secretary of Defense, by the Secretaries of all of the services, and supported by the Vice Commandant of the Marine Corps.

They say we need the airlift capability now and there is no need for the CX now because it is a paper plane, still to be developed, to be built, tested, and its crews developed.

The C-5 is a proven product.

I thank the gentleman for his comments in that regard.

Mr. BADHAM. The gentleman is almost correct. The C-17 is not a paper airplane. The wing flies, the engine flies, all the parts of that airplane have flown. So it has been designed.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say to the gentleman that I think he has made a very compelling case for the C-17. I share his judgment that the C-17 is a much more capable airplane.

Is it not true that the McDonnell-Douglas Co. built the YC-15 in the advanced medium STOL transport competition which in essence is a smaller version of what today is the C-17? We demonstrated, we flew it, in fact we have had that plane more closely than we have had going back to the old C-5.

So I agree with the gentleman.

□ 1520

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. BADHAM was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DICKS. I think the gentleman makes a very telling point, plus is it not true that the chairman of the board of the McDonnell Douglas Co. said that the C-17 was given the funding profile that the C-5 is getting, the accelerated funding, the extra $3.7 billion that Mr. Carlucci supposedly found, he could deliver the C-17 by 1987 or 1986? That is what he testified, so we are going to get a plane about the same time as the C-5.

Mr. BADHAM. I was going to point that out in further response to the gentleman from Georgia. It has been said. In fact, even with the normal R. & D. you would roll out the first

C-17 in 4 or 6 months after the first C-5.

Mr. DICKS. Is it not true that every military leader, General Myer, General Storey, General Gabriel, General Kingston, General Vessey, all recommended to Mr. Carlucci—let me just read General Myer's quote:

I believe it is vital for the Air Force and Army to stand firm on the CXC-17 so we can get an airlift aircraft that meets our wartime requirements.

Is it not true that because the C-17 has direct deliverability to the battlefield and also intratheater capability, that it is far superior as an air lifter to the C-5? Is there any question in the gentleman's judgment about that?

Mr. BADHAM. That is why I am here.

Mr. DICKS. All the military leaders recommended the C-17. The gentleman and I may have a slight difference about what to do in the near term, but the gentleman and I have the same judgment about the vast superiority of the C-17 over the C-5, a plane that has caused us tremendous problems.

Mr. BADHAM. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman for bringing what seems to me to be the most rational idea into this debate. I do not know very much about the sophisticated weapons, but it seems to me as though, if I put it in more practical terms, we need a heavy truck for some uses. The gentleman from Washington is willing to give us a station wagon right off the floor, ready for delivery. The committee is willing to give us a used truck that will work part of the time. It seems to me that the gentleman is trying to give us an opportunity to buy a truck that will do the right job. It will take a little longer to get it, perhaps, but it seems more sensible than to spend money for things that are not quite right for the job.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding to me. I was quite interested in the comments of the gentleman from Washington State citing that the C-17 was a proven aircraft. Is there any place we could go to view the C-17 or touch it or watch it fly as of this date?

Mr. DICKS. We will get you the YC-15.

Mr. BADHAM. I did not respond to that purposefully. I did respond to the other gentleman from Georgia when I said that it is not a paper airplane, when I said the wing has flown, the engine is a shelf item, the surfaces have all been flown, but it is not all put together.

Again, I would like to quote from another gentleman from Georgia who is no longer with us in Washington when he was talking about the Stealth bomber existing, and it "ain't."

Mr. McDONALD. If the gentleman will yield further, I appreciate the gentleman yielding and making the point that the C-17, as an aircraft, as a flying commodity, at this time really does not exist. I can appreciate the fact that various components have been tested, are being tested, and the Armed Services Committee certainly has supported the continuing research and development. The dilemma that we face is supplying the critical airlift, particularly an out-size capability that included intratheater. The C-5 was able to deliver that without $3 billion of the research and development cost that the C-17 or CX would require on the immediate basis.

There is no question that there could very well be great value of the C-17 as an intratheater and intertheater down the line, particularly intratheater, but at the present time the C-5 is able to perform both the functions of intertheater and intratheater and is able to land loaded in less than 3,000 feet of runway.

Mr. BADHAM. If I may reclaim my time, if it should come to an argument between C-5 and 747, I do not think there is really any good argument from a military standpoint. However, I would point out to the gentleman that we do already have the C-5. The gentleman said that to the other gentleman from Georgia, that we already have C-5's. We are not going to get the next C-5 for another 4 or 5 or 6 years, which would be about 6 months or maybe 4 months earlier than the first C-17. So, it cannot be said you are going to get C-5's a long time before you are going to get the C-17. We have already got C-5's, so those are already there.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BADHAM was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. BADHAM. We are not going to get the first new C-5 until only about 4 months ahead of the first C-17, so that argument, I think, falls.

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I also appreciate the gentleman's stand and his statements with regard to the C-17, which would in fact do a much better job than the C-5 on the long haul or less, get into better fields, and has a longer range, as a matter of fact. There are questions that have been asked here whether or not we have one, but the C-17 is a direct result of the building of the YC-14 and YC-15, which were in competition to finally get some kind of contract for it. It does fly, it will carry everything the C-5 will do, and I think there will be savings to the people on the long haul to take the money we propose to spend for 50 more C-5's and put it into the C-17 program and get on with the program and get the job done right.

We are currently involved in a debate over the size and structure of military airlift that this Nation needs to meet its security requirements.

The debate seems to be centering around the past performance of one aircraft: the C-5, and the expected economies of another, the 747-F. What is being ignored is the actual requirements of airlift for this Nation.

The C-5 was an idea that took shape even as the plane was under construction. Its critics accurately point out that this plane has one of the most expensive maintenance records for the entire Air Force fleet; that the wing design is faulty, necessitating a complete rewinging for the entire fleet; that it cannot land at austere airfields as was originally promised; and in fact, is quite a burden at most airfields unless those fields are large enough to contain that plane. Acknowledging those criticisms does not mean that the C-5 program has been a total failure. Its problems notwithstanding: The C-5 remains the only plane in the Air Force inventory that is capable of carrying outsized equipment. It is, in fact, the largest airplane in the world: and as such has unique capabilities essential to the Air Force's airlift mission. More importantly, the thousands of hours of experience with what is essentially a one of a kind—almost experimental airlifter has given the Air Force the knowledge and practical experience to know exactly what to expect from a heavy airlifter and know how to meet those expectations in the years to come.

The 747-F is a highly reliable, efficient commercial airlifter which has proven itself in industry. It is more fuel efficient than the C-5; and in fact, has a greater payload range. It does not, however, have the outsized cargo ability of the C-5, nor does it have the parachute delivery capability of other airlift bodies. In addition, its unloading and loading configuration are not adapted to a military environment and as such, poses severe time and logistical problems in any military deployment.

Make no mistake, there is a critical airlift shortage in this country. What is needed is an airlifter that has a good maintenance profile; is deployable in most airfields; including austere ones such as those that can currently handle the C-130; has outsized cargo capability; has parachute delivery capability; and is configured for roll-on roll-off loading. Both the C-5 and the 747-F meet many of these requirements, but neither meets all the necessary requirements for the airlifter that we need for the coming decade.

There is one plane, however, that does meet those needs. It is the C-17. This plane, which was the winner in a contest put on by the Air Force to design a plane for its future airlift needs meets all the requirements for the modern airlifter.

The C-17 would utilize off-the-shelf, proven technology to reduce the complexities that have so besieged the C-5. The component systems that have proved so troublesome in the C-5 have been reduced by two-thirds; and more importantly, these components have been flight tested in commercial operations.

The C-17 has the outsized cargo capability that exists now only on the C-5, and more importantly, can pick up and deliver that outsized cargo at numerous more locations. In addition, the C-17 will be the only airlifter that can parachute deliver outsized cargo. The C-17, with its proven, advanced engines with directed flow thrust reversers will be able to fit into many airfields which cannot now hold the C-5.

In payload capability, the smaller C-17 comes very close to the deployable capability of the C-5, especially in the real life deployment from the current staging areas that would be used.

The C-17 is the product of years of design and testing of the airframe and component systems. Its component systems and airframe have been tested in commercial operations and in exhaustive windtunnel tests, as well as in prototype testing with the YC-14 and YC-15.

It is designed to provide efficient and capable intratheater and intertheater airlift, at life cycle costs significantly below any currently available aircraft. Furthermore, this aircraft can be procured at roughly the same rate as any possible C-5 fleet.

Mr. Speaker, in these days of fiscal restraint, and of the existing, unparalleled threat to our Nation's security, it is necessary to make forward looking decisions in meeting our military needs. The C-17 is one such forward looking idea. It meets our airlift needs, it does so at reasonable costs; and most importantly, it is what we need to get the job done.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the gentleman's amendment. I spent about 10 years flying for Pan American as a pilot and flight engineer, and another 10 years flying for the Air Force. I would not necessarily verify the Air Force's statistics, but I think the people I am now representing are neither the airlines nor the Air Force, but rather the American taxpayers.

I see the gentleman's amendment as the best decision for the taxpayer. We have an opportunity here to do what is right and to buy the next generation of aircraft technology. As an Air Force pilot, I have seen many instances where through an illogical political decision we have provided the Air Force with a machine that lasts forever and ever, is a lousy decision as far as flying airplanes is concerned. I think the C-5 and the problems that have been associated with that airplane over the past 20 years are clearly not something we want to repeat.

By the time we start getting the C-5B, we are in fact going to have a 25- to 30-year-old technology airplane. That is too long.

I think the gentleman's point about the C-17 and the fact that it has been flown, even if it is in a smaller version, is very important. It is very important to the future of what we need to defend our country. So, I intend to vote in support of the gentleman. As to the arguments about the 747, I think it is a better airplane if you compare airplane to airplane. In outsize cargo, there is no doubt that it cannot be hauled by the 747, but I would tend to support the C-17, and I intend to support no money for either the rehashed C-5 program or the 747.

Mr. BADHAM. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure whether I see how the gentleman's amendment over a 3-, 4-, 5-, or 6-year period in fact is going to save any money. I think the gentleman is quite persuasive. I have spoken to him on other occasions with regard to the C-17, and other people on the committee, but it is my understanding that his amendment simply deletes any possible funding for the 747; in other words, guts the amendment of the gentleman from Washington, deletes the existing money in the bill for the C-5B.

But, the gentleman is saying that he wants to make that saving for the taxpayers of this country of the money because he wants to go forward with the C-17. If he wants to go forward with the C-17, would he not have to put money back in for the C-17, and therefore his amendment really does not save any money? It might be a very good amendment with regard to plane versus plane, but could the gentleman explain to me how it really saves any money for the taxpayers?

Mr. BADHAM. I thank the gentleman for that question. I did perhaps not fully allude to that.

□ 1530

The way the money is saved for the taxpayer is that, yes, all new airlift money would be removed from procurement. There is money for R. & D. in the R. & D. title of this bill, and that would stay there for the C-17, which is under progress now. I would add in the R. & D. title of this act money for expanding or really finalizing R. & D. for the C-17, and when that becomes ready for production, I would introduce either a supplemental and the C-17 would be a less costly plane than the C-5, or I would introduce a request for money, and the savings would accrue for the 1-year period. The savings overall would accrue because of lower maintenance, lower crew costs, and lower fly-away costs of the C-17. All of those, I would conclude, would save a bundle of U.S. taxpayers' dollars.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I wonder if the gentleman would carry this one step further, because I am not as familiar with the C-17 as the gentleman in the well. If the gentleman got his wish with regard to the passage of this amendment and if he got his wish with regard to a supplemental for research and development for the C-17, I would make this inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. BADHAM) has expired.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California (Mr. BADHAM) be permitted to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. BRINKLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, of course, I shall not object, but I would point out there are others of us on the committee, as is the gentleman asking for the extension of time, and perhaps after this 5 minutes we could proceed in the regular order in order to get our own time with the indulgence of the gentleman?

Mr. BADHAM. Right.

Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I appreciate his comment, and this will be my last 5 minutes. I have waited, too, on other amendments and I appreciate the gentleman's situation, as I have been in the same situation. This will be my final 5 minutes.

Mr. BRINKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not object and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, the question, then, is, assuming the gentleman got his wish with regard to the supplemental and his amendment today, as far as time goes, in what year would the C-17 be operational?

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, we are advised by the Air Force and we are advised by the contractor that if the C-17 normal R. & D. continues, the first C-17 will roll out approximately 4 to 6 months after the first C-5 could be rolled out.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I will yield to the gentleman if he will understand the constraints I am under. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, I will take my own 5 minutes, but first I wanted to make one statement, if I may.

Mr. BADHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is misleading the Members, perhaps not intentionally. The C-17 is still on the drawing board. It cannot fly; it cannot fly for a number of years. It has to be totally tested. I admit that the C-5A has had its problems, but it has been tested, the wings are being strengthened and we know it will fly. We know it will do the job.

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, if I may reclaim the final seconds of my time, the gentleman knows that I never said the C-17 is flying. It is on the drawing board, and it is undergoing development. I said the engine is flying and the wing has flown. A smaller version is flying, I beg the gentleman's pardon. The technology is there, the shelf technology, and it is ready to go. That is what I said. Others in their zeal said it was flying, but I did not say that.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, I apologize to the gentleman, then.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, just briefly, may I ask the gentleman, could he also characterize this as kind of like the C-5, as a paper plane, since we have not built one in 9 years?

Mr. BADHAM. No.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS).

As one who has no parochial interests in this particular issue, in that nothing that I know of is made for any of the planes in issue in my district. What I am interested in is defense.

I recall a statement made before our committee by General Barrow of the Marine Corps—I happened to serve in the Marine Corps at one time and, therefore, have some sympathy for the needs of the infantry—who said that we have more fight than we have ferry capacity. This, I think, is entirely important when we are talking about the defense of this Nation.

Now, the purpose of the C-5B KC-10 program is to buy airlift, not just to buy airplanes. If buying planes was the object, there are many other types of planes available at cheaper prices than the 747. And the 747 is a good plane. I like to fly it myself, or rather, fly in it.

The objective is to obtain airlift, near-term airlift, flexible airlift, to close the gaping hole in the outsized airlift capacity to far places in the world.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington would not buy flexibility; it would merely buy planes. We can recite that by looking at the amendment itself. The criteria are: those that are available at surplus for the requirements of the present owners, or are suitable for conversion of military cargo configurations, and, number three, owned by domestic companies on the date of the enactment of this act.

I sympathize with airlines that have aircraft on their hands, but we are talking about defense, not bailout.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. If the gentleman will allow me to complete my statement, I will yield later, because I may run out of time otherwise.

Under one of the proposals made by the sponsors of the Boeing 747, it would in fact make no additional contribution to airlift. Under their proposal various 747 aircraft would be sold to the Air Force that are already available as airlift under various contracts for commercial aircraft. Of the 31 aircraft Boeing would propose that the Air Force purchase, only 7 are configured for cargo and only 2 are fully configured.

Now, in a combat mode, in a multitheater program, undoubtedly we will lose aircraft. We have, I understand, 77 presently. There were supposed to be 150 built in the first instances. But with the multitheater needs, these will probably be insufficient.

The 747's cannot land on unprepared airfields. They do a beautiful job of landing on good airfields.

I think from what the author has on display here, it shows wheels dredging through very thick muck but the fact is, I understand, those pictures were to show the capabilities of the C-5's to move forward under harsh conditions on unprepared fields.

I am told, for whatever it is worth, by those who know more of the details, that the C-5's have a capacity of California bearing ratio of 9. I asked what that means, and it means that you can land on unprepared fields, not the worst fields, but you can land under combat conditions in fields that have sufficient firmness under them and not needing an airfield itself.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. If the gentleman will please permit me to finish, I will yield later if I have time.

The 747's cannot offload or onload without special loading towers. This is important if you are taking cargo in, outsized cargo to a combat area, even behind the lines, because you might not have those towers. The 747's would probably have to carry the towers with them, which means more filling of the cargo space.

With the C-5's these can drive on and off, and that is so important. I personally feel that they might have used the C-5B or the C-5A to go into Iran and be able to take offloaded helicopters and be ready to go and save 24 hours. That is my own personal thinking. I asked a military man who is highly placed, and he thought it could be done, too.

The 747's cannot carry helicopters, I understand, without removing the blades. The C-5B's, I understand, can take helicopters onload and offload with blades intact and go off and fly immediately.

The 747's cannot carry outsized equipment, and C-5B's can. U.S. forces already have 747's in their reserve fleet under the craft program. They have 31 747 freighters and 5 747 convertible-to-cargo aircraft.

And this is very persuasive to me. A combat unit can be airlifted with equipment regardless of what equipment it is and land and go off to its assigned mission.

Now, the author of the amendment says that only 18 percent of the equipment is outsized.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. WHITE) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WHITE was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes).

Mr. WHITE. But, Mr. Chairman, that means that most of the combat vehicles. And a study by the congressionally mandated mobility study group concluded that the addition of 25 million ton-miles per day of aircraft cargo is needed to include at least 10 million ton-miles per day of outsized cargo capability. That is almost half of what is needed in outsized equipment.

If we buy the wrong plane, we are not saving money; we are wasting money. I like the 747, and it has a place. Maybe we will end up with a mix. The CX and C-17 will not improve our outsize capability, regardless of what has been said, it is estimated, until the 1990's.

□ 1540

Maybe they will have a crash program of some sort and get it earlier, perhaps.

The C-5B would become operational 3 years prior to any C-17 aircraft, I understand. They have got years of operational experience.

This bill includes a C-17 already. There are $1 million of R. & D. moneys in this bill for further intertheater airlift to replace the C-141 and the C-130 aircraft.

It also includes the KC-10, 44 aircraft cargos for refueling mission.

The issue is the estimated differences in the cost of the $50 million per year for 20 years. Is it worth the difference in capabilities represented by 50 C-5B aircraft versus 33 new or used 747 aircraft?

For someone who has said the C-17 can do the same thing as the C-5B, do they think of this: a C-5B can carry two M-1 tanks. It would be a squeeze, but they could do it, I understand. A C-17 can carry one M-1 tank. The 747 cannot carry an M-1 tank.

Undoubtedly each plane has its purpose. But what we want today is an airlift capability of outsized equipment, for whatever exigencies may arise in the emergencies we face in this Nation.

I hope we can help these aircraft companies in other ways, but let us not forsake defense today in an effort to help these other companies.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think we ought to set the record very straight here. No one is talking about not having C-5's. We need them. They are a part of the mix. They are important.

We have 77 C-5's now. There is a mix now. There is a variety of planes that carry our cargo today.

The question is what kind of a mix do we need in the next few years? What can we get that we need for this shortfall? What is the shortfall? How do we get to the C-17 finally, which is the plane that I think all of us agree is what we really need?

When you talk about 77 planes going into the dirt, is it the gentleman's feeling that we need planes that can land in these forward fields?

Mr. WHITE. I think we need planes that can land under whatever combat conditions exist. Obviously they are not going to land right behind the lines, but you never know what the problem is in the event, say, the Soviets or the Warsaw Pact countries may push our forces back.

There may be a prepared field, or they may be bombed out, and we may have to land on grass fields in order to bring our troops and bring our tanks and outsized cargo in.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Let me continue, if I may. First of all we have 77 planes that can do that job today.

We carry all of the troops by 747's, so if you are carrying in a unit, you are going to land the material at someplace different than where you land the troops.

Mr. WHITE. You may bring in that unit and they will have their equipment and be ready to go. Besides that, you are going to have an attrition rate. You have to count an attrition rate under combat conditions. You are going to lose some of those 77 aircraft. You are going to have to have enough in order to respond to different areas.

Mr. PRITCHARD. No question.

Mr. WHITE. Different areas at the same time and 77, my friend, will not do it, I do not feel. They say that they are 10 million tons short of outsized equipment per day.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Let me just complete this. So we have a shortage. Now we have 77 of these C-5's now and the question is where is the shortfall. Is it in these outsized items like helicopters and things that have to be carried by the C-5's?

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Or is it in the other 85 percent of the load, which are pallets and a whole variety of material that the Army needs?

The shortfall, the shortfall is in the 85 percent.

We have 77 planes that can carry the 15 percent, and we have to beef up our ability to carry the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. WHITE) has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. PRITCHARD and by unanimous consent Mr. WHITE was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. WHITE. Maybe the gentleman did not hear the figure I gave. They said that they are 25 million tons short per day of carrying capacity. Of that, 10 million is outsized. So almost half is outsized.

Yes; we have CRAFT units. Yes; we have the ability to bring in more 747's. Yes; if we got into a major emergency, undoubtedly we would buy more 747's and we may still do so.

But what I am saying is that we need this outsized because that is all we have at the present time to carry outsized equipment.

Mr. PRITCHARD. The problem you have is for 3 years you are not going to have any new C-5's.

Mr. WHITE. If we do not do it today it will be even longer.

Mr. PRITCHARD. You need the C-17, and that is really the answer.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. I think the gentleman has asked a very pertinent question. He asked what the mix should be.

The military leaders have answered that question. The answer is 50 more C-5B's. That is all: 50 more C-5B's. That is what the mix should be.

If we need 747's, we can commission them at the appropriate time from the CRAFT fleet.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. I think the gentleman knows that from the very start our presentation has been made on the basis that the 747 could be converted into an air freighter that could be utilized, or we could get brandnew air freighters so that we would have air freight capability.

The point I would like to make to the gentleman is the 747's, configured as an air freighter, will carry 35 tons of cargo more than a C-5 when you look at the differences in bulk and oversize.

So you have a carrier, a plane that is substantially less expensive and you can buy it to carry bulk and oversize. Then you have your 77 C-5's to dedicate to the outsized equipment. You can put more outsized in those C-5's.

Then go with the C-17, which is the right answer for the outsized in the future. Then you do not have to go back to the C-5, which has had a dreadful record, as the gentleman well knows.

Mr. WHITE. I would not say that.

Mr. DICKS. It is a plane that has 53 percent mission capable rating, and a plane that requires 76 maintenance hours for every hour in the air. Why do you want to do that when you can get the C-17?

Mr. WHITE. Because, sir, we have only one plane that can carry outsized and that is the C-5. I do not denigrate in any way the 747. The problem with the gentleman's amendment is that it strikes all C-5's.

Mr. DICKS. We have 77 of them already. The gentleman knows that. We are not striking any of the C-5's.

Mr. WHITE. No, but in this bill you are striking any more, and they say that they need more, they are short 10 million tons a day in outsized capability.

Mr. DICKS. If the gentleman would just yield on this point, is it not true that we can get the existing wide bodies into the inventory more quickly so if the gentleman is genuinely concerned——

Mr. WHITE. It would not do any good.

Mr. DICKS. If the gentleman is concerned with adding capability in the near term, the way to do it is with the wide bodies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. WHITE) has again expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. WHITE was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. WHITE. Will the 747's carry a tank? Will they carry artillery?

Mr. DICKS. Let me tell the gentleman that Air Force Gen. Kelly Burke says "People generally almost always think of tanks when you say outsize, but normally that is not a big thing to move by air. It is a very inefficient way to move tanks."

Gen. P. X. Kelly, Vice Commandant of the Marine Corps, says:

I believe that there has always been some misconceptions relating to the relationship of a tank with strategic airlift. In my view, using a C-5 aircraft for the intertheater airlift of one main battle tank is uneconomical and should be the exception rather than the rule.

The reason you do it is, you have a sealift and a prepositioning for those tanks and the 77 C-5's.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. If I have the time I will be happy to yield.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. The gentleman brings up the point about defense and what we really are here to try and protect, the taxpayers, and try and see where we are going with this bill. But if you look at what we are going to face when we arrive at the distant theater, we are outnumbered 4.3 to 1 in tanks, 4 to 1 in armored personnel carriers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas (Mr WHITE) has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. SMITH of Oregon and by unanimous consent Mr. WHITE was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. We are outnumbered 4.8 to 1 in the field artillery guns and 14.5 to 1 in air defense guns.

All those things are weapons that are going to have to be hauled by the outsized capable airplane, which in this case is either the C-5 or the C-17.

So it seems to me if we are going to spend so many dollars on an outsize airlifter, and the first 12 of the C-5B's are going to cost us $283 million apiece, we ought to be spending it to be sure that we are not so far outnumbered when we arrive in the theater to have to face these overwhelming odds.

Mr. WHITE. You have to get there with what you can and get there with the mostest. A bird in the hand. The gentleman knows the old proverb.

The attacker picks his point of attack.

□ 1550

We have to be able to respond wherever that is. So, therefore, we cannot pre-position, especially in the spirit that the gentleman mentioned. We have to garner what we have and put them where it will do the most good. That means we have got to have the C-5B's to carry these wherever the threat is.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. We need to have the capability. I do not disagree with the gentleman there. But if we land one of those C-5B's in the gravel or mud, it will stay there—and that will be pre-positioned. But that is not the right kind of equipment to pre-position, I am afraid.

Mr. BEARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BEARD. I cannot believe that after 10 years we are still going through the same scenario. In this beautifully sophisticated, highly technological country of ours, there is something dramatically wrong when the average time from the drawing board to actual deployment of our new weapon systems goes somewhere between 12 to 15 years. In the Soviet Union, the average is about 5 years.

So here we are, just like we were when we were discussing and debating the B-1 bomber, and you had all of the people coming up and saying, "Well, but we have got the Stealth bomber right down the road, it is in the 1990's, it is much more highly sophisticated, let us wait for that." I have seen it happen on tanks, I have seen it happen on jeeps, I have seen it happen on every type of weapon system coming down the pike. And, as a result, we are sitting around with tanks that are old. The Soviet Union has come out with three to four new families of tanks. We are sitting around with submarines, finally getting the Trident off.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. WHITE) has expired.

(On request of Mr. BEARD and by unanimous consent, Mr. WHITE was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. BEARD. We are sitting around while we are trying to get the Trident out. Here we go, sophisticating it, and all of that. The Soviet Union puts out four or five new families of submarines. Now everyone has agreed that we have a tremendous shortfall in airlift capability, tremendous. Nobody disagrees. But I find it hard to believe that, once again, we are saying, "Look, let us go to the C-17." Well, what is the C-17? It is a piece of paper. That is all the C-17 is. And you watch, they will go to research and development, and then through the layers of bureaucracy in the Pentagon. By the time we get to the C-17, you are talking about the 1990's. I just challenge anyone on this floor to say that we will not need airlift before then. I am not prepared to take that chance. We need the C-5B. It may not be perfect, but it is the best thing going. We do not need to drop the 82d Airborne into an area and make them a bunch of kamikaze pilots. We have got to have the opportunity to get the tanks there, to mechanize our artillery. And right now the C-5B is the only ball game in town, and I think it would be terribly irresponsible for this House to do that action which the Senate did or, even more irresponsible, if we fell back to the drawing board and went back to a piece of paper again.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I appreciate my colleague yielding.

I will ask my colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee, did he just say that we will not have the C-17 until 1990?

Mr. BEARD. I have heard 1987, I have heard 1988. but I have seen the Pentagon in action before. I have seen the bureaucracy in action before. And if you are talking about going to the R. & D. of the C-17, by the time we get that thing actually deployed, if I were a betting man, I would say 1990, if we are lucky.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. WHITE) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. ROUSSELOT and by unanimous consent, Mr. WHITE was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. ROUSSELOT. The gentleman is on the Armed Services Committee, and I know that he has had a view of our ability to deliver on weapon systems. So what my colleague is saying is that we are running a terrible risk to further postpone the C-5B?

Mr. BEARD. Without any question, I think the gentleman is extremely perceptive.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I appreciate the gentleman telling me that, because I want my constituents to understand that at home.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I appreciate the gentleman yielding, and I would like to amplify very briefly on his remarks, because I think we have been missing the mark, to some degree, in the last 10 to 15 minutes.

This is a depiction of Saudi Arabia. If you could see it a little closer, you could see the yellow dots depict those major airfields on which the 747 can land. This area is the Straits of Hormuz through which the great lifeline of oil that this country depends on flows. There are approximately 80 airfields in Saudi Arabia that the C-5 can land on. There are only four airfields in Saudi Arabia—these are major airfields—on which the 747 can land, and on which it has equipment with which it can unload itself. There are only 20 airfields that can be landed on by the 747, presuming that they can ferry some type of unloading equipment to those areas.

If you were an American field commander in Saudi Arabia and you needed the Attack helicopter, you needed the M-1 tank, you needed the infantry fighting vehicle, you needed these major weapons systems that we have spent $40 billion on, what would you rather have, the C-5 that can move to any of these some 40 airfields around the Straits of Hormuz or the 747 that can operate on only 4 airfields in Saudia Arabia?

And I would say simply to my colleague—and I thank him for yielding—I think it would be a sad day in American history should a field commander have to explain to his troops that he did not airlift the equipment that they desperately needed because Congress got a great deal on some commercial aircraft back in 1982.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is anyone in this committee or in the House who has dealt with this subject matter longer than has the gentleman who is speaking now in the well.

This came before our Research and Development Subcommittee I think for the first time some 5 years ago. For 3 years we turned down the request of the Department of Defense, we zeroed the budget item, when they came in and said they wanted the so-called CX. So we asked, "Well, what is a CX?"

Well, they did not know exactly, but they knew that they needed an intratheater capability. And so we asked them to give us a little more detail, and would they please be a little more particular in describing the need. What is the need?

Well, they said that they had the C-5, but they wanted an intratheater capability, that once the goods got there, whether it be by surface transportation or otherwise, to deploy up close to the line. And everything that they said gave us—me, in particular, I guess—a feeling of deja vu, and I asked—as I recall, it was General Kelly at the time—"Are you using old slides or new ones? It seems I have heard all of this before when you were trying to sell us on the concept of the C-5."

He said, "Excuse me, but this is a new presentation."

But the unimproved landing field, the outsize cargo, the extra lift, and all of the things that are being used to sell the CX had been used when they sold the C-5 to us.

Well, we bought the C-5, and we went through many moments of unhappiness as we found out what it was that we had bought. Not only was there a $2 billion overrun, which the Air Force denied and denied, and finally admitted. Parenthetically and ironically, in the whole fiasco of the original C-5 overrun, when Lockheed was saying, "Well, there is no overrun," and the Air Force was saying, "Well, there is no overrun," and then they finally admitted, well, yes, there is a $2 billion overrun—the only guy that was degraded, demoted, fired, lost his job, transferred, or whatever, was a guy by the name of Fitzgerald who blew the whistle and said, "Hey, something is wrong." He was the only guy who suffered. Everybody else got promoted. Nobody lost their job. Everybody said, "Yes, it is a terrible booboo, but it did not happen on my watch," and Ernie Fitzgerald, who we are just finding out has been reinstated, after 10 years, who blew the whistle and said something bad, was the only one who got fired. That is just history, but it just shows you that I have been around that long.

So then we turned down the CX 2 years running. Gen. Dutch Heyser, who at that time was the head of MAC, came in to see me and sat in my office and said, "Well, Congressman, what do you have against airlift? Why don't you approve it?"

I said, "General, you misunderstand. We have nothing against airlift. We recognize the need for airlift. We are supportive of airlift. You just do not have your act together. You cannot answer the questions. You go back and get everybody lined up and answer the questions of why you need a whole new program, a whole new development program, starting from square one, a multibillion dollar program, and come in and convince us what this will do more than the C-5 now, and then I think we will buy it."

When then they come back had the C-17 concept. But, in the meantime, awarding a contract to McDonnell Douglas for the CX, they put this aside and come forward and say, "Hey, we want the C-5."

General Kelly, who was the head of our Rapid Deployment Force for several years—he no longer is, but he is in the Pentagon, as the Assistant Commandant of the Marine Corps—came before our committee last month and said, "Gentlemen, I would like to take my hat off to you on the Armed Services Committee. You were right. You were right in this committee when you killed the CX because we did not know what we were doing. We do know what we want, and we want the C-5. We also want a follow-on C-17."

And so I asked either General Kelly or Gen. Jim Allen, who is head of MAC, "Well, what are you going to do about a C-17? Are you going to build it? Are you going to go forward with it?"

The answer was, "Yes."

They are going through the logical, step-by-step research and development. There is money in there this year. There will be more money in the R. & D. for the C-17. But I have to differ with my good friend—and I mean that in every sense of the word—the gentleman from California (Mr. BADHAM), when he says it will be only 6 months difference. That is just not so.

□ 1600

We will be lucky to have 2 years difference.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DICKINSON. We will be lucky to have the C-17 within 6 years of when the next C-5 rolls off. Let me recount and remind the Members of some of the things that happened. We sent through an R. & D. program on the C-5. We got into a great deal of trouble. It was too heavy. They had to redesign. Ultimately, in order to meet the weight specs, they lightened the wing root. When they lightened the wing root not only did we have a $2 billion cost overrun, we shortened the life of the C-5 by one-half. Instead of 30,000 hours of flight, we cut it down to 15,000 hours because there was not enough structural integrity in the wing root. It cost the taxpayers of this country—not Lockheed because the Air Force had already accepted it—another boo-boo. I think the figures are $1.8 billion more than the overrun and more than the original contract to correct the deficiency.

So all of this was a learning curve and we have paid dearly for it. But now the C-5 is flying. It is doing a great job. It is doing the job for which it was built. I am sorry that there is so much provisionalism built into the argument here but let me say they do not build anything in my district, and I do not care who gets what. As far as what helps my people, I am trying to get the best buy I can for the American taxpayer.

Let me talk about some of the misinformation that is being given out. This was alluded to earlier.

One of the things that we hit the Air Force with so hard was their claim that they wanted the CX because the C-5 is so large that when it lands at airfields in Europe and around the world it so large that it will block the runways and about half of the airfields that are available cannot be used if a C-5 is sitting on the runway.

So, we asked them in committee why do you not pull the darn thing off the runway, get it out of there? Well, it is on a pavement and it is so heavy and so forth. I said it has 28 wheels on the thing. It was sold using the argument that it would run on unimproved fields, land in a pasture, take off from a pasture. Why not. So they went back and they made a study. This is the study.

They tried it in mud, they tried it in snow, they tried it in sand, and one of the proponents of the first amendment today has given the benefit of some studies by showing the wheels of the C-5 mired in mud right over here. Well, it is nice of them to do that because this is a study that shows that it can operate in mud. It did not stick. It will operate in mud, snow, sand, just like it was designed to do 15 years ago. It can be pulled off runways, the paved portion.

Now what are we going to haul in it? Well, you are not going to haul tanks. That is true. That is the dumbest thing going, saying we are going to build a C-5 or CX and C-17 to haul a tank. There could not be a more inefficient use of an aircraft. But what the proponents of the amendment did not tell us is that here is a list of things that will be hauled in a C-5 that cannot be hauled in a 747.

Does anyone know how high you have got to lift the load to put it in a 747? Sixteen feet. You see this gold bar around here at the gallery. I measure that. That is about 16 feet. You have to lift a truck, a jeep, a pallet way up to get it in the door of a 747. Now you talk about palletized cargo, you talk about jeeps, you are going to put a helicopter on a crane and pick it up 16 feet to put it inside of a 747? Of course not.

This is a list of what cannot go with a unit into combat unless its loaded in an outsized cargo plane.

Mr. Chairman, I will include this with my remarks.

Some of the things, not only tanks, combat engineer vehicles, tracked bridge launchers, tracked recovery vehicles, self-propelled howitzers, two kinds, MLRS launchers, cargo helicopters, utility helicopters, electronic shop repair parts. The list goes on. All that has to be carried in an outsize cargo aircraft such as the C-5B.

The list follows:

LOADABILITY OF SOME SIGNIFICANT ARMY EQUIPMENT ON THE C-5A/B AND THE BOEING 747F

A. LOADABLE ON C-5A/B BUT NOT ON THE B-747F

Tracked vehicles

M1-M60 Combat Tanks.
Combat Engineer Vehicle.
Tracked Bridge Launchers.
Tracked Recovery Vehicles.
8-in Self Propelled Howitzer M110.
155-mm Self Propelled Howitzer M109.
MLRS Launcher Loader.

Helicopters

CH-47 Cargo Helicopter (Disassembled).
UH-60 Utility Helicopter.

Wheeled vehicles

Semitrailer Mounted Electronics Shops.
Semitrailer Mounted Repair Parts Vans.
Semitrailer Mounted Supply Vans.
Semitrailer Mounted Shop Vans.
Semitrailer Mounted Topographic Vans
Semitrailer Low Bed 60-ton M747.
Semitrailer Flat Bed M872.
5000 gallon Tank Semitrailers.
Pershing GM Battery Control Central.
I-Hawk GM Platoon CP.
MLRS Cargo Truck M985WWN
8-ton Cargo Truck M877
8-ton Cargo Truck M520WWN.
2500 gallon Tank Trucks.
Van Truck 5-ton.
Van Truck 2½-ton.
Truck-Tractor 22½-ton M746.
Truck-Tractor M911
Truck-Tractor M916
Truck-Tractor M920
Truck-Tractor-Wrecker M819WWN.
Truck-Wrecker 5-ton M816WWN.
Truck-Wrecker 10-ton M553WWN.

B. LOADABLE ON B-747F ONLY AFTER MAJOR REDUCTION AND WITH SPECIAL PROCEDURES

Tracked vehicles

Cavalry Fighting Vehicle.
Infantry Fighting Vehicle.
Tractor Full-Tracked M9.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I have asked the gentleman to yield to clarify the issue before us. There is an amendment, that would substitute, the C-17 for our airlift needs.

Now, is not the C-17 a paper airplane?

Mr. DICKINSON. That is true.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Was the C-17 a derivative of the YC-14, YC-15 competition, several years ago?

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me answer very briefly, then I will complete my statement and try to respond. The so-called C-17 or CX grew out of what was before that, an AMST and the McDonnell Douglas YC-15. It was originally designated AMST. that was canceled. They came up with a new concept called CX. Then it was given the nomenclature of C-17, an evolutionary thing, none of which has followed through to become the next generation.

Mr. GOLDWATER. It was primarily designed to replace the C-140 and C-130, is that not correct?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. GOLDWATER. And it was not designed to replace the C-5 or the larger airlift capability?

Mr. DICKINSON. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

The C-17 will be built, at least with the permission of the Congress, because that was the testimony given to our committee. When all this came about I asked the chairman, to have an extra day of hearings on the airlift question just last month. We had everybody. The gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS) came, General Kelley came in, Lou Allen, head of the Air Force came in. Everybody had their say. It was a good hearing. They are going forward with building the C-17 in an orderly manner and there is money in R. & D. and there will be more money in R. & D. it is for that reason I would oppose the amendment of the gentleman from California who wants to take out all airlift money, in order, I suppose, to force a decision on the C-17. Delaying it for a year is not going to put anything in the inventory. It is not going to accomplish anything. It is going to be done. If anything, it will slow it down and cost more money. That really should not be a consideration here. There will be a C-17 built and they are going forward in an orderly way. The question is here, that we have an airplane builder who has a lot of airplanes sitting around that they own them, and they would like the Government to buy them. They say well, you are going to have to carry people and smaller cargo so we will get you to buy these at a discount price. I say, the DOD should not be forced to bail out anyone. The planes are used, so let's buy them at a discount price and save a lot of money. And I might say that to convert one of these to a cargo carrier, under the CRAF program, will cost somewhere around $25 million after you buy the bird, to convert it to a cargo carrier.

□ 1610

Now, we have some pretty pictures here showing front end loading of a 747 and that is nice. It shows a loader lifting it up and the nose up.

Now, of the list of those aircraft proposed to be sold, I think only six, the gentleman can help me, only six are already configured for freight; is that right, I ask the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS)?

Mr. DICKS. Well, under our amendment, the Secretary would look at existing wide bodies first, but if you wanted brandnew ones, we would be glad to give them to him.

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, the gentleman furnished us a list and I want to know how many of those have been configured for freight already. How many can be front-end loaded?

Mr. DICKS. I think we have six.

Mr. DICKINSON. There are five.

Mr. DICKS. Five or six right now.

Mr. DICKINSON. All right, I thank the gentleman.

But what I am trying to say, it is ludicrous and they float these pictures around showing front-end loading, how you can lift cargo up with a loader. How do you suppose this loading equipment is going to get there to load these things in remote spots? These very intricate cranes and platforms are hydraulically operated to pick up a load 16 feet up to this gallery level. Are we going to fly those overseas when we have a trouble spot and have them pre-positioned so that then we can bring in 747's?

Now, this is ludicrous. The airlift that the military says that they need and which we are convinced that they need has the ability to come in, open up front and aft, and drive vehicles off fore and aft.

With a C-5 they have landed, taken a helicopter, folded its wings, pulled it off, unfolded its wings and had the helicopter airborne and the plane off the ground in 5 minutes. You cannot do that with a 747.

What we are talking about, you have a three-quarter-ton truck and a Cadillac over here and you say, well, you can haul people in both, so buy some Cadillacs.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield, just in the spirit of fairness? The gentleman made a long speech.

Mr. DICKINSON. The gentleman is talking about time? I will be glad to yield. I have asked unanimous consent for 5 additional minutes. I will be glad to yield to anybody as time permits, but I do not want to be threatened.

Mr. DICKS. No, no.

Mr. DICKINSON. I have asked unanimous consent for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman has been recognized for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DICKS. The gentleman knows that I have the highest personal respect and regard for the gentleman. I never would say anything at all that would be offensive, and I think the gentlemen is an expert.

I just want to clarify a couple points, since the gentleman referred to me.

Mr. DICKINSON. Briefly, please, and then I will be glad to enter into a colloquy with the gentleman when I have finished.

Mr. DICKS. First of all, we have loaders all around the world to take that equipment off those planes. The gentleman is aware of that.

Mr. DICKINSON. The gentleman is talking about commercial fields, right?

Mr. DICKS. Well, at commercial fields.

Mr. DICKINSON. You do not have them any place but commercial fields, do you?

Mr. DICKS. One of the things the gentleman has mentioned is on the question——

Mr. DICKINSON. I did not get the answer to my question. Do you have them any place but commercial fields?

Mr. DICKS. No; but you can take it with you in the lower bay and assemble it there and unload the equipment with that.

Now, let me just go back to one question the gentleman made. This is the Secretary of the Air Force in 1980. This is what he said about the austere runway thing:

> The C-5 is in our inventory and is vital. We have all admitted that, a necessary part of our integrated airlift force, but additional C-5 aircraft would not reduce the dependency of our airlift force on major airfields. The C-5 tests on unprepared surfaces at Harper Dry Lake and on Matting and Dyess Air Force Base were terminated before completion because of runway and aircraft damage. The results of these tests plus the operational experience we have gained over the past 12 years have shown that the C-5 is not compatible with a small austere airfield environment because of aircraft size and operating characteristics. I know that originally we thought C-5's should be able to do that, but we were wrong.

That is the Secretary of the Air Force, Hans Mark.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman set the scene, the time, and place for that statement?

Mr. DICKS. That was a 1980 statement.

Mr. DICKINSON. Was that before or after this study was made?

Mr. DICKS. I think at the same time. But let me just give the gentleman——

Mr. DICKINSON. No; it is important and I would not want to gloss over it, because this is a study——

Mr. DICKS. I have a date on this one, August 19, 1980.

Let me give you what the MAC people said:

> Tests were conducted on dirt surfaces at Shaw Air Force Base, South Carolina, Altes Air Force Base, Oklahoma, and Eglin Air Force Base, Florida, from July 9 to August 19, 1980. Subsequently tests on snow were conducted at Griffith Air Force Base, New York, from January 20 to 23, 1981.

I think this is the study the gentleman refers to.

The bottom line conclusion from the Military Airlift Command was that the C-5 off runway operations require complex premeasuring of soil strengths and ruled out writing war plans around the C-5 off runway capability. The C-5 off runway capability will only be used in emergency, to move a broken airplane out of the way and only on a case-by-case basis after extensive soil measurements.

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, if I might reclaim my time, I also had the benefits of the study that was made at Eglin where repeated traffic cycles resulted in ruts up to 8 inches deep with upheavals of 6 inches. The C-5 was able to taxi and off load under these conditions. The C-5 cargo handling system functioned without difficulty under all circumstances and so forth and in austere conditions.

The gentleman is not trying to tell me that a 747 can do that? Is the gentleman trying to suggest that the 747 can do better than the C-5?

Mr. DICKS. The strategic air mission as such will have the C-5's going to a major airfield in the rear area, just like the 747 will.

Mr. DICKINSON. I understand that. If I might reclaim my time, yes, I understand what the gentleman's scenario would have; but the gentleman's scenario would have you shipping ahead all this off loading equipment, ship ahead the crews to handle it and then bring in this 747 on improved runways and that is supposed to answer the question.

I do not care whether we ultimately buy the 747, but I am afraid I might be taking too much time and I do not want to do that. I will be glad to try to respond, but just let me say, now, General Kelley, who is Assistant Commandant of the U.S. Marine Corps, said:

> If there is anyone in this room who truly believes that we could move sufficient outsized equipment . . . in the paltry 77 C-5s that we have available in the military today, then I am wasting my breath.

There is no one person that has come before our committee in a uniform, in any position of responsibility, Air Force, Army, Navy, nobody has said one word in favor of buying a 747 in lieu of a C-5, nobody.

The whole idea comes from somebody trying to peddle airplanes. I just think it is the wrong idea and I am opposed to it.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. MOORHEAD, and by unanimous consent, Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, since the gentleman from California made the request, let me yield to him and I will work my way around.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to commend the gentleman in the well for the statement that he just made and wish to join with him in his statement in opposition to the amendment and in support of the purchase of the C-5. It seems to me when you have the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force and all the people in our committees that are assigned to this job that make a decision based upon the facts that they have before them and upon information about the needs of our armed services, that we should stick with them.

The airlift issue at the center of this debate has generated many claims and counterclaims over the virtues and shortcomings of the Boeing 747 and the Lockheed C-5B aircraft. Although the President, the Secretary of Defense, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Service Secretaries and the House and Senate Armed Services Committees have supported the purchase of 50 new Lockheed C-5's to improve our overall strategic airlift capability, we are now being asked to evaluate the relative performance capabilities of the C-5 and the 747 for budgetary reasons. I do not disagree that there is a need to cut Federal expenditures wherever possible in order to ease the strain on the Federal budget, but to approve the purchase of an airplane that will cost less at the expense of performance capability is very poor defense planning, indeed.

Our defense experts have testified that the C-5 is the best possible remedy to alleviate our near-term airlift shortfall. Since airlift constitutes such an important part of logistics planning, the transport airplane used in the airlift is a major determinant for the efficiency and effectiveness of our airlift missions. Military experts are telling us that, if rendered operational under actual emergency circumstances, the more efficient and flexible aircraft for rapid deployment would be the C-5 the unique features of which make it the best possible plane to do the job. In addition, the C-5 has been improved to better meet our military needs for today's combat situations.

Proponents of the 747 have told us that 48 747's would be equivalent to 50 C-5's, will save us $6 billion over the next 20 years and will be available for use 3 years earlier. At a glance, this option would certainly appear to be the more attractive one. However, the defense experts, in closely examining the Boeing proposal, have informed us that the Boeing facts and figures are misleading enough to warrant a much closer look by this body. According to the Air Force, the Boeing 747 life cycle cost calculations were not done on the same basis as the Air Force C-5 cost calculations and, as such, do not provide for a fair comparison of the relative costs involved. In fact, Air Force price analysts have refuted the $6 billion savings and documented the difference at less than $1 billion over a full 20-year cycle of both planes. Therefore, we are really talking about a $900 million difference over 20 years. I believe that cost is an important consideration and we should be circumspect and thorough in this regard, but we must not lose sight of the basic and overriding concern at the heart of this issue: that of military utility.

While the Boeing 747 may cost less in its present capacity as a commercial passenger aircraft, the facts will undeniably change if it is to be adapted for military use. Even if we did add 48 or 55 modified 747's, they still would not meet all of the requirements for our military airlift operations. Boeing's own chairman of the board has publicly stated that Boeing is not proposing that the 747 be used to carry outsized equipment. Keeping this in mind, I believe our choice of plane seems clear.

No one can deny that the 747 is a valuable national asset and, with modifications, would be useful for some deployment missions. However, the Air Force has pointed out that a strong civil reserve air fleet modification program, through which existing commercial 747's are already available, can provide airlift at one-seventh the cost of Air Force ownership of these aircraft.

I appreciate that we are, and should be, very sensitive to the risks and costs of making and selling airplanes in today's economy. Procurement of 747's would certainly help those who manufacture the aircraft as well as those airlines from which the surplus aircraft would be bought. However tempted we may be to aid our ailing industries, can we really justify, in today's action on this issue, relief for some industries, or elements of one industry, and not provide relief for others?

We are faced with a decision that affects the mobility, deployment, effectiveness, and response of U.S. Armed Forces. I cannot stress strongly enough that we are not going to get a bargain if the product we buy cannot do the complete job. The 747 will not adequately meet all of our military cargo transport needs and, therefore, is not cost effective by any measure. In closing, I urge my colleagues to carefully consider the real issue underlying this debate and support the Armed Services Committee recommendation to buy the C-5B and reject the motion favoring the 747.

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, I, too, would like to rise in support of the position of the gentleman in the well and commend him for the effort he has made on behalf of the C-5.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and to the proposal to substitute the purchase of a number of Boeing 747 airliners in place of the 50 C-5B heavy military transport aircraft that are included in H.R. 6030, the fiscal year 1983 Department of Defense authorization bill.

The C-5 program has the full support of the military and many defense experts. In testimony before Congress and in repeated public statements, Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, Deputy Secretary of State Frank Carlucci, and many generals, have all stated that while the military needs and wants the C-5B, the same cannot be said about the 747. If the Air Force were required to purchase 747's, they have stated that they would try and lease them back to the airlines under the civil reserve air fleet program rather than have to operate these unwanted aircraft themselves.

A comparison of the C-5B and the 747 is very much a case of comparing apples and oranges. They are by no means the same type of aircraft. The key difference is that the C-5 can carry tanks, self-propelled artillery, and a wide variety of large weapons that simply cannot fit in a 747, even with disassembly and the special loading equipment the 747 requires. Delivering tanks overseas by air may be crucial in a future conflict—dozens of tanks flown in to win a decisive battle are infinitely more effective than hundreds of tanks shipped in after it is too late. To quote that great homespun military genius, Nathan Bedford Forrest, to win you must "git thar the firstest with the mostest." Forrest brought his troops to the battlefield on horseback. Today, we need something a bit more far ranging to bring the weapons we need for victory across oceans.

The comparison of the 747's supposed greater serviceability rate is also an apples and oranges comparison. Airliners will always be flown more than a military transport aircraft, if only for the simple reason that a profitmaking airline gains money every time an airliner flies, while the Air Force loses money every time a transport aircraft flies. Subject the two types of aircraft to the same constraints, and Air Force figures suggest that the difference in serviceability and availability rates will not be significant.

The cost figure that is most important in any military aircraft is its life-cycle cost—the total cost of the aircraft over its service life. Air Force and Defense Department cost analysis have suggested that the life-cycle cost difference of a C-5 force as compared to the requirements of a larger 747 force means that the 747 force would only save 900 million present-day dollars. Claims of savings in the short term will be balanced out by the longer term of life-cycle costs.

None of this detracts from the fact that the 747 is an excellent aircraft—when it is done what it is designed to do. The 747 aircraft, it is proposed to purchase, can make a contribution to our airlift capability through being available through the civil reserve air fleet. However, it remains that the C-5 is the only aircraft that can answer the needs for our near-term airlift capability, an aircraft that can carry large loads such as tanks for long distances. I therefore recommend that the amendment be defeated.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me say, I appreciate the remarks of the gracious gentlewoman from California.

I really do not want this to be so much in favor of the C-5 as I do in favor of airlift and the taxpayer.

Mr. HILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HILLIS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think the gentleman has really crystallized the debate here this afternoon. I know all of us had the opportunity to go out to Andrews and see a C-5 and see it loaded and unloaded. I took advantage of that and I am sure many others did.

In talking with the crew members there, I was really impressed with the fact that those fellows had flown the airplane for a number of years. They had made the Israel airlift in 1967 and 1973, I believe—or in 1973. They had been involved in Vietnam with C-5's.

Even if you are moving into what are improved airfields, many times the time that you can stay on the ground because of the existing conditions is rather limited.

The point the gentleman made of the loading and unloading with the 747 requires tremendous amounts of time.

The C-5 there, they unloaded a helicopter, just as the gentleman said, flew it away, brought it back and put it in again and it required no setups. It was very quickly done and the airplane was ready to go again. The turnaround on them is tremendous.

I just thank the gentleman for bringing this all into focus, because I think it is very important that we understand what we are buying here. We need something that will do the job under difficult conditions sometimes. The C-5 will do that.

□ 1620

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. McDONALD. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think it is important to correct the record. The gentleman from Washington State is certainly an honorable gentleman and I know he would not want to mislead anyone, but with regard to the tests of the landing at Dry Lakes, on which the tests were terminated due to damage to runway and damage to the landing gear, it is important to point out that that was on the old triservice matting. They found out that the welding in the matting was defective. That matting is now being replaced. It is in the process of being phased out in favor of the AM-2 matting for the runways and the C-5 has repeatedly landed on the AM-2 matting without any incident, and that is the matting for the present and future.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ASPIN) rise?

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. BRINKLEY. I ask for the regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair will inform the gentleman that recognition is within the discretion of the Chair.

The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ASPIN).

Mr. ASPIN. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BRINKLEY).

Mr. BRINKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin. Of course, I was not objecting to his being recognized. All of us have been "raring to go" to have our say. We will wait.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, I will not take the full amount of time, but I thought I would just take the well to talk about the issue just a little bit from the standpoint of somebody whose constituency is not involved in the issue.

Looking at the issue from the perspective of not having any constituency involvement and really coming from a State which has been pretty tough on the C-5 over the years—I used to work for the senior Senator from Wisconsin and we were involved in having a lot of rather unkind things to say about the C-5A at the time that, as the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON) was referring to, the Ernie Fitzgerald case.

But I do think, looking at this thing now as objectively as I can from the standpoint of standing back and saying: What is the best thing to do with the three alternatives that we have before us, the 747, the C-5, or neither, with some implication of perhaps a C-17. I come to the conclusion that the best thing we ought to do is to buy the C-5B, and I come to that conclusion not without thinking that there are not some advantages to the 747.

If Members look at this thing, it is not a clear call. The 747 has some advantages. It has some advantages in range, it has some advantages in payload, but the C-5 has the one main thing that is critical, which is the ability to carry the out-size cargo.

That, I think, is most important. What you do is, you line up the advantages for the C-5, you line up the advantages for the 747, and you find there are advantages on both sides.

Which of these characteristics is most important?

Is it most important to have range? Is it most important to have payload? Is it most important to have several of the other classifications? Is it better to be able to have aerial refueling? Is it better to have better capability in loading and unloading?

The C-5 and 747 have different advantages. But the one most important thing, it seems to me, and the one thing we are buying this aircraft to do, is to carry the out-size cargo. That is the one advantage that the C-5 has.

I back that up with two other things that have decided me in favor of voting for the C-5.

When I was studying the issue and looking at it, I decided to call some people who worked in previous Democratic administrations in the Pentagon and ask their opinion as to which way we ought to go. In every case that I asked—and I asked about four people whose judgment I really trusted, in every case they said it is an arguable case, but the best thing to do is to go with the C-5.

One more point: I think past experience that we have had with trying to force a weapons system down the throat of a service that does not want that weapons system inevitably turns out to be a disaster. If it is a close call in your mind and the services want weapons system A and they do not want weapons system B, and most importantly, provided it is a close call, the advice I would have is: Always go with weapons system A, because when you force a weapons system down the throat of a service, be it the Air Force, be it the Army, or others, the number of things that can get screwed up is enormous. They always do get screwed up.

So, for those three reasons, that is my recommendation.

Mr. BEARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I will in just a second.

I think, looking at all those things, I have come to the conclusion that in spite of the fact that I did not like the C-5 when it started, I saw some problems with it, in spite of all the criticisms that I, when I worked for the senior Senator from the State of Wisconsin, used to have about the C-5A, I look at this and I objectively say to myself: What is the best thing we ought to buy right now? And I think we ought to buy the C-5B.

Mr. BEARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(On request of Mr. BEARD and by unanimous consent, Mr. ASPIN was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. BEARD. I commend the gentleman for his thoughtful statement. I think he addressed the situation as to comparing the C-5B to the 747. I know my colleague from Wisconsin, I believe, spent some time on the Research and Development Subcommittee.

In addressing also one other alternative that has been presented which would lead us to the C-17 as an alternative, as most weapons systems, major weapons systems, go down the pike, such as the C-5 when it originally started, there were major problems that had to be corrected. It was a very time-consuming, very costly process.

I think the gentleman also, having been on the R. & D. Subcommittee, understands that in a major weapons system such as this, it is just on paper now and it is awfully difficult to get a system such as this R. & D.'d, deployed, tested and deployed in several years.

So would the gentleman not agree that the C-17, whereas it may be that "future" down the road that we have to continue seeking for improved transport capabilities, but that should not really even be considered in this particular buy of trying to alleviate the problem of out-sized cargo, a problem that faces us today?

Mr. ASPIN. I would agree completely with what the gentleman from Tennessee is saying. I guess if rule No. 1 is do not try to force a weapons system down the throat of a service if it is at all close with the weapons system that the service wants, rule No. 2 is always take a weapons system that you have now rather than one that is on paper.

Mr. BEARD. The fact is, we have gone through the problems with the C-5, which we all felt very strongly about and disagreed with, but yet we could very well and probably go through the same major overhaul problems with the C-17 once we are ready for it.

Mr. ASPIN. Whatever we say about the C-17, it is almost for sure going to take longer to build than we think. It is going to be for sure more expensive than what we think. It is almost for sure going to be less capable than what we think. And, in the end, I think we would be sorry that we did not go with the plane that we have.

Mr. BEARD. That just verifies the fact that the gentleman did serve on the R. & D. Subcommittee.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Washington, and I do so at this time.

Mr. DICKS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with how long it takes us to get a weapons system fielded. But the gentleman points out that we ought to go along with the services on what they recommend.

Mr. ASPIN. Not in all cases.

Mr. DICKS. I remind the gentleman that the services on January 8 unanimously recommended to the Under Secretary of Defense that they wanted the C-17. Every military leader we have today, including Kelly Burke, including P. X. Kelley, Lou Allen, Kingston of the Rapid Deployment Force, Gabriel, the top people in the Air Force and the Pentagon, the military officers unanimously recommended the C-17. And Mr. Carlucci turned that around and went with the C-5.

So I think one could say if you are going to say do what the military says, we ought to be supporting the C-17.

□ 1630

Now, in General Heiser's briefing to the Congress, he suggested that the right mix near term and long term was to use existing, in this case KC-10, and the C-17. That was the right mix of equipment. Near term, we get additional bulk and oversize capability; and long term we get the right outsize airlifter.

What bothers me is, why do we want to go back to the most discredited plane that has ever been built in the history of this country when the line has been down for 9 years? It is going to cost the taxpayers, in my judgment, at least $7 to $8 billion more. We do not have a subcontractor situation in place. Why go back and do that with a technology which is 25 years old when we have got a plane that has many additional surfaces, additional flaps, all kinds of problems? It has a 53-percent mission capability rating. It requires 76 hours of maintenance for every hour in the air. Why would we want to go back in that direction when we can get a plane, either the 747 or the C-17, which is much more efficient?

Mr. ASPIN. If the gentleman will stop asking the question and let me answer, the gentleman asked two questions. Let me answer the first, which is that I think what we have is a close call between the C-5 and 747, and so I am saying that when there is a close call we ought to give a lot of consideration to the service preference, and the services clearly have a preference for the C-5 over the 747.

Mr. DICKS. They would rather have the C-17.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. DICKS and by unanimous consent, Mr. ASPIN was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. ASPIN. But the other point, and the principle that Deputy Secretary Carlucci was applying, was the principle that you are better off with a plane that you have already got than one that is on paper. In that I concur.

Let me go to the gentleman's second question about the discredited C-5. The C-5A did have a lot of problems, and it was a problem-ridden aircraft, but by no means the worst and by no means unexceptional. It happened to get a lot of publicity thanks to the work of the senior Senator from Wisconsin, because I helped him. He got a lot of publicity on it, but it happened to come up and the issue rose at a point where the war in Vietnam was becoming unpopular, and for the first time in our country we began to be critical of weapons systems. We had never done that before. The first one to come along on that really was the C-5, C-5A. It had a lot of troubles. I am not trying to minimize the troubles, but compared to other weapons systems that happened before and since it got a disproportionate amount of bad publicity for what was going wrong.

Yes, there were things wrong, but when you think over the publicity it is one of the weapons systems that stand out in peoples' minds only because of the publicity. It was by no means the worst turkey I can think of that we have purchased.

Mr. DICKS. It was close.

Mr. ASPIN. No. it was not even close. It was in the lower 50 percentile.

The second point is that because a weapons system at one point is not doing very well does not mean it cannot be fixed, and there were changes and there were improvements on the C-5A; in the end it became an adequate if not a better than adequate plane. It now is a rather credible piece of equipment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. GOLDWATER and by unanimous consent, Mr. ASPIN was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I would also rise in support of the committee's decision to build the C-5B. In doing that, I would commend the gentleman for his very neat observation of his two rules; do not try to retrofit an old aircraft into a new mission, and second, do not try to cram something down the services' throat that they are not in favor of because you will run into resistance and as a result you are not going to get the kind of equipment or cooperation needed.

I have had an opportunity to fly the C-5A, the 747, and the YC-15, which is the forerunner of the C-17. That does not make me an expert, but I am familiar with the equipment, and I have to conclude that all three of those aircraft are good aircraft even though the C-17 is not in existence as of yet.

The original concept and knowledge derived from the research and development of the YC-14 and 15 apply to the C-17, and will be the replacement for the C-130 and C-140. Looking at the 747 and C-5, two good aircraft, both having their own developmental problems, both providing good service in their own missions, we are being asked to substitute one for the other. This is not wise; it should be stopped by voting no on the Dicks amendment. The C-5A, was built expressly for a military mission, strategic airlift capability, carrying military equipment to a hostile theater of operation.

Maybe the 747 can do the job, but that is in question. It seems to me we already have an airlift that has been proven out by the services and recommended by all the Joint chiefs of Staff, the President, all the civilian authorities as well as the committee. It just seems to me the argument the gentleman makes is a very valid argument. The argument the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON) made about the problem of the loading of cargo is persuasive and is a very vivid example of what the people out in the field would have to face with loading a 747, 16 feet off the ground versus a drive on-drive off capability of the C-5B.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would urge that we vote down the amendment of my colleague from California (Mr. BADHAM) vote down the amendment of my colleague from Washington (Mr. DICKS), and support the committees position in authorizing additional C-5B's.

Mr. ASPIN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GINN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

(At the request of Mr. GINN and by unanimous consent, Mr. ASPIN was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. GINN. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman in the well for his very thoughtful statement. Obviously he has given a great deal of thought to this matter. When we talk about the C-5 we need to point out and make it clear that it was a pioneer effort. There was nothing like it prior to its construction. Of course there were problems, but those problems have been corrected. It is a flyable, workable piece of machinery, and it has worked in wartime. That is something significant to remember.

The second point, the Boeing Co. is a great company. We all like the Boeing Co. While the 747 has been a good airplane, it has now been rejected by its own industry, the airline industry, for what it was made to do, and that is to haul people.

Then on the C-17, let me point out that four different committees or subcommittees of this Congress rejected the C-17 because there is not time to design, build and test it. The bottom line in this discussion, I think, is the severe need for additional outsize airlift capability, and we need it now. Clearly, the C-5B, as the gentleman has so appropriately pointed out, is the way to go. Not only is the C-5B supported by the President of the United States and by the Secretary of Defense and the various Secretaries of the services, but General Kelly of the Marine Corps came before our Subcommittee on Defense Appropriations and looked us all in the eye and said:

If I have to take my Marines into battle and I do not have the C-5B to get them an outsized cargo, it could very well cost many lives of my Marines.

It is also supported, according to a letter from the immediate past Secretary of Defense, Harold Brown. He says:

I continue to believe that the outsize capability is a requirement that should govern this decision. For that reason the C-5B seems to me to be the preferred solution.

Mr. ASPIN. I thank the gentleman. I have just 1 additional minute to respond, and then I will get out of the well. I think what the gentleman is saying is correct, and the comment from Secretary Brown, he was one of the people I had consulted about this matter. I think that what had happened, the C-5A is an interesting case. It came along at a time when that publicity surrounding the troubles with the C-5A was so enormous because it was the first time we really had hearings critical of a weapons procurement system. It would not have gotten the same kind of publicity were it to be done today.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to get some idea of how many Members want to be heard on this subject.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

□ 1640

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPIN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to embellish this. I have tremendous respect for the gentleman, and there are few topics on which we disagree. This happens to be one of them.

One of the principal points the gentleman made was about ramming things down the throats of the services. From my brief tenure on the committee, I am inclinded to agree with him. But I think there are a number of notable exceptions where the Congress did force down the military's throat a system that has worked out.

The first one, I think, historically was nuclear propulsion for the Polaris submarine. That is something the Navy did not want that has worked out to the benefit of everyone.

The Marine Corps was never excited about the AV8.

The Air Force had to have the F-16 rammed down its throat, and that is the best fighter ever built.

For those Members who are not familiar with that, that is the Harrier.

We are all now familiar with the work of the Harrier in the Falkland Islands crisis. It proved itself to be a flexible multipurpose aircraft.

The Navy was never excited about the notion of having a 5-inch guided projectile, which has turned out also to be a superb weapon system. Nor was the Navy or the Air Force interested in the medium range, air-to-surface missile known as the Marad, which is a Tomahawk derivative.

So I think the gentleman makes a point, and I think it is a fair one to make, that the services do not like to have things rammed down their throats, but sometimes when we ram them down their throats, it works out to the benefit to everyone, and I would argue that the gentleman's position with respect to this is not as strong.

Let me ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. ASPIN. If I could, I will respond first to the point.

Mr. DOWNEY. Of course.

Mr. ASPIN. The point is not that there are cases where we ought to do that, but is has to be a case where what we think is right is clearly superior.

The point I was making is that if it looks like a close call, we ought to go with the services. For just bureaucratic reasons and having the system work correctly, we ought to go with the system that the services want. Otherwise it can be a disaster. We can list a whole bunch of things that, when we have crammed things down the throats of the services, turned out to be a disaster, for all kinds of bureaucratic reasons, and people resist that.

All I am saying is that if it is a close call, we should go with the services. In propulsion, the gentleman is right, but otherwise we may wind up with a TFX.

Mr. DOWNEY. Yes.

Mr. Chairman, I would make the point that there are a number of times when we have acted responsibly and it has benefited the American people.

Mr. ASPIN. That is for sure.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BRINKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to summarize the debate to this point, if I might, as I see it, by asking three questions.

First, with reference to the airlift issue, I would ask where we have been with it, and where we are today; and, the third question is, Where are we going?

In the early 1970's a delegation of us went overseas to Israel during the Yom Kippur war, and during that operation, as a delegation from the Committee on Armed Services and some from other committees, we went to the African side in Egypt with a delegation of Israeli soldiers. We went back to the Sinai, across the Suez Canal, with the Egyptian soldiers, and there we saw the ravages of war and we saw where the Israelis had come back and drawn that battle to a stalemate.

We met with President Sadat. I think it was the first time that any initiative had been made, along with Secretary of State Kissinger, to enlist his efforts in behalf of peace. President Sadat told our delegation that the C-5, in the operation and then coming to the rescue of the Israelis, was the envy of Egypt. I was there, and he told us that. He said, were it not for the operation of the C-5 airlift, it would have been all over and the stalemate would never have been achieved. He said that if he were choosing, he would choose the U.S. efforts in preference to that of the Soviets, any time.

Mr. Chairman, as a former Air Force pilot, I have flown early vintage airlift airplanes called the boxcars. We have hauled trucks and jeeps; we have dropped by monorail and we have dropped the paratroopers. The issue then is the issue of results, and we have seen the results. That is were we have been. We have been to the Persian Gulf area and we have seen results. They are the results of success.

Where are we today? The point that I shall make at this point is as follows: According to a congressionally mandated mobility study by this Congress, the outside requirements in current shortfalls in airlift are as follows: We have the 77 C-5's, that is true, but even with that, it would require the other 50 C-5's, which are to be authorized in the authorization bill to achieve sufficient airlift capacity to meet the requirements of this country.

Presently, in the Middle East scenario, with trouble there, it would require as an outside requirement in tons 39,880 tons. The shortfall, with the present 77 C-5's is 63 percent, and, of course, that cannot be handled at all with the 747's.

The second scenario is the Persian Gulf, and there the outside requirements in tons are 24,790 tons, with a shortfall with the present fleet of C-5A's of 28 percent.

The worst case is the case of NATO, where the scenario calls for 129,250 tons, with a shortfall of 80 percent.

Finally, if NATO and the Persian Gulf should occur, the shortfall is 43,870 tons, with a 58-percent shortfall with the present C-5A's. Nowhere in the military fleet is there the capacity to do this. So, therefore, the issue is whether or not we want to do it and whether or not we propose to do it.

The final question is where we are going. Let us draw the issue narrowly with reference to the C-5. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the chart brought around by the pages, if the Members do not mind. All right. We have before us on your right, if you will notice it there, there pictures which are being brought around. I would like to see the comparison between the C-5 and the 747. If we can bring in that picture for the Members.

If that issue is to be decided in favor of the C-5, then we will have achieved a capacity sufficient to meet the needs shown in the chart here before us. The C-17 is another issue. It will be a fine addition to the fleet later. The development decision on the C-17 will be made in the latter part of this decade. The operational deliveries will be made in the early 1990's to replace the C-130 and the C-141 airplanes.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRINKLEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Thank the gentleman for yielding. Mr. Chairman, on the point of the readiness, how soon will the C-17 be ready. Certain statements have been made here that it might be ready for deployment about 6 or 9 months after the new C-5B's are produced.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BRINKLEY) has expired.

(On request of Mr. ROUSSELOT, and by unanimous consent, Mr. BRINKLEY was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, implications have been made here today that the C-17 could well be ready within 6 or 9 months of the production of the C-5B. The gentleman is a member of the committee. Is that true?

Mr. BRINKLEY. It is not. While a great deal of work and study and planning have gone into the C-17 and we expect a fine airplane with better configuration of the compartment, the fact is it cannot be done quickly.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. We all know it is a fine projected aircraft, but will it be ready that quickly?

Mr. BRINKLEY. No. The available options, the 747 or the C-5, that today is the issue.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. When my colleague, the gentleman from California, mentioned that it would be ready within 6 or 9 months of the time, that just is not true?

Mr. BRINKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe his information is sound.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. EVANS of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRINKLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. EVANS of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I congratulate the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BRINKLEY) on his statement and for the excellent job he does in the Armed Services Committee and in this Congress.

I would like to make a couple of points, if I may. I believe the most important priority of the Federal Government is the national security of our country. Everything else pales in comparison, and we just cannot afford to roll the dice with this country's national security.

I have a great deal of respect for the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS). He serves his constituents well. I also have a great deal of respect for my friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. BADHAM), who also serves his constituents well. Both gentleman serve this Nation well.

□ 1650

But I think both of their amendments are misguided in this instance. First of all, as far as canceling the purchase of the C-5B and replacing it with the C-17 which has to be developed from scratch, that is kind of two birds in the bush versus one in the hand. We need airlift capability now—not next year or next decade.

I would like to point out that there is always a long lag time between the time you begin the design of an aircraft and the actual time it takes to put it in operation.

But there is another point I think that needs to be made here. The C-17 not only requires time for design, development, test and production, but also time for the training of the crews and maintenance personnel.

All of this can be done for the C-5B using the existing C-5A.

Another point is that I have made it a personal point to meet with a number of the pilots of the C-5 and with a number of the loadmasters. You ask those loadmasters who operate that aircraft what they think of the C-5. They think the C-5 is outstanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BRINKLEY) has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. EVANS of Delaware and by unanimous consent Mr. BRINKLEY was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. BRINKLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. EVANS of Delaware. They think that C-5 is outstanding.

So it would be very unwise for us not to proceed with the purchase of the C-5's. Both amendments would have a negative impact on the adequacy of our national defense.

This Congress has the highest priority to look first at the national security needs of the American people and not the red ink of a handful of distressed airlines. If we want to help the airlines, or if we want to help any company, let us do it in freestanding debate. Let us not do it in the defense authorization bill. Let us not gamble with the national security of this Nation.

Let us support the President and support the committee and do something that is in the very best interests of the security of our children and our grandchildren.

Mr. BRINKLEY. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRINKLEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to follow up briefly on the gentleman from Delaware's statement. We had several personnel appear before us in the Armed Services Committee and relate to us how they handled the unloading of the C-5.

I would like to relate briefly the testimony of one Sergeant Hodges.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BRINKLEY) has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. HUNTER and by unanimous consent Mr. BRINKLEY was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. BRINKLEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. Sergeant Hodges is loadmaster on a C-5 and this is his testimony.

The one thing I would like to point out about the C-5, it really gives us the flexibility to do the mission of the military. We can lower the cargo bed of the airplane down to ground level.

Perhaps someone could bring the picture of the C-5 over next to the speaker. I think that is an important picture. Once I have finished my statement I think everyone should take a look at that because that picture shows an M-1 tank coming out of a C-5.

Sergeant Hodges said in reference to loading and unloading the M-1 tank and other vehicles:

I have loaded numerous loads of wheeled vehicles, track vehicles, tanks, helicopters, in under 2 hours. A load of M-60 tanks, I have loaded that in 26 minutes, and we have what we call engine running offloads where the crews remained placed in the airplane. We go into our destination, we lower the airplane down to truckbed height, we open up our ramps, we do not need any other support. We drive the M-60 tanks off the airplane and the average time that I have always completed that in has been 26 minutes, and that is from the time we stop until we start moving again.

That is what the field commander needs.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. BRINKLEY. I thank the gentleman for his point.

The hostile environment into which we will go makes time very, very critical for the lives of the military personnel.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRINKLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. I just want to make sure the gentleman knows, as I think he does, what we are advocating with the existing 747's and DC-10's is an increase in oversize and bulk capability which is also short.

Second, the MAC study done on airlift shows that it takes 3.3 hours to offload a C-5 because it does not have an automatic loading system. Not all of the cargo is outsized. A lot of it is bulk and oversize. You have to take in a forklift truck to lift that stuff off, so it takes 3.3 hours.

Mr. BRINKLEY. If I could reclaim my time, Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his point. But I would refer the gentleman to the chart that has been put up here that has established outsize cargo needs which is very definite in terms of percentages. This is why where the 50 C-5's are needed now to make up the shortfall for rapid deployment forces or NATO or for both of them.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BRINKLEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I asked the gentleman to yield for a unanimous-consent request. After consultation with the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS) and with Members on our side, I would like to ask unanimous consent that we agree to vote on the Dicks amendment and all amendments thereto at 7 o'clock, with 1 hour of debate to be controlled by the gentleman from Washington and 1 hour of debate to be controlled by the Member from New York representing the committee.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The request is for 2 hours of debate time equally divided between the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON)?

Mr. STRATTON. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, if time is to be controlled by the gentleman from Washington and by myself, is it required that those who wish to participate should stand at this time?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The recognition of Members is totally at the discretion of the managers of the time.

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BADHAM. Am I given to understand that on this side we have no time; we are not able to have any time?

Mr. DICKS. I would be prepared to yield a half an hour of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is the gentleman asking a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair?

Mr. BADHAM. The inquiry is, as I understand it, the gentleman from Washington has 1 hour and the gentleman from New York has 1 hour. I was inquiring as to what time this side had.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent request the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS) is recognized for 1 hour, and under the same unanimous-consent request the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) is recognized for 1 hour.

Both managers of time may yield to members of the minority or members of the majority.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Arizona (Mr. RHODES).

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RHODES. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, it is generally recognized that our Nation faces a shortfall in military airlift capability. It is our task today to determine the most efficient way to meet that shortfall.

First, we must examine our needs. The "Congressionally Mandated Mobility Study" supports the conclusion that our crucial needs lie in the transport of oversized and bulk materials. Analyses of DOD military scenarios clearly demonstrate that the existing 77 C-5's have more than enough capability to move the outsized equipment that is to be airlifted. No one claims that the 747 can carry outsize loads or that the C-5 cannot. However, our military airlift shortfall does not fall in that area. We must instead determine the most cost-effective way to transport oversize and bulk materials.

What is the best way to airlift these materials? The Boeing Corp. has made a firm, fixed-price, guaranteed offer for 48 new 747's, equivalent to the acquisition of 50 new C-5's, which would save the taxpayers an initial $4.4 billion over the Lockheed proposal. Over the life of the aircraft, including operating and support costs, the savings would mount to fully $7.9 billion. Moreover, the Boeing proposal would deliver the planes 3 years before the Lockheed proposal.

Both alternatives offer the same essential airlift capability. One would cost the taxpayers $7.9 billion less and would be delivered 3 years earlier. The choice seems clear.

The Senate has already made the reasoned choice by approving 60-39 an amendment identical to the one now before the House. I urge my colleagues to vote yes on this amendment to substitute funds allocated for the C-5 with funds for the acquisition of wide-bodied commercial aircraft. In the interest of the taxpaying public it is the right decision.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, let me set the record straight on some questions that I have been receiving today.

I have been asked by several of my colleagues, "What is there in this for your district. What part of the 747 is made in Phoenix, Ariz.?"

The answer is: I do not know. Nobody from Phoenix, Ariz., has asked me to do one thing about either money for the C-5 or for the 747.

I have been interested in this subject since my service on the Defense Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee. That was some years ago.

During that time I, like the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON), had occasion to observe the progress of the C-5A. I must admit to a prejudice. I thought the C-5A was an airplane that should not have been built at the time. I guess maybe I still have about that same feeling, although I certainly do recognize the need for heavy lift capabilities right now.

But at that very time I was asking the people from the Pentagon, "Why is it, when you have a plane like the 747, like the DC-10, which was coming along at the time, why is it when you have planes which have been tested, which have flown around the world many times, which have capabilities for heavy lift, which can be modified to fit your need, why is it that we are building this C-5 airplane from scratch?"

□ 1700

It was a good question then, and it is still a good question.

Now, there is no doubt but what the C-5B, if it is built, will haul more and heavier units, than will the 747. I am not doubting that. But I do want to reiterate the fact that you have 77 C-5A's right now and that very likely the mix which we should have would consist of those 77 C-5's for the heavy units and the 747's for long range and heavy total payload.

The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON) made a point concerning 747 use to land on anything other than commercial airfields.

I do not think there is any doubt that if you just use a little logic you will realize that same argument applies to the C-5B as well.

Mr. Chairman, there is no way that any theater commander or any Secretary of Defense or anybody in charge of the Armed Forces of the United States is going to take a $150 million airplane and try to land it on grass near the battlefield. That is just not going to happen. It will be landed at a suitable airport, and the cargo will be sent to the front by other means.

Neither the C-5 nor the 747 will land close to the front. They are both going to be used on commercial airfields, and they are both going to be unloaded on commercial airfields. I think we should remember also the fact that the 747 is being used now as a cargo aircraft and has been for years. It is going to have to be modified—there is no doubt about that—for military use. But it can be done, and it can fill a very definite military need.

As a matter of fact, several people have made the point that 747 airplanes are available in the reserve fleet. Well, if they are good for the reserve fleet, why are they so completely worthless, in the minds of many of the Members, for the active services? That just does not make a lot of sense.

Also, nobody seems to be interested very much in the total cost. Now, we have had some various figures thrown around. I happen to believe that there is a tremendous saving in the use of the 747 as distinguished from starting up the line for the C-5 again. I also believe that the American taxpayer is entitled to that kind of a break.

Now, I do not want anybody to misunderstand me. If I thought it was important to spend the money to build the C-5 to protect our Armed Forces, to make them successful in whatever endeavor they might undertake, I would spend the money gladly.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. RHODES) has expired.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. RHODES. Those of you who might have served with me on the Defense Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee know that I was known as a high dollar man for the military. I would not stint. I am an unrepentant hawk. I would not stint the armed services on anything that I felt it absolutely needed. But I have also got to tell you that I have never seen anybody as convinced or as convincing as a three- or four-star general whose mind is already made up. They can give you the greatest arguments, because that is mainly what they have to do during the day. They can give you the most ingenious arguments in the world as to why their positions ought to prevail.

I learned a long time ago to listen to them but not to take what they say completely for granted. They are prejudiced; it is their business to be prejudiced; and I do not criticize them for it. But I criticize me if I believe everything they say. And I do not. I do believe, as a matter of fact, that the 747 is a remarkable airplane. I think there is no doubt but that it can do a very workmanlike job in the heavy lift capability. I recognize the fact that we have the C-5 and we must have the C-5 for heavy units, but I also recognize the fact that there were a lot of people who went out on the west front the other day to talk about a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget.

This body is being offered today some help in arriving at that balanced budget, without waiting for 7 years for a constitutional amendment.

Also, it has not been said—and we do not mention the other body—but I cannot believe that the other body adopted the amendment, which is almost identical with that offered by the gentleman from Washington, without having some idea as to what it was doing. The fact that the other body did do that should be at least somewhat persuasive on this body in my opinion.

So I certainly am not in the business of trying to bail out any airlines, as was suggested by the gentleman from Delaware. But I would like to mention the fact that some of those airlines are probably going to have to be bailed out by someone. One reason they are is because this body and the other body did something which appeared to be fairly wise at the time, like deregulating the airline business. The result has been continuous losses as far as airlines are concerned, and lack of capability in paying for aircraft which they had already bought.

Now, if those aircraft were not available at a cut rate, I might not be suggesting that they be bought. But I think it is a good deal for the taxpayer not only now but in warding off something which may happen in the future, and that is the necessity of enacting legislation which will bail out some of our airline industries.

When you can put it together like this, when you have an ailing industry that has an asset that we need, we can buy it cheaper than we can buy anything else, it seems to me very good business for us to take a very good look at it and to go with it.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield briefly?

Mr. RHODES. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. I think the gentleman has made an important statement.

We have a unique opportunity here to save the taxpayers a substantial amount of money, between $6 billion and $8 billion, according to the numbers that were submitted.

The gentleman said something that I think is terribly important. He said you can listen to the military leadership, but you have to remain skeptical. I am sure the gentleman knows, as I do, that when they are for something, they will change the numbers in order to make it look good. When they are against something, they will paint the worst possible case. I think that is exactly what we have here today—the best case for the C-5. Apparently we do not have any institutional memory, because all of a sudden we have forgotten all of the problems we had with it, and the fact that it has been down for 9 years. At the same time, we have a chance to get a plane to carry oversize and bulk cargo where we have at least a 15-million-ton-per-day shortfall at a lot less expense to the taxpayers. Why do we want the most expensive plane to carry that bulk and oversize?

Mr. RHODES. I am sure that the gentleman from Washington will agree, too, that the point of time should be made. You can get the 747 aircraft delivery started I believe in 3 years.

Mr. DICKS. Yes. We could actually get them before that. We could almost get them immediately, as soon as this competition is over with. We could get them all within 3 years.

Mr. RHODES. Right.

And nobody really knows how long it will take to build the C-5. Certainly nobody knows how long it will take to build the C-17. If the C-17 has the same checkered career as the C-5 does, it may be the year 2000 before you get them. So if you talk about what is available, the thing that is available right now is a whole fleet of 747's at a bargain basement price. We ought to take it.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. BONER).

Mr. BONER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, a serious military deficiency in the airlift capabilities of the country's Rapid Deployment Forces requires the procurement of additional cargo aircraft. H.R. 6030, the defense authorization bill, provides $860 million for the initial procurement in fiscal year 1983 for 50 C-5B airlift aircraft to address the serious military problem.

I oppose the amendment which is now being considered to the defense authorization bill which will delete funds for the procurement of the C-5B and will substitute the purchase of 48 used or new Boeing 747's instead.

While I recognize the 747's qualities as a commercial passenger and cargo aircraft, I just do not feel that it is an acceptable alternative for the C-5B from a military standpoint. It cannot carry the outsized cargo that we must be able to move swiftly to any part of the world.

The C-5B is a unique military aircraft. It can airdrop cargo; it can take off and land on 4,000-foot runways and it can use existing Air Force support equipment. Vehicles can be driven on and off of the C-5B because of the plane's self-deployable ramps. The plane has a high-strength cargo floor, truckbed loading height and full-width door openings—features that are not available on the 747.

As we strengthen our Rapid Deployment Forces and our ability to protect the vital interests of America in different parts of the world, it is imperative that we have the cargo aircraft which can transport such outsized military hardware as combat engineer vehicles, the CH-47 helicopter, the Lance missile carries, the M-88 and armored cavalry vehicle, the M-1 and M-60 tanks, and other military weapons and vehicles.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the amendment which would delete the funds for the procurement of the C-5B.

PREFERENTIAL MOTION OFFERED BY MR. LEVITAS

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LEVITAS moves that the Committee rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. UDALL). The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEVITAS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

□ 1710

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak in opposition to the Dicks amendment. The question we face today is not one of whose State or district or which company will benefit, the question is: What does our national defense—our security—require?

The United States today faces a critical shortage of strategic airlift capability. The most urgently needed type of strategic airlift is the capability to carry large combat equipment—so-called outsize cargo. This type of cargo—helicopters, tanks, mobile artillery, armored personnel carriers, trucks—comprise the bulk of the firepower of our ground forces. The congressionally mandated mobility study showed a current shortfall of outsize combat cargo capability of 28, 58, 63, and 80 percent in various likely combat scenarios. The Lockheed C-5B, as the Armed Services Committee has recognized, is the only aircraft which can fill this outsize need. As General Vessey, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, testified, 52 percent of the Army's armored division equipment, 41 percent of its mechanized equipment, 25 percent of its infantry division equipment, and 60 percent of its motor transport brigade equipment is outsize, and can be loaded and unloaded combat ready only from the C-5B.

The 747 cannot carry outsize cargo. Such equipment would have to be disassembled, loaded onto the plane, and reassembled at the combat site. It is extremely important that we minimize any requirement for assembling, and that the equipment we bring in is in fact combat ready when it hits the ground. Vehicles can be driven on and off the C-5B. The 747, with its cargo floor height of 16 feet, requires special elevator loaders which may or may not be available at the destination airfield. The C-5B has a high-strength cargo floor, truckbed loading height and full-width door openings—none of which are features of the 747, While the C-5B can take off and land on 4,000-foot runways, the 747 requires longer and more firmly built runways because of its great weight and limited landing gear flotation. Recently a runway at Ramstein Air Force Base in West Germany had to be closed for repairs after the engines of a fully loaded 747 picked up debris from the edges of the narrow runway there and blew the debris into the runway. Had the United States been faced with the recent Falklands crisis, the C-5B would have been able to fly down and immediately drive off combat capable equipment. The 747 would have been unable to use the Falkland runway. Admittedly, the cost of the C-5B over the 20-year life cycle of the plane would be about $1 billion more than that of the 747. But $1 billion over a 20-year period is a small price to pay for the overwhelming advantages of the C-5B. Inadequate equipment is no bargain at any price.

The 747 is a good commercial airplane and can contribute a role to military airlift in some places. But it cannot do the job the C-5B can do, plain and simple. It cannot carry the type of loads and it cannot operate to the same places. Certainly if our enemies would agree to fight at London's Heathrow Airport or at Paris' Charles de Gaulle Airport, and then give us time to off-load and reassemble equipment, the 747 might be all right. But that is not the way the world works. Our adversaries just may pick places where the time and landing conditions and essential unloading facilities are not available. We can not provide our airlift capability in the hope that our adversaries will accommodate us by picking the airports which can use the 747.

Moreover, should the proposed Dicks amendment be adopted, the Military Airlift Command would be faced with a veritable potpourri of aircraft which would create a logistical nightmare. Even after the proposed Boeing modification program, which would be both costly and time-consuming, the used 747's envisioned in this proposal would not be of a standard configuration. The airplanes would have different operating weights and ranges. The engines on one would not be the same as the engines on another.

It would be a management nightmare and a potential military catastrophe to have to consider each 747 individually and gear out operations solely on the particular airplane that happens to be available at the time a critical need arises. Juggling crews, equipment, and spare parts, would be a delicate and complicated management task. Indeed, it would be too delicate for an Air Force required to respond quickly to unexpected demands anytime, anywhere in the world. I do not believe the realities of war provide for calling time out to reposition airlift capabilities.

Mr. Chairman, many Members of the House have expressed a concern over the state of the American airline industry. This amendment is in no way a solution to any of the difficulties the industry faces today. As an active member of the House Aviation Subcommittee, I am as concerned as anyone with the problems of American aviation, but we are faced here with a military problem which requires a military solution. Would we buy bulldozers from International Harvester to help that company when what our defense really needs is a M-1 tank? We must put our national defense ahead of parochial interests, and the national defense requires that we acquire the C-5B. The defense of this Nation should not be viewed as a pork-barrel. The stakes are too high. I urge my colleagues to reject this amendment.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVITAS. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

If this is not a pork barrel, why then did Lockheed come in with an unsolicited proposal for 50 C-5's after the military had unanimously recommended the C-17?

It seems to me that the gentleman is on very, very thin ice.

Mr. LEVITAS. I would say to the gentleman from Washington that the question, which there is an agreement on between the last administration and the last President, the last Secretary of Defense, the current President and the current Secretary of Defense, is what we need now is the C-5B to provide us this type of airlift capacity.

If the gentleman wants to believe that we can fight the necessary wars and battles at Heathrow Airport or at Charles de Gaulle Airport or these major airports around the world, then, fine, but it just may be that our adversaries will pick a Falkland Islands or some remote place in Africa or the Middle East or the Persian Gulf or Asia and that is why we need the C-5B.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, out of whose time does the time of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEVITAS) come?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair will advise the gentleman that it comes out of neither. It is in addition thereto.

Mr. STRATTON. A further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

Those of us who have been in the House for several years will recall that the device employed by the gentleman from Georgia was one frequently used by our good friend, H. R. Gross of Iowa.

It was my recollection that at some point in the intervening years there was some parliamentary limitation on the number of times and number of occasions under which that device could be used.

Could the Chair advise, are there any other circumstances that some other Member would be entitled to use this device during the next 2 hours of debate?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair will advise the gentleman from New York that, under the rules of the House and precedents, once the privileged motion is offered it cannot be used by another Member until the bill has been substantially changed by amendment.

Mr. STRATTON. I thank the Chair.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DICKS. Do the Members get a chance to speak in opposition to the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair will advise the gentleman that a Member is entitled to speak in opposition to the preferential motion. The Chair intended to recognize the gentleman from California (Mr. BADHAM), in the event the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) did not wish the time.

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask to take time to speak in opposition to the motion.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. BADHAM) is recognized for 5 minutes in opposition to the preferential motion.

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, very briefly, I would like to say that we are not here to decide wholly the future of our country's defense. We are here to decide on, first, my substitute and then the amendment to which I offered the substitute.

My substitute has offered a third alternative to have the best possible airlift that we need as soon as we can possibly have it.

It was suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin that if airplane "A" works, why not use it. I would suggest we still are not using the B-29 or B-17. They worked great but we still do not use them.

Why do we not use the 747? We have got 747's parked all over the United States and lots of other places in the world. They are eminently immediately available. So what I am offering is a third alternative.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. KRAMER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, at this time in our history, we need to rebuild our defenses.

The budget that is now before us is one that faces some grim, hard, uncomfortable facts about how far our Nation has slipped and how carefully we need to plan our forces for the 1980's.

What are some of the lessons that recent history can tell us about such subjects as strategic airlift and force projection? In my opinion, there are plenty of lessons. Let us take a look at a few cases:

In 1973, Israel was taken by surprise in the opening round of the October war. With huge and unexpected losses in aircraft and armor, Israel called on the United States for immediate assistance. Within days, American leaders had organized the most massive airlift in modern history. Huge C-5's flew into Lod Airport in Tel Aviv, loaded with tanks and heavy equipment. Within hours, this equipment had been committed to combat on the battlefield.

In April of this year, Britain was taken by surprise by the Argentine invasion of the Falklands. Very few British naval and air force planners expected that war. In fact, the Royal Navy and the British Defense Ministry had already decided that Britain would devote its conventional forces entirely to NATO. Therefore, Britain would not need forces for projecting forces overseas, including airlift.

So, the Royal Air Force sold off its fleet of heavy-lift Belfast freighters to private operators. When the Argentines invaded the Falklands, the British found themselves scrambling desperately to transport their forces to a wartime theater they had never planned for, one which was 10,000 miles away. The Royal Air Force chartered back the Belfast aircraft, which fortunately were still available. The British recovered the islands. But the campaign was a very high-risk operation, with British forces operating at the extreme end of their logistic lines.

Today, we live in a world in which crises can break out with very little warning. Our Nation has obligations to NATO, to Korea, to Japan, to Australia, and New Zealand, and to other nations whose security is critical to us. We are separated from them by thousands of miles and by entire ocean basins. Yet at the same time, we no longer deploy the large overseas forces we did 20 years ago. Instead, we depend heavily on the ability to transport our forces to wherever they are needed, or to transfer large quantities of military equipment to our allies.

At the same time, we could, during the 1980's, face crises of unpredictable complexity. What would happen if North Korea invaded South Korea and we had to resupply the South Koreans, at the same time that we had a crisis in the Persian Gulf? What other kinds of "Falklands" crises might we face around the world in the 1980's? How would we be able to respond to them? What happens if we need to quickly transfer American heavy equipment, particularly combat vehicles, from one theater to another or to an ally under crisis or wartime conditions?

I believe the lesson is obvious: Our strategic airlift must have the greatest flexibility we can give it, especially when it comes to moving the equipment that has been bought over the years by American ground forces. But in order to achieve this flexibility, we have to look where we stand in regard to "outsize" equipment and our ability to move that equipment around by air. We have grave deficiencies in that category of airlift—and the administration's proposed C-5 purchase is the only way to solve that problem.

The C-5 is the only aircraft that can carry heavy tanks, fighting vehicles, and helicopters into combat and deploy them immediately for operations. No other airlifter can do that. Only the C-5 can handle the outsize and very heavy support equipment—the tank retrievers, the Army cranes—that are the guts of a fighting force.

I repeat: Our leaders need the greatest flexibility in airlift that we can give them. I urge my colleagues to remember that the driving lesson we have learned over the past few years is flexibility in strategic mobility and strategic force projection. We need much more flexibility than we have today. Our leaders need the best possible tools for crisis management and for wartime operations. Strategic airlift forces, along with sealift, are critical to such capabilities.

If there is a lesson to close on, it is this: Wars and crises tend to erupt in ways and in places that we had not planned on. Today, however, the United States dare not be taken by surprise. We owe it to our Nation, and to the crews of the Military Airlift Command, to give them the forces they need. We must face our airlift requirements honestly—and we need the C-5 as a critical element in our rebuilding of American military power.

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

□ 1720

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. UDALL). The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEVITAS).

The preferential motion was rejected.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. DOWNEY).

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I just want to address for a minute the Falkland Islands question. We seem to learn lessons from everything, but I hope that we do not dwell at length on the notion that if we had to fight in the Falkland Islands, the C-5B or A would have made any difference. We would have taken in the Eisenhower and the Nimitz and steamed them 200 miles within the Falkland Islands and the Argentines would have surrendered. It is not a question of having to land C-5B's on an austere runway in the Falkland Islands before we invaded them.

The fact is that the British, because of the Harriers' short range were not able to do all the things that we are fully capable of doing as a modern Navy, with large sea based airplanes, things like the E-2C and the F-14. So let us not be absurd in linking the lessons of the Falkland Islands with the C-5B, and whether we need it or not.

Now, here are the full page ads that the contractors have taken out to try to convince us.

I might add that I am somewhat offended as a Member of Congress by these ads. You will note that they are all pictures. Obviously, they do not believe we read text. Someday we will presumably get these things in comic book form.

But what bothers me even more is the real chutzpah of the Lockheed Corp.; not only the chutzpah, but the kind of misplaced advertisements. These crisis-proved features, the ad says, these test proved wings.

Now, if I were going to market Bon Vivant vichysoisse, I would not say, "Bon Vivant vichysoisse, they taste delicious and they are now in these new antibotulism cans." It is not smart advertising.

If I were going to sell the Corvair, I would not say, "It's small, it's effective in a crisis and it doesn't turn over around corners anymore. We fixed that problem."

Well, the chutzpah has to do with the fact that Lockheed is actually advertising, can you believe this, advertising that the wings that used to fall off the plane that have been fixed up now do not fall off the plane, and that they fixed them up on time and under cost. Not is has "new strong" wings. Remarkable.

Now, we all fly in airplanes, all of us all the time. Now, I am not a professional pilot, but many of you are or know professional pilots, and they will tell you candidly that in a crisis you can lose an engine. You can lose a couple of engines. You can lose a radio. You can lose the hydraulic system. You can lose the wheels.

But it is bad when you lose the wings. This is a problem, any pilot will tell you, you lose the wings and you are in serious, serious trouble.

Now, have we forgotten the problems of the C-5? Is it possible that we do not remember the travail of Ernie Fitzgerald when he was trying to explain to us that there were enormous problems with building this airplane? If we go back and build this plane again, the ads will say in 10 years when they want to build the C-5C: These crisis-proved features, plus the new strong tested body, which does not crack when put outsized cargo on it. Today the wings, tomorrow the body.

My good friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ASPIN) pointed out it is a bomb. He says it is in the lower half of the turkeys. No; I think that is really stretching it. It is in the top five of turkeys. The all-time turkey hall of fame.

If the C-5A can come back, so can Richard Nixon.

This is the Spruce Goose of airplanes. If we build this airplane, I urge you, I implore you, to go out and invest in the people who build flight simulators, because that is where the money will be made. We will not be testing and using air pilots to train on these planes because of the enormous risk and cost of operating them. They will learn how to fly the planes in simulators.

In contrast, the whole history of the 747 has been one of remarkable success. It has flown 11 million hours. It is cheaper. Whether you choose $1 billion or $6 billion for cost, there is no question that it will cost us less money.

I implore you, look at the record of this airplane. If we make the critical mistake of forgetting past problems, we are going to pay for them.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. AuCoin). The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. DOWNEY. I am talked out, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SWIFT. I appreciate the attention that the gentleman has given to the advertisements by Lockheed. I have been following those, too, and was equally impressed with the fact that the real big argument is that they fixed the wings this time. I thought that was very good, as did the gentleman; but it also occurred to me that maybe the gentleman saw the ad in which you have a profile view of the C-5 and you have two tanks coming out the front and two tanks going in the back and you assume that it is filled with tanks all the way down; so that this plane carries, that would be as I recall, measured out, about a total of nine tanks; is that correct?

Mr. DOWNEY. That is right, and I think one of the points the gentleman might want to make, and I think that all of us should, and that is the question, how do you win battles? The great military minds have been great logisticians. Eisenhower was. How to move men and materiel in large quantities; if you want to win a battle, as the gentleman from Georgia mentioned before, it is not going to be done at the Paris or the London airports. No; it is going to be done at one of the big airfields in Germany where you are going to be landing the cargo that you need to land. It is not going to be a question of landing tanks on the battlefield with bullets flying and brave men dashing in and out of the airplane to bring the tanks to the battlefield.

Mr. SWIFT. Does the gentleman mean that I was wrong, that I did not see Clint Eastwood in the turret? I really thought I did in those ads.

The point I wanted to make, though, about all those tanks going in the back and coming out the front is that if I am not correct, the most tanks that plane will carry is one, because it cannot lift any more than that.

Mr. DOWNEY. Yes.

Mr. SWIFT. It is not a whole bunch of tanks in and out.

The other point that I think we should make with regard to those wonderful ads about tanks and that beautiful color photo that we have seen so much today is that carrying tanks in the C-5's is to use the word, if I quote the gentleman correctly, I think he is still on the floor, the ranking member of the committee, is ridiculous. This whole issue that Lockheed has used about the incredible capability of the C-5 to carry tanks is an absolute red herring. That is not the way the military intends to move tanks around the world.

Mr. DOWNEY. Well, absolutely not. If you want to move an armored division to the battlefield, you have got to do that by ships, or it has to to be prepositioned, or it will not be done. You are not going to fly it there. I do not think anyone in the military believes that that is going to be the mission of the C-5A or B, because you would never be able to buy enough to move an armored division to the battlefield by air. The tanks have to be there.

The Russians do not have any ability to fly outsized cargo, so if they want to move troops and armor to the battlefield, they have to give us advance warning, so there will be lots of opportunity to ready bases for the 747 and to move up the equipment we need to move up. All it takes is one C-141 flight at the beginning.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. Glickman).

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to allude to the comments our distinguished former minority leader, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. Rhodes) made, when the President of the United States addressed the Nation 3 days ago and argued quite eloquently for a balanced Federal budget at a time when our Nation is faced with an unprecedented combination of high interest rates, high unemployment and massive budget deficits. At the same time we are in the process of improving our defense posture to meet the worldwide threat to our vital interests.

We realize that a vital part of this must be in the enhancement of our airlift capacities and capabilities. We have had a very eloquent argument here on the floor; should that be accomplished through the C-5? Should that be accomplished through the C-17 or should it be accomplished through the 747?

It is true that the C-5 can carry outsized cargo which the 747 cannot; however, it is also true that the C-5's currently in our inventory cannot meet the outsized needs. Our critical airlift shortfall is not in outsized capability, but in the oversized and bulk areas.

I would like to talk for a minute about the 747 because talking about the benefits of that airplane have not been elicited in this debate so far.

□ 1730

It is the best nonoutsized airlifter in the world. It flies faster than the C-5, its range is greater, its payload is larger, and it is more reliable.

The gentleman from California (Mr. Hunter), brought forth a graph showing the landing spots in Saudi Arabia. Let me tell my colleagues, no C-5 could make it nonstop without refueling from Dover, Del., to any of those landing spots in Saudi Arabia like the 747 can do. And on hot days, taking off from Dover, you could not even put much cargo on those C-5 airplanes to go to Saudi Arabia or anywhere else in the world because they do not have the payload capability.

So I say, all things being equal, we do not have a turkey of an airplane here in the 747; we have the best airplane in the world that has ever been manufactured. The 747 is used not only as a passenger airplane but as a cargo airplane and it is so good, in fact, that the military has chosen it as the main aircraft for the CRAF program, to transport troops and other materiel around the world.

So I think it is more cost effective. The C-5 is more expensive to acquire than the 747, it is more expensive to maintain. If we buy the 747, we do not have to worry about cost overruns; unlike Lockheed, Boeing will guarantee its price, its mile cost, its maintenance cost, all the cost items, plus the fact that you get this airplane on line 3 years before the C-5.

I do believe that Congress has to confront some difficult choices. We do not have the physical resources to buy every weapons system we want. Cuts will have to be made somewhere.

Where do we make these cuts? It seems to me that Mr. Dicks and Mr. Rhodes have brought us a flexible alternative, realizing that what we need is a new airlift capability, one that has good wings, good engines, designed for the 1990's and into the next decade, and can do it, if my colleagues will look at the chart, for $8 billion less.

I have received correspondence from the National Taxpayers Union supporting the Rhodes-Dicks amendment, again talking about the fact that in time of limited resources we have an airplane that will do the job for $8 billion less, and for the life of me, I cannot understand how we could not accept it.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to my colleague from Missouri.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Chairman, the President has written a letter, now being circulated on this issue. He concludes by saying, "There are no savings if what we buy will not do the job that needs to be done." I support the Rhodes amendment because the C-5 cannot do the job that needs to be done.

The congressionally mandated mobility study (CMMS), which identified our airlifter shortfall and defined our needs in this area, called for a plane that could move a large volume of heavy outsized equipment and deliver it in situations that provide no airport configurations or, in fact, permit no landing at all. In addition, the new plane should offer intercontinental range, maneuverability, air refueling and a simple, rugged, reliable design based on state-of-the-art technology.

In August 1981, after evaluating competitive bids of major airplane contractors, the Air Force selected the McDonnell Douglas C-17 as the best design to meet all the specifications. In particular, the C-17 offers the following advantages:

The C-17 provides small, austere capability—three can park on a ramp area that could accommodate only one C-5;

The C-17 requires a takeoff field length of 7,600 feet, compared with about 10,000 for the C-5;

The C-17 can land in 3,000 feet while the C-5 needs 4,000;

The range of the C-17 is 2,400 nautical miles but that of the C-5 is 1,700; and

The C-17 can deliver when basing is unavailable or denied—through airdrop, low altitude parachute extraction and minimal runway utilization—assuring its survivability when the C-5 would be vulnerable and its use in up to 40 percent more situations.

Above all, the C-17 offers high reliability with minimal maintenance. Its simple, proven design would require about half the maintenance manpower demanded by the C-5 while the meantime between servicing would be almost five times longer. While the C-17 would be fully mission-capable almost 75 percent of the time, the C-5 has been notoriously unreliable. Official Pentagon estimates claim the C-5 would be fully mission-capable 49.4 percent of the time but actual experience—during the Yom Kippur war—demonstrated its capability may be as low as 40 percent. Despite the ongoing program to refit the wings and correct the more than 200 other defects in the C-5, our existing fleet continues to experience fundamental problems, more often than not keeping the planes on the ground.

The bottom line was best expressed in the following exchange between Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff General Vessey and Senator JACKSON during an Armed Services Committee hearing this spring:

Senator JACKSON. General Vessey, does the C-5 have the same military utility as the C-17?

General VESSEY. No. It does not. Had the C-5 been able to meet all the Army's airlift needs, the C-17 program would not have been necessary. The C-5 still leaves a void in such necessary airlift operations as small austere airfield operations, intratheater outsized airlift, low altitude parachute extraction systems, and rapid climb and descent capability for enhanced survival.

The only advantage the C-5 has over the C-17 is that it can be brought into operation sooner. It is not, however, the only avenue toward meeting our airlifter needs in the short term. Commercial wide bodies can be operational within 2 years. They can be obtained at substantially lower cost with higher reliability.

If, however, we go ahead with the C-5 procurement program, as authorized in this bill, we will be wasting a lot of time and money on a plane that will still leave us with an airlift shortfall. We should not open the C-5 production line. If we do that, we will postpone, if not completely prevent, development of the plane that can truly enhance our airlift capability.

I urge my colleagues to support the Rhodes amendment. It represents the most effective use of our defense dollars and permits us to concentrate on development of the optimal air cargo plane, the C-17.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think the gentleman was referring to the fact that I pointed out that there are only four airfields into which the 747 can fly in Saudi Arabia which have support facilities.

There are some 80 airfields in Saudi Arabia that the C-5 can land in, with aerial refueling, of which it is capable, as evidenced by our help to Israel in one of their conflicts.

I am asking the gentleman: Is it his contention that in fact the 747 can fly to more airfields than those four that I mentioned?

Mr. GLICKMAN. No. My intention was that I did not want to mislead my colleagues and anybody else who might be watching that the C-5 cannot fly anywhere near that country without aerial refueling, which the 747 can.

The second thing was that because of engine thrust and payload capability, the C-5 cannot take off on a hot day with very much cargo in the United States and go anywhere, let alone Saudi Arabia. I guess that was my point.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. AUCOIN). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. GLICKMAN).

Mr. GLICKMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I yield to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS) at this time.

Mr. DICKS. The major point here is that our opposition wants to always talk about outsize. We have a tremendous shortfall on bulk and oversize capability which the 747 can carry cargo further, 35 tons more and faster than the C-5.

We get the plane at less money, $44 million for a used plane, $58 million for a new plane. We get it sooner, we could add to our capability and then build the C-17 in the long term.

Does not that make sense as a responsible way to deal with this problem?

Mr. GLICKMAN. You are speaking to the choir, but I think it makes a lot of sense, particularly because we have a deficit of $120 billion-odd this year, and probably a half trillion dollars of new debt. We get a better plane for the buck at a cheaper price, and we can get them quicker. We can get them immediately, rather than waiting 3 or 4 years.

Mr. DICKS. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BRINKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BRINKLEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Basically, I think the gentleman misspoke himself, but he did correct it in his colloquy with the gentleman from California.

First, I think he had indicated that the C-5 was incapable of flying nonstop to Saudi Arabia. Of course, it is capable of flying nonstop. It does use the Air Force system of refueling. We do it with the F-4's, we did it in the Bright Star operation, and we did it in Egypt. So that is a system for refueling when you have heavy payloads.

Mr. GLICKMAN. The gentleman is correct, except my intention was to say that it could not fly nonstop without refueling. That was my intention. I thought I made that statement.

Mr. DICKS. But the big difference is that the 747 can go there without refueling, and thus will get there a full 2 hours earlier.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MORRISON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to compliment the gentleman on his statement and associate myself with his comments in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS) and the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. RHODES).

Mr. GLICKMAN. I would just repeat: For saving the taxpayers $8 billion and providing a plane that can carry the payload, I would urge support of the Dicks amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY), a retired major general in the National Guard.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the chairman of the committee, even though I think the National Guard could handle all 50 of these C-5B's, I certainly will not offer an amendment that all of these aircraft go to the National Guard. However, that would be OK.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Dicks amendment and also in opposiiton to the substitute that has been offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. Chairman, what I will say here today, has already been said. I would like to perhaps emphasize several points. I take this time because I have individually contacted a number of Members in the House asking for their support for the C-5, and I think it only fair that I be recognized and seen on the floor in support of what I have told these individual Members.

I believe I can safely say the great majority of the members of that House Armed Services Committee who have been working in this area for a number of years, totally support the C-5 and do not support the C-17 or the 747 at this time.

In fact, under the reconciliation motion offered yesterday by Mr. STRATTON, if we wanted to take the C-5's out that would have been the time, but we think they are important and they were left in this bill.

The bottom line is, where are the weaknesses in our military forces? One of the weaknesses is the airlift capability. We just do not have enough airlift capability to do the job.

If we got involved in combat, we could not get the equipment there anyway.

So that is the problem. That is what the Air Force told us. They said to the Congress, "We need your help. We need additional airlift capability. We think the C-5B will do the job."

There has been some talk that a number of generals and admirals, people in the Defense Department, are not saying that they want the C-5B. I have letters, as my colleagues do, from every person in the Defense Department who is totally supporting the C-5B. Saying that some of these military leaders want other aircraft is just not right. They are supporting the C-5B.

Now, it has been mentioned that the C-5 really cannot carry anything. Somebody said that it can only carry one M-1 tank. I have been told by staff that it can carry two M-1 tanks. I believe the record should show that.

The 747 cannot carry any helicopters unless you totally dismantle them.

The C-5 can carry six helicopters which can be combat ready within 5 minutes' time.

If you dismantle 12 helicopters you can put 12 helicopters on with the crews, and within a matter of minutes you can have them assembled, you can have 12 helicopters ready to do the job.

□ 1740

The C-5A has been a good airplane. I saw it in Vietnam, like a number of Members did. I saw it land on the mats over there, and it got in and it got out. It was tested, as someone said, in the Seven-Day War.

Several years ago we tried to get the Air Force to buy surplus 747's. There were some surplus 747's that could have been bought at a reasonable price by the Defense Department. We went to the Defense Department and asked them to buy these aircraft and replace some of the older transport planes in the National Guard and the Reserves, and use them to transport personnel for the Navy, the Guard, the Reserve. They turned it down. This is not the place to substitute the 747 for the C-5B to do the job that has been asked of us, to improve our airlift capability. I hope the Members will vote down both of these amendments.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. HUNTER).

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I think we have had a good debate today, and I think a lot of good points have been made on both sides. I would like to congratulate the advocates for both airplanes, and particularly Mr. DICKS, who has shown himself to be a tremendous fighter for the project that he thinks is the best.

But, I think ultimately, as in some court cases, the debate boils down to a couple of basic facts that we just cannot escape. I think the real problem, along with the problem I cited earlier—regarding limited airfields—is the outsize cargo problem.

For this reason, we are not just talking about the C-5 and the 747 airlift here; we are talking about $100 billion worth of military equipment, and particularly I am thinking of some $40.8 billion worth of equipment that we have decided to purchase and build and develop.

That includes the attack helicopter, the M-1 tank, the infantry fighting vehicle, and DIVAD—division air defense gun. The reason we developed these systems was to give our battlefield commanders the absolute best equipment that they could have to protect their troops and help them to execute their mission.

If you look at the growing chemical warfare threat that our troops are facing, you realize the importance of the new infantry fighting vehicle which protects our troops to some degree against this threat. The attack helicopter with its new Hellfire missiles is designed to confront the improvements the Warsaw Pact nations have made in armor development.

There are very important reasons to have this equipment. We need that DIVAD, division air defense gun, to give our frontline people protection against air attack. Now the people who have been advocating the 747 have continually talked about the fact that most of the cargo needed and utilized by troops will go on the 747. That is true, but the weapons will not, and you cannot separate a soldier from his weapon. I do not think there is anybody here who would advocate that perhaps we should move a soldier on one plane with the promise that his rifle, for example, would come along on another plane. That is ridiculous.

But, we are moving into an era in which we are going to need mechanized equipment, and armor, on an increasing basis, especially in the Middle East, and to deprive that soldier of that immediate capability offered by the M-1 tank or the infantry fighting vehicle is to do him a real disservice. That is the reason that nobody can reasonably come to the conclusion that purchasing the 747 over the C-5 would be the right decision.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the committee's position. I would also like to clarify a couple of points. I would like to ask the gentleman, we have been discussing the airfield question, specifically in the Middle East. Can the gentleman tell me how many Mideast airfields the C-5 could land on a vis-a-vis the 747?

Mr. HUNTER. Yes. If they are carrying approximately 665,000 pounds of equipment, the C-5 will go into approximately 190 airfields. The 747, about 70 airfields.

Mr. DREIER. Also, there has been a great deal of talk of this question about airfield landings. I am curious to know if it is an impossibility to land, what is the likelihood of airdrops, and which aircraft would be able to implement an airdrop?

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for asking that question. The C-5 has airdrop capability, and that is important especially with the increasing ability that the enemy has to destroy airfields or render them impossible to use aircraft. We can airdrop cargo up to the armored personnel carrier size with the C-5. We cannot do that with the 747, to my knowledge.

Mr. DREIER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, as we debate the authorization of funds for the Department of Defense, we are faced with critical decisions concerning the best and most cost-effective methods of insuring our national defense. We are currently faced with a choice of airlift programs which will affect the capabilities of our armed services.

We are being asked to choose between the C-5 program which has been developed and tested with armed services requirements and uses in mind, and the conversion of civilian 747 aircraft to military use. We are being asked to provide our country with vital airlift capacity which in today's world is likely to be of paramount military importance in times of conflict or national emergency.

At issue is military battle readiness. The airlift requirement for the critical first 15 days of deployment of U.S. military forces in an emergency is 100 percent of the total deployment requirement. We need a dependable, adequate means of satisfying that requirement if we are to have a credible defense. The C-5 is the only airlift program that can insure us of a workable, combat-ready deployment capability.

The C-5 is designed, developed, and tested to prove its ability to operate in a harsh military environment at forward primitive airfields with no support or loading equipment to safely deliver its cargo. The 747 is designed only to operate from commercial airports with fixed-base facilities and special loading equipment—hardly ready for adverse battle conditions. The freight-loading capability is one of the more critical aspects which makes the C-5 necessary and the 747 unacceptable.

For loading of outsized equipment, the C-5 cargo floor is the same level as a truckbed; the 747 cargo floor is 16 feet in the air. The C-5 has huge cargo doors at both the front and the back that let trucks, tanks, and other vehicles drive right on and off the airplane in a critically short time. The 747 can only be loaded by special equipment in restrictive field conditions. Also important, the C-5 is able to carry heavy loads that the 747 cannot tolerate structurally.

When we speak of cost and cost-efficiency, we must remember that it will do us no good at all to buy discount 747's when they cannot do the job for our national defense. Bargain basement shopping will not satisfy our need in this instance. For our needs and our money, the C-5 is the biggest bargain available.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. DICKS. As the gentleman knows, we are presenting an argument where we are not arguing with the gentleman about outsize capability. What we have said basically is that we have 77 C-5's ready to carry outsize equipment. We have a major shortfall in bulk and oversize which can be carried by 747's and DC-10's, as the gentleman knows. In fact, we can carry more cargo farther in those outsize carriers.

I would point out basically, the way this mission is going to work is that both 747's and C-5's would fly to a rear airfield, unload the equipment and then it would go up by truck or under its own power to the battlefield. There really is not anybody suggesting that we could fly a C-5 directly to a forward battlefield.

The Chairman pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman brought that up, because I think that is the bottom line. I think the fatal flaw of the 747 is that we are going to be purchasing an aircraft, and I do not think we can presume, if we are going to be responsible to our military people, that the aircraft we are going to purchase is never going to be called upon to carry outsize weapons that our infantry is going to need, or to airdrop or come into these restricted airfields in the Middle East and NATO.

Mr. DICKS. That is why the gentleman recommended the C-17, because it has direct deliverability and the C-5 does not.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlaman from South Carolina (Mr. HARTNETT).

Mr. HARTNETT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished gentleman from New York for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard a lot today about this argument. My colleagues, my young, erudite colleague, Mr. DOWNEY of New York, wondered why Lockhead used pictures instead of words in their ads. I would submit to him and to you, Mr. Chairman, that the pictures are worth far more than a thousand words in this instance, and if anyone cannot see from these pictures which is the more capable military aircraft, then perhaps they need not even be able to read.

I am probably in a unique position, Mr. Chairman, in that I am an Air Force Reservist, an E-6, a tech sergeant in the Air Force Reserve. My job is air freight, I load airplanes. I am probably the only Member of this House who has actually loaded a C-5 and a 747. I also loaded C-124's and C-130's. I am sure no one in this House is old enough to remember the C-124 with her belly elevator high off the ground, very similar to the 747, versus the 130 that rested flat on the airfield. There was a great deal of difference in the loading of the two planes.

The same can be said, Mr. Chairman, about the 747 and the C-5. There is just no comparison. The argument that the 747 is an aircraft with airlift capability, is a parochial, political argument. It is clear that the much more needed military aircraft is the C-5.

It has been said that you do not move armored divisions by air, you move them by sea. Mr. Chairman, I submit to you that some of the same Members that make that argument are those who are more than willing to cut my shipbuilding program, to the point where I have no ships that can carry an armored division anywhere in the world. I have no LST's and no LSD's capable of it. I hope I never have to rely on the C-5 to move an armored division, but if you do not give me the C-5 or ships, then do not give me any armored divisions.

□ 1750

Whether or not the C-5 can carry one or two M-1 tanks is very important. The fact is that we are not going to need any M-1 tanks, if we are not going to have any way to move them.

So those of you who say the C-5 can only carry one or none, those are the same Members who voted to do away with all our shipbuilding programs. I would say to the gentleman I would have no way of moving an armored division, so without the C-5, I cannot get my armored division anywhere in the world, because I have no ships to carry them. Now you want to take the only means I have, my C-5's.

I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, it is no longer a military airlift argument. That is absolutely concluded by these photographs. It is a parochial and political argument as to who represents who where and what, and I submit to you that the only aircraft that we can use for our airlift capability is the C-5.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. PRITCHARD).

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. Chairman, this is a lovely picture, but it does not have anything to do with the argument. There is an awful lot of talk that has gone on today that has not had anything to do with this issue.

These planes are not going to fly tanks. The military have told you that.

I think it is probably symptomatic of this whole subject that we keep focusing on the wrong issues.

I am not going to apologize to anybody for standing up and talking for the 747's. They are not going to be made in Seattle. They are going to be retrofitted in Wichita.

I am not going to apologize for something I think is best for this country.

Are they going to be able to carry helicopters? Certainly we have to have the 77 C-5's to carry helicopters. No one ever said that the 747's would carry helicopters. They are not going to carry the outsize.

The question is are we going to have a mix which will carry all of the equipment at an affordable cost or are we going to have the convenient thing for the military regardless of the expense, which is to have all C-5's.

We do have a shortage of money in this country. I think this is a serious problem, but we do not have the financial pinch today that we are going to have 7 or 8 years from now.

We are embarking on a number of programs that are very expensive. When you get out here about 7 or 8 years from now, there is a serious question in many peoples' minds whether this country can afford all these programs.

What does that mean? It means we are going to have to be pretty tough on our decisionmaking. We may have to make some compromises.

I know that does not go down very well with the Armed Services Committee. People say we cannot compromise with our national security. But we are not going to be able to fund every weapon program we want, and we are going to have to make some choices.

In this instance I believe if you can save a lot of money in an area where we are short of money, which is for our defense, then we ought to figure how to do it more economically, just like private industry today, which is under such great stress and has to figure out ways to get the job done. The 77 C-5's can carry all of this exotic gear, the helicopters and though they are not going to carry tanks, they can carry tanks. They can carry all kinds of things but it only represents 15 percent of the load.

Eighty-five percent of the load is what we call the oversize, pallets, the great mountain of material that are needed to back up an army.

They do not make one flight. I think everybody is assuming that they come landing on this dirt field with guns blazing and that is the war.

Airlift is a long time proposition. It may go 10 days; it may go 28 days. But, if you look at the scenario that the Defense Department puts out, they have four different scenarios and in every one of them they had day after day after day flights.

So one of the things you are looking for is a plane that has reliability. The 747 is the most reliable proven aircraft in the world.

My colleagues know that in carrying 85 percent of the material we need, the 747's will do the job.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. (Mr. MOAKLEY). The time of the gentleman from Washington (Mr. PRITCHARD) has expired.

Mr. DICKS. I yield the gentleman 4 additional minutes.

Mr. HARTNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HARTNETT. I would say to the gentleman in the well, if he will continue to yield, I certainly did mean to imply that you, sir, had all of your arguments predicated on parochial issues. Your arguments that you have presented are always well founded, founded on good economics, and founded on good logic. I did not mean to imply, sir, that yours was a parochial or political argument.

But I did want to ask you a serious and legitimate question. I have a great deal of respect for you, not only as an outstanding spokesman——

Mr. PRITCHARD. I am always worried when they start a question that way.

Mr. HARTNETT. And a tennis player par excellence. I wanted to get that in. If, in fact, we have a Navy whose numbers of ships are diminishing year after year, and if, we are not building any new landing ships, would the gentleman tell me, and I am sure you will tell me legitimately, the gentleman says the C-5 is not going to carry the M-1 tank, and I would ask the gentleman if the C-5 is not going to carry them, and our ships are diminishing year after year in number and in capability, how are we going to move the M-1? How is that going to get wherever it has to go?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Let me say we do have 77 planes that carry the tanks. But all the military people have told us that the only way you are going to carry tanks is in ships. If we do not have ships, there is no way that they are going to have a Rapid Deployment Force that brings in any substantial numbers. We are out of business if we do not have ships.

But that is another issue. I do not think because the gentleman is not getting proper ships that somehow he is going to replace them with 50 C-5's. That is just not the case.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I yield to my colleague from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. We have three pre-position ships. We are just getting the FL-7's into the inventory.

I agree with the gentleman that we ought to be investing more in sealift, because it is cheaper, plus we can get the outsize cargo there. So we do not have to spend 50 percent of our total mobility budget on an outdated airplane like the C-5.

Then we could go ahead with the C-17, which I am sure the gentleman knows is a far superior airlifter to the C-5.

Mr. STRATTON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PRITCHARD. As one who has been a major participant in this, this is the first time that I have talked on the floor very much so I do not know how much time I have but I will go ahead and yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STRATTON. I just wanted to respond to the gentleman in one respect. You say the military says they are not going to move tanks by air.

I think the gentleman has misunderstood that statement a little bit. In terms of preplanned operations, obviously the best and cheapest way to get tanks to a battlefield is by ship. But if the Ascension Islands, for example, should be taken over by the Argentines from our own forces that are there, the best way to prevent any further erosion of the situation would be to fly tanks and helicopter gunships out there with an aircraft that was big enough to carry them. So you do not know exactly how you might move your tanks. But those tanks are a very nice thing to have in an emergency.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I would agree with the gentleman. That is why we have 77 of these planes that can carry tanks in an emergency.

Could I finish my statement?

Mr. STRATTON. I yield the gentleman 1 extra minute just to point out that if we had 50 on top of the 77 that we have now, and 2 tanks per plane, that would bring 254 tanks. If the British had been able to do that in the Falklands, the Argentines would not have been able to reinforce the island so heavily.

□ 1800

Mr. PRITCHARD. There is so much other gear that has to go along with the tanks, and that is really what we are concerned about, the mix.

I want to say that I believe this is a political decision. In January the Pentagon decided that the C-17 was right, and then something happened. We had the military say, "This is what we want," and then something happened.

I have had people come up to me and say, "Joel, you know, I like your arguments, and all this, but, golly, there isn't one person who is in a uniform that is coming before us and backing up your arguments. There just isn't one person from the Department that is backing up your arguments."

Well, now, how long would a person be in the Department if they did not back up the Department's arguments. You know, that is just a fact. We had somebody over in the Defense Department who stood up and objected to something they were doing, and he got fired. He was objecting to the C-5A and all of its problems.

Now, let us be honest. It is difficult to stand up against the military. It is difficult to stand up against the committee. What happened in January, when they changed from saying they wanted the C-17? It was a political question.

Finally, let me just say that I am not going to apologize for trying to save a lot of money for our country. We are in a squeeze. We think we are going to save $8 billion. That is a lot of money even today. A couple of people came up and said, "I think it is closer to $4 billion." Four billion or $8 billion, we are in a shortage of money for defense. And 5 years or 8 years out, when we will finally get the C-5's, we are going to be in such a tight place for money that we are not going to have any maneuvering or any flexibility.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the last thing the gentleman in the well needs to do is apologize for the job he has been doing on this issue.

The gentleman did mention something that I would like to come back to. The congressional mandated mobility study said that 85 percent of the need of the shortfall that exists now is in the oversize and the bulk.

Is it true that that was relating to the Persian Gulf in the Middle East?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Absolutely.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. The gentleman is on the Foreign Affairs Committee. Is it important that we could meet that need 3 years sooner with the 747, for that 85 percent shortfall?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Washington (Mr. PRITCHARD) has expired.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Of course. And can you imagine, say they decided on the 747 and we came in here and said, "We have got a plane that costs $8 billion more, and it is going to take 3 years longer to get; but, you know, we think it is a better plane." Everybody around here would be sayng, "We cannot wait 3 years." Are the Russians going to wait 3 years before they start causing us trouble?

For heaven's sake, I do not apologize for what we are doing here. I am convinced there are too many people over there who think we are right. I do not care whether the Secretary of Defense has lined them up or not, or how many generals they bring in. The 747 will do a better job when you consider the cost factor, and the cost factor is vital to our considerations.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MORRISON. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Speaking of being in line, my first job in the Army was painting rocks. There is a tendency in the military to want to have everything the same size and shape, regardless of their utility value, and I think that carries over into this particular issue.

Mr. PRITCHARD. It is more convenient.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. McDONALD).

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. Chairman, we all agree that the need is for airlift. Specifically, the special type of airlift requirement is for the outsize cargo only carried by the C-5 aircraft. And that is specifically important for the first 15 days of the conflict, when no sealift will be available. The need will be for the fire power, for the M-1 tank, the self-propelled howitzer, and so forth. The need will also be for the heavy construction equipment to repair the airfields, equipment such as the Red Horse units of the Air Force, the Seabees of the Navy, the R3 capability, the Rapid Runway Repair capability only carried in its full configuration by the C-5, not the 747. Only the C-5 can do the job.

The problem with the 747 is relatively simple. It cannot carry the heavy equipment. It is a high loading proposition, high off the ground. It has a relatively small door.

Here you see figured the nose door on the 747, and here you see the C-141 which we now have in the inventory, and the side door on the 747, all of them about the same. And here we come to the doorway of the C-5, an enormous difference simply in what you are going to be able to get aboard the aircraft if the aircraft were stressed to carry a heavy load. The 747 has a relatively small door as compared to the C-5.

The C-5 is able to land loaded with a tank or tank loads, and able to land in less than 3,000 feet. The 747 cannot. Instead, it is going to use twice the length of the runway.

The gentleman from Kansas has stated that the C-5 is not going to be able to take off on a hot day. The truth is that the C-5 has demonstrated a capability of being able to take off on a 95-degree day, with 100,000 pounds, in less than 3,000 feet, a 3,000-foot runway. The 747 cannot duplicate that capability.

The C-5 can land on unimproved fields. The 747 cannot.

The C-5, as we see in the picture, over to my far right, your far left, the C-5 landing in an austere airfield. Actually, that is not a picture of a C-5 landing in an austere airfield. That is incorrectly marked. That is a C-5 giving a taxi demonstration where it came through the test with flying colors.

The C-5 and the 747 in operation and support cost, in a wartime use scenario, are about equal. In fact, the C-5 may be possibly a little cheaper than the 747.

Now, in the life cycle cost, a comparison of the two, if you are comparing apples with apples, if you are comparing the same basic payload, it is about a wash, with perhaps $1 billion difference. While this economic chart to my left is a very lovely chart, a very nice looking chart, it happens to be inaccurate. The figures are not correct. It is not an $8 billion savings. It is not a $4 billion savings. It is about an equal picture in the life cycle cost. It is essentially a wash. While that chart is a lovely chart, the figures are not correct and do not check out. The Air Force statements show that those figures, as presented by Boeing, show an $8 billion, a $6 billion or a $4 billion savings simply are not the correct statements.

The statement today has been made on the floor that the C-5 is a 25-year-old plane. That again is simply not correct. There have been 269 engineering advances in the C-5B over the C-5A. The engines are current, not past, current production and current technology engines. It would be an up-to-date modern plane, unmatched by any other plane in the world.

In answer to the statement of the gentleman from New York concerning the inability to carry a tank, of course as we know, the C-5 is able to carry 2 main battle tanks. The 747 none.

Now, the C-5B will actually be able to carry 26,000 pounds more than the C-5A. It will be an updated, modern presentation. It is able to carry six combat helicopters, ready to be rolled out, ready to fight, out and flying between 5 and 10 minutes. The 747 cannot.

With regard to the amendment offered by my good colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. BADHAM), he had a very good point which probably would have been valid in 1960, because in 1960 the number of checks and rechecks in the research and development cycle, before going into the production time, would have been, if chartered out on a graph sheet, 5 feet long. Today, however, we have, due to the over 20 years of systems analysts that have been brought into the DOD, the number of checks and rechecks, before the conception and moving into production, is now a chart some 34 feet long. This is for all of the weapons systems we have, which means that the Sam-D Patriot system is now 20 years in R. & D. It means that the Aegis weapons system is now 20 years in R. & D. And the thought that we are going to produce the C-17, a paper airplane, into production equal to the C5-B, where the tooling is already intact, simply cannot be backed up by the real world.

Now, no one has mentioned, except just briefly, the question of airdrop capability. The C-5 demonstrates that airdrop capability. The 747 does not.

In short, repeatedly the C-5 is the winner. But the bottom line is that about a month ago both Boeing and Lockheed were asked to send their planes out to Andrews for the members of the staff and Members of Congress to go out and inspect the two aircraft.

□ 1810

Lockheed Aircraft's C-5A was there for the inspection by Members of Congress and staff. Members of Congress and their staff watched helicopters go out, be unloaded and fly away in less than 10 minutes. I asked the Boeing Co. officials if they had planned to send an aircraft. Boeing refused to send their planes.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. McDONALD) has expired.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. McDONALD) to complete a very interesting and effective statement.

Mr. McDONALD. The bottom line is that the C-5 was able to stand a test in instance after instance. It meets the same basic requirements presented for the C-17 in 9 out of the 10 requirements that our DOD requires. But in the side-by-side comparison, where you have the ability to load a tank, as demonstrated here, the ability to load outsized cargo, roll it off, ready to fight in a short time, that capability was demonstrated at Andrews. But we did not have a comparison—the Boeing Co. refused to send a 747 because you would have seen the picture on my far left, the one against the wall, of a Rube Goldberg type of a platform, material having been jacked up at least 16 feet, and then crated before it could be presented.

If you are going to load the outsize equipment, you are going to have to take it apart, crate it up, into the nuts and bolts and hope that someone will be there to assemble it.

So, out at Andrews we were able to see the C-5 in operation.

The 747 was not there for comparison.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. JENKINS).

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, it has been said earlier that the decision that is being made is probably a political decision. Let me say in the very beginning that I recognize that I, as a member of the delegation from the State of Georgia, do have an interest in this issue from an economic standpoint.

I recognize that my colleagues from the State of Washington likewise have an interest in the 747 built by Boeing. I recognize that my good friend from Kansas has a great interest in modifying or having the modification work of the 747 in Kansas. Just as my friends from St. Louis, likewise have an economic interest.

But if we are talking about a political decision, this decision was made by the Commander in Chief, which is the President of the United States and the Secretary of Defense is appointed by the President. They have all said in plain language that we need the additional C-5's.

I say to the Members that I understand the determination that each of us has for our respective districts, and I must say that as a Member from Georgia I share that interest. But I cannot ignore the fact in this case that every single witness who has come before the committee, that is a part of the Department of Defense, from generals on down, do not support the 747.

Let me quote from the testimony of General Kelley on June 16 of this year when he said:

I have heard some advocates of a commercial aircraft alternative distort facts dealing with our outsize requirements beyond reasonable recognition. Their favorite ploy is to use a single scenario in one geographic area, and even then the facts are twisted or taken out of context * * * I believe it impossible to find a man in uniform who would suggest that our country has sufficient strategic airlift to provide for the early arrival of combat essential outsize equipment.

In one breath we hear the proponents of the 747 say the C-5 is not a good aircraft. In the next breath they say, look, we have 77 of them, we can carry all of this outsize equipment. In the next breath they say, let us use them because we have to have them for the outsize equipment.

That is totally inconsistent.

I received a call earlier today from a pilot in Texas. He said, "Look, I have no interest in this. I have flown 2,000 hours in a C-5. I have flown the 747. I have loaded and unloaded these aircraft and this argument that you people are making in the House is ridiculous. You are attempting, apparently, to buy 747's. That is a good aircraft to haul troops, to haul small cargo, but that is not what the military, the Commander in Chief has said that we need today."

So I say to my friends from both sides of the aisle this should not be a political decision. This is a decision that should be on the merits.

I recognize there are some large banks that hold a little paper on the 747's. I understand that Boeing has unfortunately sold to some foreign airlines some 747's that they are holding paper on that they need to sell, and I sympathize with them and I will do what I can to help them, but this is not the place to do it.

Mr. Chairman, I am disturbed to think that this House of Representatives would allow a vital national security issue to descend into a debate over parochial interests. The upper House of this great Congress acted on the airlift program using politics as the measure of merit. Their decision in favor of the 747 instead of the C-5 will long be remembered as one of the most masterful political campaigns the Senate has ever seen. I admire the spirit and legislative skill shown in that effort, but, I believe the time has come to put that all behind us.

Yes, I am from Georgia and everyone here knows of my determination to represent my constituents to my fullest capacity. It is the same determination which we all share. But, we are now discussing the national security of the entire United States. We must throw out the parochial interests of the States of Georgia, of Washington, of Missouri, of Kansas, and others. We must disregard the interests of a few airlines who would like to dump their surplus 747's on the Air Force. We must ignore initiatives of some major banks who are holding financial paper on some of these airlines. In short, we have an obligation to the American people, and especially the men and women in our Armed Forces, to set aside all these extraneous influences and select an aircraft solely on the basis of the need. When you take away all of these extraneous issues, there is only one thing left.

The President, the Department of Defense, the Air Force, the Army and the Marines all say they need the C-5B now. The 747 will not do the job. The people who fly, the loadmasters, and the combat troops depending on helicopters, tanks, and equipment for ground support all want the C-5. In other words, the people who really count in this fight want the C-5.

This has been one of the most bitter struggles between Members of Congress in quite some time. Many Members, who do not serve on the Armed Services Committee, have not had the opportunity to participate in the hearings and debates on this issue and may therefore be confused as to where the military and Department of Defense stands. I can tell you that the record shows unanimous support for the C-5 on the part of the Secretary of Defense, Deputy Secretary of Defense, Secretary of the Air Force, Secretary of the Army, Chief of Staff of the Air Force, Chief of Staff of the Army, Commandant and Vice Commandant of the Marine Corps, and many others. Let me quote just a couple of statements to give you some idea of how strongly these defense experts support the C-5.

In a letter to the chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, MELVIN PRICE, dated June 4, 1982, Secretary of Defense, Caspar Weinberger, stated,

> There is an immediate need for additional outsize airlift capability * * *. Failure to fund the C-5B dangerously delays resolution of this critical need.

In a June 9, 1982, letter to Congressman PRICE, the Secretary of the Army, John Marsh, Jr., stated,

> I am writing to emphasize the Army's strong support for the C-5 aircraft. The Army needs the C-5 to accommodate our outsized and extremely heavy military cargo and weapons systems. Chief of Staff, General Meyer, has stressed in testimony and in letters to other Members of Congress the need for additional aircraft capable of moving outsized cargo in both intertheater and intratheater operations. The C-5 was specifically designed for this purpose and is the only aircraft in being that can give us this capability.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, it is clear that when you eliminate the parochial self-serving interests involved and examine the pure military considerations, the C-5 is the only choice. This is a major defense issue and one that cannot be taken lightly. The debate has been spirited, but we cannot allow that to cloud the issue. The C-5 is the right choice and now is the right time to get on with it.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. FOWLER).

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment to substitute procurement of the 747 aircraft for the C-5B, but I also rise to speak against one system of doing defense business here on Capitol Hill that has done so much to shape this debate.

Local considerations aside, the primary duty of the Congress in acting upon the defense authorization measure is to provide for the common defense in the most cost-effective manner for the taxpaying public. The major questions before us ought to be: What is our military need and what is the best way of balancing defense capabilities with costs to meet that need.

In my opinion the facts most relevant to these central issues are:

First, almost all parties who have seriously examined the subject—including both Congressional Armed Services Committees—conclude that the United States is faced with a severe shortage of military airlift, particularly in the field of outsize cargo such as helicopters, tanks, armored fighting vehicles, and artillery.

Second, under every likely military scenario, the proposed C-5B fleet would deliver more combat power than the B-747 in the critical first 20 days of an emergency and, because of its outsize cargo capabilities, the C-5B would afford far more flexibility to defense planners in responding to changing circumstances.

Third, with regard to cost effectiveness, the Air Force has concluded that the 20-year, life-cycle expenses of a comparable fleet of C-5B's and B-747's yields a cost advantage to the latter of less than $1 billion. Furthermore, the C-5B fleet was found to be 25 percent more effective, which reflects in part the fact that the 747 fleet would in the words of General Hecker, "do nothing to alleviate the current and pressing need for outsize airlift capability."

Fourth, finally, during the present period of maximum budget austerity, the B-747 procurement would cost $2 billion more over the next 3 years than would the C-5B.

In summary, the C-5B would respond more adequately to the actual military requirement for outsize cargo airlift with only a marginal cost penalty in the long run and a sizable cost advantage in the near term.

None of this is meant to disparage the 747 nor to downplay the contribution that it can make toward meeting our national defense mobility needs.

In fact, the 747 is a very fine aircraft which, though designed as a passenger carrier, can be adapted to military usage. It is this dual civilian-military capability, possessed by the 747 and certain other commercial aircraft, which is recognized and utilized in the Civil Reserve Air Fleet (CRAF).

The CRAF program effectively augments the active airlift fleet by obtaining commitments from civilian carriers to provide their aircraft, support facilities, and personnel to the Air Force in time of military airlift shortage or national emergency. The program draws upon the enormous assets of our private sector to help meet our military needs. The CRAF aircraft, of which there are currently 392, have been mobilized quickly and effectively to assist the Air Force's in-house organic airlift capabilities in Korea, Vietnam, and on many other occasions.

The CRAF approach, which in time of need makes available to our armed services militarily useful civilian resources without the heavy costs of acquisition and continual operation, is a perfect example of a cost-effective defense program that extracts maximum value for the taxpayer dollar. The 747 is already a vital part of the CRAF program, and will continue to be. The cost of obtaining Government ownership of this capability, as is envisaged in the amendment now before the House, will be up to 10 times the cost of receiving the same capability for crisis situations under the CRAF program.

The 747, which is primarily a passenger aircraft, is well fitted to its role in CRAF.

The C-5 was designed to be and is a military transport which is best suited to heavy airlift defense needs as a part of the Military Airlift Command. The trials and tribulations that the program has undergone in meeting highly demanding and specialized combat mobility requirements are a testament to the unique mission requisites for such aircraft.

Passage of the amendment would duplicate capabilities that we already have under the CRAF program without addressing our outsize airlift shortfall.

Therefore I urge support for the procurement of the C-5B and defeat of the pending amendment.

Before closing, however, I would like to make a few comments about the defense procurement process on Capitol Hill. Much attention has been given of late to the need for structural reforms in military itself and I strongly support such efforts as a strengthened role for the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Unified Combatant Commanders. However, part of the structural problems that plague our Defense Establishment—giving us strategies that do not pay for as much defense capability as they might—is right here in this building. This current battle of the contractors is but the latest in a long series of struggles in the Congress over military programs that have seemed to turn more on the size of the competing constituent interests rather than on the national security concerns at stake.

My friends and colleagues, we cannot afford to continue on this path. Business as usual will not do any more in the Congress than over at the Pentagon. I claim no monopoly on knowledge nor any special immunity from this problem. I do want to say that we have an overriding responsibility to all of the people of the United States to spend their tax dollars wisely and to give them the best military value for the dollars spent on defense.

Now is not the time to have a lengthy discussion of the structural reforms that I feel are more important to our national defense than any additional dollars we might authorize for the Pentagon. I would, however, like to briefly mention two steps that I feel would significantly aid our ability to make the right defense judgments in this Chamber.

First, I strongly endorse biennial budgeting for defense programs.

The advantages stemming from multiyear defense budgeting, in bringing greater stability and economy to procurement decisions, were amply cited last year when the Congress moved to provide for greater usage of multiyear contracting in the defense field. These same principles apply to the management of the defense budget on Capitol Hill.

Congressional budgeting is certainly a source of discontinuity and seemingly endless appropriations and authorization paperwork diversions for the military. A 2-year defense budget cycle, in which the first year is used exclusively for oversight and the reporting of the Defense authorization bill and the second year is used for adoption of the Defense authorization and appropriations bills would have, in my opinion, the following major advantages:

Improved congressional oversight;

Better informed congressional floor decisions on defense matters;

Greater stability in procurement decisions; and Reduced routine reporting requirements for the military—thereby freeing it and the Congress to pay more attention to longer range issues.

Certainly I do not think any of us would look forward to fighting this same battle on military airlift again next year but under the current system we might well be faced with just such a contingency.

Second, I believe we should establish an independent test and evaluation organization, to validate or invalidate service and contractor claims for weapons systems and doctrines, that would report to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Armed Services Committees. The test and evaluation operation under the Secretary of Defense should also be strengthened. We need clear, concise and unbiased data if we are to properly discharge our duties to the American people.

I hope that this House will give serious consideration to these and other proposals for reforming our own role in the defense process. With the enormous expenditure we are asking from the American public to pay for defense, with the obvious sacrifice we require of our men and women in the armed services, can we not ask of ourselves to look beyond parochial interests and narrow institutional prerogatives?

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGRICH).

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Chairman, I think that the case for the C-5 and against the 747 is fairly overwhelming. For those who prefer a more detailed accounting than we are getting today this is a printout of various systems both combat and noncombat, that can be carried by the C-5 that will not load on the 747, as verified by General Vessey's testimony.

I would suggest, when my colleagues look at the list, different people may want to take note of different specific items, but it goes beyond anyone's ability to hold it up.

It is fairly impressive, but let me carry you beyond this, because I think the real argument is not just these items.

I would be glad for the gentlemen from Washington on either side of the aisle to take a look at this. This is what General Vessey said to look at.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yeld?

Mr. GINGRICH. No; let me finish my statement. I would be glad for the gentleman to look at this, but I would rather not yield right now.

I think there is a deeper, central failure of the C-17 and Boeing 747 arguments and that is the assumption on both sides that you can calculate or plan the future. The 747 argument calculates that it is possible to plan where you are going to fight, and over and over again we have been told that you can pre-position everything that we cannot carry on the 747.

The C-17 argument calculates that you can figure on building a cheaper airplane on time and on schedule.

Let me suggest that there are three lessons from the Falkland Islands that shatter both the C-17 and the Boeing 747 argument. First, you want to win early and with as much force as possible. You want to win decisively. That means you want to deliver combat loaded equipment that rolls off and goes into battle. You do not want to pull up and start assembling.

Second, you cannot be sure where trouble is coming. No one in Britain expected a war in the South Atlantic. No one in the United States can predict where we ought to prestock equipment, and I dare say when you talk about cost, if the 747 advocates would count in the cost of all the equipment they intend to prestock in all the places we have interests, they would find their costs 10 or 20 times greater than the C-5.

Third, ultimately you fight with what you have when the battle starts. The fact is that paper airplanes do not help you at all.

In this context, let us look at our choices. The C-17 is a paper airplane. Every promise that has been made about delivery dates and cost of the C-17 is just that, a promise. In fact, every person who is concerned about bringing the Pentagon under control should know full well that buying a paper airplane with a paper date is a very dangerous game to start. You know full well we will not get the C-17 on time or on budget—it is pure paper.

Then there is the Boeing 747 offer. The fact is that if the airline industry were not cutting orders, Boeing would be too busy selling what it has done best recently, which is commercial airliners and commercial freight haulers, to be dealing with the business it does not do particularly well, which is landing near a battlefield to deliver combat equipment.

Candidly, the Boeing 747 is a sad joke as a military aircraft. It cannot land on short runways. It cannot handle outsized cargo. It cannot unload itself.

Now, the advocates in this debate tell us that we can pack outsized equipment in the C-5 and everything else on 747's. Again I suggest, that is precisely the intellectual arrogance of assuming that you can look ahead carefully enough, that you can understand in enough detail what the world will be like, that you can always be in charge of reality.

Let me close by suggesting that if you can guarantee that we are not going to go to war in the near future, then it makes sense to vote for the C-17 in the nineties.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. BADHAM).

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief. We are here now trying to decide what kind of airlift we will have for the future. The C-5 works and the C-5 flies and we have 77 C-5 aircraft and most of them I guess are in a state of repair where they can fly and do the job and we already have them—they are usable.

We have also in the civilian air fleet an excess of 747 aircraft and they are available should we have an emergency in this country. We can move troops, we can move people and that is almost all, unless they have some modification, and there are some of those around, freighter 747's that would be available to the military air fleet if we needed them.

The essence of what we will first vote upon is my substitute amendment which would say again to the Pentagon, "Let us have something that you think we need that is proper. Let us have the result of the competition that you have already held. Let us have a new aircraft, the technology of which is now, the technology of which is known and most of the parts are shelf items." That is what the first vote you make will be on, this substitute which will give to us the C-17 and that is what is really needed.

To the argument that said if you have a good airplane, let us keep on flying it, again I say we are not still flying the B-17 or the B-29; capable aircraft, but we do not use them anymore and we do not use the 727 or 737 for carrying cargo or carrying freight or carrying tanks.

Now, I ask you as my colleagues to vote for my substitute, which will throw the ball back into the court of the Pentagon and say, "Get with it.

Let's go for the best aircraft that technology can give us today. Let's go for the C-17 and let's do it now."

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield just briefly on the question of timing on the C-17?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. LUNGREN).

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I, like many other Members who have spoken, have somewhat of a parochial interest in this and I should announce that at the outset. McDonnell Douglas happens to be my major employer. Douglas Aircraft is located in my district. They would be the manufacturers of the C-17.

I have remained silent for most of the argument because I thought my comments might be viewed as totally parochial. But now I must take exception to some of the statements that have been made by some of those who are arguing on behalf of the C-5. They suggest that because the C-5 had so much difficulty in finally becoming a successful aircraft, that any new aircraft will have that same difficulty. They suggest that because they did not figure out how to put the wings on the plane correctly the first time and now they are rewinging it, that therefore any new aircraft will have that same difficulty. They suggest that because it took such high cost overruns, that naturally any other aircraft that will come about will have the same problems.

Well, I would suggest that whatever the merits of the C-5 may be, it seems to be a rather strange argument to say that we should stay with this program because we have gone through those problems and we must benefit from all those problems.

I would suggest that if the argument is that we should use the best available aircraft, it ought to be the C-17.

The argument would simply be answered by the fact that on an evaluation, the military came up with the C-17 as being the appropriate airlift. Everyone recognizes we need more airlift. In fact, the military decided that they needed a new aircraft to perform the precise functions necessary for the Rapid Deployment Force. That decision was changed by Mr. Carlucci over in the Defense Department for a number of different reasons that have been articulated, but none I think absolutely correctly.

One of the other gentlemen got up and said that it is the height of intellectual arrogance to think that we can forecast the future. I would suggest that it is the height of intellectual arrogance to ignore the past. The past shows us that we have had a number of problems with the C-5. The past also suggests perhaps the 747 is not the absolute best thing that we have now. If we want to have the best reasonably available aircraft, it would be the C-17.

Some have suggested it would take a great period of time for it to come online. The testimony before the Senate committee just in the last month from McDonnell Douglas was that there would be a difference of about 6 months between the first 12 C-17's coming online with the 12 new C-5B's coming online. To suggest that it is a brandnew aircraft with brandnew technology is to ignore that most of what goes into the C-17 is on-the-shelf items. It is developed out of an already existing prototype and in fact we could have it within a short period of time.

□ 1830

So the crucial question is which is the most practical, the best for our long-range defense purposes. I suggest that it would be to support the Badham substitute. It seems funny for some to come up and say that those in uniform have said only one thing is the thing that we ought to do, that is, build the C-5. Some of those same people in uniform a year ago were saying the only thing we should do is build the C-17.

I do not know when you should listen and try to understand what they are saying and decide what is exactly appropriate.

I suggest we send it back to them for another year; that we say to them, "This time get your act together, decide firmly what it is you need, tell us what you need, and come in and make a good presentation." That is one of the problems we have had.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from California if he will yield to me.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has made an important statement.

The ranking Republican on this committee asked a lot of hard questions about how the military decision was made. He said, "How can you flip-flop? How can you come in one day and say you want the C-5, and the next day you want the C-17, and now you are back here telling us about the C-5 again?"

To me, there is something very wrong about this decision because the right outsize airlifter for the long term, the one that was recommended by every single military leader, was the C-17.

General Heyser, one of the finest four-star generals we have ever had, last year—before he left military service—recommended that we use 747's or DC-10's in the near term, along with the C-17 long term at a savings over an all-C-5 fleet between $9 billion and $7 billion.

So the gentleman is right. The C-17 is the right long-term option.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. LUNGREN) has again expired.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield an additional minute to the gentleman from California in order for him to respond.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's comments. I think one of the difficulties we have when the Air Force is asked to testify on airlift capacity is that airlift is not a sexy part of the Air Force. The sexy part of the Air Force is the fighters, the bombers, and so forth.

Mr. Chairman, this is the truckline of the Air Force. As a result, it has been difficult for us to get them to come in and testify before us as to what is the best truck that they are going to drive.

We have had difficulty because we have been getting different responses from them at different times.

Mr. DICKS. If the gentleman will yield, that is why there is no technological risk to the C-17. They built YC-15, which is just a smaller version. We have had that plane which we used and tested. So we are not talking about a paper airplane. In fact, no C-5 has been built for 10 years. It is more of a paper airplane, with 250 changes, than is the C-17.

Mr. LUNGREN. Another point is that McDonnell-Douglas is now bringing in the KC-10, not only on time, but early and actually at a savings to the Federal Government. So this one contractor has done a pretty good job.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON).

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I think although I have spoken on this, I think, hopefully, we are coming to a close in the debate on this.

I feel at this point, though, that something that is important has not been brought out, and I would like to engage in a colloquy with anyone who is more knowledgeable of the facts than am I.

Earlier, before the decision was made, just prior to the decision on the C-17, as I recall, before it was even given a number, perhaps, we were still talking about calling it CX at the time, the president of Lockheed called on me at my office with a couple of his assistants. We had a long discussion, and at that time they were trying to persuade me that the C-5 was in fact the way to go; that they had not been solicited by the Department of Defense, but they sharpened their pencils, had gone to the drawing boards, and had come up with a solution for our airlift requirement.

They made certain representations to me. They said, and this is the president of Lockheed speaking, that they still had the tools, the jigs, the dies, everything that it takes to make aircraft; that while the line was dead as such, they still made many component parts for spares, supplies, and they still had a work force and an expertise in-house, they still had a big portion of the learning curve, and that the aircraft could be built in a much shorter time than most people realized.

The thing that they presented to me was that they would guarantee the price, they would give a warranty with it, they would guarantee the delivery time, and, as I say, they would warrant any defects, as we say in Sears, and so forth, in parts and workmanship for a certain period of time.

I was wondering if anyone who is an advocate of the C-5 is more knowledgeable of the facts that were offered than am I.

I am talking about Lockheed now. We will talk about Boeing later. But my understanding is, and I did not bring these facts with me, that it was a firm, fixed price and a guaranteed price, within a guaranteed delivery time, with a warranty, and this was the word of Lockheed that they would do this.

This was presented in writing and later accepted by the Department of Defense.

I wonder if the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. GINN, is familiar with these facts and can make this a part of the record.

Mr. GINN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. GINN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is absolutely correct. The Lockheed Co. has come in with a firm, fixed price, with warranties, with guarantees, with time schedules, with no R. & D. It is a very firm figure.

Mr. DICKINSON. And they guaranteed no R. & D.?

Mr. GINN. That is correct.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, can we find out what that price is, the firm, fixed price?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not recall. Perhaps the gentleman from Georgia has that information.

Mr. GINN. It is my understanding that the price is about $4.8 billion for the plane.

Mr. DICKS. What is that per plane?

Mr. GINN. I do not have a calculator here. The gentleman asked a question about the price.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, if I might reclaim my time, I left out another ingredient, and that was the time in which it would be delivered, and the number was a firm figure of 50. I mention this because it is very important.

This was accepted by the Department of Defense as a package deal.

Now, if you open up the package, if you do not buy that number, if you do not buy it within the time stipulated, and if all the other concomitants or elements that go into the agreement are not lived up to, then the package is torn up and the guarantees that were made, and the savings that were guaranteed, would not be realized by the Government.

The gentleman from Washington, (Mr. DICKS) has alluded to a firm, fixed price, and so forth. Just for comparision, I wonder if the gentleman could give us what Boeing has, in an unsolicited proposal, offered to do, even though there is very little comparison between the capabilities of the two?

Mr. DICKS. I missed the last part of the gentleman's question.

Mr. DICKINSON. It was only important to those of us on this side.

I was wondering if the gentleman could tell us what the firm, fixed price, and other guarantees were that were made in the unsolicited proposal given by Boeing.

Mr. DICKS. Boeing made a firm, fixed price on 48 new planes at $58 million a plane and a 20-year guarantee on operation and maintenance under contractor logistic support at an estimated $8 billion less than the 50 planes that Lockheed is offering us.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON).

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, beyond that on the used planes that would be modified into air freighters, there is a 10-year guarantee or 20,000 hours, whichever comes later.

By the way, there is no warranty on the C-5 wing. It is a limited guarantee, and for less than 1 year. It is the same old deal, you know.

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, I do not know that to be the fact. But now I am asking the gentleman: Do the planes that were offered—which he said are new planes—is he talking about freighter planes?

Mr. DICKS. If the gentleman will yield further, yes, the new planes, and one of the options in the Boeing offer was new planes at $58 million, or we can get existing wide bodied used planes with a 10-year warranty and 20,000 hours, and we can get that at an estimated cost of $44 million, which includes $12 million per modification.

When you compare it to then-year dollars, it is $182 million to——

Mr. DICKINSON. The gentleman is sloughing over something. He said with a modification.

Mr. DICKS. It is approximately $10 million.

□ 1840

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. DICKINSON. It is my understanding now that in addition to the firm, fixed price which the gentleman says Boeing has made to the Department of Defense, there will be additional cost of modifying these aircraft.

Mr. DICKS. No, no, no, no, no. That is included in the $44 million. The current price of the wide bodies is about $30 to $32 million; $12 million for modification gets it up to $44 or $45 million. That is the price we are talking about in total. That compares with $182 million in the then-year dollars for each C-5, or almost, I think, 4 to 1.

The best part is, we can take as many as we want. We are not committing ourselves to a very expensive, 25-year-old technology.

Mr. DICKINSON. The gentleman yielded me this time, but he is using it all. I want to ask if, in the modification he is talking about, is this for the used planes? They are going to widen the door?

Mr. DICKS. Right.

Mr. DICKINSON. Beef up the floor?

Mr. DICKS. That is right.

Mr. DICKINSON. Would it also be front-end load?

Mr. DICKS. No, that is an option. You can get that as an option.

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire, how many minutes do I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) has 13½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS) has 21 minutes remaining.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS).

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I think one of the things that my friend from Washington (Mr. PRITCHARD) touched upon, rather effectively, was the fact that we simply do not have money for every gold-plated, expensive weapons system that the Defense Department comes up with. We are facing an affordability crisis in terms of the major weapons systems that we are now procuring.

Let me just show the Members the cost escalation of the 47 major weapons we are now procuring. In 1980, the cost to procure those systems was $318 billion. That cost figure in the last 90 days of 1981 jumped to $455 billion.

That is what it cost to buy out all these systems. Do the Members know what we are going to do? We are going to stretch out every one of our major weapons systems in order to fund them all at one time, and what does that do? Yes; it drives up the unit cost higher and higher and makes the problem worse, and we get fewer new weapons in our inventory, very major conventional weapons that are important. Rarely, rarely do we have the opportunity to buy something off the shelf that has exceptional military utility. If it did not have exceptional military utility, why would we have 747's or DC-10's in CRAF? It is because they do have military utility.

So, today what we are faced with is an opportunity to go out and buy in the near term existing wide bodies at $44 million, and when we add up our proposal and compare it to the other proposals, it is a difference of $6 billion to $8 billion unless you are going to let the Air Force fudge the numbers as they have done to us so often in the past.

Just last year they told my Committee on Defense Appropriations that they were going to get us the B-1 bomber for $20 billion. Today, it is up to $28.9 billion, and they gave us all kinds of statements that this was a firm, fixed price contract, and nothing would change. Yes; it has changed. That plane will cost around $400 million a plane. This is what we are up to.

We now have a chance to procure, at a tremendous savings to the taxpayers, a very capable plane. By the way, when we compare the oversize and bulk carrying capacity of a 747 versus the C-5—and by the way, we are going to have to carry that bulk and oversize in the C-5—you can only carry 100 tons versus 135 tons. Plus, you can go all the way to the Middle East without refueling in a 747, and you must have refueling in a C-5.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to reemphasize what the gentleman says. For a short-range flight the 747 can carry 135 tons, and the C-5 100 tons. For long-range flight of 5,400 miles, the 747 can carry 77 tons. The C-5 can carry only 47 tons. If we are talking about a long-range mission in 90-degree heat, a 7,500-foot airfield—and as much as we would like to, we do not know whether war is going to break out in winter or summer—the 747 can carry 37 tons and—listen to this—the C-5 can only carry 3 tons of cargo. When translated to standard pallets, the 747 can carry 50. The C-5 can carry only 36. That is reemphasizing what the gentleman is saying in terms of what an incredible airplane we have in the 747.

Mr. DICKS. The point is today, in the Rapid Deployment Force—and the four scenarios of the congressionally mandated mobility study all center around the Rapid Deployment Force—85 percent of what has to be moved is bulk or oversize that can fit into a 747. So, why would we go out and buy the most expensive airplane in the history of America, the C-5, with its mission-capable rate of 53 percent to 90 percent on the 747. That means on every single day one C-5 cannot fly because it has to have maintenance. It is the all-time champion of high maintenance requirements, requiring 76 maintenance man-hours for every hour in the air compared to 20 for the 747.

We have the chance to save the taxpayers some money, to give them a cost-effective airplane, and we still will have 77 C-5's to take care of the important outsize equipment that is going to be moved. But remember, 94 percent of what is deployed will go by ship or be prepositioned. No general in his right mind wants to move tanks by air because it takes up the entire load of the airplane. It just does not make any sense. You may want to take TOW missiles to kill tanks, and you can do that in C-41's or 747's.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I would like to emphasize a point I think the gentleman is making about the commitment we would be making by going forward with the C-5. I think it has been represented by a number of individuals in the whole discussion of this topic that if we do the C-5 we can also do the C-17. It is not a matter of doing the one and not having the other. We can have this generation airplane and then go the next generation. I would like the gentleman's comment on that.

Mr. DICKS. If the gentleman thinks the lobbying has been intense on this issue, wait until you try to stop the C-5 line after 50 planes and go forward with the C-17. We cannot afford to have two outsize airlifters going at the same time, one in procurement and one in R. & D. What has happened here is that the funding that was going to the C-17, which is clearly a superior outsize airlifter for the future, has been diverted to the C-5, and the real question is why, especially when the C-17 was recommended by every military leader that today is saying they are for the C-5.

Last January 8 they were all for the C-17 long term, and by the way, General Heyser recommended a combination of C-17's and wide bodies as the best way to take care of our near-term options and our long-term options. The gentleman is right: If we let them start up a C-5 line, we are not going to get to the airplane that we really need; that is, the C-17. We can get some additional wide bodies near term, but the outsize airlifter of the future should be the C-17.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes.

Mr. GEPHARDT. If the gentleman will yield further for another moment, in the fiscal year 1983 amended budget of the President, if I read the figures correctly, we are projecting out about $8.8 billion for the C-5B over the next 5 years, and for the revised C-17 we are projecting right at about $100 million.

□ 1850

Mr. DICKS. There is not a penny in this budget for the C-17. They talk about putting it in when we get to R. & D., but what has happened is that the funding for the C-17 has been gutted. That was the plane the military recommended.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to my colleague from Washington.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I thank the gentleman.

The former gentleman here pulled out a roll. I will not describe what it looks like. But I noticed that he pulled it up the corridor and it was impressive because it was 20 or 30 feet long. If I am right, it is the list of the things that the C-5 can carry that cannot be carried in the 747. I wonder if you have anything that shows the list of things that the 747 can carry?

Mr. DICKS. Here is a list of all of the bulk and oversize equipment that can be carried in a 747. This is 85 percent of the cargo that must go.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I hope the gentleman will not haul that up the aisle. I do not want it to go over to the other body.

Mr. DICKS. I would not do anything that embarrassing. This is outsize equipment. But let me show the gentleman this. Most of this is vans and trucks. This is what we are talking about in outsize combat equipment, one-twenty-fifth of 6 percent, and we have 77 C-5's to carry it.

You know what we have done? We have spent $1.6 billion of the taxpayers' money to re-wing those planes so that it can finally perform for the services. We are also adding the KC-10, 44 of them for refueling so that they can get somewhere for a change. They have never even had a surge test, and they will not be able to go under a surge test until we get these planes re-winged

Mr. PRITCHARD. Do you mean we paid or the taxpayers paid $1.6 billion to re-wing this plane that we bought because it would not fly?

Mr. DICKS. The point of it is that it is not just this. We also re-winged 395 C-130's because they had defective wings.

The gentleman from New York, who was here earlier today, said there is one real problem with an airplane. If it does not have wings it cannot fly. That is fundamental. That is basic. That is what we are talking about here.

Let us do what is right for the country, buy some existing wide bodies now and take the plane that was unanimously recommended by the military, long term, the C-17.

I challenge this committee to force them to build it on time and below cost.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. FINDLEY).

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FINDLEY. Certainly I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, there were several references made about rewinging airplanes. There is nothing unusual about that. We have rewinged the B-52's, a plane made by Boeing.

This is done to extend the service life, not because there is anything in particular wrong with the plane. It is just to extend the service life.

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not have time to yield further. The debate today has revolved around the question: Should the United States buy the 747 or the C-5A or B or whatever it is?

No discussion has been given to the more fundamental question: Should we buy neither?

The United States now has 77 C-5A's, quite an armada, a big enough armada to get us into a lot of trouble without any additions. So why do we need 50 more of either?

The answer is, So we can move massive amounts of personnel and equipment rapidly, halfway around the world.

I ask: Why should we want to do that?

The answer is, So we can project power; that is, deal with military challenges in the Persian Gulf or the Middle East or perhaps in two or three different places at once.

Then I ask: Is this needed so the United States can exercise its role as the policeman of the world?

The answer is: Well, a policeman is needed, and if the United States does not fill the role, who will?

I hope what I say here now will not be considered in poor taste, but I challenge the notion that the United States should be equipped with the massive Rapid Deployment Force it can use on a moment's notice. It is true the world needs a Rapid Deployment Force to deal with trouble spots. The United States should cooperate with other nations in establishing such a force.

But why should the United States assume the lonely role as world policeman? Have we not had enough of that?

In this Rapid Deployment Force, where are the British units, the French units, the German units, the Italian units, and so on and on?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. STRATTON. I yield the gentleman 30 additional seconds.

Mr. FINDLEY. Until there are signs that other major powers who have an even deeper stake than we in the Persian Gulf oil are willing to team up with us in forming a Rapid Deployment Force, my recommendation is that the United States save its money and bide its time.

If we had a full blown Rapid Deployment Force raring to go today, my hunch is that we would already have a couple of divisions roaming around Lebanon.

The biggest danger in building a Rapid Deployment Force today is that we will probably use it.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is actually out of order because he is not speaking on the amendment to which the time was allocated.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR).

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, the question of whether to approve funding for the C-5B or to buy the Boeing 747 has become the most controversial provision of this bill. It should not be. The excessive cost of this entire $180 billion military procurement bill should be the issue. We should be devoting as much debate time to the merits and need of spending that staggering amount of money on defense to the detriment of other needs in our society.

However, the issue at hand is whether to buy this new version of the C-5 military aircraft or to buy Boeing's surplus 747 aircraft, in effect a minibailout of Boeing and perhaps some of the domestic airlines as well.

I think the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ASPIN) put it best when he said: "It's a close call." In a close call, I feel we must look not at the politics, but at the merits of the issue, the technical merits from the viewpoint of military effectiveness.

If we are going to buy more military airlift capability, then we ought to get the best buy for our money. We ought to buy the equipment that will do the job it is intended to do.

On the basis of technical capability, I am persuaded that the C-5B is the better aircraft because it is designed and built to carry out the mission of delivering heavy military equipment: Tanks, helicopters, armored vehicles, trucks, and so forth, where they are needed and under battlefield conditions, with the ease of rolling equipment directly on and off the aircraft in moments, without the special packaging or time-consuming battlefield reassembly required by the 747.

In short, the C-5B is a combat aircraft for combat conditions; the 747 is not. And even at a cost of billions of dollars it cannot be converted into an effective armor-carrying combat aircraft.

I am not persuaded that we need as many aircraft as the military is asking for or that we should spend as much money on this equipment as they are asking us to spend, but I am convinced of one thing: If we are going to spend any money at all or more air cargo transport capability, then we ought to buy the C-5B. It gives us the best bargain for our money and it gives our troops the aircraft they need to be most effective under combat conditions.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas, (Mr. PICKLE).

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, we have heard some good arguments on both sides of the C-5 question today. Though I do not have a great quantity of material to add to the debate, I do feel it is worth recalling at this point that the Lockheed C-5 is the overwhelming choice of defense professionals who best know our airlift needs. The soldiers and officers who must use the transport planes we provide have made their preference for the C-5 clear. Look to the testimony of Gen. Robert Kingston, Commander of the Rapid Deployment Joint Task Force, or Gen. P. X. Kelley, Assistant Marine Corps Commandant, or U.S. Air Force Lt. Gen. Kelly H. Burke, and many others.

I understand that the 747 might provide short-term savings for the Congress, and that it might help an ailing airline industry. But remember what we are doing here today. This is not some abstract assignment—we are drafting our Nation's defense posture for years to come, and no matter how tempting the prospect, we cannot base our decisions simply on short-term savings or what might prove beneficial to one industry.

I am not an unthinking disciple of the military-industrial complex, nor am I an advocate of throwing money at problems. Earlier today I voted to support the Mavroules-Byron amendment, which would have shaved more than a billion dollars off the MX missile program because the administration had not proved its case for procurement and interim deployment this year. But in this case I believe the administration has proven its case, and I believe the C-5 is the best alternative available to us today, and the best and most efficient heavy transport for our armed services over the long term.

● Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, the Boeing 747 aid plan, if enacted, would result in purchasing capability that is already available to us. Further, it would substantially increase the cost to the American taxpayer and degrade the existing capability of the civil reserve air fleet (CRAF).

The CRAF program, is composed of U.S. civil air carriers committed to provide operating and support personnel, facilities, and aircraft to the Air Force under certain circumstances. These circumstances include the peacetime shortage of Air Force airlift assets, an airlift emergency, or possibly a national emergency.

The CRAF concept is a coordinated program to mobilize the Nation's civilian airlift resources quickly in conjunction with Air Force organic airlift ability. It has proven extremely effective during Korea, Vietnam, and numerous command exercises since 1955. There are currently 392 aircraft available to the Air Force through the CRAF program. Buying used aircraft from the airlines would remove these assets from the CRAF inventory and placing them into the Air Force's active capability.

More than one-half of the commercial, long-range transport aircraft available to the Military Airlift Command in an emergency are in the CRAF. All of the 747's owned by domestic airlines already are in the CRAF. Since these same airplanes are already available to MAC, there will be no net increase in airlift capability as a result of their purchase.

Removing the current passenger airplanes from CRAF to convert them to cargo carriers intensifies another problem. When there is a need to deploy our military forces, the Military Airlift Command starts hauling firepower and equipment. CRAF aircraft are mobilized to help carry troops. With this consideration, combat units come together in the proper sequence within proper time limitations. With the CRAF passenger capability diluted by converting 747's for cargo, how do enough personnel get to the war?

Providing aircraft that cannot perform the total mission requirements and degrading the CRAF's personnel-carrying capacity are not the only detrimental effects of this proposed amendment.

There will be a significant increase in the cost to the military and, ultimately, the American taxpayer. Through utilization of the CRAF, the Air Force avoids the operational, maintenance, and other logistics support expenses associated with ownership while still having the capability available in time of emergency.

It is my belief that a substitution of 747's for C-5's would leave the outsize airlift shortfall unresolved and also degrade CRAF capability.●

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. COURTER), a member of the committee.

Mr. COURTER. I thank the chairman very much for these 4 minutes. I know everybody here has debated this for hours and hours and probably every point that can be made has probably been made and quite well.

What I would like to do, as I start out, is just quote two people that did comment on this very important issue.

The first person I quote is President Ronald Reagan, who sent a letter, in fact, about 5 days ago to a very valuable member of the committee. I am sure probably all my colleagues have a copy of this letter.

He said on the second page of the letter as follows:

> In summary, I hope you will agree that the Department of Defense should not be required to substitute commercial aircraft that do not meet our needs. There are no savings if what we buy will not do the job that needs to be done. Therefore, I urge you to reject the commercial aircraft proposal and support our airlift budget as submitted.

Second, Gen. James Allen, who is the commander of the Military Air Command, before the Armed Services Committee, when asked what he would do if, in fact, the Congress gave him 747's, said as follows, and this was not too long ago, as I understand it. He told the committee:

"If you, the Congress, gave me the 747's, I would try to bail them back to the airlines."

That shows the type of faith that the commander of MAC has with regard to the 747's.

There have been a number of statements made about the 747's and the C-5B's with regard to loading and unloading.

I think the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON) in a very articulate fashion indicated the very strange problem and serious strategic problem and logistic problem of loading a 747 better than 16 feet in the air.

There has been talk about the runway situation, the fact that the C-5 can take off on a shorter runway and that the C-5 can actually move on a runway that is not improved.

But I think the main reason that makes this choice in my mind such an easy one between the C-5 and the 747 is the ability of the C-5B to transport that outsize equipment.

□ 1900

It has been said that a very small percentage of all of the equipment that you want to move is outsized. But I would suggest at times we want to transport, using airlift and armored divisions, and something is going to occur in some corner of the world 7,000 to 10,000 miles away. I can foresee the need of transporting an armored division. Forty-one percent of an armored division has outsized equipment. And I think it would be a terrible shame to use this type of money for the purchase of commerical 747's that were not designed to get the job done.

I think in rendering and making this decision, which I believe the Congess is going to find very easy, we should recognize the fact that one plane, the C-5, was designed for military airlift and one was not. One was designed for easy access and loading by driving on and driving off, and one simply was not. One was designed for runways that were improved, and one was designed for runways improved and unimproved. One was designed to take off using a shorter runway than the other. All of these very significant areas come down, I think, very clearly, Mr. Chairman, on the side of the C-5B. I urge my colleagues to vote accordingly.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask, how many minutes do we have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) has 7 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS) has 9½ minutes remaining.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Washington consume his time because the Committee wants to reserve the final 7 minutes for a windup, as is the proper procedure.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS) wish to use or yield additional time?

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, is it not the proper procedure that the Member who offers the amendment gets the last portion of time to close debate?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair will advise the gentleman that the usual and customary procedure, and the procedure we are following, is for the Committee to have the prerogative and the right to close.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. SWIFT).

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there might be an axiom in Government that we could consider, and that is that the bureaucracy will always rally around its mistakes.

The C-5 is a turkey. Everybody knows it is a turkey. The C-5's wings fell off. I have seen a wonderful film. Here is this giant bird, a kind of Dumbo elephant, flying down on the field, and it comes in slowly, and it gets bigger and bigger, and more slowly, and then that front wheel hits and collapses, and the C-5 turns into the world's largest plow.

We have heard in debate today from the gentleman that the C-5 was an awful airplane, but the real reason we say that is that people found out that it was true. He said it was all due to publicity that highlighted what a thoroughly rotten airplane it was. I do not follow the logic. It is still an airplane about which its supporters can only say that now this time they fixed it. I might add, at considerable cost. They made a profit on building it badly the first time, and they are making a profit on fixing it this time. And we all know who paid for that.

It seems to me that what has happened here is that everybody has dug their heels in and they are not going to admit to ever having made a mistake by asserting that we should buy some more of them, when in fact what we need to do is get as quickly as possible to the C-17's, and we can meet the window that exists between what our needs are now and the needs that will be met by the C-17 in a way that is $7 to $8 billion cheaper, and the whole fleet will be on line 3 years sooner. To say that that does not make sense is simply to go along with the bureaucrats who are going to rally around their mistakes.

We hear about outsize. There is no question. It keeps being repeated here that the 747 cannot carry outsize. Nobody argues with that. But the corollary to the argument being used about the fact that the 747 cannot carry outsize, the corollary is that we do not have any C-5's at all. You have to assume that for that argument to make any sense. Either that, or you have to assume that the people at the Pentagon are so dumb that they are not going to use the 77 C-5's they already have when they want to carry outsize cargo and will use the 747's when they are dealing with oversize and bulk cargo. A simple management problem.

So what we are really deciding here is whether we as Members of Congress want to join the bureaucracy in rallying around one of their classic mistakes. We are deciding here today whether we want to spend $6 billion more than we need to, to get done what needs to be done. We are deciding whether we want to go take 3 years longer to do that job, and we are deciding whether or not we are going to fall for a false argument—and that is that we will not have outsize capability if we do not get more C-5's.

It does not follow. It is not logical.

I close with this observation: They used to make the observation that the little Volkswagen bug floated. It was not relevant that it floated. But you could go out, I suppose, and say, "I am going to buy a Volkswagen bug because it floats." You would do better if you buy a boat, but this Volkswagen bug would float.

We have outsize capability to do the job we need done. We are trying to fill a window. And we can do it without buying a Volkswagen because it floats. We can do it $6 billion cheaper, 3 years sooner, and not by joining the bureaucrats in rallying around the flag that was one of the most horrendous mistakes ever made in the procurement policies of the Pentagon.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the distinguished majority whip, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. FOLEY).

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to listen to the debate today. It has been a very long one, and it has been carried on largely by members of the committee and of the Defense Appropriations Committee, who are the House experts on military and defense matters. I am not. I do not have any substantial military subcontracting from Boeing or from any other company in my congressional district. Like most Members, I suppose I am trying to decide what would be the best course for the country in trying to determine between the two aircraft.

I have never been impressed, I must say, with the reputation of the C-5A. It may be a fine aircraft now. But it has become synonymous in the lexicon of the American language as an aircraft that has failed in many of its missions, has been extraordinarily difficult to maintain, and is almost the military word for Edsel.

Now, I am persuaded that perhaps that aircraft has been improved, perhaps it is in a position now to carry out its mission with greater regularity and capacity. But certainly I am not persuaded that we have to acquire an additional fleet of those aircraft when 96 percent of all of the oversize cargo is going to be carried by sea or prepositioned anyway. We now have the opportunity to acquire a much less expensive aircraft and one that I think can perform the mission with effectiveness and economy.

When I first came here, I suppose the general rule was "Follow the committee." As a former committee chairman, I like the committee to be followed. But the House of Representatives also has the responsibility to make its own judgments and determinations on these amendments. Frankly, I would say that no committee chairman or no committee member is completely persuasive when he suggests that the House has no other rational choice than to accept the committee's recommendation.

□ 1910

I would think that those of us who want a strong national defense would recognize the constitutional right of the House of Representatives to respectfully disagree with the Department of Defense. If we are not going to be able to disagree with the Department of Defense, if we are not going to be able to take another course, then let us give up our constitutional responsibility to raise armies and navies.

The Committee on Armed Services is the constitutional opposition to the recommendations of the Defense Department. It exists for the purpose of exercising the separate responsibility and judgment and if the day comes when the House of Representatives subcontracts to any administration's Defense Department specific recommendations of these kinds or to any other department of Government, we might as well close up our shop here because we will be redundant.

The arguments for economy have to be persuasive at a time when we cannot possible meet the national defense needs of this country without economies in the Defense Department. Anybody should realize that the commitment to the national defense has to be politically sustainable. We have a consensus in both parties to spend vastly greater amounts of money, but if we avoid taking an economic measure today that can provide a transportation and airlift system that can do the job at a lower cost, with greater reliability and lower maintenance burdens, then I say the House of Representatives failed in one of its best opportunities to demonstrate a capability to make intelligent judgments about the Defense Department and the defense budget.

I hope that the eloquent gentleman in the well, who is one of the House's leading experts on military and defense matters will be followed and will be supported in his amendment.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LUKEN).

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington which would delete funds for procurement of the C-5B and substitute authority to buy new and/or used commercial wide-body 747's to meet our immediate airlift needs.

Aside from the fact that valid cost comparisons are not possible because there are numerous missions which the C-5B can perform and the 747 cannot, the alleged savings to the American taxpayer by the purchase of 747's have been greatly overstated.

Even more to the point, the cost savings and the validity of the Boeing proposal have been placed in serious question by a Boeing spokesman accompanying Malcolm Stamper, the president of the Boeing Co. At a news conference only days after the Senate voted to accept what was presented as a firm, fixed price proposal for the 747's, the Boeing spokesman said, "We are way, way away from being anywhere near talking hard figures." That does not sound like a firm, fixed price proposal to me.

We cannot ignore the fact that substantial modification will be necessary to have any semblance of standardization with the "hodgepodge" of 747's that this amendment would foist upon the Military Airlift Command. Without reasonable standardization at whatever cost, the Military Airlift Command would not have a fleet of airplanes, but rather individual flying machines with varying takeoff weights, operating weights, payload capabilities, ranges, and avionics. This would be a logistic nightmare.

The most evenhanded comparison of the C-5B and the 747 airliner by the Air Force and the OSD cost analysis improvement group indicate at most a $900 million difference over the projected 20-year life cycle for the aircraft.

I submit that it is questionable that any cost savings will be realized by substituting 747's for C-5's. Even the most knowledgeable estimate indicates that the possible cost difference is negligible. There is no doubt that our critical shortage of outsize airlift capability will not be reduced 1 pound by acquisition of 747 airliners. I, therefore, urge my colleagues to reject this amendment.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. BROWN).

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, I generally do not join debates of particular procurement decisions by the Department of Defense and the Armed Services Committee, but the debate over whether DOD should purchase additional C-5B's, or switch to 747's compels me to speak.

My congressional district includes two important Air Force bases, Norton Air Force Base and March Air Force Base. It also includes several major defense contractors, including Lockheed and Rohr, both of whom have a financial stake in the approval of the C-5B. I mention this heavy involvement by the Air Force and related defense contractors to make it clear that I do have a conflict of interest and my pro-C-5 position is influenced by the views of important local constituencies. But it is clear to me that a similar conflict of interest applies to many of the authors of the amendment supporting the position of the Boeing Co. Our democracy generally works well when all the key stakeholders are participants, and all the central facts, including biases of participants, are openly and clearly discussed.

While my position in favor of the Air Force, the Armed Services Committee and the C-5B is obviously influenced by my constituents, I do want make it clear what I have examined the debate in the other body, and here in the House very carefully. My familiarity with the military airlift needs and capabilities of our armed services is greatly enhanced by the presence of experienced and knowledgeable Air Force personnel in my district, who give me insights many others may not have. There is no doubt in my mind that the C-5 option is superior to the 747 option, and no credible reasons have been given to reject the advice of the Department of Defense, the President, and the House and Senate Armed Services Committees. We need this increased military airlift capability, and should not go with a second-rate option for the convenience of certain corporate interests. Rather than elaborate on the reasons for the DOD recommendation, let me simply add that I support the remarks made by the leadership of the House Armed Services Committee in support of the C-5B, and against the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that this discussion of the views of my district does not discount my own views. But if my vote should be discounted on grounds of constitutent pressure, I would hope that a similar standard be applied to those from other parts of the country in a similar situation. I prefer that we decide this issue on the merits.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 seconds to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. EVANS).

Mr. EVANS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, after listening to the debate and considering that I do have a Boeing plant in my district, in my hometown, as a matter of fact, I am convinced that the C-5B is a superior aircraft for the mission and I intend to vote against the amendments and vote the C-5.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Readiness, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. DAN DANIEL).

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAN DANIEL. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Chairman, proponents of this amendment have contended that procurement of 747's for the airlift mission would save several billions of dollars over the C-5B proposal. Conclusive evidence has been presented by the Air Force and DOD showing less than a $1 billion total cost difference over a 20-year life cycle.

We all are greatly concerned about reducing Federal expenditures, but we must make sure also that the dollars we do spend purchase those items that can do the required job. The C-5B meets the mission requirements. The 747 airliner does not.

Furthermore, procurement of the 747 will be far more costly during the next 3 fiscal years. Due to the acquisition and modification cycle for the 747's, the Boeing proposal actually requires some $2 billion more through fiscal year 1985 than will the C-5B procurement. For this increase in Federal outlays over the next 3 years, we will receive absolutely no additional outsize airlift capability.

As we consider the amendment today, please remember that in the short term the outlays will be some $2 billion higher; in the long term the most evenhanded comparison shows the cost differences between the proposals to be negligible and the 747 provides no reduction in the critical outsize airlift shortfall.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. By this time, we are all afloat in a sea of claims and counterclaims on this airlifter versus airliner issue. I do not propose to rehash all of that. I must once again repeat that there are no substantial savings and the Dicks amendment will require $2 billion up front, in outlays.

I am the chairman of the Readiness Subcommittee. My subcommittee's job is to insure that our armed services are prepared to fight the first battle of the next war—and win. I do not have any airplane manufacturers in my district. I do not have any airline headquarters in my district. As a matter of fact, we can barely get the airlines to fly into my district. I do not have any military installations in my district. I do not have any parochial ax to grind. I do not have to carry anybody's water anywhere.

What I do have is the responsibility for the readiness of our forces—the ability to fight and win if, God forbid, we ever have to send Americans again.

Should this happen, Mr. Chairman, they should be carried and supplied on a military airlifter—the C-5.

I have heard an awful lot of extraneous opinion masquerading as fact in the last several weeks. There are several facts that we all ought to keep in mind.

The first fact is, that the C-17 is going to happen. Increasing outsize airlift with any aircraft other than the C-5 before C-17 final deployment is not going to change that.

The second fact is that in attempting to force an airliner into an airlifter role—somebody is likely to get killed. The C-5 lifted tanks directly into Danang in Vietnam in 1972 when the perimeter of the airfield was under attack. Those tanks rolled off, joined the fight, and the C-5 was gone, to bring back another load. Turn around time on paper is one thing. In combat it is something else again.

The third fact is that all over Southwest Asia, where the rapid deployment force may have to go—the C-5 can get in where a 747 cannot. And before a 747 can come in even on the larger fields, we would have to send a C-5 to carry in the special equipment necessary to unload a 747. Another aspect is that with its floatation capability twice that of a 747, a C-5 can utilize an infinitely larger number of smaller and less improved airstrips, and does not force us to have access to an international airport to use our airlift. There are 85 airfields in Southwest Asia that a 747 can use, there are 263 usable by the C-5.

And the fourth fact is that war is not a statistical analysis or nice neat planning document. In wars, airplanes crash, or get shot down, or are disabled. We do not have nearly enough outsize airlift capability. So, in a war, in a military airlift situation, when we lose aircraft—all of the carefully crafted statistical analyses crumble. All of the paper studies fall apart.

As a result, we are left with only one question—a common sense question. If we have to go to war, and inevitably sustain losses, does it not make more sense to have all of our remaining airlift capable of outsize lift?

I do not owe any constituency anything on this airlift issue. Except one. Our servicemen. And on their behalf, I urge the defeat of this amendment. I urge that we equip them with a military airlifter, now, to be ready for the first battle of the next war.

The British evacuated Dunkirk on fishing boats and yachts. That worked when it had to. The French evacuated Paris in buses and taxis. That worked when it had to. Civilian airliners can be used in a national emergency, if we have to.

But let us not wittingly, knowingly, apply a desperation solution when we can to do the right thing.

Let us buy our serviceman the equipment designed to do the military airlift job. We can get that for him in the same time frame and operate it for virtually the same cost as the desperation solution.

Let us not inflict economic desperation on our serviceman and make him bear the burden of a glut of used airliners.

If we have to send him let us make him truly ready.

I urge the defeat of this amendment.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as remains.

Mr. Chairman, the decision of the Armed Services Committee was motivated primarily by the fact that those who know military matters best all supported the C-5. Every professional in the Pentagon, every Chief of Staff, including the Commandant of the Marine Corps, and a substantial majority of the House Armed Services Committee, and a substantial majority of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

The second point I want to make is that if the 747 were to be brought into an airlift operation you need a C-5 to fly behind it to provide the loading machinery which the 747 requires before it can be loaded and unloaded.

□ 1920

My final point is that in deciding to support the C-5, our committee is following the wise counsel of a very famous Confederate general, Gen. Nathan Bedford Forrest, whose basic principle of military strategy was simply stated: "To git thar firstest with the mostest." That is what the C-5 is all about.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. BADHAM) as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 74, noes 344, not voting 16, as follows:

[Roll No. 198]

AYES—74

Anderson	Frenzel	Rodino
Archer	Garcia	Roukema
Badham	Gephardt	Sabo
Barnes	Gray	Savage
Bonior	Grisham	Schroeder
Brodhead	Harkin	Schulze
Brown (CO)	Howard	Seiberling
Burton, Phillip	Jacobs	Simon
Butler	Jones (OK)	Skelton
Clausen	Leland	Smith (IA)
Collins (IL)	Lewis	Smith (OR)
Conyers	Lowry (WA)	Stark
Crockett	Lungren	Synar
Dannemeyer	McCloskey	Taylor
Dellums	McKinney	Thomas
Dingell	Mikulski	Volkmer
Dornan	Miller (CA)	Walker
Edgar	Mitchell (MD)	Washington
Emerson	Pashayan	Weaver
Erdahl	Paul	Weber (MN)
Fazio	Pease	Weiss
Fenwick	Petri	Wirth
Findley	Pritchard	Yates
Ford (MI)	Regula	Young (MO)
Forsythe	Richmond

NOES—344

Addabbo	Bethune	Chisholm
Akaka	Bevill	Clinger
Albosta	Biaggi	Coats
Alexander	Bingham	Coelho
Andrews	Billey	Coleman
Annunzio	Boggs	Collins (TX)
Anthony	Boland	Conable
Applegate	Boner	Conte
Ashbrook	Bonker	Corcoran
Aspin	Bouquard	Coughlin
Atkinson	Breaux	Courter
AuCoin	Brinkley	Coyne, James
Bafalis	Brooks	Coyne, William
Bailey (MO)	Broomfield	Craig
Bailey (PA)	Brown (CA)	Crane, Daniel
Barnard	Broyhill	Crane, Philip
Beard	Byron	D'Amours
Bedell	Campbell	Daniel, Dan
Beilenson	Carman	Daniel, R. W.
Benedict	Carney	Daschle
Benjamin	Chappell	Daub
Bennett	Chappie	Davis
Bereuter	Cheney	Deckard
DeNardis	Hutto	Peyser
Derrick	Hyde	Pickle
Derwinski	Ireland	Porter
Dickinson	Jeffords	Price
Dicks	Jeffries	Pursell
Dixon	Jenkins	Quillen
Donnelly	Johnston	Rahall
Dorgan	Jones (NC)	Railsback
Dowdy	Kastenmeier	Rangel
Downey	Kazen	Ratchford
Dreier	Kemp	Reuss
Duncan	Kennelly	Rhodes
Dunn	Kildee	Rinaldo
Dwyer	Kindness	Ritter
Dymally	Kogovsek	Roberts (KS)
Dyson	Kramer	Roberts (SD)
Early	LaFalce	Robinson
Eckart	Lagomarsino	Roe
Edwards (AL)	Lantos	Roemer
Edwards (CA)	Latta	Rogers
Edwards (OK)	Leach	Rose
Emery	Leath	Rosenthal
English	LeBoutillier	Rostenkowski
Erlenborn	Lee	Roth
Ertel	Lehman	Rousselot
Evans (DE)	Lent	Roybal
Evans (GA)	Levitas	Rudd
Evans (IA)	Livingston	Russo
Evans (IN)	Loeffler	Santini
Fary	Long (LA)	Sawyer
Fascell	Long (MD)	Scheuer
Ferraro	Lott	Schneider
Fiedler	Lowery (CA)	Schumer
Fields	Lujan	Sensenbrenner
Fish	Luken	Shamansky
Fithian	Lundine	Shannon
Flippo	Madigan	Sharp
Florio	Markey	Shaw
Foglietta	Marlenee	Shelby
Foley	Marriott	Shumway
Ford (TN)	Martin (IL)	Shuster
Fountain	Martin (NC)	Siljander
Fowler	Martin (NY)	Skeen
Frank	Martinez	Smith (AL)
Frost	Matsui	Smith (NE)
Fuqua	Mattox	Smith (NJ)
Gaydos	Mavroules	Smith (PA)
Gejdenson	Mazzoli	Snowe
Gibbons	McClory	Snyder
Gilman	McCollum	Solarz
Gingrich	McCurdy	Spence
Ginn	McDade	St Germain
Glickman	McDonald	Stangeland
Goldwater	McEwen	Stanton
Gonzalez	McGrath	Staton
Goodling	McHugh	Stenholm
Gore	Mica	Stokes
Gradison	Michel	Stratton
Gramm	Miller (OH)	Studds
Green	Mineta	Stump
Gregg	Minish	Swift
Guarini	Mitchell (NY)	Tauke
Gunderson	Moakley	Traxler
Hagedorn	Molinari	Udall
Hall (OH)	Mollohan	Vander Jagt
Hall, Ralph	Montgomery	Vento
Hall, Sam	Moore	Walgren
Hamilton	Moorhead	Wampler
Hammerschmidt	Morrison	Watkins
Hance	Mottl	Waxman
Hansen (ID)	Murphy	Weber (OH)
Hansen (UT)	Murtha	White
Hartnett	Myers	Whitehurst
Hatcher	Napier	Whitley
Hawkins	Natcher	Whittaker
Heckler	Neal	Whitten
Hefner	Nelligan	Williams (MT)
Heftel	Nelson	Williams (OH)
Hendon	Nichols	Wilson
Hertel	Nowak	Winn
Hightower	O'Brien	Wolf
Hiler	Oakar	Wolpe
Hillis	Oberstar	Wortley
Holland	Obey	Wright
Hollenbeck	Ottinger	Wyden
Holt	Oxley	Wylie
Hopkins	Panetta	Yatron
Horton	Parris	Young (AK)
Hoyer	Patman	Young (FL)
Hubbard	Patterson	Zablocki
Hughes	Pepper	Zeferetti
Hunter	Perkins

NOT VOTING—16

Blanchard	Bolling	Bowen

Brown (OH)	Dougherty	Solomon
Burgener	Huckaby	Tauzin
Burton, John	Jones (TN)	Trible
Clay	Marks
de la Garza	Moffett

□ 1930

Messrs. SMITH of New Jersey, BREAUX, ENGLISH, HOYER, BEREUTER, LEACH of Iowa, and WILLIAM J. COYNE changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

Messrs. SEIBERLING, ERDAHL, EMERSON, RICHMOND, RODINO, HARKIN, SKELTON, and LELAND changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment offered as a substitute for the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

□ 1940

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, is the next vote on the Rhodes-Dicks amendment?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The pending amendment is the Dicks amendment.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 127, noes 289, answered "present" 1, not voting 17, as follows:

[Roll No. 199]

AYES—127

Akaka	Dwyer	Kastenmeier
Albosta	Dymally	Kennelly
Alexander	Eckart	Kogovsek
Anderson	Edgar	Leach
Archer	Edwards (AL)	Lehman
AuCoin	Emerson	Leland
Bailey (MO)	Ertel	Long (LA)
Bailey (PA)	Fazio	Lowry (WA)
Bedell	Findley	McKinney
Bingham	Fish	Mikulski
Boland	Florio	Miller (CA)
Bonker	Foglietta	Minish
Breaux	Foley	Mitchell (MD)
Brodhead	Ford (MI)	Morrison
Brown (CO)	Ford (TN)	Obey
Burton, Phillip	Forsythe	Ottinger
Butler	Frenzel	Patterson
Coleman	Frost	Paul
Collins (IL)	Gaydos	Pease
Conyers	Gejdenson	Petri
Coughlin	Gephardt	Peyser
Coyne, William	Glickman	Pritchard
Crockett	Gray	Ratchford
D'Amours	Guarini	Rhodes
Dannemeyer	Hamilton	Richmond
Daschle	Harkin	Roberts (KS)
Dellums	Hollenbeck	Rodino
DeNardis	Howard	Rose
Dicks	Hoyer	Roukema
Dingell	Jacobs	Roybal
Downey	Jeffries	Rudd
Russo	Stokes	Whittaker
Savage	Swift	Winn
Scheuer	Tauke	Wirth
Schroeder	Taylor	Wolf
Schulze	Udall	Wyden
Seiberling	Volkmer	Yates
Sharp	Walgren	Yatron
Simon	Walker	Young (AK)
Skelton	Washington	Young (MO)
Smith (OR)	Weaver	Zeferetti
Snowe	Weber (MN)
Stark	Weiss

NOES—289

Addabbo	Fascell	Lundine
Andrews	Fenwick	Lungren
Annunzio	Ferraro	Madigan
Anthony	Fiedler	Markey
Applegate	Fields	Marlenee
Ashbrook	Fithian	Marriott
Aspin	Flippo	Martin (IL)
Atkinson	Fountain	Martin (NC)
Badham	Fowler	Martin (NY)
Bafalis	Frank	Matsui
Barnard	Fuqua	Mattox
Barnes	Garcia	Mavroules
Beard	Gibbons	Mazzoli
Beilenson	Gilman	McClory
Benedict	Gingrich	McCloskey
Benjamin	Ginn	McCollum
Bennett	Goldwater	McCurdy
Bereuter	Gonzalez	McDade
Bethune	Goodling	McDonald
Bevill	Gore	McEwen
Biaggi	Gradison	McGrath
Bliley	Gramm	McHugh
Boggs	Green	Mica
Boner	Gregg	Michel
Bonior	Grisham	Miller (OH)
Bouquard	Gunderson	Mineta
Brinkley	Hagedorn	Mitchell (NY)
Brooks	Hall (OH)	Moakley
Broomfield	Hall, Ralph	Molinari
Brown (CA)	Hall, Sam	Mollohan
Broyhill	Hammerschmidt	Montgomery
Byron	Hance	Moore
Campbell	Hansen (ID)	Moorhead
Carman	Hansen (UT)	Mottl
Carney	Hartnett	Murphy
Chappell	Hatcher	Murtha
Chappie	Hawkins	Myers
Cheney	Heckler	Napier
Chisholm	Hefner	Natcher
Clausen	Heftel	Neal
Clinger	Hendon	Nelligan
Coats	Hertel	Nelson
Coelho	Hightower	Nichols
Collins (TX)	Hiler	Nowak
Conable	Hillis	O'Brien
Conte	Holland	Oakar
Corcoran	Holt	Oberstar
Courter	Hopkins	Oxley
Coyne, James	Horton	Panetta
Craig	Hubbard	Parris
Crane, Daniel	Hughes	Pashayan
Crane, Philip	Hunter	Patman
Daniel, Dan	Hutto	Pepper
Daniel, R. W.	Hyde	Perkins
Daub	Ireland	Pickle
Davis	Jeffords	Porter
Deckard	Jenkins	Price
Derrick	Johnston	Pursell
Derwinski	Jones (NC)	Quillen
Dickinson	Jones (OK)	Rahall
Dixon	Kazen	Railsback
Donnelly	Kemp	Rangel
Dorgan	Kildee	Regula
Dornan	Kindness	Reuss
Dowdy	Kramer	Rinaldo
Dreier	LaFalce	Ritter
Duncan	Lagomarsino	Roberts (SD)
Dunn	Lantos	Robinson
Dyson	Latta	Roe
Early	Leath	Roemer
Edwards (CA)	LeBoutillier	Rogers
Edwards (OK)	Lee	Rosenthal
Emery	Lent	Rostenkowski
English	Levitas	Roth
Erdahl	Lewis	Rousselot
Erlenborn	Loeffler	Sabo
Evans (DE)	Long (MD)	Santini
Evans (GA)	Lott	Sawyer
Evans (IA)	Lowery (CA)	Schneider
Evans (IN)	Lujan	Schumer
Fary	Luken	Sensenbrenner
Shamansky	St Germain	Weber (OH)
Shannon	Stangeland	White
Shaw	Stanton	Whitehurst
Shelby	Staton	Whitley
Shumway	Stenholm	Whitten
Shuster	Stratton	Williams (MT)
Siljander	Studds	Williams (OH)
Skeen	Stump	Wilson
Smith (AL)	Synar	Wolpe
Smith (IA)	Thomas	Wortley
Smith (NE)	Traxler	Wright
Smith (NJ)	Vander Jagt	Wylie
Smith (PA)	Vento	Young (FL)
Snyder	Wampler	Zablocki
Solarz	Watkins
Spence	Waxman

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1

Livingston

NOT VOTING—17

Blanchard	Clay	Martinez
Bolling	de la Garza	Moffett
Bowen	Dougherty	Solomon
Brown (OH)	Huckaby	Tauzin
Burgener	Jones (TN)	Trible
Burton, John	Marks

□ 1950

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Moffett for, with Mr. Jones of Tennessee against.

Mr. STOKES changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Chairman, I unavoidably missed the vote on the Dicks amendment to H.R. 6030, due to the fact that I was being honored by the Hispanic Caucus at a reception. Had I been present, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time to report to the House some very good news to all those who are interested in the military supremacy of the United States and our defense forces.

On July 3 some of us from Congress attended the roll-out ceremony for the latest version of the F-16 aircraft known as the F-16XL. XL can stand for extra large if it happens to be a sports shirt or it can stand for extended length if it happens to refer to the range of an aircraft.

But the F-16XL is an improved version of that very versatile aircraft which has been requested by almost all of the nations of the world. Most of our friendly allied nations have sought the privilege of buying F-16 aircraft because of its demonstrated air superiority.

□ 2000

I am here to report today that since July 3 the F-16XL has enjoyed six perfect, totally successful test flights. It has met or exceeded every expectation of its design. It has recently been ferried to Edwards Air Force Base for

Air Force testing, and the aircraft had no discrepancies upon landing.

Just to give you an idea of the new state of the art of the F-16 aircraft, the XL version is an evolutionary improvement, in that it can go 2.3 times as far as the F-16's now in service with the same bomb load, or it can carry 2.3 times as heavy a bomb load over the same distance, or any reasonable combination of the two. It doubles some parts of the maneuverability envelope of this extremely maneuverable aircraft, which almost could come and turn around inside this Chamber. It produces a lower radar cross-section; in other words, it is less easily detectable by enemy radar, though it is physically a larger aircraft than the original F-16. All of these benefits will be achieved at no more than approximately 15-percent increase in the unit cost.

For this reason I took this time to report these achievements to you and to salute this magnificent achievement by the Air Force and by the contractor, General Dynamics, and to salute this committee for their support of this exceptionally fine aircraft development program.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. STRATTON

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STRATTON: Page 8, after line 12, add the following new section:

SECURE COMMUNICATIONS EQUIPMENT

SEC. 109. The Secretary of Defense is authorized to procure secure telephone communication systems, including equipment and related items, during fiscal year 1983 for the Department of Defense and other government agencies and entities to support a national program to provide secure telephone service. Of the funds authorized to be appropriated pursuant to this title, not more than $50,000,000 may be used to provide secure telephone equipment and related items to the Department of Defense and other government agencies and entities in support of such a national program. Equipment provided to government agencies and entities outside the Department of Defense under the authority of this section and such related services as may be necessary may be furnished by the Secretary of Defense without reimbursement.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to provide an authorization of $50 million to the Department of Defense to enable the Department to procure secure telephones for Government-wide use. The provision further would provide an exception to section 628 of title 31, United States Code, Economy Act, that would allow the DOD to provide secure telephone service to other Government agencies without reimbursement. This amendment does not add to the bill total but simply provides authorization for the DOD to execute the program within the total authorization provided in title I. Further, the amendment in no way restricts the DOD from using funds that might otherwise be included in title I for secure telephone programs to execute these programs. It is only intended to provide the authorization required to allow DOD to carry out its responsibilities as the executive agent for the national secure telephone program.

The United States has established as a national priority a requirement to protect sensitive information passed over Government telecommunications systems. The Secretary of Defense has been designated the executive agent to carry out the communications security activities of the U.S. Government and is responsible for developing and providing secure communications equipment.

In order to adequately protect U.S. Government telephone communications, a Government-wide secure telephone service is being established. A secure telephone device, developed by DOD, will be the primary protected communications component of this service. This device will provide service through standard telephone networks. A priority effort is being mounted to implement this program, and initial production requirements of approximately 5,000 secure telephone devices and related equipments have been identified. In order to carry out this effort in an efficient and cost-effective manner, DOD will fund, without reimbursement from other Government agencies, the initial procurement of these and related equipments.

This amendment is required to allow DOD to execute the program.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very important and, I hope, noncontroversial amendment that is being offered here by my colleague, the gentleman from New York.

We have learned—it has certainly been no secret—that we do not have secure telephone communication between departments of Government. Not only are there wiretaps, but much of our telephone conversation, both inter and intra city is by microwave, and it is very simple for a foreign power, or even a local citizen with sophisticated equipment, to monitor traffic on our microwave circuits.

The National Security Agency has developed and has the responsibility for developing secure communications. This amendment would simply allow the Department of Defense to be the agent for other agencies of Government, whether it be Agriculture or whether if be the State Department or whoever has need for secure communication by telephone. It will allow the Department of Defense to acquire these phones for other agencies. There is no money added to the bill for this purpose. It is simply a transfer of funds in title I. I wish to join the gentleman from New York in stating that the amendment in no way restricts DOD from using funds that might otherwise be included in title I for secure telephone programs to execute these programs. It is something that is necessary and something that is very long past due, in my opinion. I do more than accept it on this side, I would urge the House to do the same.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BENNETT

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a technical amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BENNETT: Page 7, line 17, strike out "section 101" and insert in lieu thereof "section 102".

Page 7, line 24, strike out "section 101" and insert in lieu thereof "section 102".

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, the amendment would change section number references in the bill in two instances to correct an inadvertent error. The minority has reviewed the amendment, and I have been advised that they have no objection to it.

Mr. DICKINSON. If the gentleman will yield, we have no objection to the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BENNETT).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DELLUMS

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DELLUMS: Page 2, strike out line 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For missiles, $2,398,900,000".

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield briefly?

Mr. DELLUMS. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman. Is this an amendment to delete the money for the Pershing missile?

Mr. DELLUMS. Yes, it is.

Mr. DICKINSON. The Committee is familiar with it, but I know that the gentleman wants to be heard and we want to respond. I wonder if we could work out an agreement. In view of the fact that we said we would rise tonight at 9 o'clock, I wonder if we could agree that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto end at 10 minutes to 9. Would that be agreeable with the gentleman?

Mr. DELLUMS. This gentleman would have no problem with that.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto end at 10 minutes to 9.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BETHUNE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I will just ask the gentleman, if we should finish the Dellums amendment at 10 minutes to 9, would it be the intention of the Committee to rise at that point and not go to any further amendments?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, it would be my assumption that we would have a vote, and we have an agreement to rise at 9, which I think we will continue to observe; so, yes, that would be my understanding.

Maybe the gentleman from New York will confirm that.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I have no idea how long the debate would proceed.

Mr. DICKINSON. We just got an agreement to end all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto at 10 minutes to 9.

Mr. BETHUNE. The reason I am reserving the right to object and inquiring is that, as the gentleman knows, the gentleman from Wisconsin and I have an amendment that would probably be next in line, and there are a number of Members who are interested in speaking to that amendment. We are trying to determine whether we should round all of those Members up and keep them here. That is the purpose of my inquiry. If we are going to go into the next amendment, then we would just like to know now.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, we have an agreement to rise at 9 o'clock. But if the amendment offered by the gentleman from California can be disposed of before that, it would seem to me that then we should proceed with the next amendment to which the gentleman referred.

Mr. BETHUNE. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is creating a situation where he is encouraging those of us who wish to start an important issue tomorrow rather than tonight to just simply use up all of the gentleman's time and thus prolong the agony tonight.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, may I suggest to the gentleman from New York, then, that we will agree that, at the conclusion of the debate and the vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. DELLUMS), we will then rise this evening.

Mr. STRATTON. If the gentleman will yield, frankly, I think the point that we are trying to make here in the Committee is that we want to get this bill through as quickly as possible. We indicated that we are going to work until 9 o'clock tonight. If we are going to get out earlier than 9 o'clock, then we are simply going to have to work later tomorrow night or into Friday or have the bill go over to next week. I think the point is that we have established some momentum, and any amendment that is in order in title I, I think, should be debated and disposed of before 9 o'clock. That was the instruction that I was given by the Chairman, and that is the basis on which I have been proceeding.

□ 2010

Mr. DICKINSON. I made the suggestion in order to save the gentleman some time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE) has the time.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BETHUNE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DELLUMS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I can say to my distinguished colleague that I can guarantee him that we will debate this matter until 9 o'clock.

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the Chair whether the time will be allocated to those standing or will the time be allocated between the proponent of the amendment and the committee?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair observes very few Members standing, in which case he would proceed under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. VOLKMER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON)?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. All debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto will end at 10 minutes to 9.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment before the body at this moment is an amendment to strike the funds for the Pershing II missile.

Mr. Chairman, in support of my amendment I will attempt to make a number of points here. But prior to making my own points in opposition to funds for the purposes of the procurement of the Pershing II missile, I would simply like to give the Members a few quotes from a number of our distinguished Americans concerned about the procurement of the Pershing II missile.

I would begin with Mr. Herbert Scoville, a former weapons system analyst for the Department of Defense and the Central Intelligence Agency and also the former Assistant Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. He makes the following quote with respect to the Pershing II:

> Thus, the Pershing II deployment provides a vulnerable target which is a direct threat, really vital threat to the survival of their command and control.

Meaning the Soviet Union.

> It provides them with the strong incentive to launch a preemptive strike perhaps even in advance of any large scale conflict in Europe.

The second quote is by Paul Warnke, a former Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency:

> I am totally against developing weapons with the idea that you can fight and win a nuclear war, but it is important to have survivable weapons, weapons that cannot be readily destroyed by a first strike. It is also important that we not have weapons that threaten the survivability of the Soviet Union.

The third quote is from Prof. Oren Chamberlain, professor emeritus, University of California, one of the scientists who was on the Manhattan project that gave rise to nuclear weapons. He makes the following statement:

> If the Soviets, for example, suffered the same kind of computer error that we in this country have experienced with respect to nuclear weapons, after our deploying the Pershing II missile, they might be forced to make a four-minute decision to launch their nuclear weapons, thus destroying, say, 20 cities from San Francisco to Washington, D.C., in retaliation to an imagined U.S. strike, this feature alone on the Pershing II constitutes a frightening threat to our security. To protect our real national security Congress should withhold appropriations for Pershing II.

Here are three American citizens, one that someone in their wisdom decided was capable intellectually, morally, and politically, to be the Deputy Director of the Central Intelligence Agency and Deputy Director of the Arms Control Agency and the Director of the Arms Control Agency and in one instance one of the persons that was one of the leading scientists on the Manhattan project, all saying the Pershing missile is dangerous.

The Pershing missile is the single-most destabilizing weapon that we are planning to deploy in our American arsenal. Let me tell my colleagues why.

To deploy the Pershing II missile provides us with an opportunity to deploy a cheap ICBM within 4 to 6 minutes of the Soviet Union. I repeat for the purpose of emphasis. Four to six minutes.

Any rational mind in this body has to pause for a moment and consider what our reaction would be if missiles were deployed within 4 to 6 minutes of the United States threatening our command and control, and threatening hard missile silos. I would tell the Members how we would react. We would react the same way we reacted in the Cuban missile crisis where during that crisis we were prepared to risk thermal nuclear war on the principle that no missile should be deployed that close to the United States, yet the Pershing II missile is a missile that we propose to deploy 4 to 6 minutes from the Soviet Union.

No. 1, there is no military rationale for the deployment of this weapon. Targets can be hit by existing American nuclear weapons assigned to NATO to say nothing of the fact that our other two nuclear powers in NATO, France and England, can also hit the same targets in the Soviet Union that these Pershing II missiles can hit.

This weapon is extremely dangerous in that it is capable of destroying, as I said, their command and control missile silos without warning. It reduces the reaction time down to a miniscule period—from 30 to 40 minutes down to 4 to 6 minutes.

The Pershing will be vulnerable to attack—and here is an argument I would choose to develop.

Any of my colleagues on this floor who understand the deployment of Pershing II is aware of the fact that it will be deployed in a very vulnerable mode, so a weapon 4 to 6 minutes away from us, deployed in a vulnerable mode, any time there is any calculation of hostility, the motivation will be for the Soviet Union to knock that weapon out first because it is there threatening them.

What would be our response? You have got some general out there in the field who says, "Use them or lose them." Understand the argument.

□ 2020

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DELLUMS was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DELLUMS. I thank the Chair.

You deploy a weapon 4 to 6 minutes from the Soviet Union, in a vulnerable mode, in a period of hostility. If you were the Soviet planner, what would you do? You would knock out the weapon closest to you. You would go after those Pershings, which then on the other hand provides greater impetus for the United States to say, "Use them or we will lose them," which means then there is great pressure on the part of our country to use these weapons.

Now, you do not think that is possible? All of you picked up the Washington Post this morning. The Washington Post, and I read: "Army would like advanced authority to use A-weapons."

Then it goes further: "U.S. Army officials have told Congressmen in secret briefings over the past few months that they want preclearance for using tactical nuclear weapons in Central Europe, the battlefield of the future, because they are fearful Presidential clearance will come too late."

Now, understand what we are saying. American generals are saying, "We may not be able to contact the President fast enough. Give us preclearance to use the nuclear weapons, because out there on the battlefield 4 to 6 minutes from the Soviet Union we might not have time to call back to 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. Give us, the generals, the right to use these weapons."

I have already pointed out to you that they are dangerous and provocative in that they are only 4 to 6 minutes away. They are in a vulnerable mode, which means the impetus is there for them to attack, and then our generals are saying, "We better use them or lose them."

Then you have got the backup information from our generals saying, "Give me preclearance to use these weapons right there on the battlefield."

Now, having said that, I have asked the appropriate parties in this country, "Can we contain a conventional war in Europe?"

The best estimate of this country, the official estimate of this country, is that a conventional war could not be contained in Central Europe, but if a war began in Europe, that it would escalate to strategic nuclear war.

Now, what happens when you put Pershing II missiles into that context? You have opened the possibility of theater nuclear war and if any of you on this floor think that we can limit nuclear war to theater nuclear war, you are living in an insane world. We cannot contain it. Limited nuclear war are words. They are not reality in any concept.

Do you think the United States and the Soviet Union would let either one of them have an advantage? Once we start down the road, we cannot put the genie back into the bottle.

If we are to preserve the integrity of the planet Earth, let us not move down the road blurring this distinction. Let us not push ourselves closer to the brink of nuclear disaster.

I realize the motivation here is to be macho, to say, "We'll show the Soviets," but the point is that we are going to kill our own children and their children's children.

Whether you and I agree on this floor, black or white, left or right, Republican or Democrat, the one thing that unifies us all here is not just our membership in this select body. What unifies us is our existence on this tiny little planet and this planet is in danger and the Pershing II missile is a very dangerous weapon. It is a very provocative weapon. That is the major argument that I seek to make here.

I do not make it in a vacuum. A number of other people have made the very same point.

To summarize and make a couple additional points: The Pershing II is the single most destabilizing weapons system currently in production and currently in deployment. If you do not believe that, remember the Cuban missile crisis. Remember, we are talking about deploying it 4 to 6 minutes. This is a dangerous weapon.

The last two points I seek to make are the following: It undermines U.S.-European relations. Why did 300,000 people rally in Bonn, 200,000 in Rome, 250,000 in London, and in every other major capital in Europe? Because they understand that we are talking about saving Europe by destroying it. These people are saying, "We do not want the deployment of these weapons on our soil." They do not see the same threat that we see with deploying weapons on their soil and then we keep our fingers on the button.

Finally, there has been a great deal of talk about the SS-20's, that we have to run out and get a weapon to equal the SS-20's. All the SS-20 is, is a modernized version of the SS-4 and the SS-5. The Pershing II missile gives us the capability going to the east that the SS-20 does not have coming to the west.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DELLUMS was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I understand that many of you have me postured politically. I am not making a partisan parochial political argument here. I am trying to make a rational, sane, human plea for understanding and rationality. To produce this weapon and deploy this weapon brings us to the brink of disaster. There are moments when many of us dance on the winds of expediency, but let us not do it around the question of nuclear war that engulfs the world, that engulfs the future. Let us stand here as people of integrity and principle and conviction and challenge the production, the development, and the deployment of the Pershing II missile.

I implore you, not as a Democrat, not as a leftist, not as a black, but as a human being who lives on this planet, who says the one thing we have in common is that we all live in this place and this weapon threatens that.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. SPENCE, and by unanimous consent, Mr. DELLUMS was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELLUMS. I would be pleased to yield.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE CHAIRMAN PRO TEMPORE

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair wants to announce to the gallery that demonstrations from the gallery are not permissible under the House rules.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California and I have talked previously about this question, and others, too, and I respect the gentleman for his sincerity. I know the gentleman is sincere. He is honest, and just this morning we were talking about it. Honest, sincere people can look at a situation and differ as to their approach.

I can understand the gentleman's question as to the Pershing II being destabilizing from the standpoint of the Soviets; but can I ask a question as to why the Soviets, having 300 SS-20's in place, why are they not destabilizing?

Mr. DELLUMS. My answer to the gentleman is that they do not threaten our credible deterrence. Remember my basic argument that I tried to make in the last couple days, that all we need is deterrence, not war fighting capabilities. I do not see the SS-20, 4 to 6 minutes from the United States. I do not see the SS-20 as threatening a credible deterrence on the part of the United States. The SS-20's have been deployed and nobody on this floor has ever made an argument that the SS-20 threatens a credible deterrence on the part of the United States. That argument cannot be made; but I do think the argument can be made that the deployment of the Pershing II 4 to 6 minutes from the Soviet Union is destabilizing.

If the SS-20 were in Cuba, then I think we could make a point.

Mr. SPENCE. But you see, they are destabilizing to our allies in Europe who are right under the guns of those SS-20's and our Pershing II will not even reach their missile field.

Mr. DELLUMS. I also tried to make this point, that we do not need to deploy the Pershing II missile. The gentleman and I know the figures. We sit on the Armed Services Committee. We know down to the finite missile how many there are.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DELLUMS was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. DELLUMS. The gentleman knows that we have hundreds of nuclear weapons in Europe. I am saying that those nuclear weapons can hit the same targets as do the Pershing missile, and also England and France are nations that have nuclear capacity and they fall under the umbrella of NATO as well.

Mr. SPENCE. The point I would like to make is this. I would like to see both sides completely eliminate anything that would be destabilizing to the other.

Mr. DELLUMS. Exactly.

Mr. SPENCE. But as long as they have missiles in place and we do not have them, that is destabilizing. If they would remove theirs, then we would be at parity and that would be the kind of situation we would be looking for.

I respect the gentleman. I know his views. I just want him to know that we are both seeking the same thing.

Mr. DELLUMS. I appreciate that.

Mr. SPENCE. I thank the gentleman.

□ 2030

Mr. DELLUMS. Let me make this one additional comment. The Soviet Union on more than one occasion has said, "We are willing to stop the deployment of the SS-20 in return for a commitment not to deploy the Pershing II."

What happened? It was rejected out of hand. The President of the United States rejected it without going behind that statement to determine whether there was any efficacy or substance to that statement whatsoever.

Mr. SPENCE. We will discuss it further.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DELLUMS was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to my colleague from South Carolina (Mr. SPENCE).

Mr. SPENCE. I think the point is that the other side is perfectly willing to quit while they are ahead. But they do not want to quit when we are even.

If we go back in history to the place where we alone had the bomb, the atomic bomb it was called back in those days, we suggested to them that we turn over this power, which we alone possessed in the world, to an international agency to be used only for peaceful purposes. And guess who would not go along with it? The Russians.

It has been that way ever since, and we have tried to reduce and eliminate the threat of nuclear war and they would not go along with it unless they are ahead and are locked into a superior position.

I am for eliminating the threat of nuclear war; I just think the best way to do it is for us to reduce at equal numbers right on down to zero and they will not go along with that.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DELLUMS was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I say to my colleague that he and I are in total agreement with respect to our desire to limit and remove ultimately the risk of nuclear war. Where he and I disagree is that I believe we have already achieved rough parity at this point and we need to negotiate down from this monument to madness that we have developed. We do not need to develop new technologies that go beyond verifiability and go beyond deterrence.

I am saying that the Pershing II missile does just that. I am saying that where the gentleman and I disagree is that I do not believe we ought to develop crisis-destabilizing weapons. The one thing that has kept the world free of nuclear exchange has been that deterrence works. But what this administration is attempting to do in this budget is to go beyond deterrent capacity to war-fighting capability.

Once you get there, I am saying that eventually we will fight a war and that will be the end of the world, and that is why I am saying we do not need to develop these kinds of weapons.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from California.

The Soviet Union began deploying the mobile SS-20 missile with three independently targetable warheads in 1977. It has a range of 4,400 to 5,000 kilometers, making all of Western Europe vulnerable to the SS-20's deployed east of the Urals.

Currently, the Soviets have 900 deployed SS-20 warheads and 3,300 remaining older SS-4's, SS-5's, a total of 1,200 long-range, independently targetable nuclear force weapons deployed, and is currently deploying additional SS-20's at the rate of 1 a week.

As Members of the House are aware, NATO has no long-range INF weapons deployed today to counter the 1,200 Soviet warheads.

In December of 1979, there was a NATO dual-track decision in response to the Soviet deployment of the SS-20 which included plans for deploying 108 Pershing II missiles which increased the range of the Pershing from 600 kilometers to 1,800 kilometers.

Pershing II can strike targets, however, only as far as the Western U.S.S.R., but not Moscow and beyond, and does not, in contrast to what the gentleman from California has just charged, threaten Soviet ICBM forces.

The dual-track decision which NATO agreed to in 1979 committed the United States to pursue arms control negotiations with the U.S.S.R. on INF systems simultaneously with plans for deployment of the Pershing II.

As Members are aware, at the present time Mr. Paul Nitze is the U.S. negotiator in Geneva pushing the zero option proposal which President Reagan has made, not to deploy any of the Pershing II's if the U.S.S.R. will dismantle the 300 deployed SS-20's so that those intermediate range missiles on both sides will be reduced to zero. As far as destabilizing the situation, it is the Soviet Union, that is destabilizing it, not the United States by proposing to deploy a counterbalancing deterrent.

Since Mr. Brezhnev announced his nuclear freeze proposal and claimed to cut back the production of SS-20, the Soviet Union has deployed 20 additional SS-20's targeted against Western Europe and has increased the production of this weapon fourfold.

The SS-20 is 20,000 times more powerful than the enhanced radiation weapon, the so-called neutron bomb, which the United States volunteered to defer for a period of time. And the Soviet Union has still shown no restraint in its efforts to establish overwhelming INF superiority. It has the only deployed nuclear system in Europe with 1,200 nuclear warheads.

Terminating the planned Pershing II production would remove the principal U.S. leverage in INF negotiations to induce Soviet SS-20 reductions in the negotiations in Geneva.

Terminating the planned Pershing II, as the amendment of the gentleman from California would do, without a commitment to dismantling the existing SS-20's at the same time, would destroy the negotiations now going on in Geneva. I would think it would be the last thing that somebody interested in arms control and disarmament, and in reducing the threat of nuclear war, would want to promote.

That action would leave NATO with zero INF warheads, the Soviet Union with 1,200.

I might point out that the Soviets have deployed one of these SS-20 vehicles with three reentry vehicles each per week for the last 300 weeks. Certainly this is not the time to kill our tactical nuclear weapons program in NATO and undermine the negotiations at Geneva.

I urge that the amendment of the gentleman from California be rejected.

Mr. HILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, Pershing II (P-II) is an evolutionary modernization of the currently deployed U.S. Pershing Ia system in the Federal Republic of Germany (FRG). P-II is the ballistic component of the NATO theater nuclear force modernization program agreed to by the NATO ministers in December 1979. Deployment will begin in December 1983.

The allies are carefully watching U.S. actions to fully implement NATO's intermediate-range nuclear force (INF) modernization program. In spite of vocal opposition in Europe, the governments remain steadfast in their commitment to begin deployment of these long-range systems at the end of 1983. Any indication on our part of scaling back plans for implementing the INF program will be interpreted by the allies as U.S. backsliding. We risk unraveling the very consensus in the alliance on INF modernization that we have for so long sought to preserve. Reductions in 1983 funding requests will provide ammunition to opposition groups in Europe to increase the pressure on allied governments for either postponing or halting entirely the INF program. In turn, allied governments will be hard pressed not to slow down the INF basing preparations in their own countries. The full support of Congress in funding the Pershing II program is essential for the United States to meet its commitment to fully implement the alliance's INF modernization program.

I urge you to join me in voting to defeat this amendment.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is one of the most important amendments we are going to have to deal with. I want to make sure we have some things clear. So if I may, I would like to get the gentleman from California's attention. I want to have some conversation with him about this very important amendment.

Some of the opposition I hear is people saying that the Russians have intercontinental ballistic missiles and we have intercontinental ballistic missiles.

□ 2040

But, the Russians have another round of missiles, the SS-20's which will not reach our continent, but I think the gentleman from California made the point very well, that it will obviously hit our allies in Europe. The problem is, the reason they think they need the Pershing II missile is that we have nothing in Europe to fight back with, so what I wanted to ask the gentleman from California, is it true that the Pershing II missile would be the only kind of nuclear weapon that our allies in Europe would have to respond to the SS-20 that is in the Soviet Union?

Mr. DELLUMS. Not at all. First, let us begin with France. The Force de Frappe is a force that can be counted upon. Second, they have the V-bomber force of the British. This includes bombers as well as submarines. We have several thousand tactical nuclear weapons in Europe. We have submarines deployed against a NATO scenario. We have strategic backup in this country in the event of an escalation. We have more than enough. We have incredible redundancy of nuclear weapons, all aimed at the Soviet Union, all there to deal with a Warsaw Pact-NATO scenario. This is not the only weapon that would be deployed.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I do not mean to put words in the gentleman's mouth, but I think what the gentleman is saying is that the Pershing II is not the only thing, then, that Europe will have, and therefore because it is well armed and has all these other defenses, this is redundant and it only escalates the hair trigger that we have on the whole thing, that could start the whole nuclear holocaust.

Mr. DELLUMS. The gentlewoman is perfectly correct. I believe even if we argued the issues of redundancy alone, this weapon could be knocked out in this time of great economic savings if we just said, "We have great redundancy." That is one argument that ought to knock this weapon out, because we have thousands and thousands of tactical nuclear weapons—our side, the French, the British, and other people. This is not the only weapon we have. The gentlewoman is perfectly correct.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I have another question I wanted to ask the gentleman, and that was about the article I read in the paper this morning that concerned me a lot. That was an article that said that there had been briefings here on the Hill that the Army is going to request that they be able to have advance clearance to use nuclear weapons, tactical nuclear weapons in Europe, because they feel that the advance time is so short they may not be able to get to the President to get advance clearance. Do these Pershing II missiles fall in that category of tactical nuclear weapons that the Army would be asking for this advance clearance on?

Mr. DELLUMS. That is exactly correct. They are defined by this country as intermediate range missiles, which would make them tactical weapons. They would be referred to technically as theater nuclear weapons, which means that the Pershing II missiles would be the kind of missiles that they would be requesting advance clearance upon.

The argument I was making earlier was simply this: The missiles are deployed 4 to 6 minutes from the Soviet Union. They are deployed in a vulnerable mode. There are no hard silos. They are not in a survivable mode. If you are sitting there looking at missiles 4 to 6 minutes away from you, in a moment of crisis the first thing you have got to consider is, what is the danger immediately there, so there is going to be great impetus to knock those weapons out. Our side would know that, hence preclearance. "We need to have the time. We cannot get back to the President in time. Give us preclearance so that we can make a battlefield judgment."

I do not want them to make a battlefield judgment that would throw this world and engulf this world ultimately into thermal nuclear war, so that is dangerous, and coupled with the gentlewoman's statement that they are asking for preclearance ought to give pause for every Member of this Congress to stop for a moment to consider deeply and profoundly what it is we are preparing to do.

The briefing is called, Air-Land Battle 2000. This is the thinking forward to the year 2000, what the battlefield would look like, what the conditions will be, and what kinds of decisions will they be making. It is a frightening and dangerous prospect, as I see it.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentlewoman from Colorado has expired.

(At the request of Mr. DELLUMS and by unanimous consent, Mrs. SCHROEDER was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. DELLUMS. Have I answered the gentlewoman's question?

Mrs. SCHROEDER. The gentleman from California is doing an excellent job in answering my questions, because they are the kind of questions that bother me the most. If I have to look at any item in this Defense bill, I think this is probably the most destabilizing, the most dangerous for tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow, and whether we reach it.

I think the gentleman's point about the very bright line that we have traditionally maintained between nuclear war and conventional war, and to cross that very bright line took very significant steps; that is, the Commander in Chief, the man in the White House or the woman in the White House saying, "It is OK, we have decided it is viable; you may do it." By creating more and more of these types of tactical nuclear weapons, which I think another important point that we do not mention enough is that these are not little mininukes. They are all bigger than the Hiroshima and Nagasaki bombs if they go off. They have very large warheads on many of them, so they are not little tiny nukes that surgically can go in and remove a tiny thing. But, the destabilizing effect of them is that we blur that bright line; we no longer require the Commander in Chief to set them off because they are vulnerable, very close to a border where they could be overrun, and we would probably be much better off if we built up the conventional warfare mode in that area rather than relying on this as a fallback, because the hair trigger is so frightening. So, I do not mean again to put words in the mouth of the gentleman from California, but that is what I hear him saying.

Mr. DELLUMS. If the gentlewoman will yield, I would like to have some specificity on the comment that she just made. These are not tiny little weapons. All of us can recall the bombs that we dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. None of us can even comprehend the level of death, what they really did, but in our minds in some way we know that we unleashed an incredible terror. The weapon we are talking about, the Pershing II missile, equals 200 kilotons of power, 16 times—16 times the explosive capacity of the bombs we dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. These are not tiny little toys. These are powerful nuclear weapons.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Well, I thank the gentleman for making that clear. The gentleman makes an excellent point. These are not little NIRF missiles. I think that the language that is being used is absolutely frightening. Minitheater, making us believe that somehow this is different than the other kind of nuclear weapon we all grew up to know and really be very frightened about. It is different, and so we want to blur that bright line even further by saying that we would allow the field commander to be able to trigger this. They are asking for this right to set this off on the decision of a field commander, and this little thing is 16 times or somewhere in that range bigger than the Hiroshima and Nagasaki bombs.

I think that is very sobering. I think this is tragic that this is coming up at this late hour when Members cannot really ponder this, and in the big picture this is probably one of the most important amendments in the bill because it is destabilizing and will set a pace for the future that is very fearsome.

I congratulate the gentleman from California for having the courage to stand here and bring up this very difficult issue.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into with the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON), the clock is now at 10 minutes of 9, and we agreed to vote at this particular time on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. DELLUMS).

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair does observe that the hour is 10 minutes until 9. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, neither the gentleman from Michigan nor any other Member can be recognized.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. DELLUMS).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 74, noes 311, not voting 49, as follows:

[Roll No. 200]

AYES—74

Addabbo	Gray	Rodino
AuCoin	Harkin	Rosenthal
Bedell	Hawkins	Roybal
Bellenson	Heckler	Russo
Bonior	Kastenmeier	Sabo
Burton, Phillip	Kennelly	Savage
Chisholm	Kildee	Schneider
Collins (IL)	Lehman	Schroeder
Conyers	Leland	Schumer
Coyne, William	Long (MD)	Seiberling
Crockett	Lowry (WA)	Shannon
Dellums	Lundine	Stokes
DeNardis	Markey	Studds
Donnelly	McKinney	Swift
Downey	Mikulski	Walgren
Dymally	Miller (CA)	Washington
Edgar	Mitchell (MD)	Waxman
Edwards (CA)	Murphy	Weaver
Foglietta	Nowak	Weiss
Ford (TN)	Oberstar	Williams (MT)
Forsythe	Ottinger	Wirth
Frank	Panetta	Wolpe
Garcia	Paul	Wyden
Gejdenson	Rangel	Yates
Glickman	Reuss

NOES—311

Akaka	Coats	Fazio
Albosta	Coelho	Fenwick
Alexander	Coleman	Ferraro
Anderson	Collins (TX)	Fiedler
Andrews	Conable	Fields
Annunzio	Conte	Findley
Anthony	Corcoran	Fish
Applegate	Coughlin	Fithian
Archer	Courter	Flippo
Ashbrook	Coyne, James	Florio
Aspin	Craig	Ford (MI)
Atkinson	Crane, Daniel	Fowler
Badham	Crane, Philip	Frenzel
Bafalis	D'Amours	Fuqua
Bailey (MO)	Daniel, Dan	Gaydos
Bailey (PA)	Daniel, R. W.	Gephardt
Barnard	Dannemeyer	Gibbons
Barnes	Daschle	Gilman
Beard	Daub	Gingrich
Benedict	Davis	Goldwater
Benjamin	Deckard	Gonzalez
Bennett	Derrick	Goodling
Bereuter	Dickinson	Gore
Bethune	Dingell	Gradison
Bevill	Dorgan	Gramm
Billey	Dornan	Green
Boggs	Dowdy	Gregg
Boland	Dreier	Grisham
Bonker	Duncan	Guarini
Bouquard	Dunn	Gunderson
Breaux	Dwyer	Hagedorn
Brinkley	Dyson	Hall (OH)
Brooks	Early	Hall, Ralph
Broomfield	Eckart	Hall, Sam
Brown (CO)	Edwards (OK)	Hamilton
Broyhill	Emerson	Hammerschmidt
Butler	Emery	Hance
Byron	English	Hansen (UT)
Campbell	Erdahl	Hartnett
Carman	Erlenborn	Hatcher
Carney	Evans (DE)	Hefner
Chappell	Evans (GA)	Heftel
Chappie	Evans (IA)	Hendon
Cheney	Evans (IN)	Hertel
Clausen	Fary	Hightower
Clinger	Fascell	Hiler

Hillis	McEwen	Scheuer
Holland	McGrath	Schulze
Hollenbeck	McHugh	Sensenbrenner
Holt	Mica	Sharp
Hopkins	Michel	Shaw
Horton	Miller (OH)	Shelby
Howard	Mineta	Shumway
Hoyer	Minish	Siljander
Hubbard	Mitchell (NY)	Simon
Hughes	Moakley	Skeen
Hunter	Molinari	Skelton
Hutto	Montgomery	Smith (AL)
Hyde	Moore	Smith (IA)
Jacobs	Moorhead	Smith (NE)
Jeffords	Morrison	Smith (NJ)
Jeffries	Mottl	Smith (OR)
Jenkins	Murtha	Smith (PA)
Johnston	Myers	Snowe
Jones (NC)	Napier	Snyder
Jones (OK)	Natcher	Solarz
Kazen	Neal	Spence
Kemp	Nelligan	St Germain
Kindness	Nelson	Stangeland
Kogovsek	O'Brien	Staton
Kramer	Oakar	Stenholm
LaFalce	Obey	Stratton
Lagomarsino	Oxley	Stump
Lantos	Parris	Synar
Latta	Pashayan	Tauke
Leach	Patman	Tauzin
Leath	Patterson	Taylor
LeBoutillier	Pease	Thomas
Lee	Pepper	Udall
Lent	Perkins	Vander Jagt
Levitas	Petri	Vento
Lewis	Peyser	Volkmer
Livingston	Pickle	Walker
Loeffler	Porter	Wampler
Long (LA)	Price	Watkins
Lott	Quillen	Weber (MN)
Lowery (CA)	Railsback	Weber (OH)
Lujan	Ratchford	White
Luken	Regula	Whitley
Lungren	Rinaldo	Whittaker
Marlenee	Ritter	Whitten
Marriott	Roberts (KS)	Williams (OH)
Martin (IL)	Roberts (SD)	Wilson
Martin (NC)	Robinson	Winn
Martin (NY)	Roemer	Wolf
Martinez	Rogers	Wortley
Matsui	Rose	Wright
Mattox	Rostenkowski	Wylie
Mavroules	Roth	Yatron
Mazzoli	Roukema	Young (FL)
McCollum	Rousselot	Young (MO)
McCurdy	Rudd	Zablocki
McDade	Santini	Zeferetti
McDonald	Sawyer

NOT VOTING—49

Biaggi	Edwards (AL)	Pritchard
Bingham	Ertel	Pursell
Blanchard	Foley	Rahall
Bolling	Fountain	Rhodes
Boner	Frost	Richmond
Bowen	Ginn	Roe
Brodhead	Hansen (ID)	Shamansky
Brown (CA)	Huckaby	Shuster
Brown (OH)	Ireland	Solomon
Burgener	Jones (TN)	Stanton
Burton, John	Madigan	Stark
Clay	Marks	Traxler
de la Garza	McClory	Trible
Derwinski	McCloskey	Whitehurst
Dicks	Moffett	Young (AK)
Dixon	Mollohan
Dougherty	Nichols

□ 2100

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Moffett for, with Mr. Jones of Tennessee against.

Mr. Clay for, with Mr. Mollohan against.

Mr. JOHNSTON changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. LUNDINE changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. WRIGHT) having assumed the chair, Mr. AUCOIN, Chairman pro tempore of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 6030) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1983 for the Armed Forces for procurement, for research, development, test, and evaluation, and for operation and maintenance, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the Armed Forces and for civilian employees of the Department of Defense, to authorize appropriations for such fiscal year for civil defense, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON MONOPOLIES AND COMMERCIAL LAW OF COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY TO SIT TOMORROW DURING 5-MINUTE RULE

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Monopolies and Commercial Law of the Committee on the Judiciary be permitted to sit on Thursday, July 22, 1982, while the House is reading for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

The purpose of the meeting is to mark up H.R. 4374, the Shipping Act of 1982, which has a deadline of the end of this month.

Mr. Speaker, the minority has been consulted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. HARTNETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman cleared this with the ranking members of the minority on the subcommittee and the committee?

Mr. EDWARDS of California. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MCCLORY) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) have been consulted, and I understand they have agreed to this request.

Mr. HARTNETT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

(Mrs. ASHBROOK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 188, passage of a concurrent resolution confirming congressional support of the senior citizen employment programs, I am recorded as voting "nay." I had intended to vote "yea." I ask unanimous consent that my remarks appear in the permanent CONGRESSIONAL RECORD immediately following the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

□ 2110

ECONOMIC RECOVERY PROGRAM MUST BE GIVEN A CHANCE TO SUCCEED

(Mr. WORTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, 19 months ago yesterday, Ronald Reagan took the oath of office a few short steps from where we meet. At that time, he called for a new beginning—a rekindling of the American spirit.

The last 19 months have seen a new and revitalized belief in America as a place of opportunity, prosperity, and strength. We have seen real leadership restored to this country.

It is appropriate to look back on the last year and a half. Those of us on the Capitol steps on Inauguration Day were moved by the eloquence of the then new President's speech. I well remember after President Reagan's address there was a prevailing sense among the leaders of both parties that we should strive for national unity while giving the President a fair chance for developing his agenda for curing our Nation's problems.

Unfortunately, this unity did not last very long. Once the opposition party discovered the President was a powerful and persuasive spokesman for a responsible program to put this country back on the track to economic prosperity, the leadership backed away.

Nonetheless, with the support of the more responsible members of the opposition party and the solid support of my own party, we adopted a new economic recovery program. Gone is the philosophy of tax and tax, spend and spend of past years. In its place is a program based on the belief that high taxes and burdensome regulations were depriving people and business of the incentive to produce. Slowing the growth of Federal spending, untangling the web of Federal regulations and reducing the personal income tax are key elements of this program.

We want to continue the new direction of limiting Government's growth and expanding individual growth, freedom and opportunity. Now is not the time to go back, in the absence of any viable alternatives, to the old programs and policies. This new approach only began last October. The program enacted by Congress must be given a chance to succeed. I am here to give it that opportunity and I hope you will as well.

THE KATHY WHITE ACHIEVEMENT AWARD

(Mr. WHITE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, for the past 10 years, it has been my privilege to honor an outstanding, well-rounded, graduating high school senior in El Paso County, Tex., with the Kathy White Achievement Award. This award serves as an educational scholarship established in memory of my beloved late wife Katherine Huffman White. When Kathy died in 1972, many of her friends and I set up an educational trust, and each year since then, a deserving high school graduate has been awarded a sum of money to defray the costs of further higher education.

Students compete for the award and an independent judging panel selects the recipient on the basis of academic achievement, extracurricular activities, community service, and a submitted written essay. Criteria set for the award are: "Outstanding qualities of character, humanity, personality, and leadership * * * mutual respect of parents, teachers, and peers."

This year's Kathy White Achievemand Award honors Melissa Good of W. H. Burgess High School in El Paso County. Melissa's essay, "The Event in My Life That Influenced Me the Most" is one that I would like to share with my colleagues.

THE EVENT IN MY LIFE THAT INFLUENCED ME THE MOST

There have been several events in my life which have had great influence on me. The one event which had the greatest impact and which changed my life the most would be the Vietnam War. Not the actual war itself, but the effects the war brought to my family.

The major thing the war caused was the absence of my father for about four years. During the time he was gone, we had no father to take charge at home. Though this story of father going to war may seem typical of every household during war times, it was a lot more difficult for my family. Along with the usual problems faced when there is no father at home, we had difficulty because of my mother. She is a wonderful person and an excellent mother. Where does the problem come in? The problem is that my mother is Japanese. At the time she spoke very little English. She was still learning all the many American customs. To many this may seem like no problem, but just picture yourself in a foreign country to live and raise all your children alone. Since this was such a difficult time for my mother, my brothers, sister and I learned we had to help out in order to keep our family going.

This event taught me an astronomical number of things I would have never learned in school. I learned responsibility. I learned how to cope with and handle problems. I gained respect, care, and gratitude for my family, and for all the things I have been blessed with. This is the time in my life when I matured the most. To sum it up short, I finally realized how much I love my family and how much they love me.

THE HANDICAPPED INDIVIDUALS SERVICES AND TRAINING ACT

(Mr. ERDAHL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ERDAHL. Mr. Speaker, for decades in this country, disabled persons have been looked on by many as a burden on the rest of society, but I am happy that this attitude is being turned around as more attention is focused on their abilities rather than their disabilities. During the International Year of the Disabled, countless examples have been publicized of outstanding achievements of handicapped persons who have developed skills in practically evey field of human endeavor.

Currently, a number of programs providing training and services to handicapped persons are what we call discretionary programs and could be summarily ended or curtailed in the budget process. In order to give more assurance of funding into the future, I am introducing, along with Congressman LEBOUTILLIER, the Handicapped Individuals Services and Training Act. The bill specifically authorizes the Helen Keller Center for Deaf-Blind Youth and Adults; the regional postsecondary education programs for the deaf, one of which is operated at the St. Paul Technical Vocational Institute; and the captioned film program.

Additionally, my bill authorizes Federal matching funding for the Vinland National Center in Minnesota. This center is an outgrowth of the Norwegian Government's Bicentennial gift of 1 million kroner to America and is patterned after the Beitostolen Center in Norway. That center has developed an outstanding program to provide health sports training to handicapped individuals so they can participate in many of the athletic activities formerly closed to handicapped persons. Perhaps the best publicized activity is teaching blind persons to cross-country ski with the help of sighted guides. Physically and mentally handicapped are taught how to participate in countless sports activities. With this accomplishment comes a tremendous psychological boost so these individuals realize they can engage in almost every activity in society on an equal footing with nonhandicapped persons. Coupled with this training is instruction for an individual and his family on self-help health care and development of support mechanisms.

In addition to the Norweigian gift, the Minnesota legislature has appropriated some funds for the Vinland National Center. Private funds have been raised from individual donations and many fund raising events around the United States. The center has also a Federal planning grant to outline the need for such a center and plan its activities and structural needs.

Finally, some funds have been granted by the Rehabilitation Services Administration to start operations on a pilot program basis.

Now is the time to move forward with construction of the physical facilities and enlarge the program so many handicapped persons can benefit from the training to be provided at the Vinland Center. My bill authorizes $3 million in construction funds to be matched dollar for dollar from private sources. It also authorizes $2,300,000 in operating funds over 5 years according to a declining formula so that after 5 years, the center will not be dependent on any direct Federal funding. I urge my colleagues to join me in approving this much-needed legislation.

CONGRESSMAN WHITE'S FEDERAL REFORM ECONOMIC RECOVERY PROGRAM

(Mr. WHITE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, in my weekly newsletter to constituents in the 16th District of Texas, I introduced my Federal reform economic recovery program. In this April newsletter, I explained my five-point program to constituents which was developed over a period of approximately 7 months. My program emphasizes beneficial new policies which I believe will harness uncontrollable spending.

The five parts of my Federal reform economic recovery program explained within the newsletter are as follows:

First, restrict the growth rate of the stock of money to the historic gross national product growth figure—now about 3.5 percent per year;

Second, move all off budget items onto the regular budget;

Third, require a balanced budget within 3 years of enactment;

Fourth, restrict the growth of the Federal Government by limiting the budget to 20 percent of the gross national product; and Fifth, start retiring the National debt through a monetization process.

After I outlined my Federal reform economic recovery program, I polled this representative sample of constituents on the program itself as well as on a number of other pertinent current issues; that is, the budget and economy, defense and foreign policy, and a number of general issues. Following are the tabulated percentage results reflecting the 16th District's views on the listed issues. These results have been shared with these constituents within my district as well:

[In percent]

	Yes	No	Undecided
BUDGET AND THE ECONOMY
1. Which of the following actions should be taken regarding lowering the projected Federal deficits for the next several years?
A. Reduce Federal spending by further cuts in nondefense and entitlement programs	72.7	24.7	3.0
B. Reduce Federal spending through less growth in defense programs	49.7	43.8	6.5
C. Increase revenues by deferring the 1982 10 percent tax cut for individuals scheduled to take effect July 1, 1982	35.2	61.2	3.6
D. Increase revenues by deferring the 1983 10 percent tax cut for individuals scheduled to take effect July 1, 1983	38.1	55.9	6.1
E. Make implementation of the 3d year (July 1983) tax cut contingent upon improved economic performance (such as a specified decrease in the Federal deficit and a specified reduction in the inflation rate)	56.4	37.0	6.6
F. Eliminate tax indexing (the changing of tax brackets as inflation advances) which is scheduled to go into effect in 1985	30.5	51.0	18.5
G. None of the above	20.0	67.4	12.6
2. In an effort to lower the cost of entitlement programs, the administration has targeted cost-of-living adjustments which are generally tied to the increase in the Consumer Price Index (CPI). These include such major programs as social security, Federal retirement (including both military and civilian), food stamps, medicare and medicaid:
A. Should all of these cost-of-living adjustments continue to be linked to the CPI?	43.9	50.0	6.2
B. Should all of these cost-of-living adjustments be linked to a formula which is less than the CPI?	37.6	52.1	10.3
C. Should all of these cost-of-living adjustments be based on an arbitrary percentage decided yearly by the administration, with the concurrence of the Congress?	23.5	67.8	8.8
D. Should all of these cost-of-living adjustments be eliminated altogether?	20.2	73.3	6.5
3. Should social security cost-of-living allowances be frozen for 1 yr in an effort to reduce the Federal deficit?	47.9	46.6	5.5
4. Should the next Federal civilian and military retirement pay cost-of-living adjustment be limited to less than the Consumer Price Index (CPI) in an effort to reduce the Federal deficit?	57.8	37.7	4.5
5. Do you believe that the projected Federal deficits are directly attributable to the individual and business tax cuts which commenced last year?	15.7	77.9	6.4
6. Should Congress enact an increase in excise taxes on luxury items?	61.3	31.6	7.1
7. Should Congress repeal the "safe harbor" leasing provisions which allow companies to sell tax credits to other companies for new business investment?	67.8	19.8	12.4
8. Should the Federal Government impose user fees for services that directly benefit identifiable groups and individuals, for example, general aviation, recreation areas, and boating services provided by the Coast Guard?	79.8	16.2	4.0
9. The all-savers certificate program provides income tax exclusions for new deposits in savings and loan companies which are intended to be used for housing financing. Should this program be extended beyond the present 1 year?	70.7	19.0	10.3
10. Do you feel that Federal deficit spending is the major cause of high interest rates?	81.2	12.2	6.6
11. Do you favor relaxing tight money controls to try to help bring down interest rates, even such easing could raise the inflation rate?	21.7	68.1	10.2
DEFENSE AND FOREIGN POLICY
12. Do you believe the Soviet Union has increased its offensive military power to the point that the United States could be in jeopardy?	63.3	28.7	8.0
13. Do you support the administration's proposal for increased defense spending?	62.9	29.4	7.7
14. Should the United States make a substantial reduction of U.S. forces permanently stationed in Europe?	47.9	40.9	11.2
15. Do you support the new Caribbean Basin initiative plan which is designed to provide economic aid, trade concessions and tax incentives to nations in that region of the world to help shore up their ailing economies?	43.2	39.7	17.1
16. Do you think that the political conflict in El Salvador is caused primarily by foreign-backed insurgents who are directed by Nicaragua and Cuba?	63.5	22.8	14.6
17. Do you think that the political conflict in El Salvador is caused primarily by longstanding economic problems and inequities in that country?	64.4	23.1	12.6
18. Should the United States provide military hardware to the Government of El Salvador?	36.2	49.5	14.3
19. Should the United States provide economic assistance to the Government of El Salvador?	46.4	40.0	13.6
20. Should the United States provide troops, if necessary, to keep the Government in power in El Salvador?	11.4	81.8	7.0
21. Should the United States refrain from any form of involvement in El Salvador, and completely cut off economic and military aid?	34.0	51.1	13.9
GENERAL ISSUES
22. The U.S. Supreme Court recently held that Federal law precludes military retirement benefits from becoming part of a property settlement in a divorce. Should Congress pass new legislation which would change the substance of this decision?	47.0	41.2	11.3
23. Should Congress pass a law declaring that human life begins at conception?	27.9	65.0	7.1
24. Do you support a constitutional amendment which would grant the States, as well as the Federal Government, the power to regulate or prohibit abortions, with the more restrictive statute prevailing?	28.7	65.3	6.0
25. Do you support Federal legislation which would permit the use of marihuana under strict medical supervision for therapeutic purposes such as the treatment of glaucoma or the side effects associated with chemotherapy?	82.8	12.9	4.3
26. Do you support the new Federalism proposal for returning full responsibility for the food stamp and aid to families with dependent children (AFDC) programs to the States, with the Federal Government in return assuming full responsibility for the medicaid program?	71.7	18.0	10.4
27. Do you believe private, nonprofit church-related schools should be exempt from paying taxes regardless of their racial policies?	38.2	57.1	4.6
28. Do you support extension of the Clean Air Act in its present form?	45.5	33.1	21.5
29. Should clean air standards be relaxed in order to reduce the cost and regulatory burden on business and industry?	37.1	52.1	10.7
30. Do you support accelerated decontrol of natural gas prices?	48.3	39.1	12.7

REGULATORY REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WRIGHT). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEVITAS) is recognized for 60 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to take the full amount of time which has been allotted today, but I do think it is important once again to raise the issue of whatever happened to regulatory reform?

The issue is, Why has not this House had the opportunity to vote on a matter that the majority of the Members of this House, of both parties, have indicated their overwhelming support for? We are talking about a bill, Mr. Speaker, which the other body passed unanimously, without a dissenting vote, and for some strange reason, some reason which is unexplained and unexplainable, that legislation has not yet come to the floor of this House so that the Members can exercise their right and express their will, which is the will of the American people.

What is regulatory reform all about?

It is simply this, Mr. Speaker. Over the last number of years, the last 40 or 50 years, we have evolved in this country a fourth branch of Government consisting of unelected bureaucrats who have exercised the powers that belong to the elected officials of our Government; and in the course of that time there has been a proliferation of rules and regulations that have the force and direction of law and that people have to deal with in their daily lives and livelihood even though the people who issue those rules and regulations, Mr. Speaker, are not elected by the citizens of this country.

It is that very reason that has contributed so much to the cynicism and negative feelings that people in this country have about their own Government because there is a lack of accountability.

Rules are issued that cost millions and millions of dollars without any assessment in advance of what the benefits are or what the costs are.

When those issues are taken to court by the people in this country, who can afford to go to court these days, every presumption is in favor of the unelected bureaucrat, and yet, article I, section 1 of the Constitution, the very first article, and the very first section, provides that the legislative power of this Nation is vested in a Congress elected by the people, and regulatory reform not only is designed to make the procedures by which these rules and regulations and actions of unelected bureaucrats are considered, but it also will give to the elected Congress the responsibility to review those rules and regulations and, where necessary, Mr. Speaker, to veto and reject them because they go beyond the intent of Congress, because they are arbitrary or oppressive or because they are just plain dumb. But that is our responsibility, Mr. Speaker.

These rules and regulations are issued by people who as our distinguished majority leader has said on several occasions, has never suffered the inconvenience of running for public office. They are not accountable.

Now why, Mr. Speaker, has this legislation not come to the floor of this House. The regulatory reform legislation was reported out of the Judiciary Committee in February of this year with bipartisan support. The legislative veto bill which has over 250 cosponsors, well over a majority of the Members of this House, coming from both parties, has still not been brought to the House for its consideration.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that those who have been responsible for keeping the Congress, this House, from expressing its will, should be and will be held accountable for that.

It is a simple matter of letting the people of this country regain control over their own Government through their elected representatives through regulatory reform.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVITAS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I simply want to congratulate him for raising this issue this evening that he has raised on several occasions. I think the people should thank him for his diligence in pursuing this very, very important matter. He is right that the majority of the Members of this House not only favor the legislation but want to vote on the legislation. We have not been given that opportunity. I think that is a shame. But I think that the gentleman himself needs to be congratulated for the fact that he has come to this floor time after time after time and it has been my impression has received some assurances on some of those occasions that we were going to get some action on this bill in the rather near future and it has never come to be.

□ 2120

The gentleman gets the assurances and then we go weeks more without that piece of legislation seeing the light of day on the floor. I want to say to the gentleman, I hope he does not become discouraged. I hope he continues the fight. There are a lot of us who appreciate what he is doing, because it is a fight well worth making.

Mr. LEVITAS. I thank my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, for those kind remarks and I can assure him that I never give up hope. I am optimistic and I have reason to believe, based on some recent conversations, that the will of this House will be reflected in decisions made by its leadership.

I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LUNGREN. I thank the gentleman for bringing this to our attention. As the gentleman knows, several weeks ago I addressed a question to the majority leader when we were talking about the schedule, when it appeared to some of us that we did not have the most urgent matters coming up. I inquired as to whether the regulatory reform bill would be before us the following week and as the gentleman will recall, the majority leader said, "All things are possible."

We see now that all things are possible, but a lot of things are not probable.

I am concerned about this as a member of the Judiciary Committee because I remember back in February when we passed it out, some of us thought at that time if we passed it out that early, we would certainly get to it on the floor sometime during the spring so we could have some realistic opportunity for perhaps going to the Senate with a different version than they had, going to conference, and actually getting a bill this year.

As the gentleman recalls, the Member from California on his side of the aisle, who was the head of the subcommittee that brought it forward was George Danielson, who is of course now a sitting judge in California. I just talked to him when I was home recently and it sounds as though he has been on the bench for a long time. I just hope that we will be able to bring this to the floor at some time before Mr. Danielson ascends to the Supreme Court of the State of California or the U.S. Supreme Court, but I kind of wonder.

I know the gentleman is urging optimism here. I hope there is some reasonable prospect for optimism, because I think the gentleman is correct. The American people want this. The majority of the Members of the House want it. I am sure we can get the majority of the Senate to come up with some version. We should have this legislation this year before we go back to the electorate and tell them that we have not had an opportunity to do it within a 2-year span.

Mr. LEVITAS. Well, I really appreciate the comments of the gentleman from California, who is a member of the Judiciary Committee and knows what we are talking about.

I also appreciate the remarks the gentleman has made about our former colleague, George Danielson, who has devoted so many years of his life to this.

This is not a partisan issue. It is not even a liberal versus conservative issue. If one looks at the cosponsors of this legislation, you will see people who are described as being the most liberal and as the most conservative. It is not a business versus consumer issue. It simply is restoring to the American people through their elected representatives some control over their own Government.

One of the things that troubles me is that many years ago, before I came to this House, before I had the honor of being elected to public office, I used to read as a youngster about how people who were concerned about progressive issues and liberal issues, civil rights in particular, felt frustrated because the Rules Committee at that time was under control of some very arch conservatives who would not even let the Congress vote on issues and the reformers and the progressives and the liberals kept railing against the procedures of this House in the Rules Committee, the rule of Judge Smith of Virginia who would not let legislation come to the floor. Now they are no longer there and yet the practices seem to continue.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVITAS. I am happy to yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Arkansas, who has been one of the leaders in this whole effort and has really stood up when it was important to speak forth.

Mr. ANTHONY. Well, I would like to commend my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia, for actually taking the lead and pushing so hard. As I came into the Congress and I looked around and I saw this issue and I realized that it was a very good piece of legislation, and as the gentleman says, a piece of legislation that cuts across all philosophical and special interest groups and one that would be truly good for the country and as a result I did adopt the gentleman's viewpoint and I started working with the gentleman.

I just want to commend the gentleman for all the effort he has put into the bill in 1981. We were successful in overcoming some of those objections, even to the extent that some of the people who were originally opposed to it saw the light at the end of the year and became some of the most outspoken supporters of regulatory reform.

I think we need to encourage the leadership to put it on the agenda and bring it to the House floor. I think it would be one of the most important pieces of legislation this Congress could adopt. I just want to assure the gentleman that I will continue to work with him in hopes that we can do that before the year is up.

Mr. LEVITAS. I thank the gentleman very much not only his comments, but also for his persistent and consistent support.

You know, this is one of the issues that I get the feeling from time to time where the people in America have a better understanding of their Government than some of the people in Washington. I think they really do understand what this is all about. They may not articulate it with the same precise legal formulas that we are talking about here, but they know that when they confront a situation, whether it is a member of a local school board or the administrator of a hospital or someone who is making out their income tax, that most of the things they are having to deal with are issues or rules or regulations that have been issued by persons who have never been elected and who are not accountable for those decisions.

It seems to me that we in this House need to be much more responsive to what the people in this country already understand, that government by bureaucracy is not government by the people, that the first article of the Constitution did not accidentally vest the legislative powers in the Congress of the United States.

It is, I must confess, frustrating. It is not discouraging, but it is frustrating to find such an ordeal in simply restoring to this institution, Mr. Speaker, the powers which the Founding Fathers envisioned that it would have.

Mr. Speaker, you are the Speaker of this House. You are the leading Member of this body, of this institution. It should be your role to act on behalf of this House in the exercise of its constitutional powers.

I understand there are controversial issues surrounding regulatory reform, but I think it would be worse than a shame and a disgrace if the Members of this House did not have the opportunity in a timely fashion to vote upon this. I think it would be a reflection on the institution itself that could frustrate the desires of the Members of this House in an overwhelming majority fashion to express the will of the American people. We ought not to do that.

What concerns me is that the longer it is taking us to deal with an issue of this sort, the more the American people must wonder why.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge you, I plead with you, do what you can to see that in a timely fashion this bill is brought to the floor of the House, not in a manner that we see it here kicking and screaming, reluctantly dragged out of the Rules Committee under some procedure, but because that is what this House ought to be doing. That is what the Members want and that is what the American people want.

I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. NELLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia for yielding. I would like to associate myself with his remarks. I applaud him for his efforts on this particular subject and would like to point out that from the years between 1975 and 1979, I had the distinct honor and pleasure of serving as the operations director on the Subcommittee of Oversight and Investigations, which was then the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. A great deal of my time and my effort and the effort of the staff which I was associated with was spent on the subject of regulatory reform.

□ 2130

At that particular time, I think it was 1978 or 1979, we issued a report that was 2 inches thick, maybe 3 inches thick, on regulatory reform wherein many, many recommendations were made, constructive recommendations, to reform the regulatory process in this country, and yet we are still clamoring in this House, and tonight we are asking that we have an opportunity to hear and to vote on regulatory reform, and yet it has not been done.

Something that has been in the hopper since 1975 or 1976, and here it is 1982. I applaud your efforts. I hope that finally some substantial progress can be made on regulatory reform in this country.

I agree with the gentleman it is not a partisan issue; it is a consumer issue. It is not a political issue; it is something long overdue in this country and something I hope we can squarely face in this Congress.

Mr. LEVITAS. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his comments, and also for sharing with the Members of this House his special insight because of his prior experience.

One of the interesting things is the fact that many people who are affected by regulations do not realize that a regulation has the force and effect of law. If a person violates a regulation, they can lose a benefit, be subjected to a penalty, or indeed go to jail, just as they could for violating a statute passed in the way we learned about in our civics courses in high school. But those rules and regulations have never been considered or passed upon by anybody elected by the people of this country.

The fact of the matter is that the relationship, the ratio between rules and regulations issued by unelected officials as compared to laws passed by the Congress of the United States is about 10 to 1—10 to 1. And yet for some reason we are unwilling, or certainly so far unable, to come to grips with making that process a more accountable process.

And the proliferation of these regulations: Several years ago I asked someone on my staff to bring to me the Federal Register, in which these rules and regulations are published, for a day. I think it was about 10 years ago. They brought me a stack of books which was approximately a foot high.

I asked for the same books to be brought for the year 1980. It went over my head, it was so high. It was over 6 feet tall.

We have not only had a proliferation on these rules and regulations, but as they have proliferated, the people who issue them have become less and less sensitive to the American people, less and less accountable to the American people.

I do not think it is asking too much to let the Members of this House vote on legislation that would try to return to the American people control over their own Government. It is an opportunity for us to see democracy in action.

The worst thing that I think could happen is for there to be a perception that there is some reason, some unexpressed reason, why we are having to drag out and pull out, like pulling teeth, the opportunity to vote on something that a majority of the Members of this House have already supported and that the other body has passed by a unanimous vote.

Is there something that is so bad, Mr. Speaker, with a bill that we cannot even vote on it which was supported by the two Senators from your own Commonwealth of Massachusetts?

I do not think so. I acknowledge the fact that all of these things take time, and I appreciate the fact that you and members of your staff are actively working on this matter and are pursuing with diligence, I hope, the effort to bring this matter to the floor. But as each day goes by, as each grain of sand falls down through that hourglass that ticks toward the end of this session, questions have to be raised as to whether we really are going to have an opportunity to deal with this. I would hope so, Mr. Speaker.

I ask my colleagues in this House, an overwhelming majority of whom support this legislation and have cosponsored it, to understand that at the Clerk's table there is a discharge petition, No. 17, which is available for Members to sign, and when 218 Members have signed it we will have an opportunity to vote on it.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, that we do not get to that point. That is not the best way to consider legislation, but this is legislation which has been reported out of a committee in the House. The other bill, the legislative veto bill, was in a prior Congress reported out of a committee of the House. It is not a question of legislation that has not been considered. I think we have come to the time that this legislation has to be voted on and I would hope it would be voted on with the blessings and the help and assistance of the leadership of this House, because that is the best way to do it.

But however we have to do it, Mr. Speaker, I think that the American people are entitled to have this issue considered, voted upon, and I have no doubt of the outcome. It will be passed and it will become part of the laws of this Nation, and I think that we will see, over the years, as a result, that the American people will once again realize they do have control over their own Government.

THE 24TH ANNIVERSARY OF CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FRANK). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, in keeping with a longtime custom I am pleased once again to join with my colleague from Illinois (Mr. DERWINSKI) in observing the 24th annual commemoration of Captive Nations Week, July 11-18, as designated by Public Law 86-90, The Captive Nations Week Resolution.

The initial resolution was passed in 1959, during the first year that I was in Congress. I have, therefore, spoken on behalf of the Captive Nations virtually every year I have been in Congress. But, do we tire of speaking out against Soviet expansionism and repression? No. Because I must also note that since I have come to Congress, the Soviets have added Cuba, several countries in Southeast Asia, and most recently, Afghanistan, to the already long list of Captive Nations.

I rise today to assure the brave people of the Captive Nations, and their friends and families throughout the world that we will not ease the pressure on the Soviet Union until the Soviets allow freedom, self-determination, and basic human rights for the people of the Captive Nations.

Observance of Captive Nations Week is different this year from in the past, because for the first time, the President has dramatized the event by holding a special signing ceremony of the proclamation in the Rose Garden, which I attended on Monday. I am very glad to see this kind of support for the cause of Captive Nations coming from the White House.

As I reflect on Captive Nations Week last year, I am afraid that conditions have not improved very much, and in some areas have even deteriorated.

The brillance of the solidarity movement, which we are so proud of and hopeful for, has been dimmed by the imposition of tough martial law and the imprisonment and suppression of Lech Walesa and other Solidarity leaders. Solidarity still lives, though, and the challenge to the Soviet rule remains, but the drama in Poland does not dominate our headlines as it once did, and the movement lost some of its momentum. I rise today to reaffirm my support for the courageous men and women of Solidarity.

Another disturbing development viz the captive nations has been the reluctance of some of our NATO allies to support the American policy regarding economic sanctions against the Soviet Union which were imposed because of that government's actions against the people of Poland and Afghanistan. This is most vividly seen in the failure of some of our European allies to support the U.S. embargo on materials and technology for the construction of the Soviet pipeline. This "business as usual" approach is frustrating to those of us who want to keep the pressure on the Soviets to ease their repression of the people in the countries under their domination.

I was heartened, however, by a last-minute development at the U.N. Special Session on Disarmament, which closed last week in New York City. I had the great honor to be appointed by President Reagan to be a delegate to this Conference, and had a very enlightening experience in international negotiations.

One of the final conference documents contained standard language from the U.N. Charter about the nonuse of force and the prohibition against invading and occupying other countries. Speaking against this language were East Germany, Vietnam, Hungary, the U.S.S.R., Afghanistan, Bulgaria, and Byelorussia. Speaking for the language (which everyone took to be a reference to the invasions of Afghanistan, Kampuchea, and the crackdown in Poland) were Pakistan, Sweden, Nigeria, Kenya, Thailand, and Romania. In essence the nonalined had finally ganged up on the Soviet bloc.

This kind of clear rejection of aggression and violence will help bring an end to the plight of the captive nations. The United States alone cannot bring freedom and self-determination to the people of the captive nations. We need help from our allies and from freedom-loving people throughout the world.

The observance of Captive Nations Week allows Americans across our land to renew their commitment to help the captive nations achieve freedom, and we call on other free nations to join us in this effort.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous matter, on the subject of this special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my distinguished colleague from New York (Mr. GILMAN).

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DERWINSKI) in marking the 24th anniversary of Captive Nations Week. There were 26 captive nations on July 17, 1959, when Captive Nations Week was established by a joint resolution of Congress. Today there are 31 captive nations, Afghanistan being the most recent addition. Since World War II, smaller nations all over the world have been increasingly demanding and receiving their independence. It is important for Americans to remember and to remind the world that there are today many nations under Soviet domination which are being denied the right to govern themselves. While staunchly supporting the efforts of the peoples of Poland and Afghanistan to resist Soviet domination, we must not forget the many captive nations which have been incorporated into the Soviet Union itself.

This past year, there has been renewed activity by the Ukrainians, who became a captive people and part of the Soviet Union in 1920. The Ukrainians, who make up 40 percent of all political prisoners in the Soviet Union, formed the Ukrainian Helsinki Group in 1976 to monitor the implementation of the human rights clauses of the Helsinki accords. Last November, activists hung the blue and yellow flag of the independent Ukraine over the Communist Party headquarters in the city of Dnipropetrovsk (Nyepropetrovsk). Next to the flag hung a poster, directed at Soviet President Brezhnev, with the words: "We are in solidarity with all those that are against you."

The Ukrainians have received support from other oppressed peoples in the Soviet Union. In October 1978, Yosyf Zisels, a Jew, joined the Ukrainian Helsinki Group. He subsequently compiled and publicized materials on 76 Ukrainian human rights activists who were imprisoned in psychiatric hospitals for their beliefs. Zisels himself has not been incarcerated.

We are told by Soviet Government officials that the Soviet people completely support the occupation of Afghanistan, the newest captive nation. However, last November in Tallin, the capital of Estonia, leaflets appeared calling for a 30-minute strike on December 1 to protest Soviet involvement in both Afghanistan and Poland. The strikers also planned to demand an improvement in both the human rights and economic situations in Estonia. The strike did not take place because its leaders were intimidated by the police. We in the United States must support the efforts of captive peoples, like the Estonians, who have had the courage to protest against their oppression. How many more Estonians are there, or Lithuanians or Georgians or others who have been threatened or imprisoned by Soviet authorities for questioning the actions of the Government?

May we be inspired by the Soviet workers who have, like their Polish counterparts in Solidarity, demanded the establishment of labor unions independent of government control. In a letter addressed to the Ukranian human rights movement and the international labor movement, Kiev worker Mykola Pohyba writes:

> There are two antagonistic classes in the U.S.S.R.—The exploited and the exploiters. The working class, exploited by the state, sinks into greater servitude * * *. The principal aim of the government labor unions * * * is to extract the utmost from the worker, while keeping the working class in blind obedience * * *. Exploitation is such that the least sign of protest is stifled and the result is that men are transformed into beasts of burden * * *.

Our attention today, on this 24th observance of Captive Nations Week, is focused on captive nations such as Poland and Afghanistan. But let us not forget the peoples living under direct control of the Soviet Union, who like Mr. Pohyba, have been imprisoned for telling the truth about the conditions under which ordinary people must live in the so-called workers paradise. And let us not forget the many oppressed peoples whose hopes for freedom were encouraged by the human rights clause of the Helsinki Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. And let us remind the world that it was the Soviet Union, as well as the United States and 33 other nations, which signed the document confirming and extending the effective exercise of human rights to all European peoples.

□ 2140

Mr. STRATTON. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to my friend from Pennsylvania (Mr. NELLIGAN).

Mr. NELLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague on the Armed Services Committee, the gentleman from New York, for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join my distinguished colleagues in observing the 24th anniversary of Captive Nations Week. For over two decades, Congress has set aside 1 week each year to honor those millions of people who live against their will under the shadows of Communist tyranny. During this week, let us reaffirm our strong support for those who struggle to obtain the liberty that is the birthright of all. So long as there are people in the world who are enslaved, the United States will not forget them, nor the source of their misery.

Although 24 years have gone by since Congress first approved a joint resolution requesting the President to proclaim Captive Nations Week, I believe this year's observance is especially fitting.

The imposition of martial law in Poland last December provided the world with a stark example of the freedoms which are denied under Communist rule. Faced with a movement to establish an independent trade union, the Polish Government responded with ruthless, authoritarian tactics. Faced with a movement to achieve basic freedoms of association and expression, that government responded with the force of arms.

This situation of continuing martial law, combined with the jailing of Solidarity members and efforts to censor communications and quash all forms of public dissent in Poland, should bring a basic message home to all Americans.

The Polish experience demonstrates that there is no real freedom under Communist rule; it shows clearly that Communist governments have held their people captive in their own land and beholden to the interests of the state, which seeks only its own survival. We can also not ignore the plight of the Baltic States, which were forcefully incorporated into the U.S.S.R. At present, the Soviet Union continues its program of "Russification" of the Baltic States—a rather benign term for cultural genocide.

While more hidden from the world's view, the Baltic States remain as an ever-present example of the denial of human rights by the Soviet Union. The letter and intent of the Helsinki accords are violated on a daily basis in the Baltic States, and we can never recognize Soviet authority over this region.

I look forward to a time when the observance of Captive Nations Week is no longer needed, and when freedom can be restored to those who suffer under Communist governments.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time I have risen in this Chamber in support of the captive nations. Often we hear the question, What can we do in Congress to help? Do special orders such as the one we are doing now really help? Do 1-minute speeches on the floor of this Chamber really help? Do letters to imprisoned and enslaved people in their own countries really help?

Well, this morning when I woke at 6 o'clock and my alarm went off, I awakened to the 6 o'clock news, and I heard that the Communist regime in Poland was releasing many of the Solidarity prisoners, and they were saying that they were hoping that by the end of the year martial law in Poland could be lifted. I said to myself, thinking of the special order I was going to participate in this evening, maybe we are getting through to the Communist bloc. I said to myself, is it a coincidence that with Captive Nations Week in America the Polish dictatorship, the Polish Communists have finally decided to release some of those Polish political prisoners? I think what we are doing does help, and I think if we continue to do so, we may see freedom realized by the people of the captive nations.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished friend, the gentleman from New York, for yielding to me and giving me the opportunity to participate in this special order.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRATTON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I commend the gentleman for taking this time for us to have the 24th observance of Captive Nations Week.

Mr. Speaker, 24 years ago the U.S. Congress unanimously passed the Captive Nations Week resolution to acknowledge those less fortunate people whose religious, political, and individual freedoms remained unrecognized by the Soviet Union.

At this time, I believe it all the more appropriate for us to review this resolution, first signed into law by President Eisenhower on July 17, 1959. The resolution follows:

PROCLAMATION 3303—CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK, 1959

Whereas many nations throughout the world have been made captive by the imperialistic and aggressive policies of Soviet communism; and

Whereas the peoples of the Soviet-dominated nations have been deprived of their national independence and their individual liberties; and

Whereas the citizens of the United States are linked by bonds of family and principle to those who love freedom and justice on every continent; and

Whereas it is appropriate and proper to manifest to the peoples of the captive nations the support of the Government and the people of the United States of America for their just aspirations for freedom and national independence; and

Whereas by a joint resolution approved July 17, 1959, the Congress has authorized and requested the President of the United States of America to issue a proclamation designating the third week in July 1959 as "Captive Nations Week," and to issue a similar proclamation each year until such time as freedom and independence shall have been achieved for all the captive nations of the world:

Now, Therefore, I, Dwight D. Eisenhower, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate the week beginning July 19, 1959, as Captive Nations Week.

I invite the people of the United States of America to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities, and I urge them to study the plight of the Soviet-dominated nations and to recommit themselves to the support of the just aspirations of the peoples of those captive nations.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this seventeenth day of July in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and fifty-nine, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and eighty-fourth.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

By the President:

DOUGLAS DILLON,
Acting Secretary of State.

Unfortunately, upon review, one can readily see that the Captive Nations Week resolution remains timeless in 1982 as it is almost even more applicable now than when it was first adopted. In a world of constant change, it often is difficult to notice the day-to-day and year-to-year changes that occur. For this reason it is important to reflect upon the past 24 years to see what has resulted in the world during this period. Sometimes, only by comparing photographs or snapshots in time are we able to notice any change at all. Reexamining the past quarter of a century, it becomes obvious that we live in a world ever more dominated by tyranny and oppression. Soviet domination and influence has clearly grown to its largest proportions ever.

In fact, the birth of Soviet imperialism goes back to the Russian Revolution. In 1917, instead of realizing the greater freedom and opportunity that was hoped for after the revolution, the Russian people had imposed upon them a totalitarian regime. In 1920, the people of Ukraine, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Byelorussia, Cossakia, Georgia, Idel-Ural, North Caucasia, Turkestan, and Mongolia also came under the control of this regime.

In 1940, the Soviet Union invaded Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. After World War II, an Iron Curtain was placed around Eastern Europe as Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Poland, Romania, and Yugoslavia also lost control of their national destinies to the Soviet Union. And more recently, nations on other continents—Asia, Africa, South America—have become victims of Communist oppression.

In 1917, or 1959 for that matter, could we have foreseen such growth in tyranny in the world as well as such blatant disregard for religious, political, and individual freedom? Could we have anticipated the growing Soviet influence on other continents? This leads one to seriously ponder what our world will look like in the next 24 years as we enter the 21st century. This is a question we must honestly and seriously consider in the Congress, in our country, and among all free nations.

The ongoing activities of the Soviet Union to expand their sphere of influence demand that we never forget the continued repression of millions of people. As the oldest surviving democracy in the world, it is our duty to attempt to ease the subjugation of the citizens in these countries. The 24th Captive Nations Week anniversary enables us to reaffirm our unwavering support for the liberation of all captive people.

We must admire the determination and will of the Polish and Afghanistan people to achieve individual and national freedom. By their actions, we are reminded of our Nation's beginnings. We can remember Patrick Henry, for whom the choice was a mutually exclusive proposition: liberty or possible death from fighting for freedom. We can recall that it was our Founding Fathers who recognized the price of freedom is eternal vigilance. And it was Thomas Paine who wrote: "He that would make his own liberty secure must guard even his enemy from oppressions."

During the month of July it is fitting that we begin the month in recognition of our Nation's Declaration of Independence and our fundamental premise "that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness."

It is also fitting in July that we give recognition to those captive nations and the plight of those unable to realize many of the freedoms that we enjoy as birthrights. And it is truly hoped that the words of Thomas Jefferson's Declaration of Independence will live on forever for our country and may one day become reality for all peoples of the world.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for taking this time to remind us of something that is of importance to us.

□ 2150

Mr. STRATTON. I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. LUNGREN) for his very eloquent statement.

● Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, for the 24th year, we are pausing to observe Captive Nations Week to offer our support to the millions of men, women, and children who live under Soviet domination but continue to yearn for freedom.

President Eisenhower proclaimed the first Captive Nations Week in 1959, but unfortunately since then, the list of captive nations has only become longer. Soviet expansionism now touches all parts of the world, including our own hemisphere, and as the Communist influence has grown, so has the list of Soviet human rights violations.

During the 1970's, the record of Soviet repression became so dismal that the leaders of the United States and Europe met in Helsinki to draw up a document of principles to insure the preservation of human rights throughout the world. Thirty-five nations, including the Soviet Union, agreed to and signed the Helsinki accord in 1975, which reaffirmed the belief in human rights and fundamental freedoms, equal rights and self-determination of people, territorial integrity of states, and the refraining of the use of force and aggression. In the 6 years since the Helsinki act was agreed to, the Soviet Union has managed to violate every section of the agreement.

On Saturday, July 17, I joined with the people of Pinellas County, Fla., and many former citizens of captive nations to denounce the worsening record of Soviet repression. The Soviets total disregard for the Helsinki agreement makes it impossible for us to believe the Soviet Union will respect any treaties or will follow any moral guidelines or standards. Now that the Communist influence is expanding within our own hemisphere, in countries such as Cuba and Nicaragua, it is obvious that the Soviet threat is greater today than ever before. As the leaders of the free world, we must be prepared to meet the threat or more countries will be added to the list of captive nations, which is already much too long.

This is the message we sent to the Soviet leaders during our rally in St. Petersburg, and for the information of my colleagues, I would like to include the text of my speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

REMARKS OF CONGRESSMAN BILL YOUNG AT A CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK RALLY

It is a great honor and a privilege to be with you today as we begin the 24th annual recognition of Captive Nations Week. I am pleased to be home in St. Petersburg, Mayor Freeman, where we have again proved by having so many representatives of different nations of the world represented here, how we can live together, work together and play together with a mutual respect for each other, with mutual love for God and with a mutual understanding of each other's problems. It is an opportunity for people to work in freedom, to play, to be with their families, to worship the Lord, not to offend others, not to have a claim on some others property or some others business, but to be free people, free in our own hearts, in our own minds and our own souls.

I'm happy to be here with Victoria Jacobson and so many other people who worked with her in organizing this event. It's important that we continue this recognition.

As Dr. Bobelis said, one of my responsibilities in Congress is to work with the Central Intelligence Agency and the Defense Intelligence Agency and other intelligence organizations we have, in watching the Soviets to see what they are about to do, and to ensure that we are prepared for any actions they might take so that the United States and the rest of the free world do not someday become captive nations, such as those we have mentioned today. I hope you, as well as the Soviets, understand that I am determined to ensure that no other nations become captives of the Soviet Union and that I will do everything possible to turn the tide of communism, to reverse the Soviet expansion which began in 1920, and to remove from the bonds of captivity those people who today pray for the day when it will happen.

President Reagan wants me to reaffirm to you his personal commitment to continue this observation until the captive people of the world are free, and to pledge that he will do everything possible to free those people.

I've had the privilege to visit a number of the captive nations represented today, and I can tell you that while the nation and people themselves might physically be held captive, in their hearts they are not captive. In their hearts they are free people, and since the 1920s, when Soviet domination began, several generations have lived in captivity, but even they are committed to one day securing freedom for their nation. And they're anxious, and I'm anxious, and I know you're anxious to see that freedom.

It is essential that we have programs like this in the United States and throughout the free world to call attention to the continuation of Soviet repression because the Soviets really believe that they can control the world by taking one country at a time, the latest example being Afghanistan. The Soviets believe that if they pull back and put on a good face for a couple of months, or a couple of years, the world will forget their aggression so they can move into another part of the world, such as Iran or Saudi Arabia. That's their tactic—take what they can today and when world opinion rises up; stop, wait, be patient and then move in somewhere else. The Soviets must understand that we are aware of this tactic and that we are not going to stand idly by while they exercise their control over the entire world. I don't know of anyone in this audience who would disagree that this is their tactic. Their plan is to eliminate freedom anywhere that it reigns in the world because the greatest threat to the survival of the Soviet communist system is freedom, because anywhere freedom lives—where the flame of freedom burns—that is a potential threat to the expansionistic plans of the Soviet Union.

As we proclaim this Captive Nations Week, there's one other nation that should be placed on the list of captive nations. That nations is Russia, because the people of Russia want freedom. They don't like being under the domination of the Soviet Politburo. With a few exceptions, the Soviet people don't like the communist system. I know this because in the work that I do in the Congress, I have the opportunity, on occasion, to visit with Soviet people. Not just the ordinary citizens, but the people who are or have served in high ranking position in the Soviet system. People who would risk their very life to escape, and some who have. I've had the privilege of visiting with some defectors who have been helpful to the United States in our quest to preserve freedom. And the stories they tell of the Soviet system would make you cry. Their stories would sadden your heart if you could hear what the Soviet leaders do to their own people. And I say to you that for these reasons, I think it is appropriate that we add to the list of captive nations the people of the Soviet Union. They are on occasion not allowed to visit their families, they are sometimes not allowed to work at jobs that provide them with enough money to live adequately, and they are often denied the freedom of movement.

On this platform today are many people who are dedicated to preserving the freedom of the United States and the free world and for regaining the freedoms that have been lost to the Soviets in so many other parts of the world. You have met many of them today, and you have heard comments from some of them. They never fail to come down on the side of freedom, on the side of strength for the United States, for we all know that strength will deter aggression. There are those in our country who do not believe that. There are some in our country who believe that if we turn the other cheek and lay down our arms, the Soviet Union will do the same. While I certainly understand that others have the right to that opinion, I must tell you that I disagree. The record of the Soviet Union is clear. It is just not going to happen.

In closing, I want to tell you about this document which I hold in my hand. It is a reprint of the Helsinki Accord. After the world got sick and tired of human rights violations on the part of the Soviets, we held a great international meeting in Helsinki and drafted pages and pages of guarantees of human rights for people. We guaranteed, among other things, the right of self determination for people in their free nation, and we guaranteed them the right to be free from external aggression or oppression or subversion. The Soviet Union was a signatory to this document, along with 35 other nations. For those who believe the Soviet Politburo, that the Soviet communists want to be good neighbors, that believe if we lay down our arms they will do the same, I invite you to read this document. And after you read this document, I am prepared to show you page after page, paragraph after paragraph where the Soviets have methodically and ruthlessly violated and disregarded every section of this guarantee of freedom.

Ladies and gentlemen, stopping the Soviet expansion is a major campaign, a major crusade, a major battle, and the thing that gives me more hope than anything else is my conviction that our God is not going to permit the Soviets to successfully complete their plan of world domination.●

● Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, the freedom to express one's belief, the freedom to travel in an uninhibited manner, the freedom to participate in the political process, the freedom to live not subject to tyrannical and autocratic rule—we regard these freedoms as part of the normal, expected way of life in our country. However, it is not a given in countries throughout the world. Too often, we forget that millions of people across the globe are involved in a constant struggle, courageously trying to extricate themselves from the iron fist of oppression. Today, we dedicate our attention to those who suffer under despotic control and those who bravely work to secure freedom for all people.

This summer marks the second anniversary of the rise of a group of bold Polish freedom fighters. Devoted, skillful, and determined—these people won the world's hearts, as they valiantly advanced the cause of a people whose government had and still denies them the most basic of human rights. Sadly, the Polish people have discovered that the forces of oppression do not easily surrender. Nevertheless, despite their temporary setback, the Polish Solidarity movement workers bravely continue their struggle.

Today, we salute the relentless efforts of the people of Poland and express our solidarity with them.

In December of 1979, while Americans joined together to celebrate Christmas and the coming of the New Year, one found little reason to celebrate in the nation of Afghanistan. The besieged people of Afghanistan—like their kin in Poland—are engaged in a constant battle to gain control over their homeland. For over 2½ years, fighting against enormous odds, the people of Afghanistan have dauntlessly defended their country against the grip of foreign domination. Today, we reserve a special place in our hearts for the freedom fighters in Afghanistan and unite with them in their battle to preserve Afghanistan's sovereignty.

For those who believe that we ought not to concern ourselves with the plight of our fellow freedom loving peoples around the world, may I remind my colleagues that we, too, were once a captive nation. While we did succeed in attaining our liberty and sovereignty, the American Revolution may have failed had it not been for the generous help of other nations—including, ironically, Poland. As a nation which cherishes that precious liberty, freedom, we must now lead the way in combating tyranny and oppression across the globe.

Today, as we honor Captive Nations Week, we address ourselves to the aggrieved people whose most basic human rights are held captive by autocratic, tyrannical governments, and devote our energies to establish a world where despotism and oppression languish and where liberty and freedom prevail.●

● Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, this week marks the 24th anniversary of Captive Nations Week, a time in which we pay tribute to millions of citizens around the world who live under the ominous shadow of communism.

The people of Poland, Hungary, Lithuania, Ukraine, Romania, and Czechoslovakia, to name a few countries, are continually denied their basic human rights. However, these freedom loving citizens struggle daily to retain their cultural and religious identity. Captive Nations Week serves as a reminder to the world that the United States must continue to be the beacon of hope for millions of citizens who pray for their freedom and civil liberties.

No one can take the inalienable rights we hold so dear to us. Yet, people in these countries are denied the opportunity to express their religious convictions, are not allowed to gather and discuss issues, and are unable to freely exercise their self-determination as citizens because of an external, authoritative hold on their freedom. Never before has the need been greater for the free nations of the world to stand up to communism.

As Members of Congress and Americans we shall not forget those who live under Communist rule and oppression. We will continue to fight the oppressive tactics of the Soviet regime and one day celebrate the renewed independence of these captive nations.●

● Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to rise in support of the 24th obvservance of Captive Nations Week. I commend the President of the United States for his personal proclamation and the ceremony he held in the White House Rose Garden. I am especially proud to represent an area, the Lehigh Valley, of Pennsylvania, which has benefited richly from the many people who have emigrated from captive nations. I have observed firsthand the tremendous respect that these people have for the meaning of freedom. Many of the residents of the Lehigh Valley still retain a love for their original homelands and continue to hope and pray for the day when those homelands will be free and people can live without fear. I, too, pray for the day when this will happen.

As leaders of the free world, we carry the added responsibility of championing the cause of oppressed peoples. For the people of Central and Eastern Europe, the Baltic countries, Ukraine, other nations inside the U.S.S.R., Vietnam, Cuba, and Afghanistan, we in free countries must continue to be a beacon of hope. The hope is for the day when they regain their freedom and their native cultures and traditions transcend the so-called communism imposed by Soviet or other totalitarian forces. Our desire for their freedom and self-determination must always be in the forefront of our discussions with the Soviet Union. Those captive peoples, longing for freedom cannot be forgotten because their fate, but for the luck of history and geography, could be our own.

A little over a year ago, we rose in this Chamber to pause and observe not only the captive nations but to express optimism about the events taking place in Poland. Unfortunately, our joy over their achievements was shortlived and today we see them under even more repressive conditions than before the free labor movement existed. Our hearts and prayers go out to the Polish people and we acknowledge their courage and boldness to push for freedom.

What began in Gdansk, Poland, is the first authentic social upheaval on a nationwide scale in a country ruled by a Communist Party dominated by the Soviet Union. It challenged the absolutism of Communist power and consequently, it tacitly accepted the possibility of confrontation with the Soviet Union. The social upheaval that occurred in Poland is representative of the strong desire of Soviet-dominated countries to throw off the yoke of totalitarian rule and be independent, with self-determined governments.

An example of a continuing struggle against the Soviet tyrants, is the 2½-year-old war in Afghanistan between the Soviet Red Army and the Freedom Fighters. Nearly 3 years of continuous fighting and the Soviets are still unable to dominate the valiant Freedom Fighters and bring the hostilities to an end. The Afghan Freedom Fighters are at a disadvantage militarily—they are forced to use old Enfield rifles or whatever they can capture from the enemy. The tragedy of the war increases with Soviet use of "yellow rain" and other biological-chemical warfare against the civilian population. As many as 1 million Afghan men, women, and children may have been killed and countless more have been wounded. As many as 3 million have been driven from their homes and are living in the many refugee camps in Pakistan. In comparison, that would be equivalent to 16 million Americans dead and nearly 50 million driven from their towns and villages and into Canada and Mexico. And yet, in spite of this, they fight on.

The evidence that captive nations are recoiling against the Soviet imposed way of life is all around us. For many brave souls, no price is too great to pay for the cherished right to be free. And that has been the case for many years. There are so many heroes. Standing up to brutal secret police, risking you and your families well-being. Now that is heroism.

It is appropriate that today, we also pay tribute on its 40th anniversary to the Ukrainian Insurgent Army. This heroic group of insurgents consisted of a fighting force of over 200,000 men and waged battle in a two-front war against both Hitler's legions and Stalin's Red army. The scope of the struggle has even been acknowledged by Russians and Germans alike. For example, Nikita Khrushchev wrote in his memoirs that thousands of men were lost in a bitter struggle with Ukrainian nationalists.

Mr. Speaker, the day is fast approaching when even Soviet military and police strength alone will not be able to sustain a government which ignores the basic rights of its citizens to govern themselves. Eventually the Soviet Union will be forced to accept the fact that it has more to lose than to gain by blatantly ignoring the fundamental principles of national liberty and justice. What will ultimately convince the Soviets of the futility of continuing with their aggressive behavior and what will eventually convince them to abide by international laws, will be examples of nations such as Poland and Afghanistan resisting external intervention in their internal affairs.

One of the ways to help the people of these nations is with a more effective strategy in waging the battle of words, information and ideas. A strong and consistent message from the Voice of America, Radio Free Europe, and Radio Liberty is a sure way Americans can give vital information to millions of people under Soviet domination. An accurate picture of life provided to people behind the sealed borders is essential. They want to know more about their own industry, their own agriculture, their own labor force, housing, transportation, communications, and so forth. They are thirsting for news about their own societies. With news, with information, internal change becomes far more possible. Communications are a nonviolent and positive method in which results can be achieved through relatively small cost. The people behind the sealed borders need to know that there is another way—a way that could work for them too. A way that expands their possibilities, in their own lifetimes.

Our observance of Captive Nations Week is more than simply a tradition. It is an important reminder to the people of these captive nations that we have not forsaken them to eternal enslavement and we consider them as important to our own future.

Thank you.●

● Mr. DENARDIS. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to participate in the 24th observance of Captive Nations Week and to commemorate the brave struggle of Eastern European peoples to maintain their national identities while trying to secure basic human rights. We have recognized the third week of July as the annual observance of Captive Nations Week since the 86th Congress authorized the proclamation to pay tribute to these oppressed citizens.

We in the United States and throughout the free world must confirm our determination to work for the freedom of those enslaved by the U.S.S.R. and other Communist countries.

The captive nations list contains over two dozen countries. Because all people cherish freedom, this list does not symbolize defeat or a concession that the rest of the world condones such activity. Rather it strengthens our commitment never to accept those nations' captivity. As a people who enjoy personal liberty and national independence, it is our responsibility to support others in their quest for these goals.

Captive Nations Week is important as a message to the Soviet Union but even more important as an expression of commitment to those nations that are not free. We must continue to speak out against oppression around the world. The United States must continue to negotiate on and actively work for freedom for all nations laboring under Soviet oppression or the threat of Soviet aggression.

There is some solace in observing that the captive nations list has not grown over the past year. Unfortunately, neither has it been shortened. During Captive Nations Week we give voice to our belief that all men everywhere have the same inherent rights to freedom that Americans enjoy.

Mr. Speaker, during Captive Nations Week, we Americans must reaffirm our own tradition of self-rule and extend to the peoples of the captive nations a message of hope—hope founded in our belief that free men and women will ultimately prevail over those who deny individual rights and preach the supremacy of the state; hope in our conviction that the human spirit will ultimately triumph over the cult of the state.

While we can be justly proud of a government that is responsive to our people, we cannot be complacent. Captive Nations Week provides us with an opportunity to reaffirm publicly our commitment to the ideals of freedom and by so doing maintain a beacon of hope for oppressed people everywhere.

Mr. Speaker, the United States must continue to commemorate Captive Nations Week in order to offer support to the millions who are attempting to throw off the yoke of Soviet oppression by struggling for independence and freedom. We must never allow the Soviet Empire to feel that its forced acquisitions are either condoned or given tacit international legitimacy.●

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, on this 24th observance of Captive Nations Week, we as Americans affirm our dedication to liberty and our duty as a free people to express our concern in the strongest possible manner for the millions of unfortunate men and women enslaved in these unfortunate captive nations, who daily must face the dismal tyranny of communism.

A list of the captive nations follows:

Established list of captive nations

[Country, people, and year of Communist domination]

Armenia	1920
Azerbaijan	1920
Byelorussia	1920
Cossackia	1920
Georgia	1920
Idel-Ural	1920
North Caucasia	1920
Ukraine	1920
Far Eastern Republic	1922
Turkestan	1922
Mongolia	1924
Estonia	1940
Latvia	1940
Lithuania	1940
Albania	1946
Bulgaria	1946
Yugoslavia (Serbs, Croats, Slovenians, etc.)	1946
Poland	1947
Romania	1947
Czecho-Slovakia	1948
North Korea	1948
Hungary	1949
East Germany	1949
Mainland China	1949
Tibet	1951
North Vietnam	1954
Cuba	1960
Cambodia	1975
South Vietnam	1975
Laos	1975
Afghanistan	1980

The Communists have attempted to destroy the national identities of these countries by torture, exile, and execution. Nevertheless, they have been unable to crush the pride, cultures, and religions of these many peoples who must live under this brutality. We pause this week to pay tribute to these heroic men, women, and children who have bravely struggled and sacrificed so much to achieve liberty, and to those who continue today to resist the oppressor and decide the course of their own destiny.

This week is a time of reflection for Americans, a time to cherish our freedom, a time to renew our determination to take a strong stand in defense of the rights of oppressed peoples, and a time to strive for a day when all people will share in the blessings of liberty. As Americans, we are able, when many others are not, to make choices on where we live and travel, and how we will raise our children. The recognition that others are not as fortunate in maintaining their cultural and religious heritage must drive us relentlessly toward action on behalf of the peoples of the captive nations.

Millions of Americans who trace their origins to the captive nations, and to other lands, join each year during this special week to express their hope and their support for policies which will free these nations. I am proud to join my constituents in the 11th District of Illinois, which I am honored to represent, and all Americans, in offering our prayers that God will continue to keep us the strongest democracy among world powers, and give us the fortitude and strength to combat Communist totalitarianism wherever it appears on the face of the Earth.

A copy of the President's Captive Nations Week Proclamation follows:

A PROCLAMATION

During the past year, we have witnessed another tragic demonstration of the failure of tyranny to compete with the principles of freedom. The imposition of martial law in Poland on December 13, 1981, served as a bitter reminder that the quest for freedom and self-determination can only be restrained by force. It clearly demonstrated the moral bankruptcy of a system which has been unable to earn the support of its population after more than 35 years in power.

The same repression imposed on the Polish people is evidenced in various ways in other captive nations dominated by foreign military power and an alien Marxist-Leninist ideology. The brutal suppression of sovereignty in Afghanistan and the bondage of the captive peoples of Eastern Europe continue. Among the oppressed we must also count the peoples of many nationalities within the Soviet Union itself; they are victims of long decades of repression.

Twenty-three years ago, by a joint resolution approved July 17, 1959, (73 Stat. 212), the Congress authorized and requested the President to proclaim the third week in July as Captive Nations Week.

This week offers Americans an opportunity to honor our Nation's founders whose wisdom and commitment to self-determination and liberty have guided this country for more than 200 years. Let us once again reaffirm our faith that the aspiration for freedom will ultimately prevail over the rule of force and coercion which denies human rights to so many other parts of the world today.

Now, therefore, I, Ronald Reagan, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate the week beginning July 18, 1982, as Captive Nations Week.

I invite the people of the United States to observe this week with appropriate ceremonies and activities and to reaffirm their dedication to the ideals which unite us and inspire others.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this 19th day of July, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eighty-two, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and seventh.

RONALD REAGAN.●

● Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in commemorating the 24th observance of Captive Nations Week. It is clearly a time for all of us to reflect on the fact that there are millions of people around the world who do not enjoy the basic freedoms of thought, movement, and expression we all take for granted.

Captive Nations Week was formally approved by Congress and signed into law by President Eisenhower in 1959. Since that time the world has unfortunately seen more nations added to those in Eastern Europe who fell under the Communist yoke in the periods following the First and Second World Wars.

The Asian countries of Laos, South Vietnam, and Cambodia have been taken over by dictatorial Communist regimes. But the major oppressor of human rights and dignity around the world still remains the Soviet Union.

Captive Nations Week has for 24 years served as a reaffirmation of the belief of the United States and her people that every nation should be free to pursue its own destiny in a world governed by peace and cooperation. The statement of human liberty so eloquently expressed in our own Declaration of Independence was not meant only for us, but for men and women throughout the world.

Equally as important, it serves as a powerful reminder that while our Nation's record in protecting human rights is not perfect, it stands heads above all others.

As the worst offenders of human rights and dignity around the world, the Soviet Union must be constantly pressured in all ways to release from bondage the millions of freedom loving people in Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, and the Ukraine.

The Soviet ruling elite should take note that while it maintains political controls over those nations, it will never be able to obliterate the strong national traditions held by millions of people living in the Baltic States, Byelorussia, and the Transcaucasus.

No matter what the Soviets attempt, these brave people will continue to hold onto their cultural heritage. Despite all obstacles, they firmly believe that some day they will raise their national flags in a vibrant declaration of freedom from Soviet rule.

As the leader of the free world, it is the obligation of every American to keep that goal alive in the hearts of brave people. The annual celebration of Captives Nation Week is a highly positive step in that direction.●

● Mr. FARY. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to join my distinguished colleagues in observance of Captive Nations Week. It was 24 years ago that Congress authorized and requested the President to proclaim the third week in July as a time for Americans across the country to speak out for the freedom and independence of over 30 captive nations within Central Europe, the Soviet Union, Asia, and in Cuba.

It is most fitting that this observance should follow our own independence day, just 2 weeks ago. On July 4, millions of Americans joined together with flags and fireworks at picnics and parades to celebrate our independence and our commitment to a government by consent which seeks to guard our fundamental rights. As part of our remembrance, however, it is imperative that we as a nation of free people focus on the millions living within captive nations who suffer the indignities of foreign domination and the denial of the basic human rights that we Americans exercise daily. Our Independence Day celebration will never be complete until all the nations of the world can join with us in remembering the anniversary of their independence.

Americans must accept the challenge that Captive Nations Week gives us and stand firmly as a nation of hope for the world's oppressed peoples. Human rights must be at the very core of our foreign policy and not just a theme in congressional debate, for this is central to what America stands for. We are people who value human rights and are dedicated to justice. We have the responsibility to conduct our policy in a way consistent with what we hold dear to ourselves. As Thomas Jefferson once wrote, "Those who expect to reap the blessings of freedom must undergo the fatigues of supporting it."

We observe Captive Nations Week as an expression of hope for those held in captivity under the bitter yoke of communism. We will continue to set aside this week to speak out for the captives in the totalitarian world until the day when freedom and independence have been achieved for all peoples and Captive Nations Week is only a memory.●

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to join my colleagues today in observing the 24th Captive Nations Week.

The first Captive Nations Week was proclaimed by the passage of Public Law 86-90 in 1959, by coincidence the year I first entered this House. Since then I have heard many speeches deploring the continued Communist domination of a large part of the world, but the situation has not improved. The tragic lot of people behind the Iron Curtain is no better today than a quarter-century ago.

The past year has been a grim one for the captive nations. The brutal suppression of human rights in Poland shocked us all, and we cannot forget the unbelievably heroic resistance of the people of Afghanistan against an occupying Soviet army equipped with all the terrible tools of modern war.

Mr. Speaker, we all realize that not all tyranny is Communist tyranny, and that not all Communist tyranny is directly inspired by the Soviet Union. Nevertheless, it cannot be denied that in this violent century by far the most consistent violations of basic human rights have resulted from the Soviet regime. This oppressive regime has spread its tyranny like a cancer, first to the Ukraine, Baltic States, and other areas of the former Russian Empire, and then to most of Eastern Europe following World War II. Since then Soviet influence has spread to much of the Third World.

The list of Soviet crimes against humanity is much too long to be enumerated here. The brave Polish bid for freedom shows once again the nature of these crimes committed against people desiring to be free. The flame of liberty still burns in Poland, and it still burns in Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and all the other countries still subject to Communist domination.

We tend to take our own freedoms for granted, forgetting that they do not exist in most of the world. During this Captive Nations Week we must recommit ourselves to maintaining our liberty, and pledge to continue our fight to rid these brave nations of Communist tyranny.●

● Mr. DWYER. Mr. Speaker, it is at once an honor and a privilege for me to take part once again in this special congressional salute to the captive nations, their people, and their cause.

It is our cause as well. The captive nations look to the United States as a source of inspiration and leadership in helping to bring about their liberation and in restoring to them their religious freedom and individual liberties.

So too do we look to these nations and their citizenry for inspiration. Their courage and resilience stand as powerful symbols of the battles we once waged for our freedom and the importance of remaining forever vigilant in its protection.

The turmoil we are now witnessing in so many corners of our world makes our mandate to support the captive nations' struggle even stronger and more clear.

There are many opportunities through which our Government can assert our strong commitment to self-determination for the captive nations. Our foreign policy should reflect that commitment.

As proud Americans dedicated to this vital cause, we must use our strength to lead world opinion in such a direction that the countries we commemorate during Captive Nations Week gain the chance to enjoy as we do the blessings and awesome responsibilities of freedom.●

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to join my colleagues in the 24th observance of Captive Nations Week, July 18-24.

For nearly a quarter of a century, the United States has annually set aside the third week in July to reaffirm our unswerving opposition to Soviet subjugation of the Eastern and Central European peoples. The over 1 billion captives of these nations, including Cossakia, Armenia, Estonia, Byelorussia, Georgia, Turkesstan, the Ukraine, Latvia, Lithuania, Bulgaria, Serbia, Croatia, Romania, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and Poland, must face the daily suppression of freedom which we Americans so often take for granted. It is fitting then, that we reflect on the plight of these people during the month of July when we, as Americans, commemorate our own victorious struggle for independence.

Mr. Speaker, we should never be silent, so long as there are people in this world who are forced to suffer under totalitarian government. The United States must always strive for the preservation of free will and never cease to work toward a world in which all nations have the liberty to pursue their own destinies in a climate of peace and cooperation.

Millions of American citizens can trace their roots to captive nations. Thus, we who now enjoy the many contributions of a culturally diverse people owe the captive nations our support in their struggle for civil liberties.

For the many who are suffering, let us honor their undying courage and determination during Captive Nations Week until they have, with our encouragement, achieved a life of independence and freedom from domination.●

● Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a democratic heritage is interpreted by Western governments and peoples as the birthright of all individuals. Other peoples are forced to endure the rule of totalitarian governments, which see national independence and personal liberty as privileges they have the authority to discriminately apply. Individuals living under these regimes are forced to endure deprivation of the rights considered in the free world fundamental to human existence, but this has not stopped their efforts to secure from their national officials a commitment to democratic rule.

I would like to join my colleagues today in commemorating the perseverance and courage that citizens of occupied countries have shown in their effort to achieve independence, freedom, and liberty. For 24 years the U.S. Congress has shown its support for and appreciation of those people who have spoken out against the oppression and unjust treatment administered by their governments; today I reflect with particular concern on the circumstances in other countries which necessitate such efforts on the part of their citizenry. I am hopeful that with continued work and commitment, Members of the U.S. Congress can be influential in alleviating the hardship and injustice which characterizes the countries on the captive nations list.●

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join with my colleagues in taking his opportunity to mark the 24th annual, national observance of Captive Nations Week.

We do this by focusing our attention upon those nations of the world whose national identities have been trampled upon through Communist intervention. I ask that all freedom-loving people throughout the world also join with me, and this Congress, in recognizing the indestructible spirit of people held captive through Soviet oppression.

Twenty-three years ago, on July 17, 1959, the 86th Congress enacted Public Law 86-90, authorizing and requesting the President to annually proclaim the third week in July as Captive Nations Week. To this day, oppression continues throughout the world. This is especially true in Poland and Afghanistan, where we are witnessing the enduring will of man's desire for freedom.

The Soviets promulgate an image of being the helping hand to all of the nations under their domination. Yet, it was Soviet guns that massacred more than 16,000 Polish soldiers in the Katyn Forest in 1940. Furthermore, it was the Soviet troops which stormed the Baltic countries in 1941 and brought death and destruction to all who resisted them. When Hungary in 1956 and Czechoslovakia in 1968 sought greater freedom, it was the brutal Soviet Army who unmercifully rushed in and inhumanely slaughtered tens of thousands of freedom-loving people. In 1979, more than 30,000 Soviet troops invaded Afghanistan and cruelly resorted to gassing hundreds of tribesmen. Now, again in Poland, the recent political and social advancements made by the Solidarity Union have been sadly halted.

In both Afghanistan and Poland, as well as in all of the other oppressed nations of the world, resistance is once again mounting. The day is fast approaching when Soviet military strength alone cannot sustain a government which ignores the basic right of its citizens to be free from oppression and to govern themselves.

We must hold firm our devotion to democratic principles and fully support the protection of human rights around the world. The observance of Captive Nations Week is not simply a tradition. Moreover, it is a recognition and commemoration of the great strength and unyielding will of suppressed people to rise and to one day become free.●

● Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, as we commemorate the 24th observance of Captive Nations Week, we pay tribute to all those nations bent under the yoke of Communist dominance—nations whose people, nonetheless, have an inalienable right to self-determination, especially in the face of opposition.

As we observe Captive Nations Week, we should also note the small but valuable steps toward independence that are beginning to appear throughout the Communist-dominated countries of the world.

At first glance, our brothers across the globe may appear to be overwhelmed by the Soviet Union. Indeed, the very countries for whom this resolution was first passed—Poland, East Germany, and Afghanistan—may seem lost beneath a barren wasteland of oppression.

Yet I ask you to look not at the bleak landscape of communism, but rather at the fertile patches of freedom where our 86th Congress helped plant the seeds of liberty. There you will see hope sprouting slowly, patiently reaching upward toward the shining warmth of democracy. I suggest we salute these brave souls in our ceremonies this year, for having weathered the depths of dark despair, they are now champions of cherished democratic principles. I speak particularly of Sergei Petov, the Soviet hunger-striker who has successfully persuaded Moscow to allow him passage to the United States where his wife resides; and of Gudonov, of Solzhenitsyn, and other Soviet defectors, whose precious talents in the fields of dance and literature have flourished in America's atmosphere of free expression. I ask you to note also the guerrilla fighters who continue to resist Soviet forces in Afghanistan. These men, and others like them, look to America as the "citadel of human freedom"; we, in turn, should be inspired by their courageous efforts.

Amidst these developments, we must not allow pessimism to prevail; we must not believe that these are futile exercises of dissidence, for I believe that the dawning of a new, freer world is potentially at hand. Poland's economy is on the verge of collapse, as the military Communist-supported junta is unable to control food sources and wages. In East Germany, a nation which once boasted a high standard of living, trade, and industry are dwindling. Perhaps most significantly, there is a marked decline in domestic support for communism within the Soviet Union itself. Today's youths are increasingly cynical of their government, and the propeace, antigovernment movement can neither be denied nor ignored by that regime.

Alexis de Tocqueville once stated: "Nothing is more fertile in marvels than the art of being free, but nothing is harder than freedom's apprenticeship." Let us then recognize our resolution not as an isolated gesture of support, but as the beginning of encouragements that will neither be forgotten nor diminished as the years progress. Only when we see children of all countries born in freedom can we fully rest assured that democracy has borne fruit and will perpetuate itself throughout this good Earth.●

● Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I commend my colleagues, Congressman STRATTON and Congressman DERWINSKI, for calling this special order on the captive nations.

As Americans, it is difficult to imagine living in a captive nation where individual freedoms are trampled daily. It is difficult for us to imagine what it is like not to be able to practice our religious faiths without fear. It is difficult for us to imagine a life so restricted that towns and villages seem more like armed camps and prisons than communities of people.

We have reasons to be very thankful for the freedoms we enjoy. We must also remember those who do not enjoy such freedom. The people of the captive nations speak many different languages and have varying customs. However, the desire they share for self-determination, and freedom from Communist persecution, is universal and is the language of all mankind.

It is so fitting that we reflect on the struggle for freedom in the captive nations. Our Nation has, since its birth, been a beacon of liberty and hope. We must not let the people behind the Iron Curtain think that their valiant struggle is no longer of concern to us. We must continue to speak out against the oppressive forces that enslave them, and we must continue to encourage them in their search for freedom.●

● Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Speaker, when the Congress of the United States passed Public Law 86-90 in 1959 establishing Captive Nations Week it could not foresee how important and relevant the idea would remain into the 1980's. Although the rhetoric has changed from cold war slogans to human rights issues, the underlying thread of truth remains; the ideas of freedom and self-determination are not just philosophical notions left over from the 18th and 19th centuries, but in fact, are flesh and blood issues that have so captured the imagination of men and women throughout the world that people continue to struggle and suffer for the fulfillment of those ideals.

It is highly ironic and tragic that in the modern era which has marked the disappearance of colonial empires of the Western nations that the nations of Eastern Europe should be forced back into an empire by a society espousing freedom. Nations occupied by the Soviet Communist Party and nations known to us as the Soviet bloc nations all exhibit the characteristics of classic colonies: Conquest by force, alien domination, political subjugation, and economic exploitation. The tragic events of the last 8 months in Poland have demonstrated that as a colony of the Soviets the Poles are still not permitted to grow and develop in their own historical and social traditions—traditions of democratic thought and action. Today there is news that many of the martial law restrictions in Poland have been eased. The army which used force against its own people are naive to think that the social and economic movement which they attacked is dead. The power of the democratic ideals of freedom and self-determination is awesome. Although the democratic movement in Poland and the other nations of Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union has suffered an organizational setback, the ideal that fuels this movement is far from injured. The Polish people as well as the other peoples of Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union have suffered the colonial hand of many a tyrannical ruler whether he be the King of Prussia, the Emperor of Austria-Hungary, the Czar of Russia or the Premier of the Soviet Communist Party.

This year's Captive Nations Week also commemorates the 40th anniversary of the Ukrainian Insurgent Army and its struggle to free the Ukrainian people from both Nazi and Communist domination. A living martyr reminds us of the tragic consequences of the struggle for Ukrainian national independence. Today, a young man, Yuri Shukhevych is imprisoned in a Soviet labor camp. He has been there for over 15 years. His only "crime" is that he is the son of a former leader of the UPA, the Ukrainian Insurgent Army. The world of 1984 came early for the Ukrainian nation; their historical memory is being altered because the Soviets fear the true events of history. The people of the Ukraine spoke up for their independence over 40 years ago when the sons and daughters of their nation eagerly joined the insurgents to fight the occupation by Nazi and Soviet forces; they did not freely choose to be the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic.

The ranks of the captive nations have grown over the years. The most recent addition is the nation of Afghanistan; a nation whose people are engaged in a life and death struggle against 100,000 Soviet Army troops using some of their most sophisticated weapons. The Soviets are not just in violation of article 51 of the United Nations Charter; they are also violating the Geneva protocol of 1925 on gas warfare, to which they are signatories, by using a vast array of deadly chemicals and toxins in Afghanistan and Indochina.

Symbolically and tangibly Captive Nations Week is important. It brings our attention back to the not too distant past and opens up the pages of history to remind us and new generations that a great injustice was perpetrated against the peoples now known as the captive nations. Whether that injustice was done as long as 60 years ago as in the case of the Ukraine or 2 years ago in Afghanistan we will not allow the rewriting of history by the Soviets to remain unchallenged. The captive nations did not freely choose to be Soviet; they did not freely choose to alter their paths of social and economic development; they did not freely choose to imprison their own citizens or to act as buffers and cannon fodder for the expansionist delusions of the Soviet Communist Party.

Ironically, this administration has allowed the Soviets to continue their "guns and butter" foreign policy by canceling the Soviet grain embargo. They have met the Soviets' aggression by empty rhetoric. It took 5 days before the administration chose to comment on the imposition of martial law in Poland. I urge this administration to use the occasion of Captive Nations Week to focus its attention on formulating a solid and consistent foreign policy toward these occupied nations and the Soviets; a policy which is grounded in an understanding of the social and political movements which are arising in this part of the world. I urge my colleagues to also remember the history of the captive nations. Their aspirations for freedom are much like our own, do not do them the injustice of abandoning them to a bygone historical era.●

● Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, today as we meet on the House floor to acknowledge our support of the 24th observance of Captive Nations Week, we salute those heroic countries who are now struggling against totalitarian domination.

It is indeed tragic that such a significant portion of people the world over are forced to endure the vile hardships of Communist oppression and military intervention. Poland and Afghanistan are not alone in their struggle for self-determination; many other countries in Europe, Asia, and South America are resisting aggression as they fight against the expansion of Moscow's empire.

I sincerely hope that our great Republic continues to speak out in opposition to such blatant disregard for human rights and to strive to help foreign nations experience the democratic principles that we in America enjoy.

Our respect and admiration is evident for those who must face every day the anguish and adversity of foreign domination without ever losing their spirit or their hope.

In closing Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that during this Captive Nations Week, we will certainly share prayers for relief with the suffering nations around the world.●

● Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, in 1959, the 86th Congress passed and President Eisenhower signed Public Law 86-90, which declares that the third week of July be set aside as Captive Nations Week. A list of 31-captive nations has been compiled since that time, the most recent addition being Afghanistan.

Occasionally one hears of people who question the validity of Captive Nations Week. I must tell them that I am a strong believer in the fundamental value of this special week. Recognizing the forced rule of 31 nations in the world is highly important. We cannot forget the plight of these nations because if we do, we will not be able to recognize the warning signs of this phenomenon when it occurs again. As a result, more and more nations will become subjugated to foreign dictatorial regimes against their will.

Captive Nations Week is an opportunity to remind oppressors overseas that the world has not forgotten the transgressions of the past and that our country will do everything possible to remedy the present situation. This is why Captive Nations Week is so valuable and deserves even more attention by all of us. For example, the city of Philadelphia has issued a proclamation recognizing this week as Captive Nations Week. Citywide activities heighten public awareness and serve as a warning for all would-be invaders of nations because the people of America become rightfully outraged with the actions of the Soviet Union and other Communist governments in regard to human rights.

Mr. Speaker, each year at this time my sympathy for the suffering people in these enslaved nations grows even stronger. My deep anger and frustration that so many nations are subjected to the whims of Communist dictators encourages me to appreciate my own freedom. The Soviet Union and other Communist governments can be certain that I will work diligently to provide that same basic human right of feedom to the people of other captive nations.●

● Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to join with my colleagues in the 24th observance of Captive Nations Week. I especially want to thank Mr. DERWINSKI and Mr. STRATTON for bringing attention to this most important issue on the floor of the House.

Less than 3 weeks ago, Americans of all backgrounds and origins celebrated the 206th year of our country's independence. During those 206 years, not only has the United States remained free of foreign domination, but our people have remained free within our country to pursue their religious and political beliefs. Unfortunately, not all nations of the world, and citizens of these nations, are as fortunate as the United States. Therefore, during this week of observance, Americans of all origins have the opportunity to reflect on our unique heritage of freedom and clearly reaffirm our support for the freedom and self-determination of people throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, the martial law in Poland and the continued Soviet invasion and occupation of Afghanistan are only two of the most recent examples of what citizens in other lands must endure. We must not forget the plight of the freedom-loving people of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania, or of those people of the Eastern Bloc countries that live under Soviet domination.

Throughout the world the struggle for freedom continues, often against overwhelming odds. For these people in captive nations, and for these people who have to endure a denial of their basic human rights by their own government, the United States still stands as a beacon of liberty. On this 24th observance of Captive Nations Week, let us endeavor to make our citizens aware of the struggle for freedom by other people in the world. We will then be in a better position to assist these people, and hopefully it will make every American more aware of the precious nature of the freedom which we enjoy.●

● Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this month marks the 24th observance of Captive Nations Week. This year, as in every year since 1959, we set-aside a week during July, the month of our own national independence, to honor those who have struggled to obtain the freedoms we Americans enjoy as a right.

This year's observance reminds us that all people do not enjoy basic freedoms, liberties, or fundamental human rights. We must let the world know that the ideals of liberty and respect for the principle of national self-determination are still as strong today in the United States as ever.

All Americans must remember that those who suffer without the freedoms we so easily take for granted look to us for guidance in the struggle for international human rights. Our foreign policy must always reflect that commitment.

As we observe Captive Nations Week, let us also remember the tragic situation in East Timor, a former Portuguese island territory off the coast of northeastern Australia, where many tens of thousands have died since a 1975 invasion by Indonesia.

Truly, the people of East Timor have much in common with the captive nations of the new Russian Empire. Just as the Russians have consistently worked to destroy the previous national identities of the countries annexed into the U.S.S.R., the Indonesians have sought to forcibly assimilate the East Timorese into the Indonesian culture.

I want to join with my colleagues in expressing continuing concern for the people who are seeking a way to get out from under foreign domination. Let us remind the peoples of the captive nations that we will work diligently until the human rights for all are affirmed.●

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I feel honored to participate in this special order in support of the captive nations which are enslaved against their will under Communist rule. All the participants in today's special order are to be commended, especially my colleague from Illinois (Mr. DERWINSKI) who organized this colloquy, for their determination to not allow the tragic 42-year history of the captive nations under Soviet rule to be forgotten, and to not let the hope die that one day these states may regain their freedom.

Expressions such as these heard today are crucial to preventing the Soviets from achieving their cruel objective of erasing the memory of the sovereignty of the many nations which have fallen victim to Soviet imperialism in this century. The timing of the Soviet invasion of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania launched in June 1940 in the shadow of world preoccupation with the Nazi threat, clearly demonstrates the premeditated character of their disregard for human rights and national self-determination.

These statements should clearly demonstrate our continuing concern over their treatment of the Baltic peoples. We have not forgotten that hundreds of thousands of people in Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania were uprooted from their native lands and driven savagely to Siberian labor camps where many thousands were to perish of starvation, disease, and exposure. We have not forgotten the 42 years of political repression, religious persecution, and cultural genocide which had been inflicted by the Soviet rulers. Nor have we forgotten the repeated Soviet refusals to address their obvious violations of the right to self-determination expressed both in the Helsinki accords and the Charter of the United Nations as it would apply to the captive nations.

The living memory of the nature of Soviet rule must serve to remind us of the importance of raising our voices in loud and repeated protest against new episodes in the history of Soviet ruthlessness against those who would fight for freedom: The imposition by proxy of martial law upon the people of Poland, the blitzkrieg-like invasion of Afghanistan, and the ceaseless harassment and imprisonment of Soviet citizens who dare to express a desire to emigrate.

So long as we in the free nations of the world remember these lessons, the hope for freedom for those now subjected to Soviet domination is strong. We see excessive Soviet military spending spawned by an aggressive and hostile foreign policy straining their economy to the extent that they cannot feed their own people. We see numerous national and ethnic liberation movements within the Soviet Union posing a serious threat to the dominance of the Russian minority. And we see a growing number of Soviets dissatisfied with a government which exists not for their sake, but for its own sake. This evidence of an empire crumbling from within leads me to believe that it is not unrealistic to imagine the day when the captive nations may regain their freedom and independence.

Until that day, it is up to us in the United States, where we enjoy an unmatched degree of individual freedom and cultural diversity, to reaffirm our commitment to the liberation of the captive nations. I will continue to work with my colleagues here in the Congress to support this commitment and to further in whatever way I can the cause of freedom for the people of the captive nations.●

● Mr. HOLLENBECK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in recognizing the week of July 18 as the 24th observance of Captive Nations Week. Recently, we Americans celebrated our own Independence Day, and we now stand as the oldest constitutional democracy on Earth. We have attained the goal of freedom in our country, however and unfortunately there are countries in this world that do not hold the liberties that we think of as inherent and natural. It is necessary that we recognize these countries because from our recognition and our encouragement these people can maintain the strength to obtain freedom. The peoples of these captive nations are entitled to certain fundamental human rights. It is for the people in Poland, in Afghanistan, in Mainland China, North Korea, Vietnam, Cambodia, and Cuba and all other captive nations, it is for all of these peoples that I rise. Hopefully, some day they shall be freed from the grasp of subversive powers and allowed to express their opinions and their ideas, freely.●

● Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, if anybody has any doubts about the nature of the Soviet Union, then I would invite his consideration of Afghanistan, where brave resistance fighters continue to struggle against the occupation of their country by an invasion force of 90,000 Soviet troops and armor.

Or I would suggest he consider the cruel oppression of the people of Poland by a martial law regime directed from Moscow. I might also remind him of the Soviet tanks and troops that previously crushed movements for freedom in Czechoslovakia and Hungary.

Consider also the condition of the Estonians, Latvians, Lithuanians, Ukrainians, and other peoples who have been absorbed into the Russian empire.

Imperialism is not dead. In fact, the very term describes the character of the Soviet Union, but it is not old imperialism of czars and kings. The new imperialism in Communist form is a much greater curse on humanity. It is driven by an ideology that commands totalitarian control of life by the police state.

It has global ambitions because totalitarianism cannot be secure while freedom remains a force in the world. It is not bound by any moral restraint as it promotes violence to spread communism in Southeast Asia, the Mideast, Africa, and Latin America.

As we remember the captive nations today, let us remember that the United States is the strongest force for freedom in the world, and this is a great responsibility that we must not shirk.●

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, over two decades ago the Congress of the United States of America acted to condemn the enslavement of over a billion people by the tyranny and crushing totalitarianism of Communist dictators. In that year, 1959, Congress established the observance of Captive Nations Week. This week we mark the 24th occasion of this very important and continuing observance. I am also certain that in this land of democracy and liberty we will continue these observances and continue to speak out for those not so blessed as we, until they finally gain the freedom they rightly deserve.

The tyrants try to crush the voices of freedom with force and to hide through deception and the suppression of the truth the injustices they commit. However, the human spirit will forever be able to rise above base, diabolical force. The dictator may do violence to justice, but he can never destroy the eternal principles of justice. The flame of liberty and justice will always burn in the hearts of people everywhere and can never be extinguished.

In Afghanistan today, as the media in the West drops this issue from the front pages because it has lost the sensationalism of a just-breaking event, the Afghan freedom fighters continue to fight on with steadfast determination. They truly appreciate freedom and are prepared to fight for it, as our forefathers fought for freedom in our country.

In Poland, the Solidarity leaders and the whole Polish people behind them stand up straight and proud to the blows struck against their rights and their persons under the fist of martial law. They surely know how precious is freedom.

Throughout the over 30 captive nations in central Europe, within the Soviet Union, Asia, and in Cuba the victims of tyranny long for the freedom some in America tend to take for granted. In "the shining city on the hill" which is our home, we must never forget that it is the flame of liberty that brightens our land. We must also never forget those other people and nations who are suffering under Communist regimes and do not share in the blessings of freedom.

Our prayers and support are with those courageous people. Hopefully liberty's torch will soon burn openly and freely in their lands too.●

● Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Speaker, people everywhere are dissatisfied with some aspect of their lives. While every American has the right to freely express his grievances and frustrations, and to speak out in disapproval of our Government, there are people elsewhere in the world who cannot express the way they feel. It is ironic that the very act of expressing one's grievances best illustrates the most distinctive characteristic of American life, our inalienable rights. As designated by our Constitution, what we as Americans possess that can never be taken away is our inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. These basic human rights which many of us tend to take for granted are as characteristic of American society as furtiveness, intimidation, and the deprivation of human needs are in the 30 captive nations under Soviet domination.

Right now there are more than 1 billion people oppressed by the cold iron fist of the Soviet Union. Some of these are held captive within the Soviet Union itself, the people of Ukraine and Georgia, for instance. Other people are held captive in Eastern Europe, such as in East Germany and, of course, Poland. Still others are prisoners in nations not commonly thought of as behind the Iron Curtain, like Cambodia, Cuba, and most recently Afghanistan. All these nations, each ethnically unique yet each inhabited by people with common needs and aspirations, have lost independence to a demagogic system of government know as communism. As a result, the people of these capitive nations have been denied essential human rights.

The commemoration of Captive Nations Week allows us to demonstrate that we are sympathetic and supportive of their fight to regain their basic human rights. We must not forget that the United States, more than any other nation in the world, represents the highest ideals of freedom and self-determination, ideals that exist solely as dreams to the people of oppressed nations. Moreover, it is because the United States represents the quintessence of these ideals that we have the greatest responsibility in keeping the flame of liberty burning brightly. As long as a flicker of light can be seen through the darkened cell, the captive nations can maintain hope that one day they will be free. It is the United States that holds the key to the darkened cell, and it is up to us as Americans to do our utmost to help unlock the door.

We cannot forcibly turn back the hands of time and free these nations from the Soviet grip. We can, however, express publicly our vehement contempt for Soviet actions by promoting policies that will assist the people of these nations under Soviet terror. Thus, it is of primary importance to the ideals of freedom and liberty that the United States remain strong both physically and spiritually, and that we as a people reaffirm our pledge to never turn our backs on the severe infringement of human rights occurring in these captive nations.●

● Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join many of my colleagues in taking part in this 24th American anniversary of Captive Nations Week. This anniversary is observed in the third week of July, and is based upon Public Law 86-90, which was passed by the Congress and approved by President Eisenhower in 1959.

The concept of Captive Nations Week is to commemorate the heroic struggles and suffering of those people and nations under Communist rule. Originally, this applied to the populations of Eastern Europe and the Baltic States. Regrettably, since 1959, Soviet and Communist aggression has enslaved tens of millions of other people in such nations as Cuba, Vietnam, Laos, Kampuchea, Afghanistan, Angola, Ethiopia and South Yeman, Additionally, Soviet surrogates, such as soldiers from Cuba, East Germany, North Korea and Vietnam, train procommunist terrorists in Third World countries in order to foment violent revolutions and install Communist governments. Other forms of Soviet surrogate rule include the imposition of martial law in Poland by General Jaruzelski. Unfortunately, after a decade of détente, trade and arms reduction talks between us and the Soviets, Moscow and her allies continue a relentless campaign of trying to occupy or subvert neutral or pro-Western nations. Captive Nations Week gives all Americans the opportunity to express their outrage over Soviet policies and those of their client States. I call upon every Member of Congress to use this occasion to remind the Communist world that the U.S. Congress will not be silent in the face of Communist human rights violations, nor Soviet non-compliance with the Helsinki accords, nor be silent about Communist supported terrorism and aggression. We must never be silent on these issues, lest it be construed by the Soviets and others that silence be equated with tacit approval of their brutal policies. I therefore pledge my uncompromising support for all people who live under the yoke of Communist rule, and I want them to know that they are not and will not be forgotten. Our Nation, in conjunction with our other Western allies, must do all it can, through political, economic and other means to elicit meaningful and permanent changes in Soviet/Communist behavior and policies. Finally, we should assist pro-Western, anti-Communist regimes in their attempts to stave off Communist threats to their security and independence, because we already have too many captive nations to commemorate each year.

89-059 O-86-14 (Pt.13)

Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my deep appreciation to the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. DERWINSKI, and the gentleman from New York, who is my colleague on the Armed Services Committee, Mr. STRATTON, for sponsoring this important special order.

Thank you Mr. Speaker.●

● Mr. FORSYTHE. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to join my colleagues in commemorating the 24th anniversary of Captive Nations Week, a time during which we may reflect on the freedoms enjoyed in America and remember the people of the world who are denied liberty and dignity.

In the years since Congress initiated Captive Nations Week, the world has repeatedly watched the Soviet Union violate the sovereignty of one nation after another. Yet, throughout this span, in every country under Soviet domination, an unbending commitment to freedom has lived on. In Poland, Afghanistan, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and many other nations, the world has witnessed the fact that man's thirst for freedom will not die.

In having the good fortune afforded by America's independence, many of us at times take our individual liberties for granted. Too often, we forget that today in Poland, Afghanistan and other faraway places, people are fighting for the basic right to manage their own national affairs and determine their own destinies.

During this Captive Nations Week, we in America, should reaffirm our bonds with all people in search of freedom, remind ourselves of the value of our own liberty, and rededicate our people to fostering hope among those who resist Communist aggression.●

● Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to commend my colleagues, the gentlemen from Illinois and New York for their admirable work in putting together this special order in commemoration of Captive Nations Week.

Since 1920, the number of captive nations has risen from 0 to 31. We in the United States have been fortunate never to have been oppressed and occupied as are the countries of Eastern Europe, and Southeast Asia, China and Afghanistan. It may be difficult for us to understand the feeling of hopelessness and helplessness that the people of these nations feel. However, if we want a reminder of the burning desire these people feel for their freedom, we need only look to the constant fight against Communist oppression which they wage daily, in the workplace, in the news—in the rare case when there is some freedom of the press—in their applications for exit visas, and in their hunger strikes. In short, we need only look at the manner in which these oppressed people fight this oppression with their very lives, and then we can begin to understand what it must be like to live under the repressive outside domination that these nations are forced to suffer.

When we see the expansion that has continued since the Russian Revolution in 1917, is it any wonder that the United States and its European allies feel threatened by the growth of Soviet power in Eastern Europe and around the world? Let us continue to be strong in our opposition to the outside domination of these brave people. Let the Soviet Government know that we are firm in our support for the people and nations that are dominated by the Soviet Union in its constant imperialistic expansion.

In the words of Winston Churchill, "We must keep the flame of freedom burning strong and bright—as a beacon of hope to those struggling against the powers of totalitarian darkness. If we should falter, if we should succumb, all hope would be extinguished. Mankind as a whole would descend to the Gulag."●

● Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, this week I join my colleagues in observing the 24th annual commemoration of Captive Nations Week.

The captive nations resolution, signed into public law by President Eisenhower in 1959, set aside a time for us to remember those living under tyranny and oppression. It is an important tradition for those of us who are free to reflect on the lack of individual liberties and fundamental human rights in so many countries. Captive Nations Week is particularly relevant and applicable today: Despite all the world's advances in science, industry and technology, there are millions who suffer and whose national spirit is suppressed. Despite international agreements on basic human rights, many once free nations are held in political captivity, such as Poland, Afghanistan, the Baltic States and the Ukraine.

During this week, we stand together to demonstrate our support for all aspirations to freedom and national self-determination of all captive people: those whose sacrifice and commitment are the foundation of all that we believe. I am proud of this body for helping to provide the recognition and attention for this cause, and I would like to commend my distinguished colleagues, Mr. STRATTON, and Mr. DERWINKSI, as well as all of my colleagues for their support and efforts on behalf of Captive Nations Week.●

● Mr. MINISH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues today in this special order commemorating Captive Nations Week. This is an annual event in Congress and one which I wholeheartedly support. For it is essential that we in the House speak out when totalitarian governments restrict the liberties of their populations.

Captive Nations Week is therefore dedicated to those people who do not enjoy full independence or self-determination in their countries.

We in the United States are richly blessed with many political rights and freedoms. In fact, so accustomed are we to enjoying our democratic freedoms that it can be easy to take our rights for granted. Captive Nations Week therefore serves as a positive opportunity for commemoration and reflection by us in the United States.

First, as a day of commemoration we offer a tribute to the strength and courage of those who endure the limitations of life under totalitarian regimes. Moreover, as American citizens who enjoy guaranteed constitutional rights, we reflect upon the fact that not all people everywhere in the world are as privileged as we. Until human rights are the reality for all, let us not waiver in our commitment to human freedom and dignity.

As the martial law crisis continues in Poland, it serves as a stark reminder that many people are forced to live without the liberty and independence we know in the United States. As I have stated in the past, I am in solidarity with the courageous Polish people whose fight for liberty has not been crushed despite these extremely trying circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that many of my colleagues will also join me today so that we in this Chamber can reaffirm our commitment to freedom.●

● Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, earlier this month our Nation celebrated Independence Day and the freedom to choose that is enjoyed by all Americans. It is only fitting and just that this Congress now turn its attention to those who do not see fireworks, those who hear no brass bands, and those who cannot march in parades.

Today, for the 24th year, we observe Captive Nations Week, a time to speak for those who cannot speak freely on their own without fear of harsh retribution. Mr. Speaker, we rise on this occasion not only for Poland's Solidarity movement, but with equal force for the Baltic States that were absorbed by the Russian Empire 65 years ago.

Now, more than ever, we need to use Captive Nations Week as a springboard to pursue the course of freedom throughout the world. The people of Afghanistan and Poland remain oppressed. Vietnam, Cambodia, and Cuba and many others are enslaved nations. And, of course, free speech and the right to disagree and protest are alien to the people of the Soviet Union.

But, Mr. Speaker, Captive Nations Week is not an event held in vain. As the Soviet Union continues efforts to expand its enslaved empire, this commemoration brings those aspirations to light and serves notice to our brethren around the world that we share the desire for freedom held by all people.●

● Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, today's observance of Captive Nations Week comes at a time when relations between the East and West are at a critical stage. The Soviet Union has embarked on a campaign of propaganda and misinformation throughout the world while it continues to hold hundreds of thousands of people prisoners in their homelands. As we meet here in Washington, our representatives in Geneva are embarking on what will probably be the most important negotiations in history, and this occasion marks the major point which separates the Western democracies from the totalitarian nations of the Warsaw Pact and many other countries where they have spread their influence through force.

Freedom is where our paths part with those of the governments of the captive nations. The ideals and theories forged into reality by our Founding Fathers and upheld by this body today remain a dream for the citizens of more than two dozen nations. Many Americans have grown up never knowing that many of the republics in the Soviet Union existed at one time as separate sovereign states with unique cultures and traditions. This observance and others like it are troubling to some who do not fully appreciate what it means to be held in the grasp of communism.

While visiting our troops along the Berlin Wall in West Germany several months ago, Secretary of Defense Weinberger made an observation that goes to the heart of the issue we face today. He pointed out the positioning of our outposts overlooking East Germany to guard against attack. Looking further over the wall, he noted that the Soviet observation posts also face East to prevent escapes to the West.

For over three decades many people have been separated from their families. For more than a half century, citizens of many nations have faced persecution for adhering to their religious beliefs or carrying on national traditions and customs. Words such as Russification have little meaning in our country where the Bill of Rights protects against Government interference in our private lives and beliefs. However, residents of the Baltic States, Ukraine, Eastern European nations, Southeast Asia, and many other areas face a daily struggle to preserve their heritage.

We must keep those who have resisted the scourge of the police state in our thoughts and prayers. Their efforts are stronger than the weapons of war, and time and again brave citizens of the captive nations have demonstrated the impotence of fear and terror as a means of crushing the desire for freedom and individual rights. Those who bravely speak out against violations of the Helsinki accords in the face of imprisonment and constant harassment represent multitudes of people seeking the rights we treasure in the West.

I know that the Members of this House join me in expressing the fond hope that we will some day join the citizens of the captive nations in freedom, and that their arduous struggle will not be in vain.●

● Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Speaker, the week of July 18–24 marks the 24th observance of Captive Nations Week. During this week, Americans across the country will speak out for the freedom and independence of over 30 captive nations in Central Europe, within the Soviet Union, Asia, and Cuba.

It is this week that we, as citizens of a free and independent nation, proclaim to the world our opposition to the oppressive governments of captive nations. It is important that the people of these countries know that we support their struggle to secure the human rights that we enjoy and hold fast.

As we know, Captive Nations Week was created 24 years ago by a joint resolution of Congress, and, at that time, Congress asked President Eisenhower to declare every third week in July as "Captive Nations Week" until all peoples of the world could enjoy the freedom and security that is basic to our everyday lives. Unfortunately, every President since Eisenhower has had to declare this week, supported by the proclamations of Governors and mayors throughout the country.

While Captive Nations Week began in the fifties, oppression did not. The conflict between those who would choose to be free, and those who value dominance and power over freedom has been unending. A sad example of this conflict in modern times occurred in 1940 when the Baltic nations were invaded and occupied by Stalin's oppressive regime. Later, the citizens of these countries were deported to the Soviet Union while their lands were colonized by Russians. It was an all too familiar pattern of Soviet aggression.

Now we see the struggles of Poland and Afghanistan. As their fight for freedom continues against the tightening grip of the U.S.S.R., it is especially crucial that world opinion support them and that attention is kept focused on the inequities visited on them. We cannot accept these illegal and immoral actions with out undermining our commitment to the basic principle of freedom for all people.

This, then—Captive Nations Week—is a time to say—we are with you, we applaud your courage and that the struggle against tyranny is a battle that belongs to us all. Our continued support must not falter as their unending struggle for freedom goes on.●

● Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to proclaim my support of the 24th observance of Captive Nations Week, in accordance with Public Law 86–90, the Captive Nations Week resolution. I am in agreement with this measure, which seeks to express support for freedom-loving people who still suffer under the tyranny imposed upon them by totalitarian nations. For it is freedom, as determined by a democratic nation ruled by the people, that stands as the buttress upon which rests the foundation and greatness of our Nation.

Less than 3 weeks ago, we, as Americans, celebrated the 206th anniversary of our Nation's birth as an independent State. Americans have continued to enjoy the blessings of national independence since 1776; however, people of other lands have not been so fortunate. Millions of people living in nations around the world do not enjoy the basic rights of freedom that Americans take for granted. These freedom-loving people are from the nations of Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, the infamous Soviet Union and countless others. Moreover, these people look toward the United States as a symbol for guidance and a ray of hope. We pray that their desperate situation so devoid of basic freedoms will be relieved someday soon.

In response, American Public Law 86–90 the Captive Nations Week resolution was initiated by President

Dwight Eisenhower and the 85th Congress in July of 1959. This resolution seeks to promote greater awareness of the many nations across the globe which do not now enjoy the benefits of political self-determination and national independence. It seems only appropriate that Americans should continue to commemorate this struggle by captive nations to win freedom for their people. For it is freedom that is their ultimate goal.

However, until that goal materializes, we, who enjoy the benefits of freedom, must make our position known through the observance of Captive Nations Week. Such an observance will perhaps serve as a lasting symbol of inspiration for those who continue to struggle for freedom, until the day arrives when such a struggle is no longer needed.●

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, I also at this time include for the RECORD some petitions and resolutions citing captive nations to be included following the remarks in this special order.

First is a letter and proclamation from the office of the mayor of the city of Sacramento; a proclamation from the office of the mayor of Rochester, N.Y., Hon. Thomas P. Ryan, Jr.; and a proclamation of the Governor of the great State of Michigan forwarded by Alois W. Sandner, the press secretary of the Governor.

I also have a proclamation from the Governor of Puerto Rico, Carlos Romero-Barcelo, forwarded from the office of the Governor in San Juan.

I have a proclamation celebrating Captive Nations Week from the office of the Governor of the State of Arizona, Hon. Bruce Babbitt.

I have a proclamation from our former colleague, Hon. Hugh L. Carey, the Governor of the Empire State of New York. I am particularly pleased to include the State of New York. I am particularly pleased to include this proclamation signed by the Governor and with the seal affixed from the executive chamber of the State of New York.

I have a proclamation by the Governor of the State of Wisconsin, Lee Sherman Dreyfus; and a proclamation from the Governor of the State of North Carolina, Gov. James B. Hunt, Jr.

Also on Captive Nations Week I have a proclamation from Hon. David C. Treen, Governor of Louisiana, also a former colleague of ours here in the House of Representatives.

I have a proclamation from Governor Rockefeller of the State of West Virginia, this proclamation being signed by John D. Rockefeller IV, Governor.

Finally, and the largest of all, and the most attractively decorated, Mr. Speaker, is a proclamation from the mayor of the city of Miami, Fla., Hon. Maurice A. Ferre.

The documents referred to follow:

PROCLAMATION—CITY OF SACRAMENTO

Whereas, Americans of all types and political persuasions agree that the one thing they value the most and will fight the hardest to protect is their freedom—of speech, action and thought; and

Whereas, men and women throughout the world feel as strongly about gaining and preserving their freedom, but it is a tragic fact that millions of Asians, Europeans, Africans and South Americans do not even have the freedom to leave a homeland that is in political or military thrall to a foreign power; and

Whereas, many Americans openly support the rebellious natives of captive nations, such as, Poland and Afghanistan, and our tradition of freedom makes it particularly appropriate that the United States government strongly expresses our disapproval of the Russian Communists' brand of modern day slavery;

Now, therefore, I, Phillip L. Isenberg, Mayor of the City of Sacramento, do hereby proclaim that July 18–24, 1982 shall be Captive Nations Week in this City to show the world that Sacramentans and all Americans are solidly opposed to the subjugation of one nation by another and that we still support the ideals of freedom and justice for all.

PROCLAMATION—CITY OF ROCHESTER

Whereas, policies of the Soviet Union and other communist powers have led to the subjugation and domination of thousands of freedom-loving peoples whose yearnings for independence, and whose right to self-determination, have been arbitrarily ignored, and

Whereas, the United States of America, having thrived on the guiding principles of liberty and justice, is the ultimate symbol of human freedom and therefore has a unique obligation to make independence a reality for enslaved populations everywhere, and

Whereas, Rochesterians recognize their special responsibility to the overseas relatives and friends of many of our City's residents, who contribute so much to the nourishment of basic human rights and to the civic betterment of our community, and

Whereas, the Congress of the United States has established the third week in July each year as Captive Nations Week, to encourage all Americans to participate in activities to demonstrate our sympathy with and support for freedom, independence, and self-determination of captive peoples throughout the world, and

Whereas, at the ceremony in Rochester the ethnic groups represented, each with their national flags and native costumes, include Taiwan, East Germany, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Ukraine, Yugoslavia, China and Cuba,

Now, therefore, I, Thomas P. Ryan, Jr., Mayor of the City of Rochester, do hereby proclaim the week of July 12th, 1982 to be "Captive Nations Week" in Rochester, and urge all Rochesterians to rededicate themselves to work and pray for the day when freedom for all the world's people will be a reality.

PROCLAMATION—STATE OF MICHIGAN

The desire for freedom and liberty burns in the hearts of people living in captive countries around the globe, where the basic American constitutional rights are not guaranteed, or even to be found. Many of the captive countries are nations dominated by the policies of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Freedom-loving people of Afghanistan, Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Laos, Latvia, Lithuania, North Korea, North Vietnam, Poland, and many other countries look to the United States as a protector of their remaining civil rights.

In accordance with United States Public Law, the third week of every July is designated Captive Nations Week through the efforts of the Captive Nations Committee. During this time, residents of the captive nations are encouraged by our remembrance of them.

Therefore, I, William G. Milliken, Governor of the State of Michigan, do hereby declare July 18–24, 1982, as Captive Nations Week in Michigan, and urge all citizens to recognize the plight of captive citizens, and express their support and encouragement through prayer and appropriate ceremonies and activities.

A MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR OF PUERTO RICO

As United States citizens fully cognizant of the significance of Soviet interventionism, the people of Puerto Rico join our fellow American citizens and all other freedom-loving peoples of the world in observing Captive Nations Week 1982.

On our Caribbean island we are intensely aware of the menace of Soviet aggression, for agents of this totalitarian power have for over twenty years denied basic human liberties to our neighbors in Cuba, tens of thousands of whom have emigrated to Puerto Rico to escape tyranny. The Moscow-oriented government in Havana, meanwhile, has maneuvered continuously, employing tactics ranging from the hypocritical to the criminal, in an effort to separate Puerto Rico from the United States, despite the overwhelming opposition of our own people, as expressed by majorities consistently exceeding 90 percent in the elections held here every four years.

The people of Puerto Rico cherish our democratic way of life. We have witnessed in this region of the world how cynically and swiftly the enemies of freedom can impose subjugation in the guise of "liberation." And we are responding by moving steadily toward thwarting permanently the brutal designs of dictators, through the achievement of full and equal participation in shaping the destiny of the United States, the nation for which so many young Puerto Ricans have fought and died during this century.

This is the message we would share with the men and women who have been enslaved under Communist totalitarism: the people of Puerto Rico stand ready to join with all other American citizens in supporting the courageous struggle of the people in Captive Nations for deliverance from Soviet oppression.

Sincerely,

CARLOS ROMERO-BARCELÓ.

PROCLAMATION—STATE OF ARIZONA

Whereas, the imperialistic politics of Russian Communists have led, through direct and indirect aggression, to the subjugation and enslavement of the peoples of Afghanistan, Poland, Hungary, El Salvador, Lithuania, Ukraine, Czechoslovakia, Latvia, Estonia, Byelorussia, Rumania, East Germany, Bulgaria, Mainland China, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia, North Korea, Albania, Idel-Ural, Serbia, Croatia, Slovenia, Tibet, Cossackia, Turkestan, North Vietnam, Cuba,

Cambodia, South Vietnam, Laos and Others; and

Whereas, the desire for liberty and independence by the overwhelming majority of peoples in these conquered nations constitutes a powerful deterrent to any ambitions of Communist leaders to initiate a major war; and

Whereas, the freedom loving peoples in the captive nations look to the United States as the citadel of human freedom and to the people of the United States as the leaders in bringing about their freedom and independence; and

Whereas, the Congress of the United States by unanimous vote passed Public Law 86-90 establishing the third week in July each year as Captive Nations week and inviting the people of the United States to observe this week with appropriate prayer, ceremonies and activities and expressing their sympathy with and support for the just aspirations of captive peoples;

Now, therefore, I, Bruce Babbitt, Governor of the State of Arizona, do hereby proclaim the week of July 18 through 24, 1982, as "Captive Nations Week" and call upon the citizens to join with others in observing this week by offering prayers and dedicating their efforts for the peaceful liberation of the captive nations.

PROCLAMATION—STATE OF NEW YORK

Twenty-three years ago, by a joint resolution approved July 17, 1959, the 86th Congress authorized and requested the President of the United States to proclaim the third week in July as Captive Nations Week. The purpose of this week is to invite the people of the United States to observe such a week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Captive Nations Week offers the opportunity for Americans to pay tribute to the ideal of government by consent. It is an ideal shared by millions who live in nations dominated by a foreign military power which denies individual rights.

The commemoration of Captive Nations Week is dedicated to the spirit and hope of enslaved peoples in their continuing quest for freedom and self-determination in their beloved native lands. The freedom-loving peoples in captive lands look to the United States as a citadel of freedom and to the American people as a source of guidance and inspiration. This message of hope is founded in the belief that free men and women will ultimately prevail over those who deny individual rights and preach supremacy of the state and in the conviction that the human spirit will ultimately prevail over the oppressive ideology of totalitarianism.

The Captive Nations Committee of New York will hold appropriate activities throughout the week to commemorate this annual observance and to address the issue of human rights and justice on behalf of the oppressed peoples in captive nations.

Now, therefore, I, Hugh L. Carey, Governor of the State of New York, do hereby proclaim July 18-25, 1982, as Captive Nations Week in New York State.

PROCLAMATION—STATE OF WISCONSIN

Whereas the republican form of government—based upon "the consent of the governed"—which has existed in the United States of America for over 200 years, has resulted in the development of a warm understanding and sympathy for the aspirations for freedom of peoples everywhere and in the recognition of the natural interdependency of the peoples and nations of the world; and

Whereas the United States recognizes the needs of world nations to co-exist peacefully and to remove impediments to their bonds of understanding with peoples of foreign nations; and

Whereas the freedom-loving peoples of the captive nations look to the United States as leaders who believe in their efforts to obtain freedom and independence; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States by unanimous vote passed Public Law 89-90 establishing the third week in July each year as Captive Nations Week and inviting the people of the United States to observe this week with appropriate prayers, ceremonies, and activities, expressing their sympathy with and support for the just aspirations of captive peoples; and

Whereas it is fitting and proper that the citizens of Wisconsin participate in this week by offering prayers and dedicating their efforts for the peaceful liberation of oppressed and subjugated peoples all over the world;

Now, therefore, I, Lee Sherman Dreyfus, Governor of the State of Wisconsin, do hereby proclaim July 18 through July 25, 1982, "Captive Nations Week" in the State of Wisconsin, and I urge the citizens of this state to remember that it is the 23rd Anniversary of this annual observance and to support efforts of the oppressed peoples of the world to regain their freedom.

PROCLAMATION—NORTH CAROLINA

Whereas, the imperialistic politics of Soviet-Communists led to direct and indirect aggression and enslavement of countries behind the Iron Curtain; and

Whereas, the spirit of liberty and independence in those enslaved countries lives and inspires the West and also the United States; and

Whereas, the people in those enslaved countries look to the United States as the citadel of human rights; and

Whereas, the Congress of the United States and President Eisenhower passed and signed the Public Law, 86-90, establishing the week in July each year as Captive Nations Week, inviting the people of the United States to observe such; now

Therefore, I, James B. Hunt, Jr., Governor of the State of North Carolina, do hereby proclaim the week of July 18-24, 1982, as "Captive Nations Week" in North Carolina and commend this observance to our citizens.

PROCLAMATION—STATE OF LOUISIANA

Whereas, the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights is being ignored by many of the atheistic communist member signers; and

Whereas, these same nations are also ignoring their signing of the human rights provisions of the Helsinki Agreement of 1975, while hypocritically following a deceptive course of world conquest, destroying the freedoms of the citizens of the nations they capture; and

Whereas, the State of Louisiana has been a haven for the refugees of these enslaved nations, granting the same human dignity and freedoms to these people as the citizens of the United States enjoy; and

Whereas, the Congress of the United States of America has passed Public Law 86-90 establishing the third week of July as Captive Nations Week and inviting the peoples of the United States to observe such week with appropriated prayers, ceremonies and activities expressing sympathy for the just cause for all subjugated nations;

Now, therefore, I, David C. Treen, Governor of the State of Louisiana, do hereby proclaim the week of July 18-24, 1982, as "Captive Nations Week" in Louisiana, and urge my fellow citizens to observe this week by prayer and by offering personal, moral and spiritual support for the subjugated peoples in 33 nations and especially those countries recently purged of their cultural heritage, such as Afghanistan, Nicaragua and Rhodesia.

PROCLAMATION—STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA

Whereas, democratic nations look to the United States as a citadel of human freedom, leadership in the continuing struggle for the liberation of captive nations and the restoration of individual liberties and freedom of religious thought and expression; and

Whereas, the heritage of the United States is, in large part, due to ability to achieve a national unity from diverse ethnic, religious and racial backgrounds; and

Whereas, this harmonious unification of different backgrounds through the democratic process has given this Nation a unique sympathy and understanding for the aspirations of freedom and independence throughout the world; and

Whereas, mindful of our heritage and principles, the Congress of the United States has designated the third week of July to be annually observed to focus public awareness on those peoples and nations still enslaved by totalitarianism or dictatorship.

Now, therefore, I, John D. Rockefeller IV, Governor of the State of West Virginia, do hereby proclaim July 18 through July 24, 1982, as "Captive Nations Week" in West Virginia.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State to be affixed.

PROCLAMATION—CITY OF MIAMI, FLA.

Whereas: The imperialistic politics of Russian Communists have led, through direct and indirect aggression, to the subjugation and enslavement of the peoples of Poland, Hungary, Lithuania, Ukraine, Czechoslovakia, Latvia, Estonia, Byelorussia, Romania, East Germany, Bulgaria, Georgia, North Korea, Albania, Idel-Ural, Servia, Croatia, Slovenia, Tibet, Cossakia, Turkestan, North Vietnam, Cuba, Cambodia, South Vietnam, Laos, Afghanistan, and others, and

Whereas the desire for liberty and independence by the overwhelming majority of peoples in these conquered nations constitutes a powerful deterrent to any ambitions of Communist leaders to initiate a major war, and

Whereas the freedom loving people of the captive nations look to the United States as the citadel of human freedom and human rights and to the people of the United States as the leaders in bringing about their freedom and independence, and

Whereas the Congress of the United States by unanimous vote passed Public Law 86-90 establishing the third week in July each year as Captive Nations Week and inviting the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate prayer, ceremonies and activities, expressing their sympathy with the just aspirations of the captive nations;

Now, therefore, I, Maurice A. Ferre, Mayor of the City of Miami, Florida, do hereby proclaim the week of July 18-24, 1982, as "Captive Nations Week."

In observance thereof I call upon the people of the City of Miami to join me in observing this week by offering prayers and dedicating their efforts to the peaceful liberation of oppressed and subjugated people all over the world.

CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DERWINSKI) is recognized for 60 minutes.

● Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, in 1959, President Eisenhower signed into law legislation passed by the Congress which permanently proclaimed the third week of July as Captive Nations Week. As a freshman Congressman 24 years ago, I was privileged to be one of the cosponsors of Public Law 86-90, which created Captive Nations Week, a commemoration that is even more pertinent today than it was in July of 1959.

I would like to use this occasion to remind my colleagues that there are many millions of people living in the captive nations who cannot enjoy those basic rights of liberty and freedom. While there is a tendency of some to look upon the captive nations as only those countries in Europe which fell under the Communist yoke in the periods immediately following the First and Second World Wars, we have in this decade seen the additional once-free countries of Laos, Cambodia, and South Vietnam come under the tyrannical hand of their present rulers. We have witnessed the tragedy which occured in Soviet-occupied Afghansistan and the determined struggle of the Polish people for freedom under the present repressive Soviet-imposed government in that country.

A large part of the threat posed to the United States by the increasing power and contentiousness of the Soviet Union lies in the area of political and propaganda activity. Mass communication is used by the Soviets to indoctrinate, mislead, and confuse peoples throughout the world; the influence and strategic position of the United States are weakened in the process.

In addition, 330 million persons are subjected to Communist regimes in Eastern Europe and the U.S.S.R., innocent victims of a rigid system of information control. The totalitarian governments of these countries methodically seal off at their borders all but "licensed" communications to deny their peoples access to unofficial sources of fact and opinion. International broadcasting, therefore, is a major vehicle to reach the captive peoples of the U.S.S.R. and the satellite nations of Eastern Europe.

Unfortunately, in the past few years, the effectiveness of U.S. broadcasting to the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe has been systematically reduced, primarily due to inadequate budgets. The Soviets have achieved great success in rendering many American broadcasts into their own terrrritory inaudible, or nearly so, through a determined jamming effort. The CIA estimates that the Soviet Union spend $330 million a year on jamming, four times what the United States spends on the programing itself. The truth as broadcast by the United States has become less audible and less competitive with Soviet lies. In this battle of truth against falsehood, we risk defeat largely due to our own ineffectiveness.

Mr. Speaker, at this point in my remarks, I wish to include several articles which summarize President Reagan's remarks at a special Captive Nations proclamation signing ceremony in the Rose Garden on Monday. The first appeared in the Washington Post, of July 20, and the second, from the Washington Times, of the same date.

The articles follow:

[From the Washington Post, July 20, 1982]

NEW EQUIPMENT ASKED FOR ANTI-SOVIET RADIOS

(By Herbert H. Denton)

President Reagan sharply denouncing the Soviet Union, said yesterday that he would propose modernizing the "old and deteriorating" equipment of America's international radio system to counter jamming by the Russians.

In a Rose Garden ceremony to proclaim "Captive Nations Week," Reagan said it was a "sad fact" that the Voice of America, Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty "have been neglected for many years" and could be improved with "a relatively modest expenditure."

Neither Reagan nor his spokesman elaborated on how much he was proposing to spend.

Reagan said the cost to the Soviets of jamming broadcasts into communist countries is three to four times what the United States spends to transmit them.

"We can fully appreciate the fear of those who do not want the truth to reach the people of the communist world, those who are willing to violate flagrantly the Helsinki agreements or even to engage in terrorist violence to stifle the truth," Reagan said, referring to the 1975 agreement on human rights signed in Helsinki, Finland.

Reagan also condemned the Soviets for sparking a "wasteful arms race" and having its promise of a "classless society" turn into "decaying and crumbling dreams."

Communism, he said, has "meant forced labor and mass imprisonment, famine and massacre, the police state and the knock on the door in the night."

"We renew especially our hope," Reagan said, "that those countries of Eastern Europe, Asia, Africa and Latin America now under communist domination will some day regain their national sovereignty and, again, enjoy the dignity of their own national tradition."

As he spoke beneath a sweltering sun, Reagan was frequently interrupted by applause from guests, who included present and former members of Congress and American groups of European immigrants from the "captive nations," independent European states the Soviet Union swallowed up during and after World War II.

Reagan also announced that he had signed an "urgent" supplemental appropriations bill although he did not believe it went "far enough to reduce spending." He had vetoed two previous versions of the spending bill and thus, he said, "saved the taxpayers more the $3.6 billion."

[From the Washington Times, July 20, 1982]

PRESIDENT LASHES OUT AT SOVIET ATTACKS ON RIGHTS

President Reagan yesterday proclaimed Captive Nations Week and used the occasion for one of the strongest verbal attacks he has yet made against Soviet tyranny and expansion of totalitarianism.

At a ceremony in the White House Rose Garden before 200 guests, Reagan declared, "We in the West must do more than merely decry attacks on human freedom. The nature of this struggle is ultimately one that will be decided, not by military might, but by spiritual resolve and confidence in the future of freedom, especially in the face of the decaying and crumbling dreams of Marxism-Leninism."

The president said he wanted to make it clear that the United States intends to move forward with a program to modernize the international radio system, including the Voice of America, Radio Free Europe, Radio Liberty and the proposed Radio Marti.

"This plan of modernization for a relatively modest expenditure over a number of years will make it easier for millions of people living under communist rule to hear the truth about the struggle for the world going on today between the forces of totalitarianism and freedom," Reagan said.

The president said the international radio programs have old equipment and strained resources after years of neglect and that little has been done to counter the Soviet jamming that has intensified in recent years. He said the Soviets spend three to four times more to jam foreign broadcasts than the United States spends to transmit them.

"I especially want to urge Congress today to approve the funds so desperately needed to bring to the people of Cuba through Radio Marti the truth about the struggle between freedom and totalitarianism," Reagan declared.

"Throughout the Baltic states, Eastern Europe, Asia, Africa and Latin America, nation after nation has fallen prey to an ideology that seeks to stifle all that is good about the human spirit, even as it attempts to justify communist rule. The ominous growth of this danger and the human suffering it has caused is clearly the most important news event of our generation and the tragedy of our time."

Reagan said the extension of totalitarianism has been accomplished by military force or subversion by a tiny revolutionary cadre whose only real ideal is the will to power.

The president urged Americans this week to reaffirm their faith that the aspiration for freedom ultimately will prevail over the rule of force which denies human rights to so many in other parts of the world.

As the president began to leave the assemblage a woman in the audience shouted, "'God Bless America,' would you sing it with us?" Reagan said "You will have to start."

Immediately the assembly and the officials gathered with Reagan on the steps outside the oval office began to sing "God Bless America," and Reagan sang along with them.

The Soviet empire is vulnerable. Its economic system is truly inefficient, its agriculture a shambles. Its population, and those of the captive nations, are shamelessly exploited to support a corrupt and incompetent regime. Soviet control of its own people and power over non-Russian nationalities—the Ukrainians, Balts, Byelorussians, Armenians, and so forth—are eroded by the winds of freedom from abroad. In addition, there are 40 million Moslems in the Soviet Union who should have the benefit of the message of truth from abroad. These Moslem peoples are a fertile field awaiting cultivation.

It is obvious that the massive support that the Polish people gave the workers' strike and the effort to form independent unions in Poland constitute complete repudiation of their Communist government. It is also apparent that the thirst for freedom behind the Iron Curtain remains strong and unquenchable.

The struggle for men's minds is at stake. We have history and truth on our side, yet we let the Soviets have a technological advantage. We must recognize the responsibilities and challenges we face and make the policy and budget decisions necessary to gain the technological edge we need to win.

This commemoration is of special significance to the millions of Americans whose native lands are under Communist governments. We in the United States and throughout the free world must confirm our determination to work toward the restoration of the independence of those enslaved peoples held captive by the U.S.S.R. and other communist governments.

It is important for us to look back on the history of the Soviet's political and strategic intentions, and keep them in mind when forming our current foreign policy. This annual commemoration reminds us once again of the tragedy inflicted on millions of innocent people by Soviet aggressive and imperialistic policies, which must be considered in the formation of our national security and defense and foreign policy decisions.

Mr. Speaker, the United States must continue to support the aspirations for freedom, independence, and national self-determination of all captive peoples. To this end, we remain committed and we must not waiver from our responsibility.

I wish to include with my remarks some very timely proclamations issued for Captive Nations Week, from the distinguished Governor of the State of Illinois, Hon. James R. Thompson; and followed by the Governor of the State of Colorado, Hon. Richard D. Lamm; the Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Hon. Dick Thornburgh; and finally, the Governor of the State of Delaware and our former colleague, Hon. Pierre S. du Pont.

The proclamations follow:

STATE OF ILLINOIS—PROCLAMATION

Americans enjoy the liberty and freedom of which peoples in captive nations only dream. The rights we often take for granted are fought for every day by those who do not rule themselves.

Since 1959, we have observed Captive Nations Week, maintaining a constant vigil on the struggle of captive peoples around the globe. We will continue this observance, as Congress requested, until such time as freedom and independence shall have been achieved for all the captive nations of the world.

Therefore, I, James R. Thompson, Governor of the State of Illinois, proclaim July 18-24, 1982, as Captive Nations Week in Illinois, in the hope that all peoples throughout the world may find their freedom.

STATE OF COLORADO—PROCLAMATION

Whereas by resolution of the United States Congress, the third Monday of July each year is commemorated as Captive Nations Day; and

Whereas Captive Nations Day serves to remind the people of the United States of the subjugation of many nations by the U.S.S.R.; and

Whereas these nations have been denied the basic freedoms of speech, religion, press and, most of all, self-rule; and

Whereas the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the turmoil in Poland emphasize the plight of the people of these captive nations and demonstrates the dangers to the free world of agression;

Now, therefore, I Richard D. Lamm, Governor of the State of Colorado, do hereby proclaim July 19, 1982, as Captive Nations Day in the State of Colorado, and urge all concerned Coloradans to participate in the Captive Nations Day ceremonies on that date.

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA—PROCLAMATION

The quest for freedom has been a source of fierce struggle and determination for people throughout the world. Fueled by a burning desire to live, work and worship without fear of retribution, many brave men and women have sacrificed their lives to create a society of justice and a world of peace and goodwill. As Americans, we are fortunate recipients of the realization of that dream. Yet in many countries, the flame of liberty continues to be tainted by the oppression and degradation characteristic of intolerant governments.

We who enjoy the fruits of freedom must recognize that the rights we hold to be self-evident do not exist in all countries. We cannot and must not forget that some people are continually denied their most basic human rights in their homelands, and they are forced to live in silence, hunger and fear. We must not ignore those who are held bondage by totalitarian governments and are imprisoned for their dreams and beliefs. As we witness the distressing turn of events in countries throughout the world, we must strive to ensure that America's legacy of liberty is preserved and promoted for future generations, in the hope that one day all people will be free.

In recognition of the efforts of all brave men and women who are working for freedom and justice in their own lands, I, Dick Thornburgh, Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, do hereby proclaim July 18-24, 1982 as Captive Nations Week in Pennsylvania. I urge all Pennsylvanians to join with all freedom-loving people in support of the ideals of freedom of conscience, movement and speech.

STATE OF DELAWARE—PROCLAMATION

Whereas the imperialistic politics of Russian Communists have led, through direct and indirect aggression, to the subjugation and enslavement of the peoples of Poland, Hungary, Lithuania, Ukraine, Czecho-Slovakia, Latvia, Estonia, Byelorussia, Romania, East Germany, Bulgaria, Mainland China, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia, North Korea, Albania, Idel-Ural, Servia, Croatia, Slovenia, Tibet, Cossakia, Turkestan, North Vietnam, Cuba, Cambodia, South Vietnam, Laos, Afghanistan and others; and

Whereas the desire for liberty and independence by the overwhelming majority of peoples in these conquered nations constitutes a powerful deterrent to any ambitions of Communist leaders to initiate a major war; and

Whereas the freedom loving peoples of the captive nations look to the United States as the citadel of human freedom and human rights and to the people of the United States as the leaders in bringing about their freedom and independence; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States by unanimous vote passed Public Law 86-90 establishing the third week in July each year as Captive Nations Week and inviting the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate prayer, ceremonies and activities; expressing their sympathy with and support for the just aspirations of the captive nations.

Now, therefore, I, Pierre S. du Pont, Governor of the State of Delaware, do hereby declare July 18-24, 1982, as Captive Nations Week in the State of Delaware, and urge all Delawareans to offer their prayers and dedicate their efforts for the peaceful liberation of oppressed and subjugated peoples all over the world.●

CONGRESS MUST DO ITS SHARE TO LOWER INTEREST RATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CORCORAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. CORCORAN. Mr. Speaker, this morning in testimony before the House Banking Committee, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve, Paul A. Volcker, reported that the pressures on financial markets and interest rates have been aggravated by concerns over prospective huge volumes of Treasury financing and by the need of some businesses to borrow at a time of a severe sqeeze on profits.

Last year, Federal borrowing consumed 44 percent of available capital. This compares with a figure of 36 percent in 1980 and roughly 27 percent for the period 1975-79.

This year, the huge Federal deficit facing us has made it virtually certain that Federal borrowing in 1982 will absorb more than 50 percent of the available credit, perhaps as much as 56 percent, depending upon the strength of the economic recovery which we all hope takes place later in the year.

If that economic recovery is to occur, more investment is essential. But, as Chairman Volcker pointed out this morning, home building has remained at depressed levels. "The cyclical strength 'normal' in that industry in the early stages of recovery is lacking." It is the high level of interest rates which continues to choke off recovery in the housing industry and in our economy as a whole.

I was home in Illinois over the past weekend and I know that the high level of interest rates is by far the single most important concern of the people in my district. I am confident that your constituents feel the same way.

We can do something about interest rates and we can stimulate economic recovery in a fiscally responsible way. How? By providing immediate short-term housing assistance. I am talking about the amendment my friend from Delaware, Mr. EVANS, and I tried to offer in May.

Next week we will seek permission from the rules committee to offer a new Evans-Corcoran amendment to the regular supplemental appropriations bill due to reach the House floor soon. Like the amendment we previously sought to offer, this amendment would transfer $1 billion in appropriated but unobligated funding authority from the Synthetic Fuels Corporation to a special account to be used to buy down the interest rate for home mortgages. This buydown assistance would be available until interest rates come down.

The amendment we hope to offer will do something else to help. Until interest rates do come down, it is imperative that we take all possible steps to alleviate further pressure on the credit markets. The best way to do this is by minimizing Federal borrowing. Accordingly, the Evans-Corcoran amendment would defer $5 to $8 billion in new federally supported borrowing that is now scheduled to take place in 1982. It would do this by suspending any further awards of financial assistance by the Synthetic Fuels Corporation until interest rates reach the level at which the housing subsidy phases out. Until this interest rate "trigger" is pulled, the Government has no business putting upward pressure on interest rates by subsidizing synthetic fuels projects.

In the next 6 weeks, the Corporation is expected to make awards of financial assistance to two coal gasification projects for which loan guarantees and other Federal financing assistance is sought. The amounts of assistance requested by these projects' sponsors—companies like Ashland Oil, Koppers Co., Kaneb Services, and Bechtel Petroleum, Inc.—have not been publicly disclosed. The SFC is currently negotiating with these sponsors to determine how much they will receive. Legally, the SFC could award up to $3 billion per project. Although it is not likely that this much will be awarded to either project, they represent only the first round of candidates now before the SFC. The sponsors of 15 other projects are now entering negotiations with the SFC for second round awards of financial assistance. These awards are expected to be made in 1982.

The Evans-Corcoran amendment would not scuttle these projects. It would simply delay the award of Federal subsidies until the credit markets can support the additional burden that Federal commitments of this magnitude would place upon them. Until the interest rate trigger is pulled by a recovering economy and a rebounding housing industry, how can we justify granting huge Federal subsidies to synthetic fuels?

Congress is being forced to make significant cuts in many of the most sensitive and important Federal Government programs. These include defense, medicaid, and agriculture. Is it too much to ask that synfuels subsidies at least be delayed until we get the housing industry and the American people back to work?

I think not. Please help us to help housing, directly, by providing assistance for new mortgages and, indirectly, by reducing the pressure on interest rates generated by Federal borrowing.●

THE HANDICAPPED INDIVIDUALS SERVICES AND TRAINING ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. ERDAHL is recognized for 15 minutes.

● Mr. ERDAHL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Handicapped Individuals Services and Training Act. The bill is cosponsored by Congressman LEBOUTILLIER and has four objectives contained in four separate titles:

Title I establishes an independent, permanent authorization for the Helen Keller National Center for Deaf-Blind Youth and Adults, founded in 1969 at Sands Point, N.Y. The center is currently funded under a discretionary program of the Rehabilitation Act which must be reauthorized before October 1, 1983.

Title II establishes a 5-year authorization for the Vinland National Center for Physical Fitness and Healthsports for Handicapped Individuals. This center is patterned after the Beitostolen Center in Norway and represents the culmination of a bicentennial gift from the Government of Norway to be used in helping establish such a center in the United States.

Title III establishes a 5-year independent authorization for the regional postsecondary education programs for the deaf operated at the St. Paul, Minn., Technological-Vocational Institute, the California State University at Northridge, the Central Community College of Seattle, Wash., and the Delgado College at New Orleans, La. These programs have been operating since the late 1960's. They are presently authorized under the Education of the Handicapped Act discretionary programs and must be reauthorized by October 1, 1983.

Title IV establishes an independent permanent authorization for the captioned film services for the deaf. These services have been funded by Congress since 1959. Now they are included as one of several discretionary programs under the Education of the Handicapped Act, and must be reauthorized by October 1, 1983, or expire.

This bill is necessary for many reasons, but two stand out. First, we need to take a new look at which programs have been and which programs should be classified as discretionary programs for handicapped individuals. Second, we must explore new ways to fund initiatives which will benefit handicapped individuals.

Over the last 2 years we have had a legitimate preoccupation with the budget process because of our desire to limit increases in Federal spending. The Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1981 dramatically reflects our collective ability to impact on Federal spending. However, from my perspective, this preoccupation with the budget process has had some unintended consequences. Given the massive nature of our task, we concentrated on budget recommendations which did not necessarily reflect the value of, or possible benefits derived from, individual programs. We had less time to pursue substantive legislation. We were less inclined to offer legislation that would increase Federal spending.

Given this context, two considerable and perhaps unintentional consequences impacted on the Education of the Handicapped Act (EHA) and the Rehabilitation Act. In the case of EHA, the permanent authorization status of discretionary programs authorized by the act were converted so that they would expire, if not reauthorized by October 1, 1983. For the EHA and Rehabilitation Act discretionary programs, budget cuts were disproportionately high. The 1982 appropriation levels range between 20 percent and 50 percent lower than the 1980 appropriation levels.

I fully support placing sunset provisions in legislation; imposing responsible budget limitations on programs; and giving some programs discretionary status, but only after careful consideration of the purposes and effects on individual programs. Moreover, in the past, most education, training, and service programs received increases justified by inflation, so that discretionary program status was not a liability.

Since major changes were instituted last year through the Omnibus Reconciliation Act without careful consideration of individual programs, I feel strongly that we need to review the discretionary program status of three programs pertaining to handicapped individuals. My bill would provide the Helen Keller National Center for Deaf-Blind Youth and Adults and the captioned film services for the deaf with permanent authorization and the four regional postsecondary programs for the deaf with an independent 5-year authorization.

The Helen Keller National Center provides training for deaf-blind individuals so that they may become more independent. The four regional postsecondary programs provide technical and vocational training opportunities for deaf youth and adults. The captioned film services provide adapted media and materials for deaf and other handicapped individuals and those who work with such individuals.

My colleague from New York, Mr. LEBOUTILLIER, introduced H.R. 6098, related to the Helen Keller National Center and parallels title I of my bill. Our esteemed colleague, Senator RANDOLPH, has introduced S. 2459, which contains language similar to titles I, III, and IV of my bill.

I believe that the motivation for these legislative initiatives is most justified—to provide some predictability and stability in funding for institutions and services which contribute to the independence of handicapped persons. Perhaps, by establishing independent authorizations we can insulate these essential programs and services from indiscriminate budget cuts. Like Gallaudet College, the National Technical Institute for the Deaf, and the American Printing House for the Blind, they offer unique opportunities and services which would be difficult and costly for States to duplicate.

Titles I, III, and IV in my bill do not contain increases in current authorization levels, nor do they contain radical administrative changes.

Title II, as I have indicated, establishes the Vinland National Center for Healthsports and Physical Fitness for Handicapped Individuals. Healthsports, the cornerstone of the Vinland National Center, refers to techniques or procedures to train handicapped individuals so they may actively and directly participate in a wide range of athletic activities. Most importantly, however, "healthsports" also encompasses a comprehensive learning experience or rehabilitation process which offers an opportunity to improve physical, social, and emotional fitness, to develop medical self-care skills, to enhance self-reliance, to increase employability, and to teach positive use of leisure and recreation time.

I have proposed that the Vinland National Center receive an athorization of appropriations for operating expenses beginning at a level of $650,000 for fiscal year 1984 and gradually being reduced to $300,000 by 1988, the expiration date. In addition, in order to receive an appropriation in any year Vinland must demonstrate access to a non-Federal match for total operating expenses of 10 percent in 1984, of 25 percent in 1985, of 33 percent in 1986, of 50 percent in 1987, and of 75 percent in 1988. Finally, construction funds in the amount of $2 million for fiscal year 1984 and $1 million for fiscal year 1985 are authorized, but must be matched by an equal amount of non-Federal funds.

In my role as the ranking Republican on the House Select Education Subcommittee, which has jurisdiction over Federal programs for the handicapped, I have been particularly impressed with the vocational rehabilitation program, authorized by the Rehabilitation Act. Eighty percent of the support for this 65-year-old program is provided by the Federal Government; 20 percent is provided by State governments. Each State provides training and support services for handicapped individuals who wish to obtain gainful employment. Recent statistics have indicated that for every Federal dollar invested in this program, $11 are returned by handicapped individuals in gainful employment.

For the last 4 years I have been intrigued by the cost effectiveness of the vocational rehabilitation program and the constructive energy of both staff and training at Vinland in my home State, Minnesota. At the same time I have sought ways to increase the public awareness of the potential contributions handicapped individuals can make to society given the training and the opportunity; I also have sought ways to increase non-Federal support for programs and services that benefit handicapped individuals. Title II of my bill is an attempt to bring about such awareness by helping Vinland bring the concept of "wellness" and "healthsports" to communities in each State. It is also an attempt, through a 5-year Federal commitment, to provide sufficient startup money to make Vinland a truly national center which will attract participants and support from throughout the Nation.

Vinland's healthsport concept represents a preventive and rehabilitative orientation which should complement the objectives of State rehabilitation programs. And, although I may be overly optimistic, perhaps as private sector support for healthsports grows—like its enthusiasm for the Special Olympics—it will be transformed into a stronger partnership with State vocational rehabilitation agencies in providing expanded training and employment opportunities for handicapped persons.

I have seen the experiences offered at Vinland lead to greater independence and self-confidence of handicapped individuals. These traits lead individuals to make greater contributions in their home and work environments, to greater acceptance by coworkers, and to fuller integration into their communities. I hope you will join me in approving a 5-year investment in some very special human capital. The funding for Vinland will yield innumerable benefits to individuals and society.●

CONTRACTING OUT—COST EFFECTIVE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas. (Mr. COLLINS) is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. COLLINS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the Armed Services Committee report to the legislation we are considering today, H.R. 6030, the Department of Defense authorization bill, has considered three provisions which, if enacted, would seriously undermine the free enterprise system in this country, and place an unnecessary burden on taxpayers.

Specifically, I am talking about the committee's discussion of imposing a 1-year moratorium on the contracting out procedures set forth in Office and Management Circular A-76. I join the administration in their strong support of this circular, which states that it is the policy of the Federal Government to rely on the private sector for acquiring commercial or industrial products and services needed by the Federal Government, when private sector performance is feasible and no overriding factors require in-house performance.

The circular contains two significant provisions giving consideration to affected Federal employees, as a result of the conversion to contract performance:

First. Existing in-house activities will not be converted to contract performance unless it will result in a savings of at least 10 percent.

Second. Federal employees displaced as a result of a conversion to contract performance are given first refusal for employment openings in the contract operation.

Yet, what the Armed Services Committee is considering is a 1-year moratorium on all contracting out by the Department of Defense. Second, the actual bill recommends hiring 17,000 civil service personnel for commercial activities, thereby eliminating 440 contract administrator positions.

Third, all funds for studies comparing the costs of private sector performance versus in-house performance of any Department of Defense (DOD) functions would be deleted, despite the fact that these cost studies have saved almost $210 million a year since 1979.

What we are encouraging here, Mr. Speaker, is putting the Federal Government fully in charge, even when it has been shown that contracting out is more efficient and would result in savings of 10 percent or more. This would seriously restrict the Department's access to qualified, competent professionals outside the Government. DOD and all Federal agencies must have the flexibility to choose between the use of Government or private sector resources. Without this choice, the Federal Government will be directly competing with the private sector and small businessmen who are clearly at a disadvantage.

Information from the General Accounting Office (GAO) and the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) show that as many as 400,000 Federal employees are operating 11,000 commercial or industrial activities at a cost of almost $20 billion annually to the taxpayers. Since some agencies have not reported all of their activities, the total annual operating cost could well reach $30 billion when all data is available. One agency, DOD, has conducted more A-76 cost comparisons than any other Federal agency; 60 percent of these demonstrated that in-house costs were at least 10 percent higher than contracting out. This is supported by OMB's estimate that full implementation of A-76 will reduce the cost of providing goods and services by $1 billion annually. Clearly, the American taxpayers get a much better deal when agencies are allowed to choose between in-house or contracting out for services. Nonessential Government functions should be subject to contracting out and are directed under Circular A-76 to be performed by the private sector.

I strongly oppose any attempts to restrict Government reliance on the private sector for needed goods and services. With a $103 billion deficit, it is completely senseless to ignore cost savings of 10 percent and more for these goods and services. Furthermore, with small businessmen hit hard by inflation and high interest rates, Government competition would prove to be a severe and unnecessary blow.

The taxpayers of this Nation deserve the most efficient and effective use of their tax dollars. Americans want to reduce the role and size of government. We can start here by maintaining the contracting-out procedures and cost-comparison studies set forth in A-76.

FOURTH OF JULY ADDRESS BY COL. HARRY O. BUZHARDT (USMC RETIRED)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PEPPER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, one of the most stirring July 4 addresses I heard was one delivered before the Tenth Holers Golf Association of the Country Club of Coral Gables, Fla., of which I am a member and am proud to say is in my district. The address was made by one of our able members, Col. Harry O. Buzhardt, (USMC, retired). The stirring and eloquent words delivered by Colonel Buzhardt deeply moved the large audience who heard him. He spoke with fervor born of deep patriotism. One would naturally expect from a distinguished member of the Marine Corps, such as Colonel Buzhardt, a man to fan the flames of patriotism and make them burn brighter on our great Independence Day. Let us hope that we shall never see the time when we ignore that day which meant the birth of what was destined to be the greatest Nation known to history, our beautiful and blessed America. As we should tell those of our family that we love them, so should we tell our beloved country that we love it and we cherish it. This Colonel Buzhardt so beautifully did in his magnificent Fourth of July address. I am proud to offer it following my remarks for placement in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am sure it will deeply move all who read it.

The address follows:

ADDRESS BY COL. HARRY O. BUZHARDT (USMC, RETIRED)

Senator Pepper, gentlemen, fellow 10th Holers:

On this Saturday, July 3d, I wish to remind you that tomorrow will be 206 years since Independence day of 1776 now observed in commemoration of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence. To all of us, Independence means Freedom.

May I take you back in history with a familiar quote:

"By the rude bridge that arched the flood, their flags to Aprils breeze unfurled, 'twas there the embattled farmers stood, and fired the shots—heard round the world." We have a heritage of which we can and should be justly proud.

Our forefathers unhesitatingly and willingly gave their lives for our great country. And likewise again during World War I. Our current generations included members of all the branches of The Armed Forces who were called upon to serve their country. And we should take time today to remember as well as honor especially those who made that supreme sacrifice to give their lives that we might enjoy the fruits of their fateful efforts. Let us pay tribute to all the Veterans of World War II, Korea, and the unpopular Vietnam fiasco, believed by many to have been waged for political rather than military objectives and fought mainly in South Vietnam among our Vietnamese friends supporting our cause and theirs, rather than to have utilized our full military potential in pursuit of our objectives by taking the war into the most northern portion of North Vietnam where everyone was to have been considered our enemy. I firmly believe that if this had been done, the conflict would have been brought to a timely conclusion with Victory of the South Vietnamese and an honorable termination for the Free World Nations over the Communist Bloc Countries.

I am talking to the wrong group of people. I feel like the man taking ice to the Eskimos, or the person carrying coals to Newcastle. If I were to ask myself the question, who are you? My response would be. To the 10th Holers Golf Association of the Country Club of Coral Gables, Florida who are by far the most patriotic organization that I have been a member, other than the regular military forces, and there are times when I might even question that remark. For some of you more recent members, I should be informing that the 10th Holers have had similar presentations as this for the 4th of July for some 12 years that I have been familiar with this group. And I feel strongly that it is time well spent to reflect on the past and to pay respect to those whose cause has thus far preserved our freedom we so dearly cherish.

I have wondered in amazement during the past years as to why we do not advertize to the Nations of the World that there has never been a known incident of a person crossing the Berlin Wall risking his life returning behind the Iron Curtain, while there remains a constant Communist guard to prevent escape from Communist rule and people risk death to cross over and escape into West Germany.

To reflect more on past history of the 10th Holers, it was during the administration of President Pat Crook and when I was the Secretary that Senator CLAUDE PEPPER furnished us at his expense the beautiful flag of the United States that had been flown over our Nations Capitol. That flag is displayed proudly in the lobby of the Country Club, and Senator, we thank you again for giving us this treasured possession.

I wish to show you these two laminated sheets mounted on 2 different wooden boards that have become two of our prized historical documents. One is a sheet signed by those present at the Saturday meeting to honor the 4th of July 1976 and signed on that date. The other is for the July 4th, 1981 signed by members in attendance on that date. Both of these are kept in the glass enclosure in the hallway entrance to the Club where you may see them. Too many of these members are no longer with us. I name only one, Colonel Krit Logsdon, U.S. Army, Retired, who was a Veteran of World War I.

May the Almighty continue to bless our members. And may His Grace especially shine upon those members who have departed into the Promised Land.

I still feel like the new kid on the block due to my relatively short number of years as a member, yet when asked by the old timers if I would speak out for my country, I have always in the past, and today still am damned proud to be able to do so. Not so much for you here assembled, nor for myself. But, for all those whose voices have been stilled by death in battle to preserve our heritage. I am filled with deepest humility in my feeble attempt to sound off for the departed Heroes who no longer have this chance to speak. And I am particularly pleased to let everyone know that I am positive that we who are living in the United States today are privileged to live in the Greatest Nation this World has ever known, in spite of our imperfections confronting us on a daily basis. We must have faith that these problems can and will be solved in the not too distant future. Maybe—just perhaps, the degradation of our past moral values, if continued unsolved into the future, could be contributing more to our downfall as a Nation, than the ever present possible destruction through the erruption of the threat of imminent Nuclear World War that jeopardizes our survival.

In closing, remember that the 21 gun salute is reserved for the President of the United States and for the Heads of Foreign Governments. However, my friends, you are deserving of a 21 gun salute, and if it were within my power to do so, you would be given that salute as follows: One round would be fired and there would be this noticeable pause as though there may have been a misfire. Then seven rounds would be fired timed consecutively and the same pause in firing again. Then another consecutively timed seven rounds fired and again this pause in firing. Then six consecutive rounds fired and an end of the firing. That gentlemen is the way a 21 gun salute is fired. Such a sequence is to hopefully remind us to never forget—Independence Day, One Seven Seven Six.

That concludes my remarks, thank you.●

IRV KUPCINET'S PURPLE HEART CRUISE TO HONOR OUR NATION'S VETERANS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. ANNUNZIO is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of my colleagues the Purple Heart Cruise, an annual all-day event in Chicago to honor hospitalized veterans and GI's in training at Chicago area military bases. This year's cruise will take place on July 22 down the southern scenic route of the Chicago River.

The founder and architect of this unique Chicago salute to our war veterans is my good friend Irv Kupcinet, nationally known syndicated talk show host, and columnist for the Chicago Sun-Times. He is also featured in "Kup's World" on Chicago's WBBM-TV news. Kup has continually and tirelessly devoted endless hours to many charitable causes, helping to make our city a great place in which to live. In recent years, Kup has asked the readers of his column to contribute money to defray the expenses of this cruise. Donations of gifts are also made which are given to every veteran attending the affair.

With Kup at the helm, the Purple Heart Cruise has sailed every year since 1945. This year the floating platform of two giant barges tied together and furnished by the Material Service Corp., will provide enough space for the more than 500 past and present members of the military from the Great Lakes Hospital and Naval Base, the Glenview Naval Air Station, Fort Sheridan, the Coast Guard, and the Veterans' Administration hospitals at Hines, North Chicago, Lakeside, and West Side. Professional singers, dancers, musicians, and actors, who volunteer their talents, will entertain their guests with a stage show, in numerous small bands, and as strolling performers.

Excerpts from "Kup's Column" in the Chicago Sun-Times on June 22, 1982, regarding this year's Purple Heart Cruise follow:

KUP'S COLUMN

Once again we come to you, hat in hand, to seek support for Chicago's version of "Love Boat," otherwise known as the Purple Heart Cruise. The cruise is an ongoing love affair between Chicago and our war veterans, which started way back in the year the Cubs last won a National League pennant. That tells you how long the cruise has been operating. The year was 1945, World War II was coming to a close and the Purple Heart Cruise was launched as a reminder that we owe a debt of gratitude to the men and women who served our nation.

But a funny thing happened on our way to the 33th consecutive cruise—no ship. For the last 11 years, we've sailed on the Coast Guard Cutter Mackinaw and before then on the luxurious cruise ships, the SS North and South America. But cruise ships went out of business long ago and this summer the Mackinaw is going into drydock for repairs, leaving the Great Lakes without a single ship capable of accommodating the cruise. How to conduct a cruise without a ship? You do it with huge barges. Thanks to Henry Crown and Rear Adm. Arnold Sobel (ret.) of Material Service Corp., two of the firm's giant barges will be made available. They'll be latched together side by side, to give us more area than we had on the Mackinaw.

Thus, it's on with the show July 22, with a slightly different look. The barges, with four-foot fences for safety, will be decorated with flags and banners. And, moved by a tug. They will take off from the Ogden Slip, just south of Navy Pier. Instead of the usual cruising in Lake Michigan, this year we'll take the scenic route of the Chicago River, going south. Some 500 GIs and hospitalized veterans will make up our all-star passenger list. They'll come from Great Lakes hospital and naval base, Glenview Naval Air Station, Fort Sheridan, the Coast Guard and Veteran Administration hospitals at Hines, North Chicago, Lakeside and West Side.

The cruise is welcomed by hospitals and training centers as a morale-booster. It's a change of pace for GI and hospitalized vet alike; a fun-filled day, with gifts, prices, dancing, food and a sparkling stage show. The entertainers, as usual, volunteer their services with the consent of the Chicago Federation of Musicians and the American Guild of Variety Artists. It's our way of telling the veterans they have not been forgotten. Some of the vets on the cruise go all the way back to World War I. Others served on the battlefields of World War II, Korea and Vietnam.

The cruise this year will be dedicated to the memory of Les Lear, who for more than 25 years served as our "naval aide." His assistance was invaluable and his widow Dottie will be presented a plaque in a ceremony before we sail. . . . Erwin Gobel, who helped inaugurate the cruise, again will be with us in an advisory capacity. Commodore Chris Lagan of the Coast Guard Auxiliary will assign two escort ships to accompany the cruise as a safety precaution and maestro Frank York will serve as entertainment director.

The Purple Heart Cruise is unique and typically Chicago. No other city offers a similar salute to the veterans. But the cruise doesn't operate only on tender, loving care. Hence, readers are invited to take part by sending a donation, large or small, to the Purple Heart Cruise, care of the Sun-Times, 401 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago 60611. The IRS will confirm that it's deductible. And whether your contribution is $1 or $100, you'll feel like a million.

Mr. Speaker, this festival is designed to pay tribute to those men and women who have bravely given so much in service to our country in defense of freedom during World Wars I and II, and the wars in Korea and Vietnam. The Purple Heart Cruise serves as a reminder that there are still veterans from these wars who must remain in hospitals, and these heroic individuals will not be forgotten.

I commend Kup and the citizens of Chicago who have made this cruise possible for 38 years, and extend my best wishes to Kup, the master pilot behind the Purple Heart Cruise, for abundant good health and continued success in his charitable endeavors in the years ahead.●

MOVE FAST TO SAVE THE PRESIDIO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON) is recognized for 10 minutes.

● Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Speaker, the recent action by the U.S. Senate which authorized the President to dispose of military installations is widely regarded as a major threat to the Presidio in San Francisco. The depth of concern is reflected in the following excellent editorial in the July 18, 1982, San Francisco Examiner which I request be inserted in the RECORD.

[From the San Francisco Examiner, July 18, 1982]

MOVE FAST TO SAVE THE PRESIDIO

The Presidio of San Francisco has served as a military post for more than 200 years under three flags—Spanish, Mexican and American—and in the passage of time has evolved into an institution of fame beyond its immediate area. Today it is the headquarters of the United States Sixth Army, but it performs a function far beyond the military. It is as much a part of San Francisco as Golden Gate Park and, in its own grand way, serves much the same purpose.

That's why The City is highly disturbed by the newly raised possibility that the Presidio's 1,441 wooded acres—eucalyptus, Monterey cypress and stands of murmuring pine—could be sold and turned over to developers. It needs to be preserved in its present form as a unique urban resource.

The threat to the Presidio lies in a quietly passed Senate amendment to the Defense Construction Authorizaiton Act. It gives the president or his designated agent the authority to dispose of military installations when he determines that that would be "in the public interest or is necessary for national defense purposes." The amendment (sponsored by Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.) cuts short all congressional procedures on the surplus designation of federal property. Amazingly, and shamefully, it contains authority to dispose of such property "notwithstanding any other provision of law."

This is where the Presido comes in. Existing law, as authored and presently defended by Rep. Phillip Burton, D-San Francisco, says that should the Army ever declare that the Presidio no longer served a useful military purpose, the land would revert to the Golden Gate National Recreation Area. The Senate amendment would circumvent that protection and put the Presidio at the mercy of the highest bidder.

We are sympathetic to the federal government's desire to eliminate installations, military or otherwise, that have outlived their usefulness. Too many of these remain to drain tax funds, serving local ends without regard to the national welfare.

But that does not apply to the Presidio. The historic post, at once a tower of strength and mercy in the desperate postquake hours of 1906, today is an economic asset to San Francisco and militarily useful. Reasonable arguments can be advanced to maintain it on those points alone. But if the weight of logic ever should fall toward abandoning military use, no logic could dictate that it be auctioned off for development, however benign.

The mischievous amendment's language, "public interest," is applicable here. The Presidio as open space in a congested urban area does indeed meet the criteria of "public service," if contributing to the quality of urban life has any meaning in this context.

To go further, the Presidio, in its park-like setting overlooking San Francisco Bay, is a national resource of large dimension. Mayor Feinstein is right in mustering such resources as The City has available to defend it. Burton thinks the House, acting on his alert, will send the defense bill to the Senate without the offensive amendment. The showdown will come in a Senate-House conference, where the remonstrances of Sens. Alan Cranston and S. I. Hayakawa should be heard at full pitch.

Mr. Speaker, the following editorial in the July 17, 1982, San Francisco Chronicle speaks very strongly to the recent Senate action which jeopardizes a prized asset of San Francisco—the Presidio.

[From the San Francisco Chronicle, July 17, 1982]

A SNEAK ATTACK ON THE PRESIDIO

A sneak, flanking movement under cover of darkness has been launched against San Francisco's Presidio. We are pleased to see its disclosure has prompted swift defensive measures from civic and congressional protectors of this remarkable Army installation. They are rallying to the cause because two weeks ago the U.S. Senate quietly approved legislation that would open the door to the sale of the presidio as surplus military property.

It was one of those classic sleepers: an amendment introduced by Republican Senator J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina that did not mention the Presidio or any other military installation. His 16 parenthetical words weren't even printed up: they were advertised as non-controversial—a strategy for easing the national debt. But their effect would be to allow the president to sell off the Presidio's 1308 acres if he determined that to be in the public interest or necessary for national defense purposes.

The point is that under terms of the 1972 legislation sponsored by Congressman Phillip Burton of San Francisco creating the Golden Gate National Recreation Area, the Presidio is to be added to the recreational area if the Army ever decamps. But the Thurmond amendment extends presidential authority to sell even military properties whose disposal requires specific authorization by law, as has been the case with the Presidio.

Since the amendment was adopted by voice vote without even a reading, its implications were slow to surface. Credit for uncovering the full significance of the move must go to public lands specialists of the Sierra Club. It seems that the Defense Department, wishing to "wipe the slate clean" of encumbrances on military property, actually had its eye on sale of Fort DeRussy, an Army resort on Waikiki Beach.

But that is hardly any reason to strip away the protection that has been accorded the Presidio.

As we said in 1978 when a similarly small-minded—and unsuccessful—effort was launched by the Carter administration, this enclave of trees, lawns, pleasant buildings and gently curving roads is more than just an Army headquarters. It is an extraordinary asset for both this city and its Bay Area neighbors. Here are space, quietude, verdancy and a succession of sea-girt vistas. This fine counterbalance to the pressures of urban life is easily accessible and open to all.

So we are encouraged that Mayor Dianne Feinstein, Representative Burton and other congressional and civil friends are mustering their strength to repel this insidious raid on the Presidio's integrity.

The House and Senate will be conferring this week to reconcile their versions of the military construction, and we strongly urge that the offending Senate language be removed. The Presidio has been described as a comely Camelot of an Army base. That is just what it is. It should not be exposed to the perilous prospect of such a sale.●

THE REAL STORY ABOUT LEBANON

(Mr. SOLARZ asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call to my colleagues' attention an extremely important article on the situation in Lebanon by Martin Peretz in the New Republic. This article, entitled "Lebanon Eyewitness," explodes many of the myths that have arisen about Israel's military operation in Lebanon.

First, Mr. Peretz argues persuasively, based on his own firsthand observations, that initial media reports of staggeringly high civilian casualties have been grossly exaggerated. Second, he presents detailed evidence that, far from being unconcerned about civilian casualties, the Israelis did everything possible to avoid or to minimize them. Third, he documents what he calls the "great untold story of the last 6 years": The brutal nature of the PLO occupation of southern Lebanon.

Mr. Peretz' unusually cogent analysis should be required reading for any policymaker concerned about the complex Lebanese problem.

The text of the article follows:

LEBANON EYEWITNESS

(By Martin Peretz)

Much of what you have read in the newspapers and newsmagazines about the war in Lebanon—and even more of what you have seen and heard on television—is simply not true. At best, the routine reportorial fare, to say nothing of editorial or columnists' commentary, has been wrenched out of context, detached from history, exaggerated, distorted. Then there are the deliberate and systematic falsifications; remarkably little of what has been alleged in various published protest statements against the Israeli action in Lebanon is fact. I know; I was there.

So too, of course, were hundreds of other journalists, most of them honest men and women, hardworking and skeptical. Indeed, if one could contrive to get one's news, only from, say David Shipler of the New York Times, covering the Israeli side of the war lines, and from Thomas Friedman, also of the Times, working out of the PLO-held zone; perhaps with some occasional glances at David Ignatius's complex impressions in the Wall Street Journal, Eric Silver's reports in The Guardian of London, David Ottaway's dispatches in the Washington Post, and Arnold Hottinger's analyses in the Neue Zuercher Zeitung—and, in deference to the age of visual simultaneity, take in the National Public Radio broadcasts of Jim Ledderman and the telecasts of the cable News Network and of Independent Network News, which in depth of understanding and respect for viewers' intelligence outclass the big three—then one might have a reasonably balanced view of recent events and their background.

But few of us are immune to the impact of the thirty-second TV news update, the headline that tells all but what's important, the human-interest particular that misrepresents by universalizing, the analogy that warps rather than illumines. (The most obscene of this last is the comparison of Beirut, where six thousand PLO gunmen hold a civilian population hostage to their last-ditch battle with Israel, with the Warsaw ghetto, all of whose inhabitants were marked by ascription for death by the Nazis. This likening of the Jews to the Nazis and of the PLO to the Jews is sometimes made less directly by characterizing the Israeli invasion as "genocidal" and Israeli war aims as" the final solution to the Palestinian problem." It is possible that some use these words sloppily, the way people once talked about American genocide in Vietnam—or Harlem. Others use them knowingly, which is to say, knowing well how inappropriate they are.) Mass culture makes much of our politics derivative of such superficialities: the media, fast-paced for multiple deadlines—early edition, late edition, morning news, 7 o'clock news, 11 o'clock news—are always after new, vivid images of conflict, violent if possible, even if they beg, unrequited, for explanation. Why would anyone be interested in buildings that have remained standing or in bodies that have remained whole? The standing order for the armies of the fourth estate is "good copy."

Journalists have a professional interest—and it is a vocational hazard for their thinking—in broken necks and amputated limbs, the equivalent of fires and armed robberies on the local news. So we now have people who are thought and who think themselves informed, we now have editorial writers and columnists, officially certified as informed and also wise, who seem to form their political opinions from news photographs.

And why, after all, shouldn't they? Aren't pictures of human suffering in war evidence enough of the wrongness of war? But those who take their opinions from photographs or verbal evocations of war victims are not pacifists; few of the condemnations of Israel are based on pacifist principles or even on vaguely pacifistic sentiment. And few of those who condemn Israel today condemn others when their actions make for similar photographs, or worse ones. In any case, pacifism is not politics. All wars hurt, but some wars are conducted differently from others—yes, more humanely, and to more humane purpose. This I argue—this I saw with my own eyes—is Israel's war in Lebanon. It's a war too complicated to tell about quickly, too taxing by way of historical understanding for correspondents armed with a peculiarly American mixture of ignorance, cynicism, and brashness, who jet from crisis to crisis—looking for Vietnam, and, if possible, for Watergate, too. There is one other factor: a cohort of journalists specializing in the Middle East—Jonathan Randal, William Claiborne, Edward Cody, and Jim Hoagland, all of the Washington Post, lead the pack—with a record to defend. The events in Lebanon prove them wrong, some of them deceitfully so, and they shape the facts—as they want to shape the future—to disguise the disservice they've done their readers, which is to say the disservice they've done the truth and, threfore, the foreign policy or our country as well.

II

About ten days into the war, the New Republic noted editorially that there had been "terrible civilian casualties . . . terrible Israeli callousness." With the specificity that the computer age requires, two numbers had by then been bruited about in the media. One widely cited report numbered the dead at 10,122; another, at 9,583. The figure that took hold in the public's imagination was a neat 10,000 fatalities, to which were added anywhere from 16,000 to 40,000 wounded, and no less than 600,000 refugees. (Another recent figure claims 700,000.) TNR had been skeptical of the statistics from the first, but, deep down, I feared that perhaps the Israelis had actually been "unforgettably bloody," as the Post would later put it, causing "widespread slaughter of civilians." I too had seen on television the bombed-out buildings of Sidon.

There is no way to be pleasantly surprised as one travels north from sleepy Nahariya, on Israel's Mediterranean coast, into Lebanese territory. Waterside roads have been strafed, trees uprooted, cars damaged, roofs of the occasional shoreline houses blown out; PLO artillery pieces, carcasses of a self-defeating illusion, litter the landscape. The UNIFIL outposts—those preposterous redoubts of French, Nepalese, Fijian, and Dutch witnesses to the inability of international authority to keep the promise made to Israel after 1978 that Palestinian terrorists would not again assault its settlements—are untouched. The fighting here was fast, and, as army types aseptically put it, "light." No one says that south of Tyre many civilians, or any, were caught in harm's way.

Tyre is where the controversy about civilian casualties starts and Sidon is where it ends. The casualties of West Beirut, whose destiny the PLO holds in its hands, were never counted in the early estimates that first provoked indignation. Tyre and Sidon fell to the Israelis after forty-eight hours of heavy fighting. The cities were bombed from the air, shelled from the sea, set upon over the land, These were not, said a saddened Israeli colonel, "manicured attacks." But neither were they indiscriminate or wholesale; this was no war against a civilian population, Lebanese or Palestinian. Whomever I talked to on the streets—and there are many eager to talk, Christian and Moslem, in French or English or Arabic—pointed out that what the Israelis had targeted were invariably military targets. A friend in the States later remonstrated that this observation implicitly faults the PLO for resisting the invasion. It's not that, not that at all—but rather that the PLO resisted, as it had previously aggressed, from the midst of civilian life, and of Lebanese as well as of Palestinian civilian life. With excruciating consistency, the PLO's commanders seemed to favor for their antiaircraft batteries the courtyards of schools, for their tanks and artillery the environs of hospitals, apartment buildings, and—easiest for them and most devastating for their families—the labyrinthine alleys of the refugee camps, Rashidiye at Tyre and in Ain el-Hilwe at Sidon. The PLO was not alone in turning noncombatant areas into war zones: Jonathan Randal in the Post (June 14) gingerly admits from Aazzouniye that "there were also confused reports of Syrian soldiers being in the area of the sanitarium during the fighting." In Jezzin, more beautiful than Aspen, the reports were not confused. Dr. Naji Kannan told me that he had evacuated patients to his own home from his hospital because the Syrians had installed themselves in its confines and wouldn't leave.

On whom, according to the Geneva Convention's laws of war aiming to set inhibitions on the killing of innocents, falls the onus for civilian casualties incurred in populated areas? Had the Israelis, I asked, shelled areas from which there was no fire? No one, not even the surly young bank clerk in Tyre, suggested they had. The entrance to Sidon and the city center were devastated—and, I was told by locals, that's exactly where PLO arms and fighters were most densely concentrated. The bombed-out, skeletal evidence of a military infrastructure proved it. In this primarily Moslem locale, PLO headquarters stood directly between the Shabb hospital and Al Fatah's own infirmary. All the same, it was apparent that Israeli forces took pains not to damage such buildings, likely to hold civilians. Even in heavily hit areas, many mosques and other public institutions seemed miraculously to survive unscathed. I wandered freely, I should add, with an officer from Dover Zahal, the army's information unit. He had no itinerary beyond my curiosity.

You've seen the destroyed areas on television; you've probably not seen the vast areas adjacent to them or those five or ten minutes away. In the hills beyond Sidon and Tyre, toward the interior, the countryside has been wholly undistrubed. Here and there are shell marks; natives date them vaguely to five or six years ago. The press has systematically ignored the fact that much of the destruction, in the cities and in other locales like Damour, that it describes and portrays on television is a result of seven years of bitter fighting.

In both major coastal cities, hours before the Israeli attack, leaflets had been dropped, calling on the inhabitants to flee to the beaches, which would be guaranteed by the Israeli as open or war-free zones. That's what the cities could have been had the PLO entrenched themselves in the hills and not in the cities. In Sidon, I was told by a local merchant, the PLO firebombed a street of shops to emphasize its intent that people not leave. (Elsewhere, it was rumored, the PLO killed people who wanted to leave, but I did not hear this from a reliable source myself.) Dr. Pinhas Harris, Israel's Scottish-born deputy surgeon-general, who returned from leave at Walter Reed Hospital in Washington, D.C., to direct the medical relief effort in the south, estimated that more than 100,000 people, perhaps 150,000, took refuge on the beaches north and south of Sidon. Two weeks after the fighting, I could see that there had been a vast encampment. Israelis told me that food had run out quickly. "It is not a happy circumstance to escape to the beaches," Dr. Harris conceded, "but had more civilians heeded our warnings, listened to our importunings, the number of dead would have been infinitesimal."

What were the numbers? "Please don't tell us," Mary McGrory wrote Menachem Begin in an open letter in the Washington Post (June 20) "that the figures given by the Lebanese of 9,000 civilian dead are exaggerated." But was it not the numbers which flared tempers? Was it not the numbers which in Richard Cohen's meticulous calculus (Post, June 10) of just how little Israel had suffered from recent terrorist attacks—and not what it had prevented in the past and prevented for the future—that made its response "totally out of proportion"? People who talk about proportionality need to be scrupulous about numbers.

Numbers have always been a problem in Lebanon: there has been no census for more than a generation, lest fresh figures disrupt the political formula for denominational representation which alone allows Lebanon to be imagined as one country. The PLO will not allow UNRWA to do a count of the refugees in the camps lest all allocations be reduced. As on Chicago's voting rolls, old people don't really die in the camps; their food rations go on forever. The population of Lebanon is said to be about three million; this makes the figure of 600,000 new refugees in the south transparent nonsense, since that is roughly the total number of inhabitants of the war zone, from the Mediterranean in the west to the Syrian front in the east. Even the scaled-down number of 300,000 refugees defies logic and one's eyes. A number that never seemed to change is of those in West Beirut. Although for weeks correspondents have described—and I saw—long lines of cars laden with people and belongings leaving the PLO-held sector, there always were 500,000 people left; the Israelis' guess is between 200,000 and 250,000. Finally, making the elementary point that when people leave a city its population decreases, Bernard Gwertzman (Times, July 13) estimated there were from 200,000 to 400,000 civilians left. In a sidebar to its March 1981 series on Lebanon, the Post told us that there are 400,000 resident Palestinians in the country. But on July 8, Jonathan Randal, the coauthor of last year's articles, wrote that there are 500,000. Surely it's not the birthrate. Elsewhere the number 600,000 crops up. So what's one or two hundred thousand among journalists? If no one quibbles about these big numbers, no one should quibble about a mere few thousand in the death count. Friedman in the Times tells us that the current population of Sidon is 200,000; Ottaway in the Post says it is 300,000; in the same paper, Cody says it's 200,000. Take your pick.

Given the impossibility of accurately judging the number of the living, it is not surprising that sloppiness and propaganda determine the number of the dead. In the beginning the high toll seemed to carry the cachet of international relief agencies. Maybe that's why Senator Charles Percy, not ordinarily inclined to see the best in the Israelis anyway, accepted the 10,000 figure as close to the truth. But the source was never acutally the International Red Cross or any U.N. agency, though they have been widely cited. The numbers came originally from the Palestinain Red Crescent, of which Yasir Arafat's brother is president. Some early Lebanese estimates were close to his. But the numbers from Beirut about the deaths in the south also defy logic and experience. This past winter there were airplane crashes in Washington and Boston; it took more than a week to know exactly how many were dead. But last month in Lebanon, we received and accepted precise daily figures—and not even from authorities on the spot but from Israel's enemies in besieged Beirut—and elsewhere. (The New York Times even called Professor Edward Said on Morningside Heights in New York to check casualty figures.) Chancellor Bruno Kreisky of Austria, joining the litany for the 10,000 dead, said his source was UNICEF. But in Geneva a spokeswoman for UNICEF declared, "We have not reported any casualty figures at all." A phone call to UNICEF headquarters in New York provoked a stronger denial.

This leaves the International Red Cross, which seems absolutely beside itself to deny responsbility for the casualty numbers. David Ottaway reported in the Post on June 25 that Franceso Noseda, head of the Red Cross mission in Lebanon, claimed that "we did not mention here any figure approaching 10,000." He did say that the only numbers the Red Cross had provided were the counts of 47 dead and 247 wounded in Tyre—and these figures interestingly, are lower than those put out by Israeli authorities. In Tyre, Dr. El Khalil estimated that between 57 and 63 persons had been killed, including civilians from the refugee camps. Dr. Harris told me that Israel "doesn't estimate the dead. We count them. This is why we couldn't give numbers as readily as the people in Beirut. We had no real numbers until the fallen-in buildings were dug out. Maybe there are a few more we won't find." The Israelis didn't hazard an offical number until June 22. They admit to some 250 dead in Sidon. In Nabatiye, the PLO's main base in the center, where the resistance was spotty because Palestinian regulars had run, no one really challenges the Israeli number of ten civilian dead. In a Nabatiye hospital with 60 patients, Dr. Kanon told me there was only one war-wounded, from Sidon. All of this is a far cry from the "many thousands" assumed by Stephen S. Rosenfeld in the Post on June 18.

The refugee estimates have also been brought into perspective. Many of the refugees, in fact, are those returning to their homes in the south, abandoned after the PLO usurpations since 1976. The fact is that the invasion has solved or redressed a refugee problem even as it has created or perpetuated one. (Many of the returning refugees travel by Mercedes, the national automobile. Almost all of these cars are old, almost all of them scarred from the country's long years of fratricide. They are certainly not emblems of the rich; there may be more Mercedeses than cedars in Lebanon. The resilience of the Mercedes in these demanding surroundings suggests that German-manufactured goods outlast nature's most hardy creations.)

Representatives of Oxfam and other agencies are now all over Lebanon, trying to find a way to spend the money they've raised and are still raising. Some of them have gotten into squabbles with the Israelis over bureaucratic obstacles put in the way of distributing supplies. But the truth is that there is no emergency in basic human needs: food is plentiful and cheap. An uproar in Israel and abroad quickly rectified the tendency of both Israelis and Lebanese to ignore the Palestinians' suffering; in the few areas where electricity was still out there was a shortage of flashlights; many people said there was not enough gasoline or kerosene; one farmer told me that insecticide was scarce. The hospitals are, as one medical director put it, "not especially worse off than before"; Medicins Sans Frontières is operating freely but without as much to do as it had expected. Jacques Windfeld of the Save the Children Federation-England observed, "I've seen many developing countries where cities look worse normally. Lebanon is a developing country, isn't it?" "The one real need is for construction supplies to help people rebuild," the supervisor of the Joint Distribution Committee's operation in Lebanon told me. "But the need is not insurmountable and it is being addressed." There is already functioning a joint task force from the Israeli Army and the frail Lebanese government to do what's needed in the warm months ahead. Most people said to have been displaced were displaced for only a few days. One indication: David Ottaway reported on June 16 that Jezzin "is said to have become a major refugee center with 200,000 now camping in and around it." When I spent a day in Jezzin a week later they were not there. I don't think Ottaway would vouch for his numbers.

What is clear is that Israel's attack was measured and careful. I was also in Lebanon after "Operation Litani" in 1978, another Israeli action that was, in my view, neither measured nor careful. A slap-dash improvisation, it did not go as far north as this recent campaign and did not embroil big cities. But many villages and towns I saw then were hit, bombed mostly, as nothing—not even the armed Palestinian center, Damour, once and for centuries a Christian town—was hit this time. The inhabitants I saw then were enraged at the indiscriminate harshness of Israel's attack. The townspeople showed no deference to the victors then, no disposition to flatter. TNR noted in 1978 that,

"Air power and artillery were used in ways that turned civilians into targets, killing innocent people and driving thousands from their homes. . . . In some areas, the Israelis fought well indeed. . . . But mostly they used their fire power, the reflex of a modern army, in what can only be called an indiscriminate fashion. Fighting that way is neither necessary nor wise, and Israel was especially well prepared to fight differently. . . . The tactics Israel's army adopted were familiar and disheartening. And those tactics radically devalued what the army achieved."

Nothing comparable could be said about the events of recent weeks. This time, Lebanese of all persuasions and origins have expressed—I heard it myself dozens of times—gratification at their liberation from the PLO.

It is by now certain that the casualties reported out of southern Lebanon were false. "Arabs exaggerate," said an Arab friend to me coyly in Jerusalem. But we need no instruction in national character to know about Palestinian hyperbole. The front page of the Washington Post on June 12 should have been an adequate object lesson. "Minutes before a ceasefire went into effect," Richard Homan reported, "Israeli bombers destroyed a Beirut apartment building housing the PLO's military command center. A PLO communique said more than 100 persons had been killed." Homan then went on to report what is probably closer to the truth: "Beirut radio put the toll at five dead." It's not hard to understand why the PLO, which attacks civilians as a strategy and as a chosen alternative to engaging armed units, is profligate with estimates of the dead caused by Israel: it's one way to try to establish a parity of immorality. On June 25, 1981, the Palestine Information Office published an advertisement in the Christian Science Monitor charging that "over 500 people in Palestinian refugee camps and Lebanese villages had been killed in the previous month by the Israeli military air raids and attacks." On July 7 the Monitor published a most unusual correction of a paid advertisement. It stated that 100, not 500, had been killed from May 25 to June 25, and "of these about 90 resulted from Syrian shelling, about 10 from Israeli attacks." The correction went on to note that, according to Lebanese sources, the total number killed since April 1 had been about 700. "The great majority of the losses resulted from shelling by Syrian forces. About 40 to 50 were the result of Israeli attacks." It is just possible, it may even be likely, that more civilians were killed in Lebanon by the Syrians alone—leaving aside the routine homicidal rampages of the various Palestinian factions and the Lebanese militias—in that virtually unnoticed fighting last spring than in this entire Israeli war, which has riveted so many influential Americans to their seats of judgment. There is a certain promiscuity with zeroes in the Arab world.

III

The relentless trolling of the PLO and its partisans about civilian casualties is directed at two audiences. With elite opinion in the West, it seems for the moment to have won a round. The other target is Israeli opinion, and, more particularly, the fighting spirit of Israel's citizen army.

Many Israeli soldiers with whom I spoke were desolated by the consequences of what they saw as their acts of necessity. They did not need the inflated casualty figures of "many thousands" to feel grief for what they had wrought. "We must be able to weep also for victims of just wars," said Yuval, a nineteen-year-old paratrooper in the elect Golani Brigade. (The Israelis ask that reporters not give last names in identifying ordinary soldiers. So here I willingly abide by the canons of their military censorship.) But Yuval went on to insist that army training establishes fastidious rules about avoiding harm to civilians in warfare. "I do not believe that we Israelis are wholly alone in the world in being so fixed on this issue.

But I have no evidence that our neighbors care about it at all, and certainly not the PLO."

In English, the phrase is clumsily rendered as either the "purity of arms" or the "morality of arms." In Hebrew, the doctrine is called tohar haneshek; its origins go back to the 1930s, when, as a companion piece to havlagah or restraint, it established clear and self-denying rules of what was militarily permissible. Zionism then was an intensely ideological movement, measuring its successes against scrupulous moral standards. The semi-official Jewish self-defense force, the Haganah, insisted on so many prohibitions on exposing unarmed Arabs to risk that, as one old veteran told me, "we took on the most terrible risks ourselves." The Haganah also got itself into an ongoing dispute with the far less meticulous and more indurated Revisionist wing of Zionism, Menachem Begin's precursors in British Mandate Palestine. In the post-independence Israel Defense Force, the partisans, of tohar haneshek went unchallenged. "Has the sway of the doctrine atrophied," I asked Shlomo Avineri, "with the ascendancy of the revisionists?" Avineri is one of the world's lading political theorists, a specialist on Marx who teaches at the Hebrew University, and director-general of the Foreign Ministry in the last Labor government. He is not a friend of the incumbents or their theories. (See, for example, the devastating, treatment in his new book, "The Making of Modern Zionism" [Basic Books].) His answer was clear. "If anything, the restraints of the doctrine of tohar haneshek are more compelling now than before," he said. "The army's professionalism, which protects it, is sure. The lapses of Operation Litani have been corrected, strenuously. Moreover precisely because the Likud is in power and the Labor opposition waiting to pounce on deviations from the army canons, there was much greater sensitivity, much more than ever before to the fate of civilians during wartime. You know I believe in dialectics: under Begin and Sharon military instructions, the orders of war, from the botton to the top, were much more explicit with regard to tohar haneshek. The army did the maximum." What Avineri said to me was confirmed by virtualy every soldier with whom I raised the matter.

Most of the soldiers I know, like most of the Israelis I know are people of the left, all of them critics of this government, some of them critics of this war. Udi is one of them. I've known him for three years. Last fall I few all the way from Boston to Jerusalem from his wedding. Udi is a reservist in field intelligence in the armored corps—made up of those infernal tanks which, once hit by heat-seeking weapons, don't give anyone half a chance to survive. In civilian life, he is a young therapist in training. He takes tohar haneshek seriously; he would do so even if there were no explicit doctrine. "The most awful moment of the war was when, searching through my binoculars for the source of RPGs [rocket-propelled grenades] being hurled at our tanks, I found the faces of twelve- or thirteen-year-olds. What was I to do?" After the fighting was over, he suggested that just possibly they were somewhat older. Probably they weren't older; captured PLO recruitment documents say clearly, "those under 12 years of age will not be accepted" (the New York Times, July 11). So were these children civilian casualties? One of Udi's friends—I don't have his name in my notes—fought hand-to-hand in a refugee camp. Fire seemed to come from everywhere and could come from anywhere. Even in pursuit of terrorists, however, he wouldn't throw grenades into rooms where they might be hiding. He wouldn't understand a phrase like "generate no prisoners." Why, after all, does Israel now hold between 5,000 to 6,000 PLO prisoners from this Lebanon operation? There were six days of close combat in one of the camps. How many Israelis died there? Wouldn't fewer have died if the Israelis relied more on bombing?

Soldiers, like other Israelis, have political opinions and politcal differences. In contrast to most other armies, these are aired in routinely arranged seminars or bull sessions, even on the front. Such exchanges are part of army life. Professor Avineri, for example, was in Lebanon last week on a reserve assignment with the army education unit, and conducted "fully free and open" discussions with officers and ordinary soldiers on various vexing topics, including whether it would be right or wrong for Israel to move against West Beirut. "The army doesn't fear these discussions," he told me, "even though it knows that the officers who conduct them, being mostly intelligentsia, are mostly critics of the government or actually on the left."

The only big demonstration anywhere in the Middle East against the war in Lebanon was in Tel Aviv, organized by an army officer-initiated movement called Peace Now. But, as the very dovish Israeli novelist Amos Oz reminds us in the July 11 New York Times magazine, "Not a single member of Peace Now disobeyed the mobilization orders. . . . Some of them died in the fighting." The first night I was in Israel I met a young Peace Now reservist who had volunteered to fight even though he hadn't been called up. "My unit goes, I go."

The dissent was mostly political or strategic, not moral. It was registered in advance of the war, and also during it. No one really disagreed with the goal of removing the PLO threat in the north; but some thought the costs too high or the goal impossible to achieve. It is a strange army, needing no home-front jingoism to support it; as a lieutenant I know said, "Except for some blatherings from the Prime Minister, we heard no jingoistic slogans, It's better that way." A study done at Bar-Ilan University, released while I was in Israel, shows that, proportionally, more ex-members of the most left-wing of Israel's youth movements, the Hashomer Hatza'ir, join combat units in the army than from any other Zionist flank. Among soldiers such as these, whose political differences with the government are clearest, the greatest offense seems to have been taken at the charges of Israeli callousness or indifference to civilian casualties. "The false and hypocritical accusations coming from people who have been unfeeling about our civilian deaths and who speak in behalf of the people who aim only at civilians has caused a backlash," one Labor-affiliated journalist suggested. "Wars can be fought for purposes other than survival, for political purposes. Did the British fight the Falklands war for survival?"

IV

Israel did not go to war against the PLO in Lebanon on behalf of the Lebanese people. Had it done so, its purpose might have been thought illegitimate. So if some alien rump had set up a state-within-a-state, as the PLO had done in southern Lebanon and Beirut since 1976, yet had not at all threatened Israel, there might have been laments in Jerusalem but little or no action from there.

And, of course, there are Israelis who didn't want action from Jerusalem, even if taken solely in Israel's interests. "I was one of them," said Clinton Bailey. "I was deadset against this war." Bailey, 46, is a native of Buffalo, New York; he is now an Israeli. He is senior lecturer in Middle Eastern history at Tel Aviv University and now finds himself in Sidon, after a stint in Nabatiye, as adviser on Arab affairs to the Israeli military in southern Lebanon. He comes by this post because he is a prominent Arabist; he teaches courses on Palestinian nationalism and Bedouin culture. He's been a burr under the saddle of successive Israeli governments, having become a tribune for the nomadic Bedouins displaced by modernization in general and, specifically, by the air bases now being completed in the Negev to replace those evacuated in the Sinai. He knows the Arabs and likes them, and not in a patronizing way. a Lebanese municipal official in Nabative told me that Bailey was particularly sensitive to questions of Arab dignity, "which is why he made sure that the administration of the city was quickly given over to the Lebanese. We had not really had it for six years."

That's the story I was told by Lebanese all over southern Lebanon, in the big cities and the smaller towns, by Christians and Moslems, by people of all classes and educational levels. "I had thought that the PLO had fought for a foothold in Lebanon," Bailey told me. "Not till I came here and spoke to the Lebanese themselves did I realize what the PLO had done here, that they had established a stranglehold."

That is the great untold story of the last six years. It unfolds in every encounter with a Lebanese, even from those few still sympathetic to the plight of the Palestinians. Everyone has his own grievance, his own memories. The simplest, perhaps the most existential, is that the PLO endangered everyone's lives by making southern Lebanon a target of the Israeli military. But it rarely stops with that. the PLO, it turns out, was not a guerrilla army in a friendly sea.

Khalil, a 25-year-old Moslem who had just left West Beirut, told me that his brother had been killed by a sniper shooting from a Palestinian stronghold. Jabber, slightly younger, said that his family's car had been confiscated by a PLO faction. Hussein said that his sister was constantly being accused of being an Israeli spy: "Not true; she resisted some Palestinian's advances." Ahmet said, "They got their way always by showing the pistolet; if not the pistolet, the Kalashnikov," Toufek—his brother called him Tommy—said, "This was our land and they ran it as if it were theirs." I heard similar complaints dozens of times.

Moustafa Mouein was the representative of the Lebanese Ministry of the Interior in the Nabatiye district, including 42 surrounding villages. Nabatiye, I was told, was deserted over the years by much of its populace. "I walked on mines," Mouein said. "I could not hang the Lebanese flag in my office or the picture of the president." This civil servant described the disintegration of the courts. "An injured Lebanese could get no justice from a Palestinian. The courts were courts of force." He groped for words. A more articulate, more cagey official, Ednan Ibrahim, the town's deputy mayor, arrived. 'There was no normal society in the south," he said, in elegant French. "Civil society was paralyzed. There were no functioning judges, no lawyers really. If a judge pronounced a fair decree, who would execute it? The police were the Palestinian militias."

It was a tale of kangaroo courts, and of vengeance. This had a wider meaning he wanted to share. "There had not been a civil war between Moslem and Christian in Lebanon. There was a war on the land of Lebanon by two exterior forces to destroy the government and make the country their own. I mean the PLO and the Syrians. The PLO wanted to solve its problems on our territory."

I asked both of them whether Western journalists had asked them about life with the PLO during the previous six years. Both said no. One went further: "You couldn't talk to journalist without permission." Later, in the hallway, a minor functionary volunteered, "We were glad the journalists didn't come with their questions. We would have been afraid to tell the truth."

That the journalists didn't come with their questions is clear. (And it's not only in southern Lebanon where they demonstrated a startling absence of curiosity. How many stories do you remember out of Lebanon about life in the Maronite and Druze areas of the north?) On four successive days in March 1981, The Washington Post ran articles, running to almost six pages, on "South Lebanon: The Forgotten War." The series, by William Claiborne and Jonathan Randal, is very tough on Major Haddad, the leader of an uneasy coalition between Shiites and Christians just north of the Israeli border, and tougher still on Israel. There is, for example, the suggestion that people left Nabatiye because of the Israelis rather than because of the PLO. "The Palestinians and their leftist allies exercise a kind of wild and woolly control," Claiborne and Randal wrote, "but they are hemmed in by the Syrian Army, which came to Lebanon as a peacekeeping force in 1976." How fortunate for the Lebanese that the PLO was hemmed in; but was the PLO really just wild and woolly? No, not exactly. In Shiite villages, "the Palestinians misbehaved, ruined orchards and crops, and the Israelis simply raised the pain threshold." Even today Post correspondents describe the PLO occupation in benign terms. Tyre "had been run by a local PLO commander in cooperation with local residents until the Israeli invasion." Some Lebanese, of course, did cooperate with the PLO, like the Jumblatt clan. (In Lebanon, extended families are political movements.) But is "cooperation" the word the residents of Tyre used? "Sidon had been a PLO protectorate. . . ." Perhaps a broad meaning of protection is intended here. Alas, it was not the war in southern Lebanon that was forgotten, but the people. That's what Deputy Mayor Ibrahim thinks: "Lebanon wasn't considered during the last six years." And then, with his dignity suddenly turning plaintive, "There is a Lebanese people."

But it was from Beirut that the narrative of the Palestinian grievance was being written. From Beirut last week, Randal cavalierly reduced a complex historical dispute to a phrase: ". . . the Palestinians were expelled from Israel." Simple. It's also in Beirut where the PLO's dreams for redress are formulated and its heroes anointed. In the Post on July 7 Ed Cody eulogized PLO Colonel Azmeh Seghaiyer, apparently killed by the Israelis in Sidon. Azmeh "had participated in training and preparations for a number of operations against Israel including the coastal road assault of 1978 in which more than 30 Israelis were killed. . . . I always thought of him as an honorable military officer . . . you can admire a man even when he is part of deeds you cannot admire—the coastal raid, for example."

The PLO's behavior in the south does not quite fit the neat image its propagandists convey to the press. Confiscations, harassments, young people forced into the militias, schools closed, rapes, molestations, commandeering of licenses, passports, services, offices: this was the stuff of everyday life in the web of the PLO's "state-within-a-state." A doctor in the former PLO "protectorate" of Sidon reported that the PLO regularly sacked hospitals and doctors' offices for medical supplies. "We couldn't keep our ambulances. The local population suffered." So much so that whole villages and towns were evacuated, sometimes leaving only the aged and the infirm. The Shiite village of Arnon, for example, in the far south, near Beaufort, or Rihane farther north.

I spent some time in others. Aichiye is one. It was a Maronite village of maybe 3,000 people, emptied save for 30, maybe 40, since shortly after a PLO massacre that took 75 lives. I have before me the names of comparable towns with comparable recent histories: Brih, Kaa, Jdaidet Baalbeck, Kaddam. You've probably never heard of them. I hadn't till last month. There is a similar list of Lebanese towns shot up by the Syrians. No one pretends that the massacres were one-sided—Maronites shed the blood of Moslems, too, rivers of blood. Even Père Boulos Oneid, Aichiye's mayor-priest, admits that. But he still seemed stunned by the world's indifference, and even the Pope's, to the PLO's "rape of my native village. I am happy to be back. Ten or fifteen families return every day. Maybe with the grim lessons of the past behind us we will be able to live better with our neighbors."

It won't be easy. When—and if—the foreigners leave, the local militias, manned by lithe young toughs, smiling and polite and probably trigger-happy, will still be around, armed with the hate-filled memories of old men. The Lebanese hatred of the Palestinian is something awful. The Hebrew paper Ma'ariv reported on July 9 that the motto of one xenophobic Maronite militia commands, "It is the duty of every Lebanese to kill one Palestinian." A blood-curdling Times interview on July 10 with two Christian poets left the Israeli colonel who'd accompanied correspondent Henry Kamm "so sick" that he "wanted to leave." Bailey told me, "You can't casually ask a Lebanese doctor to treat a Palestinian patient." It is a human tragedy.

But you can't begin to be able to deal with that tragedy until you look at the sources of the hatred—and the sources of the relief at the coming of the Israelis. Randal has found at least one Lebanese made happy by the war: "Dr. Labib Abu-Zahr . . . could scarcely conceal his joy. 'I'm a son of a millionaire orange grove owner. . . . Now we want to build Lebanon again with marble floors,' he said, flourishing a cigar." But is it only Lebanon's vulgar rich who are relieved by the development in their country? I met no one rich in Lebanon, and everyone I did meet was relieved that the Israelis had lifted from them the burden of the PLO. And not all that far from Damour, where wretchedness has been the fate sequentially of Christians and Palestinians, stands the glaringly plush little community of Doha. It must have been to the nicer parts of Beirut what Bel Air is to Beverly Hills, Hobe Sound to Palm Beach. Doha showed no scars of war; its elegant homes and gardens are islands of corrupt indifference. Huge crates of granite and marble wait to be put into an unfinished house. War had intruded in Doha only when an Israeli general was killed by a PLO gunman in hiding. How had Doha, so close to ravaged Damour and other scenes of heavy fighting these last six years, remained unscathed? "The residents paid high taxes to the PLO and they provided a patrol," I was told by a less protected neighbor who lived nearby. So the PLO, a revolutionary movement of the downtrodden, not only confiscated from those with little but also cosseted those with much. Rowland Evans and Robert Novak, long-time critics of Israel, wrote from Sidon in their syndicated column that for the Lebanese "surviving the PLO was another kind of hell." The PLO was "itself an occupying power," asserted the columnists. The character of PLO rule may just have been an augury of what was planned for the "secular democratic state in Palestine." Maybe that's why those who look forward to that state weren't eager to examine the model already taking form in Lebanon.

Doubtless if the Israelis don't extricate themselves from Lebanon, they will be seen as an occupying power, as they have become in the West Bank. For now, though, the contrast between the Israelis and the PLO in southern Lebanon is vivid and welcome, a manifestation also of tohar haneshek. "Civilized soldiers," a schoolteacher called them. Do the Israelis loot, I asked? Toufek's sister—we were not introduced—answered from outside the circle of men, "Not a cigarette." But even well-behaved foreign soldiers, around too long, will be seen as intruders. The West Bank is historically disputed territory. Southern Lebanon is not; there is no Palestinian claim to it whatever. So try to figure out why you've heard and seen and read so much about the Israeli occupation of the West Bank and so little about the Palestinian (and Syrian) occupations of southern Lebanon, two chunks of land roughly comparable in size and population, one on everyone's tongue, the other till last month the home of the forgotten Lebanese. Not eyeless in Gaza, but eyeless in Lebanon.

v.

Who, then, is doing the censoring? Not the Jews, but the journalists, think themselves the chosen people. At the Israeli Army spokesmen's headquarters in East Beirut, I heard one American reporter complain that the daily Israeli press briefing was inconveniently timed. Wars are to be fought for the benefit of the network news. A French journalist and a Japanese photographer, who'd not seen each other "since El Salvador," fell into each other's arms near Beaufort castle. "The Israelis are making it very hard," one of them said. What does "hard" mean? The networks have accused the Israeli authorities of "political censorship" because they've refused to transmit certain film over satelite. I don't recall anything like those petulant outbursts when neither the British nor the Argentines allowed camera crews on to the Falklands. Everybody meekly accepted the official handouts.

Is Israel, at war with the PLO, really morally obliged as a democracy to transmit from its satellite in Tel Aviv ABC's interview with Arafat conducted in Beirut? The Israelis have also clamped down on other newsclips offensive to the censor or merely embarrassing. But this is probably the first war in history in which one side provided information services for the other. Must democracies, however, forswear engaging in psychological warfare and must they actually assist their enemies in this regard?

The uproar over Israeli censorship seems to me to be in part a projection. The press censored itself for years on Lebanon. It was not brave, but fearful—as it has been not brave but fearful at Hama in Syria or on the frontiers between Iraq and Iran, places where so many more were killed than in southern Lebanon.

VI.

I write from the safety of the seashore. The radio reports heavy casualties in Beirut, today in both parts of the city. Again, the death of innocents. Enough have been killed; no one needs the pornography of inflated numbers. West Beirut is the biggest hijacked plane in history, its population hostage of a vanquished army that has not even been asked to surrender but only to leave foreign territory with flag and song and small arms, for elsewhere, perhaps to those countries which have paid them all these years to operate out of poor Lebanon.

The radio also reports harsh repressive measures by Israel in the West Bank. These make a mockery of the victory in Lebanon which, with the PLO militarily defeated, makes it possible for Israel to take steps, however tentative and groping, toward a more generous peace. Israel is now itself hostage to Begin's ideological hubris, and to his will to be brutal. Tohar haneshek has run its course in the West Bank, and because of Israel's ruling politicians, not its army. The struggle in Israel, I console myself, is not over Lebanon, but over the West Bank, which is what the struggle should be about, the struggle to disgorge, the struggle to find Arab partners in a territorial compromise.

The Palestinians have always been hostage to the recalcitrance of their leaders. For sixty years a compromise was possible between the two peoples whose pasts and futures are inextricably tied to the one land of historic Palestine. But no compromise satisfied the Arab leadership—not even the tiny little statelets proposed for the Jews by the British in the 1930s, not even the partition plan of 1947. The PLO was formed, it is urgent to remember, in 1964, when the West Bank and Gaza and East Jerusalem were all still in Arab hands. Always the Palestinians were hostage to the dream of a map without Israel. That's why the leadership never really permitted the mass resettlement of refugees anywhere. Their homelessness was to fester and explode; the camps were to be the launching pad for "the return." UNRWA, initially a humanely motivated operation, became hostage to the refusal of the Arabs to find a compromise. It is shocking, but not illogical, that an UNRWA school in Siblin should have served as a training base for PLO terrorists. When Camp David was ratified, committing the parties to negotiations for full autonomy and free elections that might eventually have developed, despite Begin's designs, into an Arab sovereignty, no West Bankers or Gazans came forward to press their case at the conference table. Some of their well-wishers never quite grasped why the Palestinian Arabs did not seize the opportunity provided by Camp David. But the Israelis understood, and rightly, that to the PLO and to those who feared it, any compromise was too compromising. And those who hinted they might want to come forward met with death at the hands of the PLO.

The Arabs of Palestine suborned their rights to the exiles in Lebanon, and the exiles chose armed struggle. The truly enormous caches of arms I saw, heavy arms, from the Soviet Union and North Korea and France and the U.S., were not being stockpiled for the social service organization which Jonathan Randal now says (Washington Post, July 8) is the real function of the PLO. All those weapons, far too many for those who would fight, held the Palestinians in thrall to the idea of some decisive defeat of the Israelis. It was the PLO which, having chosen armed struggle, inevitably provoked it, and was decisively defeated in it. Surrounded and isolated in Beirut, its fighters are hostages now to the idea of dying for Palestine. As in Sidon and Tyre, cities held hostage for six years, they don't care who dies with them, and their partisans don't really seem to care either.

Lebanan's freedom to struggle through to its own complicated destiny depends on the removal of the PLO from Lebanese soil. So, too, only the removal of the PLO from Lebanon will free the Palestinians, there and in the West Bank, from their captivity to the intoxicating and death-dealing notion of no compromise. Those are the stakes in Beirut. (Understanding this, let us put an end to this silly fetish about 25 miles and 40 kilometers. Beirut, in any case, is only 33 miles from Israel's northern border.) What happens in the next days in Beirut, then, will determine whether the Palestinians will be allowed at long last to face reality. The Israelis have won their military victory; this surely is a precondition for peace. But it is not the only precondition; there are others, political ones. Whether the present Israeli government can move to create these remains to be seen. It, too, must face reality.●

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to:

Mr. TAUZIN (at the request of Mr. WRIGHT), for today, on account of attending a funeral.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. HARTNETT) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. CORCORAN, for 5 minutes, today.
Mr. FISH, for 5 minutes, today.
Mr. ERDAHL, for 15 minutes, today.
Mr. PORTER, for 10 minutes, today.
Mr. MCEWEN, for 15 minutes, today.
Mr. GILMAN, for 5 minutes, today.
Mr. COLLINS, of Texas for 30 minutes, today.
Mr. RITTER, for 10 minutes, today.
Mr. DENARDIS, for 10 minutes, today.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. WATKINS) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. CONYERS, for 60 minutes, today.
Mr. PEPPER, for 5 minutes, today.
Mr. GONZALEZ, for 15 minutes, today.
Mr. ANNUNZIO, for 5 minutes, today.
Mr. COELHO, for 5 minutes, today.
Mr. PHILLIP BURTON, for 10 minutes, today.
Mr. CONYERS, for 60 minutes, on July 22.
Mr. PHILLIP BURTON, for 10 minutes, on July 22.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to revise and extend remarks was granted to:

Mr. SOLARZ, notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds two pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $2,023.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. HARTNETT) and to include extraneous matter:)

Mr. BEREUTER.
Mr. LAGOMARSINO.
Mr. WEBER of Minnesota.
Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois.
Mr. RITTER.
Mr. ROBERTS of South Dakota in two instances.
Mr. STANGELAND.
Mr. CAMPBELL.
Mr. PORTER.
Mr. DREIER.
Mr. FIELDS.
Mr. ERDAHL.
Mr. CONTE in two instances.
Mr. GREEN.
Mr. CLINGER.
Ms. FIEDLER.
Mr. FINDLEY.
Mr. LUNGREN.
Mr. DORNAN of California in two instances.
Mr. NELLIGAN.
Mr. COLLINS of Texas in two instances.

The following Members (at the request of Mr. WATKINS) and to include extraneous matter:

Mr. PEPPER.
Mr. RODINO.
Mr. NOWAK.
Mr. HAMILTON.
Mr. OTTINGER.
Mr. YATRON in two instances.
Mr. ROE.
Mr. SHAMANSKY.
Mr. WYDEN.
Mrs. SCHROEDER.
Mr. WEAVER.
Mr. MAZZOLI in two instances.
Mr. DYSON.
Mr. BOLAND.
Mr. PATTERSON in five instances.
Mr. FAZIO.
Mr. YOUNG of Missouri.
Mr. BONER of Tennessee.
Mr. MILLER of California.
Mr. HUBBARD.
Mr. IRELAND.
Mr. SIMON in two instances.
Mr. HERTEL.
Mr. SYNAR.
Mr. BAILEY of Pennsylvania.
Mr. STUDDS.
Mr. MCDONALD in three instances.
Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland in two instances.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock p.m.), the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, July 22, 1982, at 10 o'clock a.m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

4412. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting his review of the proposed revision to one rescission, and one deferral, contained in the message of June 23, 1982 (H. Doc. No. 97-203), pursuant to sections 1012(a) and 1013(a) of Public Law 93-344 (H. Doc. No. 97-214); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4413. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy (Shipbuilding and Logistics), transmitting notice of the Navy's intention to study the conversion from in-house operation to commercial contract of various functions at sundry locations, pursuant to section 502(a) of Public Law 96-342; to the Committee on Armed Services.

4414. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy (Shipbuilding and Logistics), transmitting notice of the Navy's intention to study the conversion from in-house operation to commercial contract of various functions at sundry locations, pursuant to section 502(a) of Public Law 96-342; to the Committee on Armed Services.

4415. A letter from the Auditor, District of Columbia, transmitting a report providing an analysis of District of Columbia election procedures, pursuant to section 455(d) of Public Law 93-198; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

4416. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a report on progress toward conclusion of a negotiated solution of the Cyprus problem, pursuant to section 620C(c) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended (H. Doc. No. 97-215); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. RODINO: Committee on the Judiciary. H.R. 6128. A bill to revise, codify, and enact without substantive change certain general and permanent laws, related to money and finance, as title 31, United States Code, "Money and Finance" (Rept. No. 97-651). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 5 of rule X and clause 4 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ST GERMAIN:

H.R. 6812. A bill to limit the salaries and expenses of certain offices within the Department of the Treasury and the Department of Housing and Urban Development; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. BIAGGI (for himself, Mr. EVANS of Delaware, Mr. STUDDS, Mr. LENT, and Mr. JONES of North Carolina):

H.R. 6813. A bill to amend the Federal Boat Safety Act of 1971; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. BLILEY:

H.R. 6814. A bill to amend the act approved on July 25, 1980, to permit certain individuals to have reasonable access to their private dwellings; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. BREAUX (for himself, Mr. FIELDS, Mr. CLAUSEN, Mr. ANDERSON, and Mr. SHUSTER):

H.R. 6815. A bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act to reform and improve regulation of the transportation of oil by pipeline, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committees on Energy and Commerce and Public Works and Transportation.

By Mr. BUTLER (for himself, Mr. KASTENMEIER, Mr. RAILSBACK, Mrs. SCHROEDER, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. MCCLORY, Mr. FISH, Mr. MOORHEAD, Mr. HYDE, Mr. LUNGREN, Mr. OBERSTAR, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. CORCORAN, Mr. SMITH of Iowa, Mr. STOKES, Mr. FASCELL, Mr. BINGHAM, and Mr. WAXMAN):

H.R. 6816. A bill to eliminate diversity of citizenship as a basis of jurisdiction of Federal district courts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COLLINS of Texas:

H.R. 6817. A bill to provide penalties for persons who obtain or acquire controlled substances from any pharmacist or distributor of controlled substances by robbery or extortion, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committees on the Judiciary and Energy and Commerce.

By Mr. DASCHLE (for himself, Mr. JONES of Tennessee, Mr. HATCHER, Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana, Mr. ENGLISH, Mr. SYNAR, Mr. HANCE, Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. OBERSTAR, Mr. KOGOVSEK, and Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota):

H.R. 6818. A bill to provide for a paid diversion and acreage reduction program for the 1983 crop of wheat and feed grains and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DELLUMS:

H.R. 6819. A bill to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act by designating a segment of the Tuolumne River in California as a component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. ERDAHL (for himself and Mr. LEBOUTILLIER):

H.R. 6820. A bill to provide for the operation of the Helen Keller National Center for Deaf-Blind Youths and Adults, to provide for the operation of the Vinland National Center for Healthsports and Physical Fitness for Handicapped Individuals and certain other centers which assist handicapped individuals in achieving greater independence, and to assure continued national support for other projects and services for the deaf and other handicapped individuals; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. LAGOMARSINO:

H.R. 6821. A bill to amend title 18 of the United States Code to reform the insanity defense, to establish a sentence of guilty but mentally ill, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland:

H.R. 6822. A bill to amend the Small Business Act; to the Committee on Small Business.

By Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland (for himself and Mr. ADDABBO):

H.R. 6823. A bill to amend the Small Business Act; to the Committee on Small Business.

H.R. 6824. A bill to amend the Small Business Act to facilitate the implementation of programs to assist small business; jointly, to the Committees on Small Business and Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. SOLOMON:

H.R. 6825. A bill to modify the insanity defense in the Federal courts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H.R. 6826. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to permit an exemption of the first $10,000 of retirement income received by a taxpayer under a public retirement system or any other system if the taxpayer is at least 65 years of age; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WEAVER:

H.R. 6827. A bill to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act with respect to certain rivers in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. WHITE:

H.R. 6828. A bill to amend title 10, United States Code, to provide for more efficient and effective operation of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; to the Committee on Armed Services.

By Mr. WYDEN (for himself, Mr. ANDERSON, MR. HUGHES, Mr. BONKER, Mr. SUNIA, and Mr. WHITEHURST):

H.R. 6829. A bill to require owner of vessels engaged in foreign commerce using U.S. ports to establish and maintain financial responsibility for claims arising from the furnishing of maritime services to the vessels, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. WYLIE:

H.R. 6830. A bill to authorize the conveyance to the State of Ohio for wildlife management purposes of certain lands acquired for the Big Darby Lake, Ohio, project; to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

By Mr. COATS:

H.J. Res. 542. Joint resolution setting aside the third Saturday of June each year as "American Unity Day"; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. LOWERY of California:

H.J. Res. 543. Joint resolution to provide for the designation of November 15, 1982, as "American Enterprise Day"; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. NEAL:

H.J. Res. 544. Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to equal rights for men and women; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BONKER:

H. Con. Res. 378. Concurrent resolution to condemn the Iranian persecution of the Baha'i community; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. BUTLER (for himself, Mr. CONTE, Mr. DERWINSKI, Mr. EMERY, Mr. FITHIAN, Mr. FLORIO, Mr. FORD of Tennessee, Mr. FOWLER, Mr.

HORTON, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mr. LEBOUTILLIER, Mr. LENT, Mr. LOWERY of California, Mr. MARKEY, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. ROSENTHAL, Mrs. SCHROEDER, Mr. WEBER of Ohio, Mr. WEISS, Mr. WOLF, Mr. WOLPE, and Mr. YATES):

H. Con. Res. 379. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the Soviet Union should permit Sergei Petrov to emigrate to the United States to be reunited with his wife, Virginia Hurt Johnson; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. FOGLIETTA (for himself and Mr. MARKEY):

H. Con. Res. 380. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the Department of Energy should withdraw its authorization of the proposed sale of a process control system for end-use in a heavy water production facility in Argentina; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Ms. OAKAR (for herself, Mr. HALL of Ohio, Mr. PEPPER, Mrs. SCHROEDER, Mr. OBERSTAR, Mr. SIMON, Mrs. KENNELLY, and Mr. STARK):

H. Con. Res. 381. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of Congress that certain steps should be taken to make wholesome food which is currently being wasted or discarded available for distribution to hungry people; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BEDELL:

H. Res. 531. Resolution expressing the sense of the House with respect to the continuation of the Environmental Protection Agency's requirements concerning the maximum allowable lead content of leaded grades of gasoline; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SKEEN:

H.R. 6831. A bill to provide for the reinstatement of U.S. oil and gas lease numbered NM 12253; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. WIRTH:

H.R. 6832. A bill to provide for the conveyance of certain real property in Pitkin County, Colo.; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

ADDITIONAL SPONSORS

Under clause 4 of rule XXII, sponsors were added to public bills and resolutions as follows:

H.R. 116: Mr. PATMAN.

H.R. 1574: Mr. LOWRY of Washington.

H.R. 1648: Mr. DREIER and Mr. COATS.

H.R. 1918: Mr. MOFFETT.

H.R. 2832: Mr. BARNES and Mr. JAMES K. COYNE.

H.R. 4015: Mr. FAZIO.

H.R. 4325: Mr. MINISH.

H.R. 4454: Mr. WASHINGTON, Mr. WHITTAKER, Mr. WEBER of Minnesota, Mr. SPENCE, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. ANNUNZIO, Mr. DIXON, Mr. TRIBLE, Mr. MITCHELL of New York, Mr. DORNAN of California, Mr. DYSON, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. STOKES, Mr. WRIGHT, Mr. ATKINSON, Mr. HYDE, Mr. BENNETT, Mrs. SNOWE, Mr. SILJANDER, Mr. ROBERTS of Kansas, Mr. MOTTL, Mr. PRITCHARD, Mr. NELLIGAN, Mr. WHITE, and, Mr. ROBERTS of South Dakota.

H.R. 4657: Mr. HUGHES.

H.R. 4786: Mr. FRENZEL.

H.R. 4833: Mr. EVANS of Delaware.

H.R. 4897: Mr. PEASE.

H.R. 5133: Mr. MARTINEZ and Mr. MILLER of California.

H.R. 5531: Mr. LANTOS.

H.R. 5679: Mr. SHUMWAY.

H.R. 5717: Mr. WEBER of Ohio, Mr. BENEDICT, and Mr. WALKER.

H.R. 5828: Mr. WYDEN.

H.R. 6045: Mr. ROEMER.

H.R. 6077: Mr. ROE and Mr. MAVROULES.

H.R. 6187: Mr. HIGHTOWER.

H.R. 6325: Mr. CARMAN, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. EDGAR, Mr. WOLPE, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. VANDER JAGT, Mr. LIVINGSTON, Ms. OAKAR, Mr. NEAL, Mr. ERDAHL, Mr. CROCKETT, and Mr. CHAPPELL.

H.R. 6358: Mr. VANDER JAGT.

H.R. 6463: Mr. BEDELL, and Mr. BROWN of Ohio.

H.R. 6531: Mr. PRICE, Mr. SIMON, Mr. HORTON, Mr. LEACH of Iowa, Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. VENTO, and Mr. WEAVER.

H.R. 6691: Mr. BARNARD.

H.R. 6700: Mr. HILLIS.

H.R. 6716: Mr. EVANS of Georgia, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. GREGG, Mr. JAMES K. COYNE, Mr. WHITTAKER, Mr. GINGRICH, Mr. HAGEDORN, Mr. PAUL, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. O'BRIEN, Mr. LEBOUTILLIER, Mr. ROUSSELOT, Mr. MCDONALD, and Mr. RUSSO.

H.R. 6717: Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. LEBOUTILLIER, Mr. NELLIGAN, Mr. WILSON, Mr. HENDON, Mr. EVANS of Georgia, Mr. JAMES K. COYNE, Mr. GINGRICH, Mr. STANGELAND, and Mr. BEDELL.

H.R. 6718: Mr. ROBERTS of South Dakota, Mr. WON PAT, Mr. MARRIOTT, Mr. JAMES K. COYNE, Mr. GINGRICH, and Mr. BEDELL.

H.R. 6746: Mr. HORTON, Mr. NAPIER, Mr. SANTINI, and Mr. RAHALL.

H.R. 6751: Mr. BARNES, Mrs. HOLT, Mr. WOLF, Mr. DOUGHERTY, Mr. BEARD, Mr. EDGAR, and Mr. RANGEL.

H.R. 6781: Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. EVANS of Iowa, Mr. HYDE, Mr. NAPIER, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. EVANS of Delaware, Mr. WEBER of Minnesota, Mr. CLAUSEN, Mr. HARTNETT, Mr. BEARD, Mr. FRANK, Mr. STANTON of Ohio, Mr. MOFFETT, Mr. DICKS, Mrs. HOLT, Mr. SABO, Mr. BONKER, Mr. MATTOX, Mr. DUNN, Mr. BENEDICT, Mr. JONES of Oklahoma, Mr. SYNAR, and Mr. LUKEN.

H.R. 6782: Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota and Mr. JENKINS.

H.R. 6794: Mr. BAILEY of Pennsylvania.

H.J. Res. 350: Mr. KAZEN, Mr. PATMAN, Mr. MOLINARI, Mr. DUNN, Mr. BREAUX, Mrs. ASHBROOK, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. REGULA, and Mr. DERWINSKI.

H.J. Res. 492: Mr. LAGOMARSINO.

H.J. Res. 523: Mr. BONIOR of Michigan, Mr. HORTON, Mr. RAHALL, Mr. OBERSTAR, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mr. LEE, Mr. HOLLENBECK, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. EMERSON, Mr. KILDEE, Mr. ROE, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. MITCHELL of New York, Mr. DERWINSKI, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. DANIEL B. CRANE, Mr. MCCLORY, Mr. BEVILL, Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. ROGERS, Mr. HYDE, and Mr. MOTTL.

H. Con. Res. 255: Mr. HAGEDORN, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. ENGLISH, and Mr. ZEFERETTI.

H. Con. Res. 341: Mr. ADDABBO.

H. Con. Res. 360: Mr. SHAMANSKY.

H. Res. 377: Mr. JACOBS and Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota.

H. Res. 526: Mr. BEDELL, Mr. ECKART, Mr. MCDADE, Mr. LENT, Mr. WAXMAN, and Mr. COURTER.

DELETIONS OF SPONSORS FROM PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 4 of rule XXII, sponsors were deleted from public bills and resolutions as follows:

H.J. Res. 443: Mr. ERLENBORN.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII,

524. The SPEAKER presented a petition of the Southern Federation of Syrian Lebanese-American Clubs, relative to humanitarian needs in Lebanon; which was referred, jointly, to the Committees on Foreign Affairs, the Judiciary, and Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 6030

By Mr. ASPIN:

—Page 18, after line 3, insert the following new section:

T-5 REPLACEMENT TANKER PROGRAM

SEC. 304. None of the funds appropriated pursuant to authorizations of appropriations in this title for the Navy may be obligated or expended for any activity in connection with the lease of any vessel associated with the T-5 Replacement Tanker Program which has a main propulsion system or any other major component not built in the United States.

—At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

LIMITATION ON STRATEGIC WEAPONS

SEC. 902. (a) None of the funds appropriated pursuant to authorizations of appropriations in this Act may be used for the procurement, testing, deployment, or operation and maintenance of any strategic nuclear weapon or nuclear weapon system, or of a launcher for a strategic nuclear weapon or nuclear weapon system, if that procurement, testing, deployment, or operation and maintenance would contravene existing strategic arms policies of the United States as declared by the President in his Memorial Day address of May 31, 1982, as follows: "As for existing strategic arms agreements, we will refrain from actions which undercut them so long as the Soviet Union shows equal restraint.".

(b) The limitations set forth in subsection (a) shall not apply after the date that is thirty days after the date on which the President transmits a report in writing to Congress (1) containing the President's certification that it is in the supreme national interest of the United States that such limitations no longer apply, and (2) setting forth the reasons for the certification.

By Mr. PORTER:

—At the end of the bill add the following new section:

ADMINISTRATION OF ROBERT G. KEATS MEMORIAL FUND AT UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

SEC. 902. The Robert G. Keats Memorial Fund established in 1968 as a gift to the United States Military Academy History Department by Mr. Robert Keats in memory of his son, Captain Robert G. Keats, shall be held and administered, without regard to section 2601 of title 10, United States Code, by the head of the History Department at the United States Military Academy. The corpus of that fund, including any interest and proceeds previously accruing to the fund, shall be transferred to the control of the head of that department and may be invested in such manner as he considers appropriate and best suited to the needs of the fund. Subject to the terms of the gift establishing the fund, the fund shall be disbursed at the discretion of the head of the History Department for the purpose of advancing the study and teaching of courses in the history of the military art at the United States Military Academy. Interest and profits accruing from any investment of assets of the fund shall become part of the fund and may be disbursed as provided in the preceding sentence.

—At the end of the bill add the following new section:

ACCEPTANCE OF IN MEMORIAM MILITARY HISTORY SCHOLARSHIPS AT WEST POINT MILITARY ACADEMY

SEC. . Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Superintendent, United States Military Academy, or his designees, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Army, may accept, hold, administer, invest, and disburse any gift, devise, or bequest of personal property of a value of $20,000 or less, made on the condition that it be used for the benefit of the United States Military Academy, or any department, organization, or activity thereof. The Secretary of the Army may authorize payment of reasonable and necessary expenses in connection with the conveyance or transfer of a gift, devise, or bequest made under this section.

SEC. . Section applies prospectively and applies retroactively to acceptance of gifts by the Superintendent, United States Military Academy, for which the Secretary of the Army gives his approval.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A BILL TO SQUARE BAD DEBTS

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today, the Maritime Services Financial Responsibility Act, that will enable a group of U.S. small businesses to collect bad debts.

This legislation is needed because increasingly marine service industries are being left holding the bag by foreign-owned steamship lines that do not pay their bills—and are beyond the reach of U.S. law.

Before passage of the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act in 1976, stevedores and marine terminal operators had recourse when foreign steamship owners failed to pay their bills. they could file suit and U.S. marshals would "plaster" a ship with a notice of arrest and a warning not to leave port until the debt had been cleared up.

But the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act prohibits such suits against vessels owned or operated by a foreign government, so now these small maritime industries are simply stuck with unpaid bills.

The problem is growing because more and more vessels in international shipping are under foreign government control.

To solve this problem, the Maritime Services Financial Responsibility Act will require owners of vessels engaged in foreign commerce using U.S. ports to establish and maintain financial responsibility for their debts.

At my request, the National Association of Stevedores, which supports this legislation, surveyed its members from throughout the Nation on the average amount of unpaid bills. The national average unpaid debt per stevedoring firm is $370,000. One firm logged a loss exceeding $1 million. These are staggering amounts for any business, but especially for a small business.

A family owned stevedoring company in Portland, Oreg., which I represent, was forced to attach four different vessels owing it a total of $430,000.

Here's what the bill will do:

Owners of vessels must prove financial responsibility through insurance, surety bonds, or some equivalent kind of evidence.

Failure to comply with this provision subjects a shipowner to a fine of not more than $10,000. Enforcement will be through the port clearance administered by the U.S. Customs Service and the power of the U.S. Coast Guard to deny entry.

The legislation is patterned after requirements for passenger ship and antipollution bonds administered by the Federal Maritime Commission. It utilizes existing administrative and enforcement methods.

It is regrettable that legislation such as this is necessary. But the string of unpaid bills from Portland to Galveston, and from New York to Long Beach, says that it is necessary.

A full text of the Maritime Services Financial Responsibility Act follows:

H.R. 6829

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Maritime Services Financial Responsibility Act of 1982".

SEC. 2. (a) The owner of a vessel engaging in foreign commerce and using any port or place in the United States, or the navigable waters of the United States, for any purpose shall establish and maintain, under regulations to be prescribed from time to time by the Federal Maritime Commission (hereinafter referred to in this Act as the "Commission") evidence of financial responsibility to meet any and all claims made in connection with the rendering to that vessel, at ports and places in the United States, of services with respect to loading, unloading, berthing, wharfage, pilotage, repairing, cleaning, supplying of stores or launch hire, husbanding and related activities.

(b) The financial responsibility required under subsection (a), which shall be in an amount equal to $100 per gross ton of the vessel concerned, or $1 million, whichever sum is lesser, may be established by any one, or a combination, of—

(1) policies of insurance;

(2) surety bonds;

(3) qualification as a self-insurer; or

(4) other evidence of financial responsibility; acceptable to the Commission.

(c) The Commission may not accept a bond filed for purposes of subsection (b) unless the bond is issued by a bonding company authorized to do business in a State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the United States Virgin Islands, or any territory or possession of the United States.

SEC. 3. Any claim for marine services described in section 2(a) that were provided to a vessel may be brought directly against the insurer or any other entity or person providing evidence of the financial responsibility required under this Act for the vessel owner. In defending against any such claim, such an insurer, entity, or other person shall be entitled to invoke all rights and defenses which would have been available to the vessel owner if an action had been brought against him by the claimant.

SEC. 4. Any owner of a vessel subject to this Act who fails to comply with the provisions of this Act, or any regulation issued thereunder, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000.

SEC. 5. (a) The Secretary of the Treasury shall refuse the clearance required by section 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (46 U.S.C. 91) to any vessel subject to this Act which upon request does not have certification furnished by the Commission that the financial responsibility requirements of this Act have been complied with.

(b) The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may—

(1) deny entry to any port or place in the United States to, and

(2) detain at the port or place in the United States from which it is about to depart for any other port or place, any vessel subject to this Act which upon request does not produce certification furnished by the Commission that the financial responsibility requirements of this Act have been complied with.●

SOLIDARITY WITH IDA NUDEL

HON. JAMES L. OBERSTAR

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 20, 1982

● Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, the courage of Ida Nudel has made folly of the policy of the Soviet Union which has prevented her from joining her sister in Israel. In seeking to deprive this remarkable woman of her fundamental right to live with her family in the country of her choice, the Soviet Union has made her throughout the world a symbol of spirited, principled resistance to religious bigotry and official government oppression.

Ida Nudel has no elected representatives to speak on her behalf. The responsibility to speak falls to us and to members of democratically elected Parliaments throughout the world.

The message of this special order and of similar gatherings throughout the world today in solidarity with Ida Nudel is that the Soviet Union must set her free. If an appeal to the Soviet Union that it honor the Helsinki accords which it signed does not move the leaders of that government, an appeal to their own self-interest should. The continued harassment of Ida Nudel serves only to make her more famous and to inspire others in their fight for their human rights in the Soviet Union.

Last week, along with many of our colleagues, I received a letter from the sister of Ida Nudel and a copy of the book, "Our Ida Nudel." It is a wonderful account of personal tributes from people whose lives have been touched by Ida Nudel.

Ida's sister, writing of the official harassment, says in her letter:

During conversations in Moscow, Ida has indicated that what kept her going during her difficult times were the thousands of letters she received from well-wishers around the world. I believe that continuing the flow of letters now is the most important thing we can do!

Ida's sister, Elena Fridman, asks us to "continue to place pressure on the Soviet authorities so that they might finally relent in this senseless compaign and allow Ida to go."

I hope that the next special order in tribute to Ida Nudel will be in celebration of her arrival in Israel.●

GREENVILLE, S.C., MILLS CENTRE MALL

HON. CARROLL A. CAMPBELL, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, featured in the July issue of the National Association of Home Builders magazine is a story of the kind of innovation and ingenuity that Americans are famous for. Builder cites the development of the Mills Centre Factory Outlet Mall in Greenville as an outstanding example of an adaptive use project by United Development Services, a pioneer of the mall outlet concept. I commend the following article to your attention:

The article follows:

MILLS CENTRE MALL

Factory outlet malls were an unknown commodity when United Development Services (UDS), Greenville, S.C., began planning Mills Centre Factory Outlet Mall three years ago. Only three or four existed in the U.S.

Today the burgeoning number of such developments attests to consumers' enthusiastic acceptance of these malls. There are now several dozen in operation and more than a hundred in the planning stages, according to William Hawley, general partner in UDS.

But Mills Centre is innovative in more than its merchandising approach. It's one of the first adaptive use projects in Greenville. The mall is housed in a 100-year-old textile mill. Hawley and UDS partner F. Towers Rice, both former residential developers, believe that a project such as Mills Centre is within the scope of a home builder. "But you have to be prepared to give 120 percent of your effort to it," Hawley said. "It takes longer than residential development," Rice said, "We have almost three years invested in Mills Centre, and it just opened last August."

When planning began in 1979, the building was filthy, but sound, and well-located in a newly developed part of town. But because so little rehab had been done in Greenville, local banks couldn't see beyond the dirt and shied away from financing the mixed-use scheme UDS originally planned.

Then Hawley, who had been looking for a good location to develop a factory outlet mall, approached UDS with the idea of turning the mill into such a facility.

His plan had two advantages: The project could be completed in phases requiring less immediate financing than renovating the building all at once. And the shops could be pre-leased, demonstrating viability to the lender.

Phase one, the first floor of the four-story structure, opened in August 1981 with 17 shops. Its immediate success prompted the lender to finance phase two. Floors two and three are now under construction and both are completely pre-leased. Floor four, the last phase, will begin when phase three is completed.

Hawley handles leasing for Mills Centre. He compiled tenant lists from the outlet malls he'd seen in the Northeast and contacted these businesses. He chose shops that would meet the needs of employed women between the ages of 24 and 54, the targeted consumers.

About 70 percent of the tenants are manufacturer's outlets and 30 percent are merchants who buy and then sell manufacturer's overstock.

Leases include insurance, taxes and maintenance of the structure. The tenants association pays for upkeep of common areas, utilities and promotion.

The biggest problem in rehabilitating the building, according to Rice, was bringing it up to code. The developer added fire stairs and an elevator for the handicapped. In addition, the entire structure had to be sprinklered.

Interior partitions are wallboard sided on the mall side to blend with the original maple floors, pine beams and posts.

Despite difficulties in converting the mill, Louden G. Hoffman, planning coordinator for the project, believes it would have cost far more to provide the atmosphere of the old building in a new one. And, UDS can take the investment tax credit allowed under the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981.●

SEVEN YEARS AN AMERICAN HOSTAGE IN MOSCOW

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues the following letter I received from Abe Stolar:

DEAR MRS. SCHROEDER: June 1982 marks seven years of my family's captivity as hostages in Moscow. No one in my family is a Soviet citizen. We were Soviet citizens till May 1975, when our citizenship was taken away so that we could emigrate.

I was born in Chicago, U.S.A., in 1911, came to Russia in 1931 at the age of 19, and was immediately made a Soviet citizen without my knowledge or consent. I was [conscripted by] the Soviet army in World War II [and] worked as a translator. My Russian-born wife, Gita Rozovsky, now a citizen of Israel, was an analytical chemist [and] retired in 1973. Our son, 23, holds derivative U.S. citizenship, never having had any Soviet papers whatsoever. In captivity he can neither legally study nor work.

Upon receiving exit visas to Israel in May 1975, we shipped off all the belongings allowed us. We had to spend all our money and forfeit Soviet citizenship, since emigrants from Russia to Israel must go penniless and stateless.

About to board our plane on our way out in June 1975, we were turned back on the pretext that my wife had allegedly been doing secret work. The place where she worked had confirmed in writing that she had not been doing secret work. Without security screening we could not possibly have received exit visas.

The Visa Office rescinded our visas on false pretenses, announcing that we were not being allowed out of the USSR till June 1977. Since then, no reason at all [has been] given for holding us.

Without the right to work or study, we have been living on charity for seven years. We complained endlessly to every conceivable office and official concerned. There has not been a single reply, except for the formal rubber-stamp refusal. Every single office and official is deaf to our problems. In all these seven years, no one has shown the least interest in our moral and material distress.

All our earthly belongings have been waiting for us in Israel for seven years. We complain regularly that we were stranded without clothing or any other belongings; we had no beds or bedding, no money, no documents essential for merely being in the USSR, let alone earning a living or studying. My rights as a disabled war veteran are denied. The Soviets refuse to register us under their laws as aliens, with the right to live, work, and study. We were placed in a bare flat that belongs to someone else, who would like to evict us. My son's life has been abnormal since the age of 16.

The Soviets refuse to say . . . why they are violating our human rights and their own Constitution and laws. Why are they holding us captive a full nine years after my wife stopped working altogether? Why are they holding us five years after the official term they themselves set for letting us free—June 1977.

My family demands to be released immediately from this heartless, unnatural detention in unfriendly circumstances. We demand that the authorities comply with our exit visas of May 1975 and their official decison of June 30, 1975, to set us free in June 1977.

ABE STOLAR.●

FLOOD PREVENTION SYSTEM WORKS WELL

HON. CLINT ROBERTS

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. ROBERTS of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the grand scheme of the 1944 Flood Control Act envisioned cooperative and complementing benefits for a balanced use of the resources of the Missouri River. According to the recently released status report by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, a portion of that plan is working well.

The Missouri River was near or above flood stage from Rulo, Nebr., to St. Louis, Mo., during the month of June. Severe flooding in the State of Missouri resulted from extreme rainfall and streamflow in the lower Missouri River basin.

During that period of heavy runoff, flows from the Gavins Point Dam, near Yankton, S. Dak., were reduced to help lower river stages downstream. The high inflows above the mainstem dams were held back, preventing severe flood damage along the lower Missouri River.

At the same time, power production for the month of June was below average. Only 776 million kilowatt hours were generated. This was because of cool weather, low electrical demand, low system release for flood control, and good availability of other generating facilities in the area. Now with the hot spell, the reservoirs have the capacity to provide needed power at this time.

The 1944 act envisioned just such a tradeoff and balance of benefits. Also included in the plan was irrigation development to replace sacrificed land. When the promised irrigation development becomes a reality, it will also complement the other provisions of the 1944 act—hydropower, navigation, and flood control.

It is clear that the South Dakota dams work well to prevent flooding in downstream States, and I hope that my colleagues will support our efforts to develop irrigation in the upstream States to fulfill the envisioned plan of the Flood Control Act of 1944.●

ISRAEL'S WITHDRAWAL FROM SINAI A PAINFUL COMMITMENT TO PEACE

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, on April 25 an event unprecedented in Middle Eastern relations occurred. We should pause not only to note its significance but also to understand what it can mean to achieving lasting peace in that troubled part of the world.

April 25, 1982, was the day Israel finalized its withdrawal from the Sinai as required by the Camp David Peace Treaty. It marked the culmination of a 5-year effort for peace that began when Anwar Sadat visited Jerusalem in November 1977.

Importantly, Israel has recognized that peace will not come without costs and sacrifices and has shown she is willing to bear them. Withdrawal from the Sinai will cost Israel strategically, militarily, economically and psychologically.

The geographic position and strategic character of the Sinai make it vitally important to Israel's security. The 23,000 square-mile area of the Sinai has provided Israel with strategic depth, vital military training space and natural defense positions.

Electronic early warning stations situated in the Sinai have supplied Israel with accurate data on military activities on the western side of the Suez Canal and the east coast of the Red Sea and Gulf of Aqaba. Israel also has dismantled two of the world's most sophisticated air bases as well as six other airfields—facilities that played an important part in protecting Israel from attacks from the east. Israel also relinquished a naval base at Sharm-el Sheikh that permitted the Israel Navy to protect its merchant shipping through the Red Sea to and from the port of Eilat. Mobilization centers for reserves, logistical centers and ammunition dumps will be more vulnerable because of the withdrawal from the Sinai.

The Sinai's natural resources—coal, magnesium and oil were developed by Israel. Since 1967, Israel has invested approximately $17 billion in the construction of military and civilian facilities and infrastructure and in oil exploration and development. The Alma oil field alone was producing 40,000 barrels of oil per day when it was turned over to Egypt in November 1979. The return of the oilfields has cost Israel its oil self-sufficiency and any possible revenue from the export of oil. It now must buy oil from non-OPEC sources or on the spot markets, thus paying higher prices.

Return of the Sinai has exacted a price in terms of personal and emotional sacrifices by individuals as well. Settlement and use of land have been important elements of Jewish life. Seven thousand people have been forced to abandon the homes, farms and businesses that they have spent years building in the desert. Never before have communities been dismantled. There is no way to measure the individual trauma and national impact on Israeli society resulting from the forcible removal of people from their homes and communities.

Israel's withdrawal from the Sinai has been marked by violence, anguish, hope and prayer. The price that Israel is paying for peace with Egypt is varied and expensive, tangible and intangible. Some costs can be measured in dollars and cents—others can never be determined. It is a cost justified for Israel only by the hope of permanent peace with Egypt.

Israel's withdrawal from the Sinai begins a new chapter in the history of Arab-Israeli relations—a chapter that must now deal with some of its most difficult problems: The West Bank, Palestinian autonomy and Jerusalem. As the Sinai issue was resolved through negotiations, I believe these problems also can be resolved.

Egypt and Israel have provided a dramatic example for Jordan as well as for Syria. Peace can be achieved through honest negotiations, but only in this way. To begin these negotiations only requires Jordan and Syria to do as Egypt did—accept Israel's right to exist.●

SPEECH BY JAN MARIE NELSON

HON. ARLAN STANGELAND

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege today of inserting into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a copy of the winning speech in the 1981-82 "Voice of Freedom" contest sponsored by the Minnesota Veterans of Foreign Wars.

This year's winner, Jan Marie Nelson, has a clear vision of the problems we face in the House of Representatives and in the country.

Miss Nelson attacks the pessimism and divisive bickering which has dominated most of the debate in the House for the past year.

She calls for a new and united approach toward solving the urgent problems facing America today. Many Americans agree with these feelings. But it took Jan Marie Nelson to articulate these feelings so clearly.

I have represented the Seventh District of Minnesota for 5½ years. My neighbors are thoughtful and hard-working people, committed to the cooperative nature of our representative democracy.

Their feelings have been well-expressed by a young sophomore from Fergus Falls Senior High School. I am proud to have Jan Marie Nelson as a constituent. And all of us from that tiny corner of America are proud to have Jan Marie as a neighbor.

At this time, I would like to insert Miss Nelson's award-winning speech into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I hope all of you will take the time to read and heed her call for a new and bipartisan effort to solve our problems and to add new building stones to the foundation of our Republic.

1981-82 VFW VOICE OF DEMOCRACY SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM MINNESOTA WINNER, JAN M. NELSON

Date: 1776.

Place: Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, United States of America.

Purpose: Building America . . . Together and You are There.

"Ben, will you get in here? . . . that kite can wait . . . but we need some help with the foundation."

"John Hancock, you're the guy with the big ideas . . . how many rights do you think are needed?"

"Tom Jefferson, are you taking all this down?"

Sound funny? Well, we shouldn't laugh. Ben Franklin, Thomas Jefferson and John Hancock were this nation's first architects. They set down and designed the blueprints for this country's democracy. The design was unique. Democracy was unique. There were those critics who laughed but were eventually won over to the concept of democracy.

Since then, there have been other notable 'carpenters.' The names, Abraham Lincoln, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, John F. Kennedy, Martin Luther King. Each, in his own special way, contributed to the strong foundation provided by the early founders.

But, who are today's carpenters? . . . Do they need a title or to be housed in offices in Washington, D.C.? Or . . . can they be found in the small towns and villages across this country?

Have we, as Americans, shifted the responsibility of maintaining and adding to our democratic house by having the excuse heard so often? . . . "I can't make any difference." Are we all too willing to sit back and let others do the work? . . . and then, too frequently, complain and criticize when our nation's elected leaders do attempt a change?

It seems so easy and right to tear apart and criticize the actions of national leaders. It seem ironic to me that we . . . as a democracy . . . elect a president . . . welcome him to office and then, for the remaining four years of his term do nothing but criticize and object to the policies his party tries to implement. This destructive criticism gives a poor example to the rest of the world of what democracy is all about. Instead of uniting together and working on making a better country, we become consumed with negativism. "This isn't going to work" . . . "That's a poor program" and on and on and on. The energies of this nation's people are wasted on bickering and in-house fighting instead of directing them to the constructive work on our problems. The same time and energy used for criticism could be so much better spent if each of us would find our own special talent as a national carpenter and go to work on his country's home.

Building together as a team will accomplish what dividing with criticism can never accomplish . . . a strong and respected United States that will be an example for the rest of the world to follow.

Criticism like dreaded termites will eat away at the very foundation of this country . . . apathy will wash away the cornerstones of our democracy . . . pessimism will rip the shingles of our nation's roof and leave it bare for enemies to attack.

An optimist and architect of democracy, Robert Kennedy, stated, "Some men see things as they are and say . . . why? . . . I dream things that never were and say . . . why not?" That attitude of optimism and hope will renew and strengthen our nation's fabric, providing us with the determination and energy needed to meet the challenges of the coming decades. When we have met and conquered these challenges, we can look upon this country with pride and know that we did not destroy its foundation but added new blocks strong with love, patriotism and hope for the future tenants of our nation's home.

One of the old, wise architects of our country made the observation that, "United we stand . . . divided we fall." Just as a well-built house needs nails and rafters to hold it together, so we, the young carpenters who love our country, can unite our people with our leaders and make our democracy a working blueprint for the entire world.●

LAW OF THE SEA TREATY

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, Smith Hempstone, executive editor of the Washington Times, recently penned an op ed piece on the Law of the Sea Treaty. I include it in the RECORD for the benefit of our colleagues in the House and Senate.

One of the points touched upon by Mr. Hempstone was the remorse of the Washington Post's Don Oberdorfer that by rejecting the Law of the Sea Treaty the United States may be isolating itself from a new global system. We cannot make too much of Mr. Oberdorfer's concerns—they vary only slightly from those of many noted internationalists.

What system will Americans be missing out on? To find out quickly, one has only to read any current criticism on national or international socialism. Read, for example, "China: Alive in the Bitter Sea" by Mr. Fox Butterfield, formerly the New York Times bureau chief in Peking. Take a look at the fanaticism that has been inflicted upon a quarter of the world's people. It is roughly the same fanaticism being proposed for two-thirds of the Earth's resources.

It was Andrew Lytle who observed that:

It takes but one bad idea to ruin a man or a state.

The bad idea of collectivism has been the ruin of millions of men and women, and dozens of states. The handmaiden of collectivism is internationalism, which preaches subordination of one's region and nation to those whose values are spelled out in human suffering and mass executions.

In place of the Law of the Sea Treaty, we need a seabed mining regime that is born from an intellegent provincialism: An understanding of and deference toward one's own community, state, region, and citizens. We need to press for—insist upon—a seabed mining regime that is unabashedly structured to protect and preserve the economic, political, and security interests of Americans. Such considerations would, and do, necessarily lead to rejection by Americans of the system adopted in New York last April. Being isolated from that is being isolated from an illness. As Mr. Hempstone put it, "That's just dandy."

Mr. Speaker, the op ed piece follows:

[From the Washington Times, July 14, 1982]

LAW OF THE SEA: BETTER NO TREATY THAN A BAD ONE

(By Smith Hempstone)

The Reagan administration's decision not to sign the Law of the Sea Treaty, says the Washington Post's Don Oberdorfer, "risks eventual U.S. isolation from a new global system accepted by the rest of the world."

That's just dandy.

It's dandy because, in this instance, the United States for once is acting in the national interest of America. Nor is the isolation of the United States as complete as is frequently suggested.

While it is true that only three other nations—Israel, Turkey and Venezuela—joined the United States in opposing the treaty approved by 130 members of the United Nations last April, the 17 others that abstained—the Soviet Union, Britain, West Germany, Italy, Holland, Belgium and Spain among them—include most of the nations that count for much of the world.

The fatal flaw of the treaty is that the seabed mining provisions of its 320 clauses represent a bold-faced attempt to establish the so-called New World Economic Order that would force resource transfers from the have nations to the have-nots, through institutions and procedures beyond the control of the haves. The treaty is, to put it politely, a rip-off that provides for the supranational taxation of private (Western) licenses and the mandatory transfer of their technology to the Third World.

Amongst the beneficiaries of this international handout would have been "national liberation movements" such as the Palestine Liberation Organization (hence Israel's negative vote).

At stake are some 1.5 trillion tons of fist-sized nodules of nickel, cobalt, manganese and copper. The United States, which has the technology to mine the seabed, is deficient in all these metals except copper.

The treaty, while milking the mining companies of annual operating fees of $1 million plus taxes that could absorb as much as 70 percent of net proceeds, would create an International Seabed Authority complete with its own assembly, council and secretariat.

Each signatory would be entitled to one vote in the assembly, but costs would be allocated "upon the scale used for the regular budget of the United Nations." In other words, good old Uncle Sugar would foot the largest part of the bill and, in return, have the same vote as Nauru.

In return for this international transfer of wealth, the proponents of the treaty were willing to codify something the maritime nations, through custom and usage, already enjoy: Free passage through straits connecting oceans and seas.

This issue came to a head in recent years when many nations unilaterally enlarged their territorial waters from the old limit of 3-to-12 miles to 200 miles. This not only created friction where claimed jurisdictions overlapped but raised questions as to the right to free passage through some 116 vital bodies of water less than 24 miles wide, including the Dover, Gibraltar, Hormuz, and Malacca straits.

As in the case with the moribund SALT treaty (now under renegotiation as START), the United States and the world do need a treaty regulating what takes place on and under the sea. But this treaty would not have adequately served that purpose, and for a very simple reason: It is based on principles inimical to American interests and founded on an ideology that contravenes Western values.

It would have been preferable had the Third World nations been willing to renegotiate the treaty to correct its more obnoxious clauses. But this they refused to do.

Under the circumstances, the United States has no alternative other than to enforce its interest in free passage on straits connecting the high seas and to protect its nationals when and if they seek to mine the riches of the deep. The risks in so doing are likely to prove minimal: The only nation with the capability of contesting America's efforts to protect its rights in this area is the Soviet Union.

And Moscow has different and larger fish to fry.●

IDA NUDEL

HON. CHARLES F. DOUGHERTY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 20, 1982

● Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, it has been 11 years since Ida Nudel first applied for her exit visa from the Soviet Union. We in Congress have been trying for quite some time to bring her to freedom. I was encouraged to learn several months ago that Ida was permitted to return to her apartment in Moscow after spending 4 years in Siberian exile. It appeared Ida would soon have the freedom she has fought for, and deserves, to live in Israel with her sister.

My hope was shattered when I recently learned that Ida would no longer be permitted to live in Moscow. Even more recently I learned through the Jewish Community Relations Council of Greater Philadelphia that Ida has not been permitted to live in Riga either. Although neither city feels much like home to Ida, having one place to live would make contact with friends and others much easier. More importantly, it would facilitate her obtaining an exit visa. Mr. Speaker, now that Ida can no longer live in Moscow, I believe the Soviet authorities are once again preparing to create a maze of bureaucracy from which there is no escape.

I have received several letters from Elena Fridman, Ida's sister in Israel. The most recent letter expresses Elena's concern for Ida's health. Ida evidently has a heart condition which needs close attention. Because she is not a resident of Moscow, however, she cannot use the superior facilities there. Now that she cannot live in Riga either, receiving any medical care at all is unlikely. Our only real hope is to help bring Ida to Israel where her sister Elena can take care of her. The recent developments concerning Ida's fate, however, make that prospect dimmer than ever.

This treatment of Ida by the Soviet Government frankly has been typical of action which makes myself and so many of my colleagues distrustful of the Soviets. As strategic arms talks develop over the coming months, I hope the Soviets are made to understand the implications of these blatant attacks on individual human rights. Any successes to come from the upcoming START talks depend heavily on a mutual trust that agreements will be kept. I know many of my colleagues share my sentiments and I hope they do not hesitate to convey that message to the White House as well as to the Kremlin.●

SOVIET JEWISH EMIGRATION

HON. LYNN MARTIN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, 6 months ago the New York Times expressed concern with the level to which Soviet Jewish emigration had fallen. Citing statistics which projected 1982 emigration at a 93 percent reduction from the 1979 level, the New York Times called attention to a problem it felt merited the concern and action of the present administration and individual Americans. Only 300 Jews were allowed to leave the Soviet Union this year. Contrasted with levels that were much higher in previous years, this caused special alarm among those monitoring Soviet emigration trends.

Mr. Speaker, 182 Jews left the Soviet Union in June of this year. By comparison, the January level looks generous. In light of this decline, I urge all American citizens, Representatives of Congress, and members of the administration to protest to Soviet officials about such an emigration policy. Particularly I would hope that the latter group, with access to the diplomatic forum, will emphasize official U.S. concern with the flagrant human rights violations embodied in Soviet emigration policy. It is incumbent on all of us to use every opportunity to press upon Soviet officials our alarm over their emigration policy and our distaste for it.

American policy toward the Soviet Union cannot hinge solely on the emigration concern. Obviously, the issue must be addressed in the context of overall United States-Soviet policy and with ample consideration of the strategic, economic, and political questions comprehensive policy incorporates. Neither, however, can we deny the relation between United States-Soviet relations in general and the emigration issue in specific. There can be no doubt that the importance Americans have attached to freer Soviet emigration was instrumental in prompting the high levels that developed in the late 1970's. A chill in the East-West dialog has ebbed the tide of emigration; now more than ever, renewed dedication to pursuing the emigration issue with Soviet officials is in order.●

IDA NUDEL

HON. MILLICENT FENWICK

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 20, 1982

● Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Speaker, first I must commend my colleagues from Massachusetts and Connecticut, Representatives HECKLER and KENNELLY for their admirable work in putting together this special order for this courageous woman, Ida Nudel.

Ida Nudel has been trying for 11 years to emigrate from the Soviet Union. In 1971 she applied for a visa to emigrate and, like so many who wish to emigrate, she was immediately ostracized. She lost her job and lost her friends. She was forced to remain in a country that had clearly shown by its actions that it did not want her.

In 1978, Ida Nudel hung a banner out her window which said "KGB give me my visa!" For this she was sentenced to 4 years in a Siberian labor camp and only recently was she released. After her release, Ms. Nudel went to live in Moscow, but was denied a permit to live there. She then went to Riga, where she was also denied the necessary permission to live there. When it came time for her to leave Riga, at the end of her rope, she was forced to sleep in the train station.

Why does the Soviet Union insist on harassing this woman? What does the Government hope to achieve? First, the Soviets made it clear, once she applied for a visa to leave the country, that she was not welcome in Soviet society. Then, however, they would not permit her to leave. What possible motive can be behind actions like this by a government in the modern, supposedly civilized world?

I join my colleagues in deploring the Orwellian tactics of the Soviet Government as it harasses those who wish to leave their country for family reasons. Ida Nudel poses no threat to the Soviet Union; she simply wants to join her sister in Israel. Since the Soviets have made it so clear that they do not want her, why can they not let her leave?

I take this opportunity once again to request that the Soviet authorities live up to their commitment under the Helsinki accords and allow Ida Nudel to live in basic human dignity, to be free from harassment for exercising a basic human right, and finally, that they allow her to emigrate.

TROOPS TO LEBANON: AN EDITORIAL VIEW

HON. DOUGLAS K. BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday July 21, 1982

● Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues an editorial from the Lincoln Star newspaper which discusses the very serious issue of whether to send U.S. troops to Lebanon.

I do not believe the United States should send troops to this troubled land, and I have so notified the President of my view. The thoughts contained in this editorial are worthy of consideration by each of us.

[From the Lincoln Star, July 8, 1982]

TO SHOW THE FLAG OR WAIT OFF SHORE?

As debate heats up over President Reagan's conditional offer of U.S. marines to help Palestine Liberation Organization militia leave West Beirut, we join others in asking a short and simple question: Why?

Why should the U.S. commit troops to what must be a complicated and potentially explosive operation when the job can be done without them?

* * * * *

The best reason for the president to keep the marines on board ship and not picking through the litter of Beirut is that there is no compelling reason to show the flag on Lebanon's ground. There is, instead, great potiential for getting lost in a nasty maze of political calculations that might require a greater, longer, costlier presence in Lebanon than the nation needs or wants to bear.

Israel would love to have U.S. troops committed to Lebanon over the long term and the Begin government really is not above trapping us into such a commitment. The PLO, having gone to Moscow because no one in the west would give it the kind of aid it needs to sustain a perpetual resistance, can't be trusted to make things easy and safe for a token U.S. marine presence in Beirut. Besides, even if Yasser Arafat were to take Reagan and the others up on the deal, he doesn't control everyone underneath the PLO tent. There are any number of Palestinians belonging to extremist factions who would think Arafat a fink for leaving Beirut under American protection. They might gladly fire away at anybody walking toward the beach.

There is reason to fear the consequences of a small force of American marines entering a besieged city in which a large number of conflicting forces are at work. If the president truly thinks it is in the best interests of the nation for our armed forces to take part in disarming and removing the Palestinian resistance from Beirut, he ought to do like Ike did and send in two or three divisions. Otherwise, he ought to be decisive, for once, and use U.S. political and economic influence on those in the Middle East who will listen to him and who can solve the problem: among them, Saudi Arabia, Egypt and Israel. Other powers might also wish to join in the effort. In doing so, they would not assume the same risks the U.S. would.

Still, in itself, removing the PLO from Beirut will not lead to an enduring Middle East peace. Resolving the statehood aspirations of the Palestinian people would be a giant step in the direction of peace and that is what should be occupying the minds of all those now pondering the presence of 1,000 U.S. marines on Lebanon's soil.●

A NEW CRIME FIGHTING INITIATIVE

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, July 21, 1982, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

A NEW CRIME-FIGHTING INITIATIVE

The unexpected acquittal of John Hinckley, the young man who pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity to charges of attempting to assassinate the President of the United States, has once again raised questions which always seem to be in the back of people's minds. Do our laws do much to help criminals and little to protect law-abiding persons? Is our elaborate system of police, prosecutors, courts, and prisons really effective in deterring crime and punishing criminals? The public outcry at the Hinckley verdict and the predictable results of recent polls suggest that the issue of crime ranks as high as ever on the national agenda. My contact with the people of southern Indiana only confirms the results of the polls. Because crime touches our lives so personally and in so many ways, it is a source of constant concern.

Congress has not been very successful in its effort to get crime under control. When the rhetoric dies down and the hard choices must be made, Congress has simply been unable to reduce crime. Part of the problem is jurisdictional: the violent crimes which disturb us the most are generally matters for the states, not for the Federal Government. Part of the problem is constitutional: modification of the insanity defense, reform of sentencing and bail procedures, and changes in rules of evidence challenge traditional ways of understanding the scope of the state's power and the rights of the accused. And part of the problem is financial: strengthening police agencies, hiring additional prosecutors, creating more courts, and expanding the prisons at the federal level mean added costs at a time when the country wants to reduce federal expenditures. It is hardly surprising that Congress has overpromised and underdelivered on the issue of crime.

Since the problem before Congress has three main aspects—jurisdictional, constitutional, and financial—Congress' response should be flexible and wide-ranging. A new crime-fighting initiative might involve the following measures:

FEDERAL ACTION AGAINST VIOLENT CRIME

Since an enormous amount of violent crime is drug-related, the federal government has some latitude to act against it. A crackdown on the drug trade would entail both stepped-up diplomatic efforts to eradicate foreign drug crops and more technical assistance to foreign authorities in their operations against drug manufacturers. At home, we should start more programs to educate school children in the dangers of drugs, use more federal agents to work with state and local police, and employ more federal agents and the military to detect and stop drug cargoes.

The federal government should also move against violent crime with technical assistance to local police forces. We may not be able to afford reviving the old Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, but we can use federal funds in highly selective ways to help with the purchase of much-needed equipment, to help set up proven programs to deal with career crimials, and to train law enforcement officers.

FEDERAL RIGHTS AND LEGAL REFORMS

The Hinckley case shows that the insanity defense in federal court must be changed. We might change the plea from innocent because insane to guilty but insane, shift the burden of proof from the prosecution to the defense, limit the psychiatric testimony which may be offered, or redefine what insanity is in a legal context. All these options should be considered carefully as we balance the right of the accused to a fair trial against society's need to protect itself.

In addition, I believe we should give serious consideration both to the limitation of federal parole and to a requirement that a federal felon who uses a firearm to commit his crime be held for a mandatory term of years behind bars. In the matter of bail, prevention detention must be stressed. Bail allows the accused to exercise his right to a presumption of innocence, but society has a right to hold a criminal who may commit crimes or jump bail if he is released.

The rules of evidence, too, must be reformed. For example, the exclusionary rule (which bars the use of illegally obtained evidence at trial) is so complex that it is nearly unintelligible. What is worse, it permits major evidence (and, with it, an important case) to be lost because of a minor slip-up by police. The exclusionary rule protects the accused from unreasonable search and also from self-incrimination, but there are other ways to safeguard such rights. One alternative is to use all evidence while disciplining the police when they act illegally. Another is to use all evidence which the police obtain in good faith.

IMPROVING THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

Efficiencies of management of the federal criminal justice system should be encouraged, but the kind of dramatic improvement we would like to see in the system will require more money. If we take the advice of the President and spend less for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, less for the Drug Enforcement Administration, less for the Coast Guard, and less for the Bureau of Prisons, we will witness a marked deterioration of our crime-fighting ability.

During the past few years we have cut back the ranks of agents, patrolmen, investigators, and marshals who do the basic work of law enforcement for the federal government. We have more federal judges, but we do not have enough prosecutors to put the cases before them. Federal prisons are 10 percent over capacity.

Making the system work better will not be possible if we continue to patch things here and make repairs there. We must strengthen each link in the criminal justice chain. To allow weakness at any point is to waste scarce resources. A vigorous federal program would help strengthen state and local law enforcement efforts. Most important of all, it would help relieve us of some of the burden crime places on our lives.●

A HEROIC DEED

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, It is my honor and pleasure to call the attention of the Members to the recent heroic lifesaving action of a California resident, Mr. Marty Grande, of Oxnard, Calif.

On August 26, 1981, Mr. Grande, a driver for Grande Trucking of Oxnard, was hauling a load of granite when a young boy flagged him down as he was crossing a bridge over the Santa Clara River. A 10-year-old girl had been caught by the current in a culvert and was pulled underwater. When his attempts to pull her free failed, he rushed to the other side of the bridge, where he spotted her floating face down in 15 feet of water.

Despite the fact that he is unable to swim himself, Mr. Grande dove in, pulled the girl to shore, and revived her using CPR (cardio-pulmonary resuscitation) techniques.

His quick and selfless action, in disregard for his own safey, saved the girl's life. Mr. Grande was recently honored by Heavy Duty Trucking magazine as the recipient of its 1981 Highway Hero Award, and I would like to add my own commendation and that of this House for Mr. Grande's heroic action, which provides an inspiration for us all.●

WALL STREET JOURNAL ON REAGAN'S NUCLEAR ENERGY POLICIES

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, the Reagan administration is reversing the antiproliferation efforts pursued by every U.S. President since the beginning of the nuclear age.

Fortunately, there are people in the press who take a more responsible approach to this most serious issue. As a result of their deep concerns, more and more knowledgeable Americans are speaking out against the risks which the President's flawed nuclear proliferation policies entail.

On July 8, 1982, the Wall Street Journal printed an editorial containing a no-nonsense assessment of the safeguard inadequacies of the International Atomic Energy Agency, pointed once again to wasted taxpayer subsidies for the Clinch River breeder reactor, and revived the level-headed idea that the United States should try to avoid the spread of nuclear weapons capability—an idea that seems to have been all but forgotten by the Reagan administration.

This editorial on Mr. Reagan's proposed plutonium policy provides considerable insight into the problems and risks which the Reagan policy entails. I commend the Journal to my colleagues in the House of Representatives.

[From the Wall Street Journal, July 6, 1982]

NUCLEAR ASPIRATIONS

Administration officials announced recently that they will try to contain the spread of nuclear weapons by imposing tighter controls (as yet undefined) on U.S. exports of nuclear technology and materiels. We welcome this renewed effort to slow nuclear proliferation but even stronger measures are to be desired.

The how-to knowledge of bomb manufacture is an open secret in international scientific circles. The costs are affordable even for impoverished nations, as Indian proved in 1974. The only tenable limitations left are the availability of enriched uranium and some of the more sophisticated technology needed to turn it into a bomb. But even in these latter areas, international safeguards are showing signs of collapse.

The International Atomic Energy Agency, which is supposed to be the world's watchdog on proliferation, admitted recently in its annual report that its inspection procedures are inadequate. In typical cautious style, it suggested at least two countries may have clandestine bomb projects. Since one of those two is presumably India, which set off a "peaceful" nuclear explosion eight years ago, it's easy to believe the IAEA lacks teeth.

The other is most likely Pakistan but there are reasons to believe these are not the only two nations flouting IAEA strictures. An Argentine official threatened at an IAEA meeting June 11 to divert peaceful technology to build a nuclear-powered submarine. Despite the threat (which Argentina may or may not be able to carry out) the IAEA board of governors that same day approved a "safeguards" agreement with Argentina covering supplies of enriched uranium from the Soviet Union.

Part of IAEA's problems stem from the rather lax bilateral controls imposed by some exporters of nuclear technology. A dramatic example was exposed by last year's Israeli bombing of an Iraqi reactor being built by the French; the Israelis said the facility was going to be used to produce bomb-grade material under the very noses of the French. America's nonproliferation reputation also was tarnished, by President Carter's decision to continue to supply India with nuclear fuel even though Prime Minister Gandhi flatly refused to halt India's weapons program.

The U.S. is in a pivotal position to get other exporting nations to improve their bilateral safeguards. Members of the Euratom program and Japan have asked for blanket, long-term approval to reprocess U.S.-supplied fuel and to reuse the resulting weapons-grade plutonium for power generation. President Reagan has already approved the requests in principle and negotiators are working out the detailed contracts, which will require congressional review. The administration could use its leverage in these talks to help reduce the proliferation risk by demanding as a quid pro quo that the Europeans and Japanese tighten their export controls and refrain from exporting any advanced reprocessing technology which could easily be used to construct bombs.

The allure of advanced reprocessing and plutonium technology, even for energy-deficient places like Europe and Japan, is not easy to understand. Brian Chow, senior research specialist at Pan Heuristics, a California-based research organization, says that inexpensive uranium ore will remain plentiful for many years to come. Reprocessing and plutonium technology won't become economically attractive before the year 2020 and possibly later.

But despite such assurances, the Reagan administration has revived the Clinch River breeder reactor President Carter had sidelined. Breeders do represent advanced technology and they reduce disposal problems. This particular one also pleases the Senate majority leader, Tennessee's Howard Baker. But it is hard to see why taxpayers should subsidize them.

Other nations probably want a freer hand with this technology to give themselves greater independence from the U.S. But if so they should be asked to take on greater anti-proliferation responsibilities in return. Over the long term it may be inevitable that more nations will join the nuclear club, but even though the nuclear freeze movement seems strangely unconcerned about this prospect, the U.S. is justified in trying to delay that process as much as possible.●

NUCLEAR NONPROLIFERATION ACT

HON. THOMAS M. FOGLIETTA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Speaker, everyone recognizes nuclear arms as the greatest danger to mankind in our history. Every nation that develops the capacity to produce nuclear weapons increases that danger. Today America, the Soviet Union, England, France, China, and India are proven possessors of nuclear arms. Israel and South Africa are suspected to have or be on the verge of having nuclear arms. It must be one of our foremost priorities to prevent the growth of the so-called nuclear club. On Monday, this administration took a giant step in the other direction.

Over the past 37 years, every administration has worked toward the goal of nonproliferation. The International Atomic Energy Agency was created to form and standardize atomic energy safeguards. The Congress passed the Atomic Energy Act in 1954, and amended it to prohibit U.S. cooperation with any nation that has not agreed to IAEA safeguards. Very few nations have refused to submit to those safeguards. Argentina is one of those few.

In 1978 Congress enacted the Nuclear Nonproliferation Act. That act is specifically designed to prevent the sale of sensitive technology that could lead to the production of nuclear weapons to any nation not under IAEA safeguards. Again, Argentina is such a nation.

Argentina has specifically refused to allow impartial inspection of certain of its nuclear facilities. She has refused to disavow any intention to produce nuclear weapons. It should be clear to anyone not locked in a closet for the last 5 months that Argentina is neither stable nor unambitious. The strained nature of her relations with her Latin American neighbors, particularly Chile, cannot help but worsen as Argentina moves closer to nuclear capability. This, in turn, will only heighten South America's own version of the arms race, something that is on no one's best interest. The historic precedent is clear: Tension begets tension, and an arms buildup by one potential antagonist leads to an equal, if not greater buildup by the other. We cannot be in the business of participating in this spiral.

Mr. Reagan, through his approval of the sale of a computerized process control system for end-use in a heavy water production facility in Argentina, is initiating such participation. In doing so he reverses a policy as old as the nuclear age itself. In doing so he violates the spirit and the intention of the laws passed by Congress. In doing so he sends an ill-timed message to the rest of Latin America.

The loophole in the law that allows this sale must be closed. I support and commend Congressman BINGHAM's bill to close this loophole. But that bill is not enough right now. I have introduced this concurrent resolution with my friend and colleague Mr. MARKEY to express the deep concern of the Congress that this sale is a mistake, and should be immediately reversed. I urge your support of this resolution.

Thank you.

PUERTO RICAN DAY PARADE

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, Sunday, July 25 will make the 20th year of an event which has become a tradition in my home State—the New Jersey Statewide Puerto Rican Day Parade. Taking place in Newark, home of the largest Puerto Rican population in the State, it will celebrate the rich culture and contributions of Puerto Rican Americans to our society.

This year's honorary parade committee includes the Honorable Carlos Romero Barcelo, Governor of Puerto Rico, who will be traveling north for the event; Senator BILL BRADLEY; Gov. Thomas Kean of New Jersey; and Mayor Kenneth Gibson of Newark. I am honored, once again, to be a member of this committee, and I look forward to participating in the parade.

The parade will start at 1 p.m. at Lincoln Park in Newark, with Cherry Hill attorney Joseph Rodriguez serving as grand marshal. He will be joined by Maria T. Zanbria, a student at Seton Hall University, who was selected from among many lovely women as Miss Puerto Rico of the State of New Jersey.

Many people have worked hard to assure that the parade will be both a success and a fitting tribute to the ambition and creativity of the Puerto Rican people. Michael Rodriguez of Newark has worked as adviser and coordinator for the festivities, and he has received help from Miss Luce N. Hernandez, president of the Puerto Rican statewide parade; Flor Morales, first vice president; Johnny Cossio, second vice president; Leslie Zayas, third vice president; Norma Ronda, parade secretary; and Jaime Pantin Iglesia, parade treasurer.

On Monday, July 20, Mayor Gibson recognized the importance of this celebration and declared this week to be Puerto Rican Week in Newark. Governor Kean made a similar proclamation for the State. These ceremonies are part of a week of events centered around Puerto Rican culture and its integral role in our society. Numerous celebrations will take place on college campuses throughout the State, and on Friday, at the Newark Museum, six distinguished Puerto Rican Americans will receive the Solde Jajulla Award in honor of their outstanding service to their community. Jose Unanne, president of the Goya Corp., will receive the award for economic achievement. Jorge Berdecia will be recognized for his artistic endeavors in design. The deputy superintendent of the Newark Board of Education, Juan Rosario, will be cited for his efforts in education. The civic leadership of Flor Morales will be acknowledged. Jorge Morena, television journalist, will receive the awards for communications and politics.

The Honorable Leo Cavranes, director of the Mayoral Association of Puerto Rico, will be the keynote speaker of the annual Puerto Rican parade dinner on Saturday at the Robert Treat Hotel. The Puerto Rican Day Parade in Newark, the culmination of the week's activities, will not only pay tribute to Puerto Rican Americans, but will also heighten the appreciation of others for their rich culture and tradition. I am confident that in the years ahead they will become citizens of prominence in all areas of mainland life and bring us some of the beauty of life in the "jardin de flores" from which they came.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be from a city with such a vibrant Puerto Rican community, from which I have made many close friends. I am honored to join dignitaries from Puerto Rico and so many others throughout the State in participating in this special occasion.●

ANNIVERSARY OF TURKISH OCCUPATION OF CYPRUS

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, this week I join with members of the Greek-American and Cypriot-American community in observance of the eighth anniversary of the Turkish invasion of Cyprus. It is my hope that all parties will continue to work toward a satisfactory and permanent peace to this problem.

The occupation of Cyprus has caused enormous hardship and difficulty for the Cypriot people and as long as Turkish forces are present their basic human rights and freedom of self-determination will continue to be denied. Their suffering is a modern day tragedy. The Turkish invasion of Cyprus has resulted in eviction of over 200,000 Cypriots and the disappearance of 2,000 Greek Cypriots, still unaccounted for. After the 1974 invasion, Cyprus lost 40 percent of its land which contained 70 percent of its resources. The recovery of Cyprus is paramount and this can only begin once the occupation ceases.

Cyprus has survived, since time immemorial, the domination of one conqueror after another and this reflects the tenacity and resilience of its people, as well as their indomitable determination to survive whatever the odds. The present crisis through which Cyprus is passing is perhaps the worst one of its long history. The Turkish invasion and continuing occupation has caused so much human pain and suffering. All this has been a terrible experience, and yet any negotiating process needs good faith on both sides. I am convinced that as far as the Government of Cyprus is concerned, such good faith does exist. The people of Cyprus realize that only through a concerted effort to discuss the Cyprus issue in a positive and good faith way, is it indeed possible to achieve satisfactory results.

The settlement of the Cyprus problem should not only be the concern of the Cypriots and those countries which are closely connected with Cyprus, such as Greece or Turkey, but also other countries and their governments, who believe in human dignity, freedom, justice, and human rights. Negotiations between the parties have been ongoing for the past 2 years, and while a settlement has yet to be reached, we can be encouraged that all sides recognize the need for this problem to be resolved. It is my hope that a final and satisfactory solution will be achieved soon and that the suffering of these people will be ended.●

THE IMMIGRATION REFORM AND CONTROL ACT OF 1982

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1982, H.R. 6514, contains as one of its major provisions the establishment of sanctions and penalties against employers who knowingly hire aliens not authorized to work in the United States.

Undocumented aliens come to the United States for jobs. That is the lure, that is the magnet.

The immigration reform bill ends that lure, turns off that magnet.

Most of the American people believe that it is already illegal to hire undocumented aliens. The person on the street assumes that, because it is illegal for an undocumented alien to work in this country, it must also be illegal for an employer to hire an undocumented alien.

But, sad to report, this is not the case. It is not illegal under present Federal law to hire an undocumented alien. It is as if it were illegal to buy drugs but not illegal to sell them. Such a policy is upside down and ridiculous, and needs to be changed.

When Senator ALAN SIMPSON and I introduced the reform bill, we included the employer sanctions provisions because we were convinced it was central to any effective reform of our Nation's immigration laws. Judging from the anguish and distress expressed by the vociferous few who have argued against employer sanctions, one might think that Senator SIMPSON and I had dreamed up a new idea, one which had never been discussed before, and labeled it employer sanctions and placed it at the heart of our comprehensive bill.

That is just not the case, Mr. Speaker, though I would like to think that our version of employer sanctions contains some refinements and clarifications which have not been seen in previous versions. In all honesty, it is a concept which has been with us a long, long time.

Four successive administrations starting with that of President Richard Nixon in 1970 up to and including that of President Ronald Reagan, have proposed and supported penalties against employers who knowingly hire undocumented aliens. This body passed employer sanctions legislation both in 1972 and in 1973 by ratios of 6 to 1. Unfortunately, the other body did not act on these proposals.

In 1976, President Ford's Domestic Council Committee on Illegal Aliens, chaired by former Attorney General Edward Levi, supported employer sanctions, as did President Carter's 1979 Interagency Task Force, cochaired by former Attorney General Griffin Bell, former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, and former Secretary of Labor Ray Marshall.

And in 1981, the 16 distinguished members of the Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy, chaired by my good friend and president of my alma mater, Father Theodore Hesburgh, supported employer sanctions in their final report.

Employer sanctions have been endorsed by organized labor, by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, by various religious and ethnic leaders, by State and local elected officials, and generally by every expert who has studied the immigration problem. Even the U.S. Supreme Court in its recent decision requiring the State of Texas to provide free education to children without legal status encouraged Congress to adopt employer sanctions.

Most countries of the world have adopted some form of employer sanctions. Recent additions to the fold include Hong Kong and Italy. I have spoken to officials from developed countries around the world who have stated time and again that without penalties against employers who knowingly hire undocumented aliens, it is virtually impossible to stop illegal immigration.

Some who do not like sanctions of employers argue, instead, for increased border security.

My Subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees, and International Law has begun the slow but necessary process of strengthening both border and internal enforcement functions of the Immigration and Naturalization Service but, as Attorney General William French Smith told a joint hearing of my subcommittee and Senator SIMPSON's Senate Immigration Subcommittee, not even an army could halt the flow of undocumented aliens as long as there are jobs to be had in this country. Increased enforcement, therefore, is a vital component of any overall solution, but it cannot do the job alone.

Others have suggested enforced minimum wage laws and work place safety laws as alternatives to employer sanctions. Clearly, these laws should be vigorously enforced. Their enforcement would end or sharply reduce the exploitation undocumented aliens today endure.

However, there are plenty of undocumented aliens, perhaps the majority, who are making well above the minimum wage and have suitable working conditions. Enforcing mimimum wage laws does nothing for them, and does nothing to deter future flows of undocumented workers.

Another alternative involves raid and job actions by the Immigration Service in work places around the country. Even though the recent Project Jobs was a better conducted action than most, it was disruptive to business and persons to greater or lesser degrees. It resulted in reports of abuse despite the careful preparation and caution of the immigration officers. It required sizeable numbers of INS personnel—some drawn from other activities—to complete the mission. All in all, I do not see raids and massive deportations to be a feasible way to stop illegal entry into this country.

Even if a lot of people were sent back across the border to their home countries, they would return again, like the ocean tide, a day or a week or a month later to retake their old job or to seek new ones. To end the illegal entry we must end the jobs.

When all is said and done—and all offered alternatives examined—we are inevitably left with employer sanctions. It is the only offering which has widespread and longstanding support and has been tried with success in other countries.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the employer sanctions provisions of the Immigration Reform and Control Act and the act itself when it comes before the House later this session.●

SUPPORT FOR A NATIONAL CHARTER FOR AMERICAN EX-PRISONERS OF WAR

HON. CLINT ROBERTS

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. ROBERTS of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5380, to recognize the organization known as American Ex-Prisoners of War, and to provide for a national charter for the organization. I rise especially for the many brave South Dakotans who have been prisoners in our conflicts.

Prisoners of war have a special place in the history of our country, and deserve the grateful respect and thanks of all our citizens. They have endured special hardships—brutality, malnutrition, humiliation, and forced labor—for their country. All are heroes for what they have done, and some are special heroes, such as Senator JEREMIAH DENTON and South Dakotan, Leo Thorsness.

I know both these men, as well as other ex-prisoners of war. You can see in their eyes the painful memories and the honor that they hold for their country. The American citizen has not done enough to honor these patriots, nor remember the accomplishments of their trials.

The establishment of a national charter for the American Ex-Prisoners of War will be another step toward the honoring of those most special veterans. On July 9, 1982, we honored the families of those still prisoners of war or missing in action. And now it is fitting to honor those safely returned. Even in this light we should be proud of all those who have put their lives on the line for their country and are now in need of their country's help.●

INVESTMENT IN HUMAN CAPITAL

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, Dr. Bryan E. Carlson, president of Mount Ida Junior College in Newton, Mass., is on outstanding community leader in Massachusetts. As president of Mount Ida, he is naturally concerned about the administration's disastrous policies regarding student assistance programs. But as a former president of the Newton-Needham Chamber of Commerce, he is also concerned with and knowlegeable about investment policy and economic growth.

With his unique perspective, Dr. Carlson has written a very perceptive article in which he points out the folly of the administration's higher education assistance policies. He argues very persuasively that the Reagan administration's supply-side theories should lead to greater, not lesser, investment in human capital. He points out that support for higher education is just that—investment in human capital. He understands that such investment is absolutely essential if this country is to maintain its competitive position in the world's economy and that the cutbacks being advocated by President Reagan, as reflected in this year's budget message, will do much to undermine that position.

Mr. Speaker, I am attaching a copy of Dr. Carlson's very fine article and I ask my colleagues to study it very closely as we continue to fight against reductions in student assistance programs.

HIGHER EDUCATION, THE REAGAN RETREAT, AND THE ASSAULT ON CORN

President Ronald Reagan's proposal to cut student aid for higher education represents a retreat from his very own program for economic recovery. Either the President's own thinking on economic policy is inconsistent, or there is a serious problem in the advice that he is receiving. The problem revolves around the Administration's failure to recognize that support for higher education is an investment-function of supply-side economics. As a result of this blind spot, the President could quickly become the subject of ridicule. While his every appearance still suggests a frontal attack on the problems of the economy, his policy for higher education symbolizes a retreat all the way back into the Darwinian jungle.

The Administration is being totally inconsistent with its own doctrine of supply-side theory. The heart-beat of supply-side theory is the investment-productivity cycle. The investment phase generates physical and human capital, which in turn, provides us with the necessary capacity for economic growth. The Reagan policy for higher education, however, is to decrease our investment in human capital. If his Administration were following a strictly monetarist policy, the inconsistency might not be so glaring—but the policy itself would still be just as egregious. The monetarists focus more exclusively on controlling the supply of money in proper balance with the goods and services available in the total economy. In contrast, the supply-side theorists focus more primarily on stimulating investments that ultimately will increase total goods and services; regulation of the money supply is more of a secondary consideration. Thus, as the President goes on stumpling the supply-side doctrine, to be consistent, he should also be advocating an increase in the investment that we make in human capital. Sooner or later this inconsistency and the resulting irrationality of the Administration's higher education policy will either catch up with him or will befuddle the goal we all espouse, which is economic recovery.

The issue as to whether or not investment in human capital is basic to future economic growth is not even contestable. Several noted economists have made this point quite emphatically. Eli Ginzberg and George J. Vojta have stated that human capital ". . . has become the critical input that determines the rate of growth of the economy . . . " [1] Even George Gilder, one of the acknowledged apostles of Reaganomics, has stated that the ". . . . solid flesh of 'human capital' can melt all too fast in a contagion of fears. . . . Qualities of thought and spirit in an economy can overshadow all the quantities of capital and contracts of labor." [2] Finally, the renowned economist Miltion Friedman has further elaborated the symbiotic relationships that have always existed between human capital formation and physical capital formation:

". . . The two have reinforced one another. The physical capital enabled people to be far more productive by providing them with the tools to work with. And the capacity of people to invent new forms of physical capital, to learn how to use and get the most out of physical capital, and to organize the use of both physical and human capital on a larger and larger scale enabled the physical capital to be more productive. Both physical and human capital must be cared for and replaced. That is even more difficult and costly for human than for physical capital—a major reason why the return to human capital has risen so much more rapidly than the return to physical capital." [3]

Indeed if it were ever true that American prosperity was a function of the nation's investment in human capital, the time is now. We have entered a new post-industrial stage of economic development. We have become a prodigious exporter of raw materials and a net importer of finished goods. Some estimates of how large our service sector has become are as high as 74 percent of the total economy. John Naisbitt, the senior vice president of Yankelovich, Skelly & White, has described the restructuring of America from an industrial society into an information-based society, making the point that an important shift in strategic resources has occurred:

"In a mass industrial society, the strategic resource is capital. The strategic resources in an information society are knowledge, data, experience and information." [4]

It is in this new context of an information-based society that human capital has become even more important than physical capital to our future productivity. As we operate more and more in a world economy rather than a national economy, our chief economic assets are knowledge and high technology rather than factories and machines. Today, if we apply the tenets of supply-side theory, we must be prepared to increase our national investment in knowledge and technology. What is more, we must recognized that knowledge itself precedes technology. The nation's most precious economic resource indeed is human capital.

Support of higher education is not only fundamental to supply-side theory, but will also be critical to the New Federalism proposed by the President. As the roles and responsibilities of state and federal governments are being realigned, there are certain duties that the national government will clearly retain. Among them will be responsibilities for the management of the economy, for the establishment of national goals, and for the redistribution of wealth. In steering the national economy, supply-side doctrine has significantly expanded the conventional management options beyond those of fiscal and monetary policy. Supply-siders have preached the importance of sustaining a proper balance between consumption and investment on a macro-economic level. This is the supply-side strategem.

A fundamental part of this new strategem should be a discretionary federal authority to regulate the national government's investment in higher education. When it is necessary to shift the balance away from consumption and towards investment, the federal government should increase its investment in higher education. This is because support for higher education has actually become indispensable to future gains in productivity. Such is our present condition—so that our long-term economic recovery may indeed depend upon the capacity of the Reagan Administration to perceive the investment-function rather than the consumption-function of higher education.

The second responsibility that will continue to reside with the federal government will be that of establishing national goals. These goals are likely to be in such areas as research and development, space exploration, military-defense, or perhaps medicine. What is significant about these types of national goals is that their achievement can be nurtured through a national commitment to higher education. Thus, the national goals that we establish for higher education will ultimately have a bearing on our ability to attain national goals in every other important federal domain. All of which points out that the federal government must retain a major share of the responsibilities for higher education. Otherwise the President's New Federalism will prove to be simply ineffective.

Finally, the federal government will clearly retain responsibility for the redistribution of the wealth of the society. Obviously, the Reagan philosophy as to how societal resources should be reallocated differs markedly from the philosophy of Great Society liberalism. The Reagan Administration is much more reluctant to shift income from those who earn it to those who do not. The Administration also maintains that direct public support should be restricted to those who are truly needy and lack the basic necessities of life. The great philosophical debate will be waged, of course, over the question of who comprises the "truly needy."

[1] Footnotes at end of article.

Unfortunately, this issue will probably be debated forever, and the debate itself tends to divert our attention from the real problem. The real problem is that too many people have become part of the nonproductive sector of our economy. They depend upon public support in one form or another without contributing to the well-being of others. For our nation, the more important challenge is not how to support the nonproductive sector, but how to make this sector self-supporting. This will require a greater investment in human productivity, which calls for a very active federal role in higher education. With the assistance of the federal government, our colleges and universities have gradually approached the goal of universal higher education. With continued federal support in the pursuit of this goal, the establishment of a concommitant goal is possible: the achievement of universal human productivity. Here, again, is an example of how higher education has a fundamental role in the President's New Federalism. Should the federal government abandon its commitment to higher education, our nonproductive sector would increase absolutely as well as proportionately. The pool of the "truly needy" would expand placing an ever-spiraling burden on the federal government to provide public support.

President Reagan is a good man who possesses the courage to stand up for his own convictions. But now he is confronted by challenges that will determine whether or not he is a great man. Greatness will not be achieved by holding fast and firm to all of his original precepts. Rather than becoming an ideologue, he should be prepared to respond pragmatically and dynamically with new solutions for unprecedented problems. The way he responds to the higher education challenge could belie the apparent sincerity of his efforts to make Americans accept greater responsibility for their own future. On the other hand, if he is astute enough to apply the supply-side rationale to the higher education challenge, the Reagan economic recovery will be more than a mere cycle. It may well endure from generation to generation. If he does not make this application, his as well as our nation's prospects for the future will be quite dismal. It was somebody very wise who once said that no matter how bad and how bleak the winter season becomes, you don't eat your seed corn.

FOOTNOTES

[1] Eli Ginzberg and George J. Vojta, "Service Sector of U.S. Economy," Scientific American, vol. 244, No. 3 (March 1981) 49.

[2] George Gilder, Wealth and Poverty (New York: Bantam Books, 1981), p. 68.

[3] Milton Freidman and Rose Friedman, Free to Choose: A Personal Statement (New York: Avon Books, 1980), p. 13.

[4] John Naisbitt, speech delivered at the International Conference of Wang Users, November 1980.●

A TRIBUTE TO REV. WILLIAM E. JONES

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Rev. William E. Jones and the congregation of the church of Saint Vincent De Paul of Minersville, Pa. On July 11, the new Saint Vincent De Paul church was dedicated. Rev. William E. Jones serves as the pastor of the church, Rev. James M. Carr, is the pastor emeritus, and Rev. James J. Agosta, is the assistant pastor.

The original church was built in April of 1846 and dedicated in December of that year. After its founding the new parish covered an area of 240 square miles. In 1921, the church established the first parochial school in Minersville, Pa. The school opened on September 6 and had an enrollment of approximately 250 pupils in grades one through eight. Father Jones came to the church as pastor on November 7, 1978. Because of the need for extensive renovations and repairs to the church, the congregation decided that a new church should be built. That dream has become a reality.

The time-honored traditions of adherence to religious values and devotion to their fellowman, begun by St. Vincent De Paul's church in 1842, speak for themselves as they leave their indelible imprints in their new place of worship.

We can all look toward their accomplishments as an inspiration of how we can contribute to making this world of ours a better place to live, grow, and worship.

I know that the church of St. Vincent De Paul will continue to be a great source of strength for the Minersville community. I am certain my colleagues will join me in wishing this congregation success in the years to come.●

CAPITAL OWNERSHIP DEVELOPMENT

HON. PARREN J. MITCHELL

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, today, I have introduced a bill to amend the capital ownership development program which is administered by the Small Business Administration.

This bill should be unnecessary. It should be unnecessary to remind an agency of its responsibility to enforce a law as Congress originally intended it to be enforced. It should be unnecessary to state that national policy, codified in statute, cannot be subordinated to the petty prejudices of the bureaucracy. It should be unnecessary for this Congress to reaffirm its belief that the economic development of all segments of our economy is in the vital interest of every segment of our economy.

But over the last several years the SBA has consistently proven that such legislation is necessary—it has proven that Congress must act time and time again to fix it to the course which we have chartered but from which it drifts at will.

We are now faced with yet another situation where we are compelled to act or face the consequence of SBA's administrative repeal of existing statute.

The subject is the 8(a) program. This program was designed by the Congress to provide eligible firms owned by disadvantaged persons with such management, technical, financial and marketing assistance as may be necessary to promote their competitive viability within a reasonable period of time. The heart of marketing assistance is the award of negotiated contracts to 8(a) firms at reasonable prices. The intent of our effort was to create competitive minority owned firms which could take their rightful place in our economy.

Congress first legislated this program in 1978 (Public Law 95-507), although it had been in place administratively since 1969. We legislated not only to endorse our belief in economic equality, but also to provide SBA with guidance so that the flagrant mismanagement existing before 95-507 would become and remain a thing of the past.

But, SBA is continuing to mismanage; continuing to thwart the intent of Congress; continuing to substitute its caprice for national policy. Our goal to create viable minority owned businesses within a reasonable period of time was ignored and, instead, the economic development of 8(a) firms was not even a serious program consideration. SBA did not address those elements which resulted in a firm's economic disadvantage and, therefore, did not engage in any subtantive efforts to cure those problems. SBA would not, moreover, develop a plan for each firm which would contain time-phased objective, goals or targets needed to become economically viable. In short, SBA left the 8(a) program as open-ended and as mismanaged as it was prior to Public Law 95-507.

Congress, therefore, was called upon to act again and in 1980 Public Law 46-481 was signed into law. In section 106 of that statute we mandated that SBA, in concert with its 8(a) firms, develop individual business goals, objectives and targets needed to address and overcome those problems which resulted in a firm's economic disadvantage. We also required SBA and the 8(a) firm to agree upon and specify a time when competitive viability would be achieved. We believed then that SBA was properly redirected to the course originally set for it in Public Law 95-507. But, SBA proved us wrong.

SBA elected to "re-write" the law, not to follow it. It arbitarily dictated "fixed program participation terms" for 8(a) contractors which were totally unrelated to a firm's progress toward competitiveness. We have legislated a program for economic development and SBA had "regulated" a program of "revolving doors" and "blind alleys."

So we are now called upon to act again and, as in the past, we must rise to meet this newest challenge. We must set in statute, with the greatest specificity possible, our original purpose of economic development and how that development is to be measured and used as a criteria for program retention or program exit.

The bill I introduce today would achieve these purposes. It would clearly establish that the participation of small firms in the 8(a) program is to be a function of progress toward competitiveness and not merely a function of time. Progress must be the key and not the capricious opinions of bureaucrats who are more concerned with the number of firms moving out of the program than the number moving up to the mainstream economy.

My bill would establish criteria to measure a firm's progress toward competitiveness. These criteria pertain to each basic area of business operations—financial, management, and marketing. The bill also recites exactly how much progress against these criteria is needed in order to remain in the 8(a) program and, conversely, sets out those conditions which can result in a firm's termination from program participation. Moreover, standards are also specified for a firm's graduation or successful completion of program participation.

My bill also addresses another problem. Pursuant to section 3 of the Small Business Act, SBA can and does promulgate regulations defining "small business." These standards are based on either gross receipts or numbers of employees.

Firms receiving contracts under section 8(a) of the Small Business Act are treated as all other firms when computing their receipts or employment for size standard purposes. This is clearly unfair; 8(a) contracts are sources of temporary and remedial assistance and firms participating in this program will not receive 8(a) contracts once they are graduated. Nevertheless, SBA has ignored this issue. If a firm is fortunate enough to receive a large 8(a) contract, it is now susceptible to a finding that it is not a small business and it can be summarily thrown out of the program even though it is not a viable business without 8(a) support. While SBA can address this situation through regulation—providing a special definition of "small business" for purposes of section 8(a)—it has elected not to and, in my opinion, has so elected in furtherance of its philosophy that 8(a) should not be an economic development program. The result of SBA's failure to act will, as of today, jeopardize 23 minority owned firms, 7,500 jobs and siphon well over $250 million from minority communities throughout the country.

My bill provides that no portion of any gross receipts or employment attributable to the performance of 8(a) contracts shall be taken into account when computing the size status of a business concern. I believe this to be an equitable approach to a very serious problem.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I believe my bill is necessary to preserve and extend the efforts of the Congress to provide for minority business enterprise development. I must admit, however, that it is becoming extremely disturbing to me that Congress must continuously legislate the management of SBA because SBA cannot or will not manage itself. Perhaps, if this dereliction continues we should consider removing SBA from the executive branch altogether and placing it directly within the legislative branch of Government, as is the GAO and the GPO. That may not be what the Executive wants, but it surely is consistent with its actions. However, that issue is perhaps best left to another bill at another time.●

NEWSPAPER EDITORIALS ON THE MX MISSILE PROGRAM

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, in light of the debate within this body over the MX missile program—a program that has generated enormous controversy nationwide—I would like to commend to my colleagues' attention the following sampling of editorial opinion on the MX from a variety of papers around the country. These editorial comments, ranging from the Washington Post to the Tampa Tribune, all come to the same conclusion: The MX program is misguided, in trouble, and unworthy of further funding.

NEWSPAPER EDITORIALS ON THE MX MISSILE PROGRAM

Editorial boards around the country have condemned the MX missile program and called upon Congress to reconsider it. A sampling of the comment follows:

"A Senate armed services committee has taken the right approach to plans for building the MX missile. Don't build it until you know where you are going to put it and what it is supposed to do for you. . . . This is the right approach, and it deserves strong support in the full committee, the Senate and the House of Representatives."—Chicago Tribune, March 31, 1982.

"The MX was designed to close the alleged 'window of vulnerability' . . . MXs [in Minuteman silos] would be just as vulnerable as the Minutemen already in the holes. And this Congress is recognizing. Far better if the whole MX project were braked. It's unnecessary and expensive."—Chicago Sun-Times, March 29, 1982.

". . . before the Defense Department is permitted to spend scores of billions of dollars on MX, which may or may not be needed, it should have to present an acceptable, workable basing plan, one in which MX would be invulnerable to Soviet ICBMs."—Memphis Star-Scimitar, January 8, 1982.

"President Reagan was right to decide last October to kill the Air Force plan for hiding 200 mobile MX missiles among 4,600 launching sites in Utah and Nevada. When it comes to making national-security policy, knowing what not to do is a laudable attribute.

". . . the latest interim deployment scheme for the MX does not appear to pass the test of cost-effectiveness, and, if officially embraced by the president, should not be funded by Congress.

"Pending a credible answer to the problem of making the MX survivable, the MX project should be put on hold."—Los Angeles times, March 15, 1982.

" . . . this month, the [MX] plan was changed again. Now, it seems, there is no reason to reinforce even the old Minuteman silos. These changes recognize that there never has been any window of vulnerability—that the theory was flawed because it was based on an improbable assumption: That the Soviets would risk a first strike despite the devastating response capability of U.S. air and sea missiles.

"With that recognition comes realization that the present Titan and Minuteman missiles already in place are fully capable of filling their role, a realization which makes the entire MX program needless. If it isn't broken, why fix it?"—Rockford, Illinois, Star, February 26, 1982.

"The [MX] question is bound to stir up the controversy over whether, if the MX cannot be made survivable against a Soviet first strike, the country should have land-based missiles at all."—Washington Post, March 26, 1982.

" . . . the MX has taken its place beside the B-1 bomber as a strategic weapons system subject to debate on its very existence. . . . "—Baltimore Sun, March 30, 1982.

"The proverbial advice against buying a pig in a poke has been rephrased in Congress. When it comes to the MX missile, the proverb is: Don't buy a missile in an uncertain deloyment mode.

"The folly of providing money for a missile which has no launch home was reason enough to cut back on the money—and reduce the huge 1983 deficit estimate by $2 billion."—Tampa Tribune, March 26, 1982.

"It is becoming increasingly obvious that nobody knows what to do with the costly, ill-advised MX missile once it begins coming off the production line. This dismaying prospect raises anew the question of why the MX is being built at all.

"If MX is no more and perhaps much less survivable than Minuteman, and if its vaunted accuracy can be compromised by in-silo shock waves, the billions spent for its development and deployment constitute a boondoggle of historic magnitude. It is time to Stop MX—Again."—Salt Lake Tribune, February 15, 1982.●

THE OIL PIPELINE REGULATORY REFORM ACT OF 1982

HON. JOHN B. BREAUX

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1982, a bill that proposes significant and timely change in the manner in which oil pipelines are regulated by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission—FERC. If enacted, the bill would free oil pipelines from unnecessary regulatory pricing restraints, while at the same time retain protection from any discriminatory ratemaking or practices that might occur. Oil pipelines would be able to establish prices commensurate with market demands and could do so without undue time delays and unnecessary costs caused by the present outdated regulatory structure.

The overall purpose of this legislation is to encourage investment, expansion, and competition in the oil pipeline industry, to protect against unfair practices and discrimination, and to reduce cumbersome, costly, and unnecessary regulation.

The legislation would place economic regulatory jurisdiction over interstate oil pipelines in FERC. It proposes to deregulate only the method by which oil pipeline rates are set. FERC would retain its authority to cancel a rate which is discriminatory and retain its current authority over regulations and practices.

Moreover, the legislation would remove the numerous delays brought about by FERC's inability or reluctance to determine a rationale for establishing rates for oil pipelines and would end the uncertainties these delays have produced.

In addition, the legislation does not propose any changes in the status of oil pipelines as common carriers, in the status of pipelines under the antitrust laws, or in the status of the consent decree which limits the dividend amounts a pipeline may declare to its owners. Retention of these statutory and judicial safeguards insures public protection against discriminatory and monopolistic practices.

The oil pipeline industry has operated efficiently for years. Today, over 130 companies operate about 230,000 miles of pipeline, transporting both crude and refined products. About 120 of these pipelines are subject to Federal economic regulation. Entry into the oil pipeline industry is open. The industry is a high-risk and capital-intensive business, subject to shift in supply and demand, foreign oil embargoes, and competition from other modes of transportation, as well as alternate sources of fuel.

Oil pipelines compete among themselves and with other modes of transportation, such as truck, rail, and barge. The price of oil and refined oil products which oil pipelines carry is set by market forces. The pipeline tariff or fee to transport oil and refined oil products is but a minor percentage of the total cost. Changes in pipeline transit tariffs, therefore, effect little impact on the cost of the product on its end user, the consumer. Over a 32-year period (1947-77), the industry's average pipeline per ton mile revenues increased by only 38 percent, 0.292 cents to 0.403 cents. During that same period, the consumer price index increased 128 percent. The earned returns by oil pipeline companies have been greater than those of other industries as a whole. Over the years, there have been only a small number of shipper complaints levied. The question must be raised, then, why should oil pipeline rates continue to be regulated? Does this rate regulation serve any purpose? At this point, there seems to be no valid reason to do so.

Plainly, oil pipelines have provided the United States with one of the most efficient energy transportation systems. The industry must be able to grow and expand to continue this type of service in an atmosphere of high risk and uncertainty. Government rate regulation no longer serves any valid purpose for the oil pipeline industry. It only serves to prolong uncertainty and unnecessarily increase the risk. The proper place for the industry to be regulated in terms of rate regulation is the marketplace.

In recent years, Congress has passed laws that eliminated or reduced Government regulation of the airline, rail, and trucking industries, and that placed greater economic reliance upon the marketplace. I believe the time has come to examine and to revise Government rate regulation of the oil pipeline industry. The bill which I am introducing is a start. It should receive careful and prompt consideration by the Congress.

I include the following:

OIL PIPELINE REGULATORY REFORM ACT OF 1982

SECTION-BY-SECTION

Section 2.—Section 2 is a declaration of policy. It makes explicit congressional policy to foster competition in the oil pipeline industry, prevent discrimination, induce investment in oil pipelines and eliminate unnecessary regulation.

Section 3.—Subsection 3(a) repeals Section 306 of the Department of Energy Organization Act (DOE Act). Section 306 transferred to the Secretary of Energy (the Secretary) the functions set forth in the Interstate Commerce Act (ICA) and vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) relating to transportation of oil by pipeline.

Subsection 3(b) repeals Section 402(b) of the DOE Act. Section 402(b) transferred to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) all functions and authority of the ICC relating to the regulation of rates for the transportation of oil pipeline and the valuation of oil pipelines.

Subsection 3(c) amends Section 402 of the DOE Act by adding a new paragraph vesting in FERC all functions which were transferred to the Secretary under Section 306 and to FERC under Section 402(b).

Section 4.—Section 4 is a section-by-section amendment of the ICA to accomplish the bill's purposes.

Subsection 4(a) is technical.

Subsection 4(b) amends Section 1(4) of the ICA to delete the requirement that oil pipeline rates and the divisions of joint rates must be just and reasonable. This is consistent with the intention to allow the level of such rates to be determined by market forces.

Subsection 4(c) repeals Section 1(5)(a) which requires that all charges be just and reasonable and that unjust and unreasonable charges are unlawful.

Subsection 4(d) amends Section 13(4) which deals with the duty of the FERC where state regulations result in discrimination or impose an undue burden on interstate commerce. The statute is amended to eliminate FERC's power to prescribe pipeline rates in place of those set by a state. FERC retains its authority to set such rates aside if it finds them to be discriminatory and to prescribe regulations and practices where the state-prescribed regulations result in discrimination.

Subsection 4(e) amends Section 15(1) to delete the power of FERC to prescribe rates. If FERC determines that a rate is discriminatory it may order the carrier to cease and desist from charging discriminatory rates. In that event, it would be up to the carrier to adjust its rate structure to comply with FERC's order. If FERC finds that a regulation or practice is unjust it may prescribe a just regulation.

Subsection 4(f) amends Section 15(3) so as to delete FERC's authority to establish joint rates. FERC retains its authority to establish through routes.

Subsection 4(g) repeals Section 15(6) which sets forth FERC's authority to establish just divisions of joint rates.

Subsection 4(h) amends Section 15(7) which deals with hearings on newly-filed rates. It is amended to delete FERC's authority to suspend rates pending such determination. FERC retains the authority to hold hearings to determine whether a rate is unjustly discriminatory and whether a regulation or practice is lawful. FERC retains its authority to suspend the operation of a regulation or practice for a period of seven months.

Subsection 4(i) repeals Section 65(a) of Title 49. It is repealed because it is simply a supplementary statute dealing with the matters which should be considered when prescribing just and reasonable rates.

Section 5.—Section 5 is a new section which preempts state regulation of interstate transportation of oil.

Section 6.—Section 6 specifies that the Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act shall take effect 60 days after the date of its enactment.●

89-059 O-86-15 (Pt.13)

OIL PIPELINE REGULATORY REFORM ACT

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to join my colleague from Louisiana, JOHN BREAUX, in introducing legislation revising the regulatory structure surrounding the oil pipeline industry.

The Federal Government began its rate regulation of the industry in 1906, under the aegis of the Interstate Commerce Commission. On October 1, 1977, this responsibility was transferred to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, which has suspended every rate increase that has been proposed by industry members.

At some point, presumably, this regulation could be expected to have a stifling effect on an industry that needs $26.2 billion, in 1979 dollars, in new capital investment by the end of the century from the base year of 1976.

The bill being introduced today would eliminate the Federal regulation of nondiscriminatory rates, while leaving intact other requirements such as the present common carrier mandate.

Of course, as with most issues that come before the Congress, the situation is far from black and white. I would speculate that revisions will need to be made in the bill that is being introduced today and, indeed, reserve the right to work for any changes that discussion and study may call for.

It is that discussion and study which I am looking for as a result of this bill's introduction. The Senate Subcommittee on Energy Regulation had several witnesses come before it in May to discuss oil pipeline legislation that had been offered in that body, S. 1626.

Whether the House Surface Transportation Subcommittee will have the time or the inclination to conduct similar hearings on this bill is problematical. Our schedule for the rest of the year promises to be a busy one, as we work toward the enactment of several proposals which originated last year.

Whether this bill progresses before we recess for the year, in what form it does so, and whether or not hearings are held, it should be clear with the introduction of this bill today, that some of us are interested in the oil pipeline industry.

As I have said before, though, it is the public interest with which I am most concerned. And so it is the public interest that should be addressed by those discussing the merits and shortcomings of this legislation.●

INTRODUCTION OF OIL PIPELINE REGULATORY REFORM ACT OF 1982

HON. DON H. CLAUSEN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1982

● Mr. CLAUSEN. Mr. Speaker, today I am joining several of my colleagues on the House Public Works and Transportation Committee in cosponsoring H.R. 6815, the Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1982.

As you know, our committee, over the past few years, has been systematically reviewing the economic regulation of the various modes of transportation under our jurisdiction. I believe the time now has come to look at the system of regulation that is in place for the oil pipeline industry. The bill that we are introducing today is a first step in that process. I personally am not wedded to each and every provision of this bill, but feel that it will provide a suitable basis for in-depth hearings on the subject.●

IDA NUDEL

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 20, 1982

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I am saddened today to have to speak once again in support of Soviet refusenik Ida Nudel's simple and harmless, yet repeatedly denied request to leave forever the country in which she was born in order to join her family in Israel.

For almost 12 years, Ida Nudel has suffered at the hands of her own government to a degree almost unimaginable to us here in the United States and the other democratic countries of the West. Her saga has continued almost as long as the entire Jewish emigration movement, and serves, unfortunately, as a clear illustration of the individual's relation to the government in the Soviet Union. She first applied for her exit visa in May 1971, but was denied it, according to the Soviet Government, because of her knowledge of unspecified "secrets" associated with her work as a costing accountant for the Moscow Institute of Hydrology and Microbiological Synthesis for Planning and Production. Of course, only 8 months later she was dismissed from her job there. As a result of her subsequent tireless work on behalf of certain refuseniks who were at the time worse off than herself—work which, incidentally earned her the nickname of the "Guardian Angel,"—Ida Nudel became the subject of increasing harassment. Her plight was dramatized to the world in 1978 when she bravely hung from her apartment balcony a banner simply reading "KGB, give me my visa." For this act of extreme defiance according to totalitarian standards, and for other trumped-up charges, Ida Nudel was sentenced to serve 4 years of internal exile in Siberia.

Since I last spoke of Ida Nudel on March 3, 1982, in support of House Joint Resolution 373 urging the Soviets to cease religious presecution, Ida Nudel has been released and has managed to return to her Moscow apartment, only to face a new round of Government harassment designed to strangle her hope and her spirit. Her new application to emigrate was refused on the pretext that she has no permanent resident status, yet her application for this status was denied because of her "criminal" background, which, of course was made inevitable by her demand that she be granted her right to emigrate. This cruel charade was repeated again upon her application for resident status in Riga, the Capital of the Latvian Soviet Socialist Republic. It is heartbreaking to report that she was last seen sleeping in the train station there before pressing elsewhere for justice.

The string of horror stories which have composed Ida Nudel's life in the hands of her own Government are all too familiar to those who have monitored Soviet treatment of Jews who seek to emigrate to Israel. The pattern of imprisonment, internal exile, beatings, confinement to mental institutions, isolation from family members, seizure of personal property and a diabolically imaginative variety of forms of physical and psychological harassment is well-established. Yet, each new case, each new life spoiled by official Soviet descrimination and persecution of members of religious minorities evokes in me a renewed feeling of contempt and disgust for a government which could behave so inhumanely.

The destructiveness of these policies is amplified by the Soviet emigration statistics which show that the number of people having emigration requests granted has come to a virtual halt, thus shutting off the only avenue of hope for the many thousands of Soviet Jews who have requested invitations to emigrate. Such emigrations, which the Soviets pledged to allow in exchange for the acceptance by the West of several objectives very important to them during the Helsinki conference in 1975, has plummeted from 51,320 in 1979 to 9,447 last year to an average of 300 per month from January through April of this year, and now down to 205 in May, the lowest level since the beginning of the emigration movement in 1970.

Not only have the number of Jewish emigrations decreased sharply recently, but there are now reports that a new and even more evil, if this is possible, quality to the persecution of Soviet Jews has insinuated itself into the situation. Steady increases in Government-sponsored and condoned anti-Semitism and a dramatic escalation of the KGB's attacks on Jewish culturalists and Hebrew teachers raises the specter of a sustained government-wide campaign to persecute all Jews, regardless of whether they request emigration visas or not.

These ominous developments prompt me to ask how far the Soviet state is willing to go in persecuting these powerless individuals, singled out because they do not conform to the twisted Soviet notion of good citizenship: To what extent of hypocrisy will that Government indulge in refusing to comply with its obligations agreed to under the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights, the Helsinki Final Act, and the Constitution of the U.S.S.R.?

We see in these examples the "mirror-image" quality of the individual's relation to the State in the United States and in the Soviet Union. Here, our Government goes to extreme lengths to protect the rights of individuals against the power of the many while the Soviets take equally extraordinary measures to crush nonconforming individuals and minorities. In the United States, we are forced to restrict the annual number of people who may come here from their homelands to settle permanently, while in the Soviet Union the Government faces the converse problem of preventing a flood of it citizens from leaving the homeland.

I call on my colleagues to join me in expressing their support of Ida Nudel's efforts to settle in Israel by writing to her directly and by writing to Soviet Government officials demanding her release. There is no doubt that such letters of encouragement give heart to refuseniks in their lonely hours of frustration and bitterness. But in a larger sense, such efforts by those of us in the West serve as both potentially effective pressure on the Soviet authorities to ease their repression of all refuseniks, but also as a symbolic gesture of appreciation for the privilege of freedom which we enjoy and which we hope can be extended some day to all the people of the world.●

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, July 22, 1982, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

MEETINGS SCHEDULED

JULY 23

10:00 a.m.
Judiciary
To continue hearings on the northern pipeline bankruptcy decision.
2228 Dirksen Building

10:30 a.m.
Foreign Relations
Closed briefing on U.S. relations with China and Taiwan.
S-116, Capitol

JULY 27

9:00 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
3110 Dirksen Building

9:30 a.m.
Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry
Rural Development, Oversight, and Investigations Subcommittee
To hold oversight hearings on the implementation of rural development loan programs of the Farmers Home Administration.
324 Russell Building

Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
To resume hearings on monetary policy.
5302 Dirksen Building

Judiciary
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
2228 Dirksen Building

Labor and Human Resources
Labor Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 2634, providing for integration of handicapped persons employed in work activity centers and sheltered workshops.
4232 Dirksen Building

10:00 a.m.
Environment and Public Works
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
4200 Dirksen Building

Governmental Affairs
Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations
To hold hearings on Department of Energy's management of research and development facilities.
3302 Dirksen Building

Select Committee To Study Law Enforcement Undercover Activities of Components of the Department of Justice
To resume hearings on alleged abuses relating to the Abscam investigation by the Department of Justice.
Room to be announced

Joint Economic
Monetary and Fiscal Policy Subcommittee
To hold hearings on the current national tax system, focusing on a flat-rate tax proposal.
6226 Dirksen Building

1:30 p.m.
Finance
Health Subcommittee
To hold hearings to review the policy of medicare coverage for the treatment of alcohol-based disorders and alcoholism.
2221 Dirksen Building

2:00 p.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Public Lands and Reserved Water Subcommittee
To hold hearings on miscellaneous public land measures, including S. 1303, H.R. 1281, S. 1978, S. 2279, S. 1705, House Joint Resolution 207, S. 2308, Senate Joint Resolution 168, S. 1661, and Senate Joint Resolution 155.
3110 Dirksen Building

JULY 28

9:00 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
3110 Dirksen Building

9:30 a.m.
Finance
International Trade Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 2539, extending for 2 years the act implementing the International Sugar Agreement, 1977, and S. 2540, extending for 1 year the application of the International Coffee Agreement Act of 1980.
2221 Dirksen Building

Judiciary
Constitution Subcommittee
To hold hearings on Senate Joint Resolution 164, proposing a constitutional amendment to provide that the compensation and allowances of Members of Congress shall be established biennially by the Supreme Court of the United States.
5110 Dirksen Building

Veterans' Affairs
To hold hearings on S. 2747, improving certain aspects of the VA's educational benefits programs and the Department of Labor's veterans' employment programs.
412 Russell Building

Select on Indian Affairs
To hold hearings on S. 2153, providing for the distribution of funds awarded the confederated tribes of the Warm Springs Indian Reservation in Oregon by the Indian Claims Commission.
6226 Dirksen Building

10:00 a.m.
Environment and Public Works
Environmental Pollution Subcommittee
To resume hearings on proposed legislation revising certain provisions of the Clean Water Act.
4200 Dirksen Building

Governmental Affairs
Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations
To continue hearings on Department of Energy's management of research and development facilities.
3302 Dirksen Building
Judiciary
To resume hearings on S. 818, S. 1558, S. 1106, S. 2658, S. 2669, S. 2672, S. 2678, and S. 2745, bills limiting the insanity defense, establishing a Federal criminal verdict of "not guilty only by reason of insanity," and establishing procedures for dealing with defendants obtaining such a verdict.
2228 Dirksen Building
Select Committee To Study Law Enforcement Undercover Activities of Components of the Department of Justice
To continue hearings on alleged abuses relating to the Abscam investigation by the Department of Justice.
Room to be announced

2:00 p.m.
Environment and Public Works
Toxic Substances and Environmental Oversight Subcommittee
To resume hearings on S. 2131, authorizing funds through fiscal year 1986 for the safe drinking water program.
4200 Dirksen Building
Judiciary
To hold hearings on pending nominations.
2228 Dirksen Building

JULY 29

9:00 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
3110 Dirksen Building

9:30 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
To hold hearings on the nomination of Robert G. Dederick, of Illinois, to be Under Secretary of Commerce for Economic Affairs.
235 Russell Building
*Judiciary
To hold hearings on Senate Joint Resolution 199, proposing a constitutional amendment providing for voluntary prayer in public schools and certain institutions.
2228 Dirksen Building
Labor and Human Resources
Business meeting, to mark up S. 1929, establishing an Interagency Committee on Smoking and Health to coordinate Federal and private activities to educate the public about the health hazards of smoking.
4232 Dirksen Building

10:00 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Water and Power Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 1918, establishing the Northeast-Midwest States Hydropower Financing Authority to make lower cost loans and loan guarantees for hydropower development.
3110 Dirksen Building
Environment and Public Works
Environmental Pollution Subcommittee
To continue hearings on proposed legislation revising certain provisions of the Clean Water Act.
4200 Dirksen Building
Governmental Affairs
Congressional Operations and Oversight Subcommittee
To hold oversight hearings on proliferation of indexation.
3302 Dirksen Building
Select Committee To Study Law Enforcement Undercover Activities of Components of the Department of Justice
To continue hearings on alleged abuses relating to the Abscam investigation by the Department of Justice
Room to be announced

JULY 30

9:30 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Public Lands and Reserved Water Subcommittee
To hold hearings on miscellaneous public land bills, including S. 2752, S. 2754, S. 2755, S. 2756, S. 2757, S. 2715, S. 1349, and H.R. 6290.
3110 Dirksen Building

AUGUST 2

9:30 a.m.
Finance
To hold hearings on S. 2237, extending trade and tax incentives to promote economic development in the Caribbean Basin and Central American region.
2221 Dirksen Building

AUGUST 3

9:30 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 2704, revising certain provisions relating to the lease and production of coal reserves.
3110 Dirksen Building

10:00 a.m.
Environment and Public Works
Toxic Substances and Environmental Oversight Subcommittee
To hold oversight hearings on the implementation of the Toxic Substances Control Act by the Environmental Protection Agency.
4200 Dirksen Building

AUGUST 4

10:00 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
3110 Dirksen Building
Labor and Human Resources
Education, Arts, and Humanities Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 1405, proposed Carl Albert Congressional Research and Studies Center Endowment Act.
4232 Dirksen Building

2:00 p.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Public Lands and Reserved Water Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 894, exempting rural electric cooperatives and rural telephone cooperatives from payment of rental fees for rights-of-way granted to them with respect to public lands and lands within the National Forest System, and H.R. 861, designating additional national scenic and historic trails.
3110 Dirksen Building

AUGUST 5

10:00 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
3110 Dirksen Building
Labor and Human Resources
Alcoholism and Drug Abuse Subcommittee
To hold hearings on the effects of alcohol and drugs on individuals while driving.
4232 Dirksen Building

AUGUST 10

9:30 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee
To resume oversight hearings on America's role in the world coal export market.
3110 Dirksen Building

AUGUST 11

9:00 a.m.
Office of Technology Assessment
The Board, to meet on pending business items.
EF-100, Capitol

9:30 a.m.
Labor and Human Resources
Labor Subcommittee
To resume hearings on S. 2634, providing for integration of handicapped persons employed in work activity centers and sheltered workshops.
4232 Dirksen Building
Select on Indian Affairs
To hold hearings on S. 1652, restoring certain lands in Arizona to the Colorado River Indian Reservation to be held in trust by the United States; S. 2418, permitting the Twenty-nine Palms Band of Luisena Mission Indians to lease certain trust lands for 99 years; S. 1799 and H.R. 4364, bills providing for the transfer of certain land in Pima County, Ariz., to the Pascua Yaqui Indian Tribe; and the substance of H.R. 5916, providing for certain Federal lands to be held in trust for the Ramah Band of the Navajo Indian Tribe.
6226 Dirksen Building

10:00 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
3110 Dirksen Building
Environment and Public Works
Environmental Pollution Subcommittee
To hold oversight hearings on the implementation of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (Superfund).
4200 Dirksen Building

AUGUST 12

9:30 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee
To resume oversight hearings on America's role in the world coal export market.
3110 Dirksen Building
Veterans' Affairs
Business meeting, to mark up S. 2378, proposed Veterans' Disability Compensation and Survivors' Benefits Amendments, and proposed legislation clarifying certain United States Code provisions relating to veterans' employment programs.

412 Russell Building

10:00 a.m.
Labor and Human Resources
Education, Arts, and Humanities Subcommittee
To hold oversight hearings on the Student Loan Marketing Association (Sallie Mae).
4232 Dirksen Building

AUGUST 13

9:30 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Energy and Mineral Resources Subcommittee
To continue oversight hearings on America's role in the world coal export market.
3110 Dirksen Building

AUGUST 17

10:00 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
3110 Dirksen Building

AUGUST 18

9:30 a.m.
Labor and Human Resources
Labor Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 2617, abolishing mandatory retirement and other forms of age discrimination in employment.
4232 Dirksen Building

10:00 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
3110 Dirksen Building

AUGUST 19

10:00 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Business meeting to consider pending calendar business.
3110 Dirksen Building

AUGUST 25

10:00 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
3110 Dirksen Building

SEPTEMBER 14

9:30 a.m.
Labor and Human Resources
Labor Subcommittee
To hold oversight hearings on the implementation of the Federal Mine Safety and Health Act of 1977.
4232 Dirksen Building

SEPTEMBER 21

10:30 a.m.
Veterans' Affairs
To hold hearings to receive American Legion legislative recommendations for fiscal year 1983.
318 Russell Building

CANCELLATIONS

JULY 28

9:30 a.m.
Labor and Human Resources
Labor Subcommittee
Business meeting, to mark up S. 1541, amending the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) by simplifying both reporting and disclosure requirements, and the process for employers to provide retirement income to employees, and providing incentives for employers to provide pension benefits to employees.
4232 Dirksen Building

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, July 22, 1982

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Reverend Richard Peter Camp, Jr., chaplain, U.S. Military Academy, West Point, N.Y., offered the following prayer:

Lord, we pause a moment amidst our agendas and programs to acknowledge that You are God; You have made us and not we ourselves.

We know that life is like a tennis game; you cannot win without serving. Help these men and women to find their greatest delight in serving, whereby they join their hands, their minds, and their hearts to Your power, Your laws, and Your love. Give them the courage today to choose that task which most taxes their highest powers and best serves the world's deepest needs.

Amid all the voices that clamor for their attention, give these Your servants the discipline to do what is right and the diligence to listen to Your voice. Thus may they become not mere creatures but creators; not merely one of Your servants but one of Your friends.

In the name of the great Friend and Master of Men we pray.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

REV. RICHARD PETER CAMP, JR.

(Mr. ROTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the chaplain of the U.S. Military Academy could be present today and lead us in the opening prayer.

Chaplain Camp was appointed to the position of senior chaplain at West Point in 1980 following service of 5 years as the assistant chaplain. He is a graduate of Wheaton College in Illinois and Gordon-Conwell Seminary in Massachusetts and was ordained as a Baptist pastor. During his college years, he was captain of his football team and received All-American honors.

Chaplain Camp is responsible for developing the spiritual life of cadets and serving as their counselor. As a member of the Board of Visitors at West Point, I am delighted to support him in his important ministry at West Point and to welcome him to the Chamber today.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE OF COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES TO SIT TODAY DURING 5-MINUTE RULE

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Merchant Marine of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries be permitted to sit on Thursday, July 22, 1982, during the 5-minute rule for the purpose of holding a hearing on H.R. 6732, a bill proposing a time extension for the inspection and plating of containers as called for in a recent amendment to the International Convention for Safe Containers, 1972.

The ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from California (Mr. McCLOSKEY), has been apprised of the hearing time and is in accord with this request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

THE ECONOMY AND UNEMPLOYMENT

(Mr. SKELTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, recently, the country has had some indication that the economy is bottoming out. The prime rate is down by half a point; the stock market is up a little, and we in Congress have focused our attention on getting a budget and on world affairs, lately. Under the circumstances, it is possible to forget that unemployment is still at its highest level in 40 years and that 1 in 10 Americans who would like to work cannot find jobs.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that even if the economy does show signs that some things are getting better, for some people in this country, things are a lot worse. Three million more Americans are out of work this year than last year. On top of that, thousands of businesses which were thriving last year have closed their doors for good. Some of our most basic industries such as the homebuilding industry, the auto industry, our farms, and our savings institutions have suffered irreparable harm. Yes, I have read the news lately about the "bottom" of the recession, but I have also seen the suffering in the eyes of the unemployed. We should keep in mind that at the same time that interest rates have dropped by one-half of 1 percent, the misery index—unemployment plus the cost of living—has reached an all time high.

I suggest to my colleagues that we cannot afford to become complacent about Americans who cannot find work. They cannot invest in rising stocks; they cannot borrow money to take advantage of the one-half percent decrease in interest rates and finally, the tax cut cannot provide relief to someone who does not have any income to begin with.

INTRODUCING LEGISLATION REAFFIRMING CITIZENS' RIGHT TO POSSESS LAWFUL FIREARMS

(Mrs. ASHBROOK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to clarify the position of Congress that no governmental agency, including States and their political subdivisions, may legalize the confiscation of otherwise legally held and used firearms. In the 1968 Gun Control Act, it was not the intent of Congress to decree any greater restrictions on State gun control laws or to allow States to ignore the constitutional right to keep and bear arms. However, in Morton Grove, Ill., the Federal district court chose to ignore the Gun Control Act as well as the Constitution in deciding to disarm its residents.

The bill I am introducing today will reaffirm a citizen's right to possess a firearm lawfully and to provide for their self-protection. The intent of this bill is to stop unwarranted interference by governmental agencies into the lives of law-abiding gun-owning citizens throughout our country. It will provide that Congress recognizes the rights of States to properly use their authority but by no means does it allow States to cause massive variations in legislation which conflict with the basic rights of individuals. In order to prevent States from abusing this balance between constitutional guarantees and proper State authority, this bill asserts that any political subdivision of a State which conflicts with the provisions of this chapter is ineligible to participate in or receive funds from any federally funded law enforcement or criminal justice program, notwithstanding any other act of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to introduce this bill, the Firearms Ownership Rights Act, which Senator STEVEN SYMMS, a leader in the continuing fight to protect our constitutional right to keep and bear arms, has introduced in the U.S. Senate.

Mr. Speaker, no district court has the right to preempt the Constitution of the United States. The right to keep and bear arms and the right of self-protection must be maintained. This bill will serve as a constitutional guarantee for these rights for every law-abiding gun-owner in our country, pure and simple.

EVANS-CORCORAN HOUSING INITIATIVE

(Mr. CORCORAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CORCORAN. Mr. Speaker, I have good news and bad news. The good news is for the American people, and that is that the so-called Evans-Corcoran housing initiative has new life, with the neutrality of President Ronald Reagan, and a new twist—it is also a program that focuses on lowering interest rates.

The bad news, Mr. Speaker, is that it will involve for you, surprisingly, and for our colleague from Texas (Mr. WRIGHT), the Democrat majority leader, a tough decision—and that is whether or not to try to help those people who want to lower interest rates, who want to give some assistance to the depressed housing industry, or whether you want to continue to treat the Synthetic Fuels Corporation as a sacred cow.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the choice is yours, because this matter is going to come before the House next week. Next Sunday I am going to go to church. I know you will go to church, too. When I get there I am going to pray that you will think of the American people and not the oil companies.

□ 1010

LEGISLATION EXTENDING UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS TO AREAS OF HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT

(Mr. FINDLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Speaker, it would be an understatement to say that unemployment is one of the pressing problems facing our country today.

In Illinois, extended unemployment benefits beyond the original 26 weeks will end during the first week of August. This will happen because the statewide unemployment rate has fallen slightly in recent weeks.

But not in Decatur. This important industrial city has an unemployment rate of 18.4 percent—twice the national average and the fourth highest in the country. And unless something is done, and I mean fast, the unemployed in Decatur will find themselves without jobs and without unemployment benefits.

Legislation I am introducing today would target extended unemployment benefits to areas with unemployment at 10 percent or higher even if the overall State level is falling. The benefits would be extended for 13 weeks, which would give jobseekers additional time to find a way to support themselves and their families.

Those workers in Decatur and other cities across the country have not turned their backs on America during these hard economic times. Let us not turn our backs on them in their time of great need.

VOUCHER OPTION UNDER MEDICARE PROGRAM

(Mr. PETRI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I wish to applaud and draw attention to last week's bipartisan action of the Ways and Means Committee to create a voucher option under the medicare program. The present system effectively confines alternative delivery systems such as health maintenance organizations (HMO's) and private insurers to providing medigap coverage for those services which medicare does not reimburse. Under this new proposal, a medicare beneficiary would be able to exchange his regular coverage for a voucher which he could take to a prepaid health care plan to receive his medical care.

I wish to make several points about this proposal. First, this system is entirely voluntary, and consequently no one can be harmed by it. An individual will not leave the present system unless he believes he will be better off elsewhere. An individual exercising his own free will with adequate information about his options will maximize his welfare far better than the Government, even at the peak of its benevolence.

My second point is that this improvement will not be accompanied by any increase in cost for the Government or the taxpayer. The value of the voucher will be what the Government would have paid if the person had remained under the medicare program.

My final point is more general. While the proposal fosters competition among providers of health care under the medicare program, many of us would like to encourage more competition throughout the health care system. We are delighted that the Government is finally getting its own house in order, but we must make further changes if the whole society's ever-rising health costs are to be brought under control in an efficient and effective way. This is an important step in that direction.

THE PRODUCTION OF NERVE GAS

(Mr. BETHUNE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Speaker, today we will be debating, among other things, the question of whether the United States should abandon a 13-year policy against the production and use of chemical weapons by commencing production of the exotic new binary gas, better known as nerve gas, and I wanted to alert Members that they have not voted on this issue before. Earlier they voted on the question of whether to build a building which might be used for the production of nerve gas, but this is the big one. This issue has not been reached yet.

This amendment that will be offered today does not touch the R. & D. money, it does not touch the maintenance money or the defensive money, this does not touch the money that is set aside to demilitarize the existing stockpile and clean it up.

This amendment will only delete funding for the production of the binary gas because we do not need it and it is the one single remaining shred of evidence that this country is different from the Soviet Union when it comes to the question of nuclear arms buildup, strategic weaponry, and all of that that is horrifying everyone across the face of the globe.

I urge my friends to vote for the Zablocki-Bethune amendment to delete funding for the production of nerve gas.

TIME IS NOW FOR HOUSING INITIATIVE

(Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the time is now for Congress to enact legislation which will put people back to work and stimulate the Nation's troubled housing industry.

I am speaking of a proposal to transfer $1 billion of already authorized and appropriated funds from the Synthetic Fuels Corporation account to provide mortgage assistance to would-be home buyers.

Enactment of this initiative will demonstrate that Congress has not turned its back on out-of-work homebuilders and small businesses associated with the housing industry.

I have received assurances from President Reagan that he will not oppose this jobs and housing proposal. The President understands that the housing industry can speed economic recovery, and this initiative will assist substantially while maintaining fiscal responsibility.

The time is now for Congress to take this action because the building season is almost over. Let us join together to put workers back on the job and families into their own homes and enact this $1 billion housing stimulus plan.

PRODUCTION OF CHEMICAL WEAPONS A DISGRACE

(Mrs. FENWICK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Speaker, we have committee meetings this morning and I may not be present in the House when the amendment for the chemical weapons comes before this House.

I deplore any action of our Nation in this regard. I think it is beneath our dignity. We have signed conventions against it. We at one time abolished all participation or construction or plans for promoting such a weapon. It is a disgrace. It is a disgrace to our country that we should consider—when we do not know where to find money for our children's lunches—spending for poison gas and chemical weapons which float free in the air and kill innocent civilians while the soldiers are all wrapped up in their safety equipment.

I really think that we went astray when we started this 2 or 3 years ago. I voted against it and spoke against it then. And we continue with something so odious. If indeed it is being used in the world, we should use all our energy to bring this to the attention of the United Nations and the Security Council and the scorn of the world. For us to join in such a competition seems to me beneath the standards this country ought to stand for.

A CHANCE TO AID THE HOUSING INDUSTRY

(Mr. DREIER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, if there is one industry in America whose health is essential to our plans for economic recovery it is the housing industry. And as we all know only too well, the housing industry is hurting. High interest rates, which have resulted from years of excessive and wasteful Government spending have served to cripple this vital industry to the point where housing starts and sales are desperately low.

For the past year and a half now, builders, realtors and home buyers from my district have been crying out for relief. Time and again, they have asked Congress to do something—anything—to help the housing industry.

We have a chance now, as we had in March, to do something to aid the housing industry, without increasing Federal spending and pushing interest rates even higher. Had we taken action in March, the housing industry would be recovering today.

Now we can and must support the Evans-Corcoran initiative to transfer $1 billion from the boondoggle Synthetic Fuels Corporation for use in subsidizing mortgage interest rates for moderate income home buyers. Unlike the other bailout bills which this Congress has considered, this initiative will not add a penny to the national debt and yet its impact will be almost immediately felt.

I urge support of this initiative when it is offered as an amendment to the 1982 supplemental appropriations bill.

□ 1010

THE EVANS-CORCORAN HOUSING INITIATIVE

(Mr. CLAUSEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CLAUSEN. Mr. Speaker, helping the depressed housing industry has been one of my top priorities during the second session of this Congress. Since its inception, I have supported the Evans-Corcoran approach because I believe that any short-term emergency housing proposal should not add to the budget deficit. I am pleased to be part of this most recent effort to resurrect the Evans-Corcoran housing initiative which would provide $1 billion in fiscal year 1982 for the State and local housing agencies to finance and enhance mortgage revenue bonds for housing moderate income home buyers.

We must do something that turns the housing industry around before the homebuilding infrastructure is destroyed any further. Once the supply lines of the industry are destroyed, it will make economic recovery all the more difficult—and take much longer to achieve.

I urge my colleagues to support this bipartisan effort—this is a unique solution for a critical problem.

Thank you.

A SENSIBLE HOUSING PLAN

(Mr. EVANS of Delaware asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EVANS of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, certainly one of the hardest hit industries in this recession is housing. It permeates our entire economy. It affects small business people, the forest products industry, the textile industry, realtors, and thousands of working men and women across the country.

My colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CORCORAN) and I have a plan to provide assistance by transferring $1 billion in already authorized and appropriated funds from the Synfuels Corporation and in conjunction with the existing mortgage revenue bond program, use it to help people purchase homes.

Our plan made sense in March when we originally offered it. It made sense in April. It made sense in May. It made sense in June and it makes even more sense today and if anything is more critically needed.

Recent changes in the mortgage revenue bond program by the IRS have made that program more viable. I urge my colleagues to support CARROLL CAMPBELL's amendment in the Appropriations Committee to the regular supplemental appropriations bill which will incorporate the Evans-Corcoran initiative. That plan will give Members of this body an opportunity to make a real choice, continued subsidies for major corporations or grassroots assistance to home buyers and homebuilders that will provide meaningful jobs for hundreds of thousands of Americans.

CLEANUP AUTHORITY TO NUCLEAR REGULATORY COMMISSION

(Mrs. BOUQUARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BOUQUARD. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today that will give the Nuclear Regulatory Commission the effective authority to order the expeditious cleanup of any commercial nuclear powerplant that sustains an accident. Additionally, the NRC would be given the enforcement authority to collect the necessary fees to finance such a cleanup in the event that a utility cannot dedicate sufficient funds to the cleanup.

The NRC is now virtually powerless to enforce an order to expeditiously clean up a disabled powerplant. If the utility has insufficient funds to finance that cleanup, such as is the case with Three Mile Island, the NRC is faced with the dilemma of either driving the utility into bankruptcy or allowing a stretchout in the cleanup schedule. As a result, the latter option becomes the only effective alternative and the cleanup process is dragged out, the public health and safety is subjected to needless risk, the financial health of the utility and the region is jeopardized, a large national asset is left to lie fallow, and a false perception is promoted that such actions are a result of interactable or unsolvable problems associated with the use of nuclear powerplants.

My bill would encourage utilities and utility commissions to devise adequate financing plans to expeditiously cleanup accident sites. If for any reason such financing is not provided and the utility cannot expeditiously cleanup the plant, the NRC can levy a surcharge on the utility bills—sent only to the customers of the utility with the disabled plant—to collect the needed funds. For example, at TMI the GPU chairman, William G. Kuhns, estimated that a 10-percent surcharge on all its customers would fully pay for the cleanup of the plant.

I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this generic legislation. It is not only fair but provides a complete solution for the TMI accident and any other future accidents at other powerplants but does so without Federal appropriations.

SECRETARY WATTS' LACK OF STEWARDSHIP

(Mr. PANETTA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, Secretary Watt, in his announcement of a 5-year leasing plan for offshore drilling, has issued a challenge to the Nation: Will we support rational and balanced development of our resources consistent with the law, or will we follow the Secretary's lead and ignore those laws, and put up for sale and development our entire coastline—from Maine and Massachusetts to California and Alaska?

The Secretary's announcement is certainly consistent with his lack of regard for the proper stewardship of our natural resources. It is, however, inconsistent with the laws and policies of our Nation that have required sufficient time for local and State input on such sales, as well as adequate environmental and economic assessments.

In short, this decision makes no sense.

It makes no sense from an energy point of view, because it will most certainly give rise to further lawsuits and legislative actions that will delay and obstruct even rational development of our energy resources.

It makes no sense economically, because it will flood an already glutted oil market with lease sales that even the oil companies themselves admit they have neither the resources nor the time to develop.

And it surely makes no sense environmentally, because it attacks in one fell swoop the one precious resource we know we possess—our coastlines, their fisheries, and their beauty.

I have already sought legislative action to prevent these attacks along the northern coast of California. I have also joined with other Congressmen in requesting the Secretary to reconsider his 5-year plan. It is clear that unless the Secretary revises his approach, similar legislative action for the entire Nation will be necessary in order to restore some degree of commonsense to the management and protection of our resources for the future.

AN INTERESTING VOTE ON HOUSING

(Mr. COELHO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, we just heard two gentleman from the other side of the aisle discuss their concern about housing and the need to do something on housing.

On June 24, 1982, before this House was the urgent supplemental appropriations bill. When we had a chance as Members of this House to provide for the housing needs of this country, to do something to indicate to the American realtors, builders, and homeowners that we as Members of this body were concerned about their needs, both gentlemen did not vote to override. We failed to override by only 17 votes and their two votes and help would have probably made the difference.

I find that rather interesting.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS ON PRESENTATION OF PORTRAIT OF THE HONORABLE JOHN D. DINGELL

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I call up a privileged resolution (H. Res. 317) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 317

Resolved, That the transcript of proceedings of the Committee on Energy and Commerce on September 23, 1981, incident to presentation of a portrait of the Honorable John D. Dingell to the Committee on Energy and Commerce shall be printed as a House document with illustrations and suitable bindings.

SEC. 2. In addition to the usual number, there shall be printed five hundred casebound copies of such document for the use of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. GAYDOS (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FRANK). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GAYDOS) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 317 authorizes the printing as a House document with illustrations and suitable bindings the transcript of the proceedings in the Committee on Energy and Commerce of September 23, 1981, incident to the presentation of a portrait of the Honorable JOHN D. DINGELL to that committee. The resolution further states that in addition to the usual number of 1,500, 500 additional copies shall be printed and casebound for the use of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

The Government Printing Office has estimated that the cost of this printing will be as follows:

1,500 paperback copies (usual number)	$2,236.79
500 casebound copies (additional)	1,155.95
Total	3,392.74

This resolution represents a customary request that such proceedings be appropriately memorialized.

Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois (Mrs. MARTIN).

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the minority on the committee supports the resolution, with the hope that eventually there will be a set of rules that will more clearly define the specifics of what we are doing today.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague and member of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT, 1983

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 6030) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1983 for the Armed Forces for procurement, for research, development, test, and evaluation, and for operation and maintenance, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the Armed Forces and for civilian employees of the Department of Defense, to authorize appropriations for such fiscal year for civil defense, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PRICE).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 388, nays 1, answered "present" 1, not voting 44, as follows:

[Roll No. 201]

YEAS—388

Addabbo	Corcoran	Fowler
Akaka	Coughlin	Frank
Albosta	Courter	Frenzel
Alexander	Coyne, James	Frost
Anderson	Craig	Fuqua
Andrews	Crane, Daniel	Garcia
Annunzio	Crane, Philip	Gaydos
Anthony	Crockett	Gejdenson
Archer	D'Amours	Gephardt
Ashbrook	Daniel, Dan	Gibbons
Aspin	Daniel, R. W.	Gilman
Atkinson	Dannemeyer	Glickman
AuCoin	Daschle	Gonzalez
Badham	Davis	Goodling
Bafalis	de la Garza	Gore
Bailey (MO)	Deckard	Gradison
Bailey (PA)	Dellums	Gramm
Barnard	DeNardis	Gray
Barnes	Derrick	Green
Beard	Derwinski	Gregg
Bedell	Dickinson	Grisham
Beilenson	Dicks	Guarini
Benedict	Dixon	Gunderson
Benjamin	Donnelly	Hagedorn
Bennett	Dorgan	Hall (OH)
Bereuter	Dornan	Hall, Ralph
Bethune	Dougherty	Hamilton
Bevill	Dowdy	Hammerschmidt
Biaggi	Downey	Hance
Bingham	Dreier	Hansen (ID)
Blanchard	Duncan	Hansen (UT)
Bliley	Dunn	Harkin
Boggs	Dwyer	Hartnett
Boland	Dymally	Hatcher
Bolling	Dyson	Hawkins
Bonior	Early	Heckler
Bonker	Eckart	Hefner
Bouquard	Edgar	Hendon
Breaux	Edwards (AL)	Hertel
Brinkley	Edwards (CA)	Hightower
Brodhead	Edwards (OK)	Hiler
Brooks	Emerson	Hillis
Broomfield	Emery	Holland
Brown (CO)	English	Hollenbeck
Broyhill	Erdahl	Holt
Burton, Phillip	Erlenborn	Hopkins
Butler	Evans (DE)	Horton
Byron	Evans (IA)	Howard
Campbell	Evans (IN)	Hoyer
Carman	Fary	Hubbard
Carney	Fascell	Hughes
Chappell	Fazio	Hunter
Chappie	Fenwick	Hutto
Cheney	Ferraro	Hyde
Clausen	Fiedler	Ireland
Clinger	Fields	Jacobs
Coats	Findley	Jeffords
Coelho	Fish	Jeffries
Coleman	Fithian	Jenkins
Collins (IL)	Flippo	Johnston
Collins (TX)	Florio	Jones (NC)
Conable	Foglietta	Kastenmeier
Conte	Foley	Kazen
Conyers	Forsythe	Kennelly
Kildee	Neal	Skeen
Kogovsek	Nelligan	Skelton
Kramer	Nelson	Smith (AL)
LaFalce	Nichols	Smith (NE)
Lagomarsino	Nowak	Smith (NJ)
Lantos	O'Brien	Smith (OR)
Latta	Oakar	Smith (PA)
Leach	Oberstar	Snowe
Leath	Obey	Snyder
Lee	Oxley	Solarz
Lehman	Panetta	Spence
Leland	Parris	St Germain
Lent	Pashayan	Stangeland
Levitas	Patman	Stanton
Lewis	Patterson	Stark
Livingston	Paul	Staton
Loeffler	Pease	Stenholm
Long (MD)	Perkins	Stokes
Lott	Petri	Stratton
Lowry (WA)	Peyser	Studds
Lujan	Pickle	Stump
Luken	Porter	Swift
Lundine	Price	Synar
Lungren	Pritchard	Tauke
Madigan	Pursell	Tauzin
Markey	Quillen	Taylor
Marlenee	Rahall	Thomas
Marriott	Railsback	Traxler
Martin (IL)	Rangel	Trible
Martin (NC)	Ratchford	Udall
Martin (NY)	Regula	Vander Jagt
Martinez	Reuss	Vento
Matsui	Rinaldo	Volkmer
Mattox	Ritter	Walgren
Mavroules	Roberts (KS)	Walker
Mazzoli	Roberts (SD)	Wampler
McClory	Robinson	Washington
McCloskey	Rodino	Watkins
McCollum	Roe	Waxman
McCurdy	Roemer	Weaver
McDade	Rogers	Weber (MN)
McDonald	Rose	Weber (OH)
McEwen	Rostenkowski	Weiss
McGrath	Roth	White
McHugh	Roukema	Whitehurst
McKinney	Rousselot	Whitley
Mica	Roybal	Whittaker
Michel	Russo	Whitten
Miller (CA)	Sabo	Williams (MT)
Miller (OH)	Santini	Williams (OH)
Mineta	Sawyer	Winn
Minish	Scheuer	Wirth
Mitchell (NY)	Schneider	Wolf
Moakley	Schroeder	Wolpe
Molinari	Schulze	Wortley
Mollohan	Schumer	Wright
Montgomery	Seiberling	Wyden
Moore	Sensenbrenner	Wylie
Moorhead	Shamansky	Yates
Morrison	Sharp	Yatron
Mottl	Shaw	Young (FL)
Murphy	Shelby	Young (MO)
Murtha	Shumway	Zablocki
Myers	Shuster	Zeferetti
Napier	Siljander
Natcher	Simon

NAYS—1

Mitchell (MD)

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1

Ottinger

NOT VOTING—44

Applegate	Ford (TN)	Marks
Boner	Fountain	Mikulski
Bowen	Gingrich	Moffett
Brown (CA)	Ginn	Pepper
Brown (OH)	Goldwater	Rhodes
Burgener	Hall, Sam	Richmond
Burton, John	Heftel	Rosenthal
Chisholm	Huckaby	Rudd
Clay	Jones (OK)	Savage
Coyne, William	Jones (TN)	Shannon
Daub	Kemp	Smith (IA)
Dingell	Kindness	Solomon
Ertel	LeBoutillier	Wilson
Evans (GA)	Long (LA)	Young (AK)
Ford (MI)	Lowery (CA)

□ 1040

So the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 6030, with Mr. AUCOIN, Chairman pro tempore, in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Wednesday, July 21, 1982, title I was open to amendment at any point.

Are there further amendments to title I?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ZABLOCKI

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZABLOCKI: Page 2, line 15, strike out "$2,439,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,410,600,000".

Page 5, line 19, strike out "$3,959,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,933,300,000".

□ 1050

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, today in the House of Representatives we have an opportunity to make a very historic decision, and that is this: Whether the United States is going to depart from a 13-year moratorium that we have had on the production of lethal chemical weapons? Are we going to produce new lethal chemical weapons, the binary when we already have a sufficient amount of chemical weapons in our stockpile, both in quality and quantity?

I submit that we should maintain our extensive existing stockpile of lethal chemical weapons, and, having an adequate stockpile of lethal chemical munitions, we should pursue serious arms control negotiations and thus eliminate this horrible threat posed by these weapons.

Mr. Chairman, that is the commonsense policy for the United States, the policy that preserves the distinctive humanitarian and moral character of the American people and its Government, eliminating the threat of chemical weapons rather than adding to what we already have.

It is for this reason that I am introducing this amendment with my Republican colleague, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE), which would delete this request. All the amendment would do is delete the $54 million request for binary chemical weapons production.

Mr. Chairman, this is a bipartisan effort. There is support for this commonsense amendment from other Members, and I will just name a few: The gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. MOFFETT), the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. LEACH), the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. FENWICK), the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. GEJDENSON), the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. ROUKEMA), and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR).

Again, I want to make it clear to my colleagues that the amendment would leave intact over 90 percent of the funds requested for the U.S. chemical warfare program. This includes $507 million for badly needed chemical defensive weapons for defensive programs. I think that we should be putting our emphasis on the defensive programs. My amendment also leaves intact $74 million for demilitarization of the less than 1 percent of unusable chemical weapons in our permanent stockpile, and $70 million is still remaining there for research and development for the binary program and maintenance of our existing stockpile of lethal chemical weapons.

I repeat that my amendment would only delete this initial $54 million down payment on a program which could ultimately cost the already beleagured American taxpayer between $6 billion and $15 billion. When we have a problem of balancing the budget, is this not the best opportunity to save that amount of money that I am speaking of, voting for any amendment? We should stop this foot-in-the-door approach. Proponents of the binary say it is only $54 million, let us not forget it would result over the years in an expenditure of $10 billion.

For almost 10 ten years, the Committee on Foreign Affairs has held oversight hearings on the foreign policy, arms control, and other implications of binary chemical weapons, and the most recent meeting was held Tuesday, July 13.

The key question we have pursued in our hearings, meetings, and discussions, was: "Does resumed production of nerve gas contribute to the United States national security interests,"

After all, we are all concerned about our national security interests. And what was the answer? The answer consistently has been: "No, it does not."

If it does not, why spend the money? The United States already has an adequate offensive chemical warfare capability. The current stockpile of lethal chemical weapons is enough for at least 30 days of chemical warfare in Europe, which would result in millions of civilian deaths.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. ZABLOCKI was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, the current stockpile is adequate both in quality and quantity.

According to the U.S. Army's own 1982 surveillance program of the current stockpile all lots of nerve agent in its 155-millimeter and 8-inch artillery shells, which are scheduled to be replaced by binaries, are condition code A, and I quote—"serviceable—fully meets all military characteristics, issuable without limit or restriction." This is the Army's judgment.

U.S. production of binaries carries grave foreign policy implications. Our friends and allies in Europe reject them. They reject new U.S. deployments of binary nerve gas. Yet, unless they are deployed where they can be used, that is, in Europe, binaries have no deterrence value.

Let us look at another matter. Let us understand that binary production will be not only a waste of the taxpayers' dollars, but let us keep in mind that binaries are 18 times more costly than upgrading the existing unitary weapons, $550 per binary round versus $30 per upgraded unitary round. At a time when the Federal deficit exceeds $100 billion, that cost is both unacceptable and irresponsible.

Binary production will, in addition, divert billions of dollars from other needed military programs such as enhancing United States chemical defenses and conventional forces.

As chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I have had an opportunity to closely examine the arms control implications of the binary program. There is no doubt in my mind on the basis of that extensive review that the U.S. production of binaries undermines arms controls efforts.

Mr. Chairman, let me just remind our colleagues that the Soviet Union last month at the United Nations tabled a chemical weapons arms control proposal offering a real opportunity to pursue a negotiated ban as opposed to a whole new arms race in the area of chemical weapons. This Soviet proposal contains a number of significant changes from the past, the most important of which relates to verification of a chemical weapons arms control agreement.

The very fact that the Soviets took this initiative and addressed the substantive issue of verification offers the Reagan administration a unique opportunity to resume bilateral negotiations with the Soviet Union. Our failure to do so would afford the Soviets a propaganda advantage and could precipitate a costly and dangerous arms race in chemical weapons.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI) has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. ZABLOCKI was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Further, the U.S. production of binary chemical weapons will likely be viewed by the world community as an abandonment of past U.S. policy to eliminate chemical weapons and could stimulate a dramatic increase in the proliferation of such weapons.

Mr. Chairman, in closing I would like to make a few comments regarding the military effectiveness of chemical weapons, specifically the proposed binary chemical weapons.

Experts agree that chemical weapons are militarily effective against a well-protected adversary—which the Soviets clearly are. That is why all of us who oppose the binary production program strongly support the U.S. chemical defensive progam.

It simply is dangerous and ill-advised for the United States to begin producing a weapon that has never been field tested and whose military reliability is very uncertain. The United States made the mistake of copying the antidote TAB found in Soviet tanks captured during the 1973 Yom Kippur war without adequate testing. We now find ourselves in the position of having to withdraw that antidote from Europe, after the expenditure of many thousands of dollars.

Binaries also create more serious logistical problems than existing unitary weapons because they are heavier and bulkier and because the separate binary components complicate battlefield coordination.

□ 1100

Mr. Chairman, I believe that we all agree that binary production does not contribute to U.S. national security interests but, rather, undermines it.

I do hope the members of the committee will vote overwhelmingly for this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI) has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. BINGHAM and by unanimous consent Mr. ZABLOCKI was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZABLOCKI. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM).

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the gentleman on his initiative and associate myself with his eloquent remarks.

I think this is a most important amendment.

I would add only to what the Chairman has said that I think it is ironic that this move on the part of the administration toward developing a new generation of chemical weapons follows on the heels of the administration's quite proper condemnation of the Soviet Union for using chemical weapons in various parts of the world.

Mr. Chairman, I rise this afternoon to express my full support for the Zablocki-Bethune amendment which would delete $54 million for production of binary chemical weapons from the Defense Department authorization bill.

My colleagues are no doubt familiar with the horrors of such weapons.

Chemical weapons kill in a particularly ghastly and indiscriminate way. Their victims are more often than not civilians.

Recently, the Reagan administration has chastised the Soviet Union for its alleged use of tricothecene, dubbed "yellow rain," in Kampuchea, Laos, and Afghanistan. Eyewitnesses of these alleged attacks report that victims died a horrible death, suffering from bleeding eyes, burning of the skin, dizziness, bleeding gums, and a variety of other symptoms, before finally succumbing from explosion of their internal membranes, in effect, drowning them in their own blood.

Ironically, the administration has followed these charges against the Soviets with a call for a new generation of chemical weapons of its own, claiming that such weapons are necessary to deter the Soviets from future use. I find this argument that reduction of chemical weapons is only possible through increased production to be painfully reminiscent of the administration's stance on nuclear weapons. Stepped-up production of such weapons might well lead the world into a period of chemical arms proliferation.

Surely, the most fruitful avenue of pursuit for an administration truly committed to the control, reduction and, if possible, elimination of chemical weapons would be through negotiations. Unfortunately, the administration has refused to resume the bilateral negotiations with the Soviet Union that stalled in mid-1980. As recently as this past month, before the United Nations Special Session on Disarmanent, Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko submitted a proposal for resumption of negotiations intended to put an end to the chemical weapons arms race before it begins. Many are convinced that this latest Soviet proposal contains language concerning the important issue of verification that represents significant movement from previous Soviet stances. Yet, in the face of this new initiative, the administration has merely reaffirmed its intent to produce a new generation of chemical weapons.

I would ask my colleagues to consider what message is sent by a refusal to negotiate directly on the one hand, and an effort to renew production of chemical weapons on the other. How else could such a signal be interpreted than as another step in a chemical arms race? Moreover, I am concerned about what it would say to the world if we follow our call for condemnation of the Soviet use of chemical weapons with the resumption of a massive chemical weapons program of our own after a 13-year moratorium.

We should be wary of the dangers of proliferation of these arms, and careful to avoid opening the floodgates of a new round of chemical weapons production. Before these weapons become available to terrorist groups and unstable governments who would think little of using them to advance their own ends, we must stop production and use of chemical weapons once and for all.

I hope my colleagues will join me in adopting the Zablocki-Bethune amendment, and in turning down the administration's call for a resumption of the chemical arms race.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

He is so right. While we are condeming the Soviets or their surrogates for using chemical weapons, we lose that advantage by entering into a program that really wipes out our advantage as far as the Third World is concerned or as far as the entire world is concerned.

They join us in condemning the Soviet Union for its use, but likewise they will condemn the United States for going into production of a new generation of lethal chemical weapons.

I yield back the balance of my time.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BETHUNE TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ZABLOCKI

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BETHUNE to the amendment offered by Mr. ZABLOCKI: At the end of the amendment, add the following:

Page 8, after line 12, insert the following new section:

PROHIBITION ON PROCUREMENT OF BINARY CHEMICAL MUNITIONS AND RELATED PRODUCTION FACILITIES

SEC. 109. None of the funds appropriated pursuant to the authorizations of appropriations in this title may be obligated or expended for procurement of binary chemical munitions or for production facilities for such munitions.

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleague, the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. ZABLOCKI, in an effort that cuts across philosophical and party lines.

Presently the United States holds the high ground on at least one front in the arms control struggle. We are not producing or using chemical weapons.

American disdain for these unbelievably horrible weapons has been proved by our adherence to a wise policy set by President Nixon in 1969.

As the strategic arms reduction talks, the START talks progress, we have a narrow opportunity because of our opposition to chemical weapons, to drive home the point here and abroad that our goal is, in fact, world peace.

We must not lose that advantage. That is exactly what will happen if we resume the production of chemical weapons such as nerve gas.

Peace-loving people all over the world agree with the American stand against biological and chemical weapons. They know that poison gasses kill and maim more civilians than soldiers.

To put it simply, on this issue the people around the world trust us and they trust us not because of what we say or what we do; they trust us for what we have not done.

The Soviets cannot make that claim. The stories out of Sverdlovsk and the mounting evidence in Afghanistan have wrought a world perception, if not a reality that the Soviets are not only producing biological and chemical weapons, they are using them.

This perceptional, perhaps provable distinction could mean the difference in the battle for credibility around the world.

What it boils down to is this: We are not like the Soviets. We do not want to be like the Soviets. And, on this issue, at least, we can prove it.

Right now most people see us and the Soviets as partners in crime when it comes to the production of nuclear weapons and other types of strategic weapons. When they see the display of this week here in this Congress where we spend billions and billions of dollars to produce all of the exotic weapons that we have had debated here ad nauseum, they do not distinguish between us and the Soviets.

We are particeps criminis with the Soviets in the mind of the world when it comes to building up arms.

On this issue, however, it is different. Our refusal to produce or use chemical weapons sets us apart from the Soviets in a way that corroborates our often-declared goal that we really want to reduce arms.

If we start making nerve gas just as we go to the negotiating table with the Soviets we are going to lose that advantage.

That is why the distinguished chairman and I have proposed our amendment to delete funds and to prohibit the production of chemical weapons. It just does not make sense, my colleagues, to throw away the one small shred of evidence that we Americans truly yearn for the day when we will indeed reduce arms instead of increase the escalation and the production of arms.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BETHUNE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. I rise in support of the initiative of the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Wisconsin.

I would like to stress four or five points that have not as not yet been brought out in the debate.

First, it is indisputable that Soviet surrogates are using biochemical weapons in Laos and Cambodia, and almost certainly in Afghanistan as well. In addition, there is some indication these weapons may have been introduced in East Africa.

Given this fact of usage, the United States basically has two strategic options. One is to build up our chemical weapons stockpiles and the other is to pursue arms control in a much more forthright way.

For strategic and humanitarian reasons it seems to me far preferable to pursue an arms control treaty and to bring an end to an arms race that in the long run nobody can win.

It is important in this sense to stress that these weapons are unbelievably awesome. Chemical weapons are perhaps less devastating than nuclear arsenals, but in World War I there were 1.2 million casualties stemming from poison gas. Today chemical substances are more lethal, the delivery systems are more sophisticated.

In addition, there is a thin line between chemical weapons and biological weapons, the former being inorganic substances and the latter being living organisms such as plagues capable of multiplying and for which there may be, in some instances, no known antidote.

While chemical weapons are slightly less dangerous than nuclear, clearly biological weapons are more dangerous.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE) has expired.

(At the request of Mr. LEACH of Iowa and by unanimous consent Mr. BETHUNE was allowed to proceed for 4 additional minutes.)

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. In a very practical sense one cannot control one form of weaponry by treaty and not the other. The fact that we have a convention prohibiting the development, production, and stockpiling of biological weapons is not enough. It must be complemented by a convention on chemical weapons.

As the first generation of people in the history of the world capable of destroying ourselves, we must realize that the possibility of an accident or an intended use of biological and chemical weapons is actually far greater than nuclear. In fact, chemical weapons are now being used.

Here it should be noted that on the biological front, during World War II the Japanese performed biological experiments, including vivisections, on United States and Soviet POW's and actually attempted to spread the bubonic plague in Manchuria by dropping infected cotton balls.

Fortunately, the Manchurian experiment did not work.

In the United States, however, in a nonwartime setting, we did experiment with certain biological agents with some success. For example, in classified information released as recently as last week it has been revealed that the U.S. Army in the 1950's did an experimental airdrop using turkey feathers infected with hog cholera in Florida. Incredibly, the designated group of model hogs got infected.

Biological weapons of this nature do work.

Chemical and biological weapons are not only awesomely dangerous, they are also extraordinarily cheap. They have the clear potential to become the poor man's weapon of mass destruction.

Here it is important for us to realize that Third World countries have easy access to these weapons. Castro, for instance, has reportedly made allegations that he has the capacity to spread hoof-and-mouth disease in the United States.

□ 1110

That capacity is probably real. Accordingly, the lack of priority given by the Carter administration to investigating reports of chemical weapons usage in Southeast Asia is unfortunate, as is the lack of priority being given by this administration to pursuing chemical weapons arms control.

Given the usage as recently as the past 6 months of biochemical weapons in Southwest Asia, and given the obligation of the United States of America, under ariticle VII of the Biological and Toxic Weapons Convention, to pursue serious chemical weapons arms control, we have no legal or moral choice but to give chemical weapons arms control the highest possible priority.

As Calvin Coolidge once said, "The best way to begin is to begin." A good first step toward beginning to contain the chemical weapons arms race is to adopt the Zablocki-Bethune amendment and to defer producing a new generation of chemical weapons in this country.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BETHUNE. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, while the focus of public opinion is riveted on the nuclear arms talks and the "freeze" movement, the American people are almost totally unaware of an imminent and drastic reversal in the U.S. policy on chemical weapons. We have had a 13-year moratorium on the production of chemical weapons and we have ratified the Geneva protocol which prohibits the use in war of chemical weapons. Yet we are asked to authorize now the production of binary nerve gas.

When will the Congress learn? We were warned by President Eisenhower against the "military-industrial complex." We acted on faith in 1964 and passed the Gulf of Tonkin resolution. Today we stand on another precipice—about to jump in a leap of faith to what could very likely be a chemical warfare arms race.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE) has expired.

(On request of Mrs. ROUKEMA and by unanimous consent, Mr. BETHUNE was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mrs. ROUKEMA. If the gentleman will yield further, we have no excuse if we go forward with this production authorization today. The questions central to the issue have been asked—by our own Foreign Affairs Committee in 1974 and by the Appropriations Committee last year. Yet they are still unanswered today.

Will the Congress approve production of chemical weapons despite the fact that considerable controversy continues over whether existing stocks are enough? Despite the fact that there is no evidence of NATO willingness to accept binary weapons? Despite the fact that U.S. production of the binary could, in fact, trigger proliferation of chemical weapons by lending military significance and moral acceptability? Despite the fact that we do not know how chemical weapons would be used, where they could be used, and why they are needed?

These points were understood in the fiscal year 1981 supplemental appropriations conference report which provided R. & D. funds for chemical weapons. The report stated—the conference committee—"remains deeply concerned about the many as yet unanswered questions surrounding this effort." The report then directed the administration to determine the long-range costs of the program; "provide a country-by-country report from our NATO allies with respect to their views on that long-range program"; provide an overview of the mission-oriented requirements and give us the arms control impact. The information subsequently provided however, does not include the country-by-country report and has not yet been thoroughly studied by the appropriate committees to determine its sufficiency or implications. Therefore, why must we rush to production?

If we do not stop the funding for production of binary weapons we will be approving without comprehensive hearings or a public policy debate, a military doctrine dependent upon chemical weapons. A new defense program will be established with little understanding of its impact upon foreign policy, national security, or comprehensive arms control.

We must say "No"; "No," until the DOD explains the military requirements which are so compelling that we readily abandon a 12-year moratorium. "No," until, the DOD explains how the mission orientation of chemical weapons is consistent with the international commitments of the United States. "No," until the full report requested by the conference committee, in June of 1981 has been received, reviewed and accepted. "No," until we have a full analysis of the diplomatic consequences of this reversal in U.S. policy on our NATO allies.

Finally, and most emphatically I must stress that the United States of America, the leader of the world's democracies, cannot respond to the Soviet Union violation of the Geneva accords by escalating yet another arms race. Let the Soviet Union stand accused in the court of world opinion. Let the United States say "enough." For—

As soon as men decide that all means are permitted to fight an evil, then their good becomes indistinguishable from the evil that they set out to destroy. (Christopher Dawson, 1942.)

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BETHUNE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I appreciate his articulate speech against the use of chemical warfare. But I think a couple of points have to be brought out.

One point is that we are not talking about biological warfare. There is no funding in this bill for biological or germ warfare. There are several references made to some of the programs the Soviet Union has undertaken. I think the most important thing we should consider here, though, from a commander or a military man's point of view—and we have to ultimately project that there may be in the future some confrontation between this country and the Warsaw Pact nations—is that you are placing your military people and the field commander and the people who are under his command at a great disadvantage if you allow the enemy, regardless of how horrible or horrendous the weapons are that he has at his disposal, the exclusive use of a certain weapon system. You can be sure he is going to utilize that monopoly to the fullest extent, and he is going to utilize that weapon system to the fullest extent.

What we are proposing to do today is to restrict ourselves unilaterally and to give that Soviet commander or that Warsaw Pact commander the capability of using chemical warfare and biological warfare on our troops without any threat whatsoever of reprisal.

I heard the gentleman from New York mention that we shall be gaining some psychological advantage, propaganda advantage, if in fact we did not produce binary weapons.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE) has again expired.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas be allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the gentleman can get his own time. I thought we had an agreement.

Mr. HUNTER. If the gentleman will yield, I just have one more paragraph.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, why does not the gentleman get his own time and let the gentleman in the well use his time?

Mr. BETHUNE. The gentleman is using my time now, I acknowledge.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUNTER. Cyrus Vance said 3 years ago:

We give tremendous psychological advantage to the Soviet Union by foregoing our plan to produce chemical weapons.

I would simply say that, since then, our inaction has had such an effect on the Soviet Union that they proceeded to use chemicals and gas on the Afghanistans and on the Cambodians. So I think that that argument has not stood up and in fact we have not motivated the Soviets to reduce or to restrain their development of chemical weapons.

Mr. BETHUNE. I thank the gentleman for his remarks.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to respond to the points that the gentleman made. I am glad we are having this debate. It is really the first time we have had an intelligent and comprehensive discussion of the chemcial weapons issue on the floor of this House.

The gentleman makes two points, one being that the military commanders are placed at a disadvantage. And I think it should be brought out at this point that the military commanders do not like chemical weapons. They know that chemical warfare degrades the level of competence and the ability of commanders to wage war in the field.

Now, the instances where we have seen the use of chemical weapons recently in Afghanistan and Laos are distinguishable. The gentleman suggests that the United States and the Soviet Union might engage in a confrontation involving chemical weapons. The United States and the Soviet Union are both sophisticated and superior military powers. Only once in the history of the world has chemical weapons been used where there is a superior force matched against another superior force, and that was in World War I. The lesson from that was that neither force can wage war under those circumstances because it degrades the level of the ability to wage war.

The other instances are instances where a superior force has used chemical weapons against an inferior, unsophisticated and primitive force, such as in the case of Afghanistan. In those instances it has been used because: First, the primitive force does not have the defensive capability; and second, they have no way in which to retaliate, and so the superior force is enticed to use in those instances.

□ 1120

The second point I would make is that the gentleman's argument assumes, incorrectly, that the binary weapon which is under discussion here is somehow more effective, a better weapon, than the existing unitary shell. That is a fallacious argument, because: First, there has been no testing, no dynamic testing, of the binary weapon and we know in fact there are many problems that can be seen already with the binary weapon; and second, according to military authorities, Admiral Davies for one, a 36-year veteran of the Navy, who was then Assistant Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency for 7 years, said:

Of course the current safety record of our current stockpile of munitions is excellent, so it appears that the binary would improve an already acceptable situation.

He goes on to point out that we already possess a very substantial stockpile with an outstanding safety record, and he takes the position that a decision now to commit the United States to this $700 to $800 million program would be of dubious merit, particularly in light of the budgetary problems.

He is not the only one. Mr. Saul Hormats, who was for 12 years in charge of the Army's chemical weapons program, says that our current stockpile of chemical weapons contains enough lethal nerve gas in serviceable munitions to force the Soviets to suit up in anticipation of gas weapons being used against them.

So the two points that the gentleman makes that our military commanders somehow want and somehow need this particular weapon, and that these particular weapons are established beyond doubt to be better than the weapons that we have on hand, are just not so.

Furthermore, there is great weight of authority to prove that the gentleman's points are not well founded.

So I would urge Members to realize that the wise policy which was established in 1969 has held. It has held through several votes in this House. It is a good policy based on substantial thought and substantial historical foundation.

I think the burden is on the committee and on the administration to prove without doubt that we need these weapons and that they are superior to the existing stockpile, and I do not think they can do it and, therefore, we should stick to the existing policy.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I brought in a chart which I think shows a compelling reason as to why we should oppose this amendment and why we need to go forward with developing the capability of a binary round.

Any time that you talk about either nuclear or chemical warfare the results are so horrible, it is so unsavory and unpleasant that it always gets emotional. It is very easy to play on people's emotions and describe the horror of this type of warfare. It is much worse to be gassed than it is so be blown up. We are used to that. We are not used to gas. I think some things need to be put in perspective and some of the facts known and if a person based on his own philosophy or his own emotional reaction feels as he does, then so be it. Let us base it on the facts. Let us get the facts out and then based on the facts however one might react, so be it.

The fact is that we have had and have not used chemical agents since World War I.

The fact is that, according to our intelligence estimates, both sides had the capability in World War II, both Adolf Hitler and his Nazi regime, as did the allies.

Our intelligence community has told us, and I am convinced that if Adolf Hitler and the Nazi war machine had not been convinced that we had the capability as they did, they would have used gas on the invading troops at Normandy and on D-Day. The only deterrent that kept the madman Hitler on a leash was the threat that we could do what he could do. If we had no capability if we had no threat in that area, he would have used it.

Only the deterrent of the allied ability to reply in kind kept Nazi Germany from using gas in World War II.

We have had it since then. We did not use it then, we will not use it now, except in self-defense, but it is imperative for the defense of this country that we have a credible deterrent.

What is the alternative? Somebody can say we have the atomic tactical weapons. And really, is that what we want?

We have seen the Soviets training every division with chemical weapons. They do so today. They have not signed any pact saying that they are not going to use chemical weapons. In fact, we know they have supplied and have used chemical agents in Kampuchea, in Laos, and Afghanistan. Why? Because the people they were using them on, first, had no defense against them and could not retaliate. They could do so with impunity. They did not have to worry about what would come back to them.

They had the ability and they tested it and they used it, and while they denied this, the evidence is there. It is beyond doubt because we have developed and produced evidence both in the forms of people who were gassed and hard evidence such as soil samples and radio intercepts.

What happens to us if we do not even have the capability?

Well, the capability is—if the Soviets do in fact decide they are going to go across the Warsaw Pact NATO line and go into Europe, the only credible deterrent we have is nuclear weapons.

Now, is that what we want?

Do we want to lower the nuclear threshold so that the only defense we have against gas is nuclear? I do not think so.

And if we have a deterrent that the Soviets believe, one that they have, then this is the best insurance that we have, the same as in World War II, that they will not use it against us.

Now, how much do we have? Well in usable form, not much.

The figures I am giving my colleagues are supplied to this committee by the Department of Defense. I do not know where these other figures come from.

But if the Members will look at the chart here.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DICKINSON. The figures here are furnished by the Department of Defense. This is the gross amount of chemical agents that the United States has on hand and stored. We have not produced any since 1969. So the newest was produced in 1969. Some of it is 35 years old.

If you look at the top portion of this, these agents are in rockets, but we do not have the launchers to use these rockets. These are not usable. We no longer have the units necessary to launch the rockets so it is not usable.

All of this is in bulk. This amount is in bulk. It is in large containers, and if it were to be used we would have to use it the same way as a crop duster would spray a field or use paraquat or that substance we used in Vietnam to defoliate trees. You have to fly over and spray. That is what all of this is and that is hardly a very credible deterrent when we know this would be done in a very hostile environment where aircraft could not exist very long.

This leaves us this much that we would consider to be in a usable form.

But we have 105-millimeter shells, we have mortars, we have spray tanks, we have mines, and artillery.

□ 1130

Of this, this amount, the part here in orange is dangerous to handle. We cannot carry it on a ship. It is so volatile and so unstable that the Department of Defense says that it is too dangerous to use. This leaves us really with about 10 percent of all that is on hand that is usable.

What is proposed then is to develop the capacity, the capability, of developing two chemicals which are not lethal in and of themselves. They only become lethal when they are mixed together.

The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI), who offered the amendment, says, well, you know, it costs so much to build what we are proposing, the binary, that what we ought to do is make these safe. Well, the Department of Defense tells us that the process of making them safe for disposal produces 3 pounds of toxic waste salt for each pound of chemical that is destroyed. Even if we have the capacity, the cost would be prohibitive. We do not have the facilities. We would have to facilitize. We would have to build a facility to do this.

Then where would we store it? We do not know for sure; but this is going to have to be disposed of. It is not usable. The cost would be tremendous.

A statement was just made by my friend, the gentleman from Arkansas, quoting somebody saying that we had enough to make the Soviets suit up. Well, what good is making them suit up?

The question is, Do we have a credible deterrent that they believe? To say that we make them suit up, I really do not know what that means.

The fact is if you look at what is proposed in our budget, we are asking for $705 million. Of this, $508 million goes to protective measures—protective, not offensive. Then an additional $74 million goes for the demilitarization of what we have on hand, detoxifying this as best it can be done, and $123 million out of the $705 million goes toward retaliatory capacity.

The fact is that we do not have sufficient usable stocks on hand to be a credible deterrent.

Now, what would compel or induce the Soviets to sit down and seriously negotiate an arms limitation talk and outlaw it, and sign a treaty saying they would not use chemical weapons if we have nothing to offer on the other side? Why should they come in and bargain in good faith with us when they say, "Well, your Congress says you can't even build any to start with. Why do we need to talk with you?"

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DICKINSON. "Why should we sit down and negotiate with you, when it is in all your newspapers, that your Congress is already on record saying that we are not going to allow you to build anything and what you have is obsolete." What is there to trade?

So what I am saying is, first, what we have is not usable, only 10 percent.

Second, if we want to do away with the horror and the spector of chemical warfare, then let us sit down with the Soviets in a bargaining position, because there must be a quid pro quo. They do not give up something for nothing.

So let us go forward with the ability at least and then as early as we can sign a treaty, great, let us do so. Let us not deny ourselves the opportunity and the right and the ability to negotiate, so that we have something to trade in return.

I would say that it is an emotional issue, but if you do not go forward and produce the capability to safely handle toxic materials, a gas, a chemical warfare weapon, then we are at the mercy of the Soviets if they intend to use theirs. We have nothing to negotiate with them in the event we can get them to talk seriously at the table and at the same time we are putting our own troops at risk on the frontlines, because we have nothing to protect them with. I do not think we are doing fair by our men in uniform. I do not think we are protecting our Nation's best interests. I think we are being very shortsighted to say that we will do away with our capacity, do away with our bargaining chip and hope that by praying that we can convince the Soviets to be goodhearted enough so that if things come right down to the wire, that they will say, "Well, we are good guys. We just will not use the chemical agents that we have practiced with on a daily basis."

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I would be very happy to yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BETHUNE. The question of suiting up arose during the gentleman's comments, because I had brought it up; the point being that military commanders, as I mentioned in my first remarks, that I have talked to, and most of the experts on both sides of the issue will say that the objective in chemical warfare is not to wage an offensive campaign and thus take ground and kill troops by using nerve gas. The only reason that chemical warfare is maintained by superior forces in the instance against the superior forces is so that you can force the other party to the conflict to get into their suits and be encumbered in the same way that your troops have been by them using the gas.

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, both the gentleman and I agree that the experts say that if you do suit up, it will really debilitate you about 50 percent.

Mr. BETHUNE. It degrades the level of military effectiveness, so suiting up is the issue.

Mr. DICKINSON. Suiting up does not deny you the use of airfields. This is what you would use the chemical weapons for, to take out airfields, to deny terrain to your opponent, not just to make him stand around in a suit and make him sweat. That is not the purpose of it.

Mr. BETHUNE. The issue is the issue of deterrence. In connection with the issue of deterrence, I know the gentleman has heard the same arguments that I have. The question is whether or not one military force can make the other labor under the same disadvantages that they are laboring under, and thus the issue is suiting up.

Let me just finish my point. In connection with that, the authorities that I have talked with on this and have cited here, Admiral Davies, Mr. Saul Hormats, who for 13 years was in charge of this whole program for the Army, said.

Our current stockpile contains enough serviceable munitions to force the Soviets to suit up. Since Soviet soldiers can operate in suits, adding to the capability will not further deter the Soviets from using CW.

Then he points out that we have a more wearable mask than they do, although we need to do some work on our suits; so we are getting into the defense issue. Those are interrelated.

This would probably be a good time to bring up the point that the GAO has just come out with a report indicating that we do not know which end is up when it comes to the defense capability. It was quite a good study. It was just released yesterday. I would encourage the gentleman and the committee members to take a look at that.

We are all agreed that we need to do something about our ability to defend against chemical weapons, but until we resolve that issue, how can we possibly resolve the quantitative issue of how much we need to produce.

Mr. DICKINSON. May I say, just to resolve the quantitative issue, may I say that if the GAO report says that we do not know which end is up, is that a good reason to say that we should not produce it?

Mr. BETHUNE. I did not say the gentleman did not know which end is up. I was making the point that the military services do not know which end is up on this issue.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. LEACH of Iowa and by unanimous consent, Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I would be very pleased to yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say, I agree with a number of points that the gentleman has made. Certainly we should not extensively destroy our chemical weapons stockpiles as long as the other side has them; but it should be stressed that we do have substantial stockpiles prepositioned in Western Europe today.

Second, it should be stressed that the binary weapons have not been accepted by our European allies. There is no indication of willingness that if we develop binaries, that they will accept them prepositioned in their countries. Therefore, there is a real question whether we should go forth with this weapon.

Mr. DICKINSON. Just a moment. On that one point before we leave it, if you take that to its logical conclusion, there is no reason to develop a GLCM, the ALCM, or the Pershing or any weapons system that we are proposing to develop, because we do not have an advance agreement with them they will stockpile it. That is ludicrous.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Well, if I can reply briefly, a number of political leaders in Western Europe have indicated that there will be a horrendous political debacle in their countries, with governments potentially falling, if we press these weapons upon them at this time.

Second, let me stress that we have today substantial prepositioned chemical supplies in Western Europe and there is question whether the binary is that much more sophisticated, that much more capable than existing chemical weapons. There is no indication of this. It is perhaps slightly more capable. It may be slightly safer to store, but there is no great safety problem with current chemical weapons stockpiles.

□ 1140

Mr. DICKINSON. Just a moment, please. The gentleman sloughs over these things, he glosses over them rather rapidly as if they were fact, and it is not the fact. With respect to the storage, the handling, the use of binary weapons, I never even heard safety questioned before. They are much safer than what we presently have on hand. I have never even heard that questioned before. Of course, they are much safer. Of course, they are much safer to handle, to store, to detoxify. In every way they are more safe and also, as to efficacy, and you might question that, but I have never heard any really serious contention there.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Let me again respond. They are safer to store, but there is no great safety problem in our current chemical weapons, but more importantly——

Mr. DICKINSON. Now, just a moment, please. You make that as a statement of fact. This is totally contrary to all the evidence that our committee received from the military, which has to handle and store it.

Where does your information come from?

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. I did not talk about deterioration; I talked about safety.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me talk about that. Deterioration is a part of safety. They are deteriorating as they are stored. There is a catalytic effect in the shells, in the metal that contains them now, which exacerbates the situation and makes them more unstable as time passes.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Let me continue a point and then respond. Let me stress that on the safety issue, all evidence is that to provide confidence to our troops we will have to test the binaries further and that testing of binaries carries greater safety problems than continued storage of existing chemical stockpiles.

Second, let me state that the major issue of chemical weapons today is not the prospect of confrontation with the Soviet Union; it is proliferation. Unless we take every step possible to negotiate a treaty that will create a situation where chemical weapons will not be used, we are endangering the United States from many new perspectives.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(On request of Mr. ZABLOCKI and by unanimous consent, Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, let me respond and ask one more question.

Does the gentleman think it is more likely we will get a treaty if we have no capability, or if we have a capability?

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. That is a question which has to be considered false because you have a tremendous——

Mr. DICKINSON. That is why I raise the question now.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Let me try to respond.

Mr. DICKINSON. Are we going to negotiate from a position of strength or weakness?

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Let me respond. The gentleman is asking the question and I would like to respond.

Mr. DICKINSON. Do you think we can better negotiate if we have no capability or some capability?

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Lest we think of ourselves as inadequately armed today, it should be stressed that we have stockpiles of chemical weapons capable of blanketing 9,000 square miles of territory with dosages sufficient to kill every human being on the face of the earth.

Mr. DICKINSON. I think I have answered that, but go ahead. All I know is what the Department of Defense tells me.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to yield to the principal author, the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I am a bit concerned about the gentleman's reference to a chart, that shows that the stockpile we now have is unusable. I have before me the U.S. chemical artillery stockpile list which, because of its classification, I cannot describe in detail. However, it shows that the stockpile that is currently serviceable is very impressive.

We did not receive the same information that the gentleman's chart indicates. I do not question the gentleman's integrity.

Mr. DICKINSON. I understand, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. But can the gentleman quote the source of his statement that our stockpile is unusable? We have an entirely different impression.

Mr. DICKINSON. The information on which these charts were made was compiled by the Department of Defense. I cannot give you the man's name at the present time, but I can furnish that for the record. (Information was furnished by Dr. Ted Gold, DOD.) But the figures we have been given and what the chart reflects is that 11 percent of our total stockpile is in rockets for which we have no launchers; 67 percent is in bulk agents which, while they are usable, have to be sprayed. This is hardly a sophisticated way of using that; 28 percent is in various forms, of which only 10 percent is considered safe and usable today.

I will be glad to furnish that for the record or make it available to the gentleman.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DICKINSON. If I have the time, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to include in the RECORD a letter from Mr. Saul Hormats, the former Director of Development of the U.S. Army's Chemical Systems Laboratory.

The letter follows:

BALTIMORE, MD.,
June 1982.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: I write today because you will be voting on the issue of new chemical weapons production this month. For twelve years I was in charge of the Army's chemical weapons program. My 37 years of service at Edgewood Arsenal involved almost all aspects of chemical warfare. During World War II, I participated in Allied studies of the possible usefulness and consequences of a chemical war with the Germans—the conclusion of this study being that chemical weapons are not a "good weapon" from a military utility point of view. After the War, I directed the development of all the nerve gas munitions in our current stockpile and almost all the chemical warfare protective equipment presently used by our forces. I worked closely with the U.S. biological weapons program, with the intelligence community and with our NATO and other allies.

I write to you because I believe the Senate decision (49–45) on May 14 to proceed to new U.S. production of lethal chemical weapons in binary form is a grave misjudgment which will endanger our security as a nation. I hope by sharing my views with you I can help you as you think out how you will vote when the binary weapons production issue comes to the floor of the House in the Department of Defense Authorization bill for 1983.

It is highly unusual for me to contact elected officials on any issue. I take this step because I have intimate knowledge of this issue from my long career as head of the Army's chemical weapons program and because I feel very strongly about it.

Why do I oppose U.S. production of binary munitions?

First, the binary weapons the Administration wants to begin producing in bomb and artillery shell form are of unknown reliability and of questionable military usefulness. I suspect that the Bigeye bombs are extremely unreliable. Since they have not been tested dynamically with live agent, we do not know how they work or whether they work at all. If we begin funding them, we will likely be forced to engage in extensive open-air tests of them, which would be extremely dangerous to our own population.

Binaries are also inferior to our current chemical weapons stocks in that our current unitary shells are not just nerve-gas shells but rather H.E.-Chemical shells; i.e. they function on target as both a high-explosive conventional round and a nerve-gas round. During development a great deal of effort was made to optimize both these functions. On impact the shell body fragments about as well as were it an H.E. round with physical destructive effects approximating those of a conventional shell. Simultaneously the nerve-gas content is blown outward in a circle at high velocity by the explosive force. The shell thus achieves a dual threat on target. To further confuse and hamper possible counter-response, the sound signature of the unitary round is not too different from a conventional round.

The binary munition being proposed for production is very much different. There are no fragments, the agent content is not ejected with explosive speed and the sound signature would be unique on the battlefield. On impact the agent content is ejected vertically and carried by the wind and in the direction of the wind. What fraction, if any, of the agent cloud descends to the six-foot layer, and what fraction of the target population would be exposed? In all my open-literature readings I have been unable to find any considerations of these critical characteristics, to settle my concern on the usefulness of this new munition.

Second, I believe that going to production of binary weapons will not deter the use of chemical weapons but, in fact, will make their use in warfare more likely by prompting the Soviets to expand their chemical weapons production. Let me enlarge on this point.

Chemical war differs from conventional war in that it is basically directed at soldiers and does not damage weapons or equipment. However, trained and disciplined soldiers properly equipped with protective clothing, if they mask before the attack, will be unharmed by chemical weapons. The Soviet soldier is well trained and well disciplined and prepared to operate in a toxic environment. When a Soviet officer orders his men to put on their gas-masks, there is no question in my mind that every soldier will mask and stay masked until ordered to unmask, regardless of discomfort. Should there be any indication they might be attacked by liquid spray, the troops would also be ordered to don their ponchos or their protective suit, making them totally invulnerable to any nerve gas attack. Reduction in their combat effectiveness would be minimal.

Our current stockpile of chemical weapons contains enough lethal nerve gas in serviceable munitions to force the Soviets to suit up in anticipation of gas weapons being used against them. Since the Soviet soldier can operate in a chemical environment, once suited, adding to that U.S. stockpile would not deter the Soviets from using chemical weapons. What I am saying is that Soviet troops are well enough prepared to fight in a chemical environment that they would not be deterred from using chemicals by threat of "in kind" retaliation.

The U.S. is provided with a much more wearable mask than the Soviets—indeed, the most comfortable mask of any army—but its protective suit is more cumbersome than the Soviets'. Also, because our troops tend to think more independently than the Soviet soldier, they would be more resistant to donning the mask on command unless they saw the need for it, making them more vulnerable to attack with chemicals than the more disciplined Soviet soldier. Developing new binary weapons will not effect this Soviet advantage. In fact, because our current chemical weapons are also high-explosive weapons and binaries are not, the new binary weapons would be even less effective than our current chemical weapons against the trained Soviet soldier dressed in protective suit. Consequently, I believe a disciplined, well-trained, and properly protected fighting force adequately supplied with conventional weapons is the best deterrent against the use of chemical weapons.

But this leads me to the third serious problem I see in new chemical weapons production. Chemical weapons are an anti-civilian weapon. Properly suited troops can safely continue to fight. But millions of civilians will die. I believe that resuming chemical weapons production will stimulate the Soviets to produce additional chemical weapons and will make their use in a war in Europe much more likely.

The real victims in a chemical war are civilians. At the May 5 Senate Appropriations hearing, evidence was presented by two experts in the field showing that a chemical war in Europe would likely result in millions of civilians friendly to the U.S. being killed. Children and particularly infants would be the most vulnerable. There are good toxicological reasons for believing that nerve agent sufficient to kill a small percentage of adults would probably kill a large percentage of children and a much larger percentage of the babies. I believe we run the risk of prompting the use of chemical weapons which could well kill most of a generation of Europeans.

For these reasons it is difficult for me to see why the Department of Defense believes it will inhibit Soviet first-use of poison gas munitions by threatening them with retaliation "in kind". I believe there is a better way to prevent the Soviets from starting this heinous thing than by threatening via binary munitions production to join them.

I believe the best course is to go back to President Nixon's position to stop U.S. production of chemical weapons and announce the U.S. will not use chemical weapons first, without explaining how we would retaliate, leaving the Soviets to be uncertain what the consequences would be for them of Soviet first use of chemical weapons. They would know that our response to a chemical attack would be effective and devastating and not the symbolic but militarily ineffective response binary weapons would be.

Sincerely yours,

SAUL HORMATS.

I would now like to briefly quote from that letter from Mr. Saul Hormats, the former Director of Development of the U.S. Army Chemical Lab, who was for 12 years in charge of the chemical weapons program.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. ZABLOCKI and by unanimous consent, Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, I only want to quote two or three portions of the letter. Mr. Hormats wrote:

The binary weapons the administration wants to begin producing in bomb and artillery shell form are of unknown reliability and of questionable military usefulness. Binaries are also inferior to our current chemical weapons stocks in that our current unitary shells are not just nerve-gas shells but rather HE-chemical shells.

In addition, Mr. Hormats states in his letter:

I believe that going to production of binary weapons will not deter the use of chemical weapons but, in fact, will make their use in warfare more likely by prompting the Soviets to expand their chemical weapons production.

And, if the gentleman will yield further, let me underscore what has been said before: That as far as binary weapons are concerned, our European allies are opposed to their deployment on European soil.

On April 22, 1982, the West German SPD adopted a resolution rejecting the deployment of binary weapons in the Federal Republic of Germany. In February 1982, both the Dutch and Norwegian Governments rejected the storage of chemical weapons on their soil. And, in Britain, one of our fine allies, there is a bill before Parliament which seeks to make storage of CW in Britain illegal. If we produce these binaries, where are we going to send them?

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, if I have the time, I would be pleased to yield to my colleague, the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin who Saul Hormats is and when did he have access to any the information pertaining to the resources that we have at our disposal? I understand this chart was done by Dr. Theodore Gold, who is the expert, the man who has all of the information at his fingertips.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I did state, in referring to Saul Hormats' letter, that he was the Director of Development of the U.S. Army Chemical System Laboratory for 12 years. He ought to know what he is talking about.

Mrs. HOLT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield in the time remaining, Mr. Chairman.

Mrs. HOLT. How former? The gentleman did not answer my question. When was he there? When did he have access to this kind of information last?

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Until the mid-1960's

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON) has expired.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not mind staying here, but I do hate to take time from others who are seeking time in their own right and who would like to speak.

(On request of Mr. BETHUNE and by unanimous consent, Mr. DICKINSON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, indeed Mr. Hormats was the Director of the Army's Chemical Weapons Division for some 12 years, but there are other experts, Admiral Davies, for instance, a 36-year veteran of the U.S. Navy, whom I cited a few moments ago, for 7 years was Assistant Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, certainly a credible witness.

So I think what we are going to learn as we debate the issue of whether or not we have adequate offensive capability is that it is a flat-out draw, a flat-out draw, and we can stand and debate it all day long, but there is as much evidence—I happen to think more on our side of the issue—as well as a broader array of credible witnesses on our side of the issue who will say that we have an adequate capability. But I would want to make this point because the gentleman said how in the world are we going to get a treaty with the Soviets when we have nothing and they have this?

Assume for a moment that it is a draw and assume for a moment that we do have adequate capability, that we have something else going for us right now as we go to the table on chemical weapons. We have credibility in the eyes of the people of the world because we are not producing and we are not using.

The Soviets are perceived to be producing and using. Now, do not try to tell me that world opinion is not important as we try to muster the political strength here at home and on the continent to sustain a political base that you have to have to continue to negotiate from a position of strength because it is; if it were not, the Soviet Union would not have been doing all they have been doing to try to get credibility and destroy ours in Europe and we would not be devoting so much of our diplomatic energy trying to maintain the diplomatic muscle that we have to have.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me answer.

Mr. BETHUNE. We have clean hands on this, and the Soviets do not.

Mr. DICKINSON. If I might reclaim my time, Mr. Chairman, if the Soviets start to roll and use their chemical agents, we will hit them with an opinion poll; that will stop them in their tracks.

□ 1150

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague for yielding. In the argument we have just heard with respect to getting a treaty with the Soviets, I believe the gentleman inferred or suggested that it would be much easier to deal with a treaty if we went ahead with the binary program. I would just like to add one argument in opposition to that position.

It seems to me that once the U.S. binary production begins, a treaty is provided for the destruction of stockpiles and for banning future production, it will be more difficult for a couple of reasons. First, binary plants do not need the same protective no-man's land we have with the ordinary plants. Therefore, they look no different to satellite surveillance than any other commercial chemical plant.

Second, even mandatory onsite inspections provide no way that every chemical plant in the United States or the U.S.S.R. could be expected to make sure that none of them are binary. So, what I am saying is, while there may indeed be credit to the arguments the gentleman gives, there are certainly serious drawbacks in terms of the main issue that has not been resolved in trying to get a treaty, and that is verification of binary production and binary plants would make that much more difficult.

Mr. DICKINSON. It is inherent in the point the gentleman is trying to make that the Soviets, if we kill our capability of producing binary weapons the Soviets would not produce binary because they are bound in some way, either morally or by treaty, to not go forward with the production of binary on their own.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. No; I am not suggesting that, but I am suggesting that if this issue is escalated to binary, and perhaps down the road to even more advanced sophistication, the chances of verification and chances of reaching some conclusion in terms of a treaty becomes much more difficult.

Mr. DICKINSON. I understand. Let me close on this point, if I may, because I do not want to take up too much of the committee's time and others want to speak.

If we carry the arguments to the logical conclusion of those who are opposed to the building of any capability, then if we did not have a nuclear capability the Soviets would not be sitting down to talk to us today about reduction of nuclear arms. If we did not have the men in Europe, we would not be sitting to talk to the Soviets about a mutual reduction of forces. As an example, when Mr. Carter unilaterally threw away the B-1 as a trading chip; this did not placate the Soviets. They went forward and built a bomber. So, I think the argument falls of its own weight. If we do not have something, we have nothing to trade.

Mr. BRINKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think it will be useful for just a moment to review what we are talking about today. The binary system itself is safe environmentally, while the existing stockpile is not safe environmentally. It is pretty basic, is it not? But this is because two separate inert agents are involved in the binary system, and only become lethal when joined together.

From a storage and handling standpoint, therefore, the binary munition is absolutely safe. Existing chemical munitions, for which this would be a substitute, are extremely dangerous. Plans call for only one of the agents of the binary munitions to be located, for example, at Pine Bluff, Ark.; in this particular case QL, which is the phosphorus ester, and could be commercially produced, would be located at Pine Bluff. The other agent is powdered sulfur, and would be shipped to a separate facility for storage.

The agents would only—only, ever, be brought together at the battle station if they were to be used in an action.

Now, for the second moment I would like to examine, Mr. Chairman, the point of this amendment, because what is its point? Nerve gas? Mustard gas? Poison gas? What is the point of the amendment? We have, already, on hand, old, deteriorating lethal stockpiles, which exist. The issue is not whether we will be in the chemical gas business. We are already there. The issue is not to have or have not. We already have.

Where are the present chemical storage sites, one may ask, and I will provide the answer. We have a chemical storage site at Tooele Army Depot in Utah; Anniston Army Depot in Alabama; another located in Lexington Blue Grass Depot Activity in Kentucky; we have another of the unitary systems at Pine Bluff Arsenal in Arkansas; another at Umatilla Depot Activity in Oregon; at Pueblo Depot Activity in Colorado; Newport Army Ammunition Plant in Indiana; at the Edgewood Arsenal, Md.; Johnston Island, and in West Germany.

Mr. Chairman, the unitary system exists. It is largely unusable and it is extremely dangerous. So, the issue today really is what kind of agent shall we have. If we are not to have the unitary system, shall we disarm unilaterally or shall we simply replace the system?

In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, a proposition which will be offered deserves our support, which will involve a tradeoff as we build the binary system into the military structure, and at the same time phase out the unitary system, which is so extremely dangerous to our civilian population. The important difference between this country and that of the Soviet Union is the fact that we do not plan to use ours. Ours is a deterrent; ours is a negotiating tool. Why in the world do we not decide to update the old, dangerous system to make it safer for ourselves. Far better it is to have this agent in our hands than those of the Soviet Union's because if it is in their hands we have seen evidence that it is unchecked.

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRINKLEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman makes some points that I think need to be discussed further. There are two points, really.

The gentleman alluded to the fact that these binary weapons are safer, and that they are more effective and that they are more dependable. I would just observe that a group of professional chemists, biochemists, and biologists who are familiar with the technology made the point that the binary agents are untested, and by their true nature are less predictable and more restricted in use than their single agent counterparts. They also made the point that the nerve gases may also have as yet undefined carcinogenic and other adverse medical effects on friend and foe alike. Among this group we had some Nobel winners, so it is a distinguished list of people who have looked at this situation.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. AuCoin). The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

(At the request of Mr. Bethune and by unanimous consent, Mr. Brinkley was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. BETHUNE. Coming back to the issue of whether these are militarily effective or not, we have already been over that ground some, but I think we should focus a little clearer on one of the weapons which is intended to be produced, and that is the Bigeye bomb. But before I get into that, on the artillery shells almost all the authorities I rely on now agree we have an adequate supply of 155-millimeter shells, 8-inch shells, and bulk material. They are not leaking, and constitute a substantial deterrent capability.

But the Bigeye bomb, the binary shell which will be produced by the Navy and filled by the Army, is extremely unreliable, according to Mr. Saul Hormats. The Bigeye bombs are extremely unreliable. They have not been tested.

Mr. BRINKLEY. I do not think the issue there is as to the reliability of the two elements coming together to form the poisonous gas. I think the reliability to which the gentleman may refer is the reliability of the Bigeye bomb system itself.

Mr. BETHUNE. Well, to the contrary. Mr. Hormats makes the point that because of the binary mechanism, it would be necessary to have a sufficient period of time after the bomb is dropped for those chemicals to mix. If you do not gage that just right, you can have deterioration before it hits the ground.

Another thing, it has the smell of sulfur to it, and this means it can be detected by any soldier when it hits. Thus, he can suit up quicker in defense.

Mr. BRINKLEY. Would the gentleman then compare the Bigeye bomb with the Weteye bomb, with its predecessor, the existing Weteye bomb?

Mr. BETHUNE. The Weteye bomb is not leaking, at least according to the senior Senator from Utah who is probably most familiar with them.

□ 1200

We have a stockpile of Weteye bombs, the principal difference being that the Weteye is nonpersistent, whereas the Bigeye is persistent.

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRINKLEY. I yield to the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Chairman, let me ask, is it not true that the Navy will not permit the Weteye bomb on its ships because it is not safe and not effective?

Mr. BRINKLEY. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Brinkley) has expired.

(On request of Mr. Bonior of Michigan, and by unanimous consent, Mr. Brinkley was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRINKLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas referred to the senior Senator from Utah in the other body, and I think it is important to listen to the gentleman in whose State most of these weapons have been stored.

He made a statement just recently, in fact, in May, and I would like to quote it and perhaps get a reaction from my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia. He stated, and I quote:

> We have had that stock there for nearly 35 years. There has simply been no accident of any kind to anyone under any circumstances during that period of time.

The safety record, it seems to me, and to others who have looked at the issue and who believe as we do, is a very sound one and a very good one, and when we have the senior gentleman in the other body from the State of Utah making such strong statements with respect to the existing stockpile, it seems to me we have to give some credence to the existing situation.

Mr. BRINKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to respond to the gentleman. I certainly respect what the Senator has to say, too, and perhaps much more that of the gentleman from Michigan, but my point would simply be that the gas within storage facilities would probably be quite safe. Certainly we hope it is. But once you begin to use and deploy that gas, then the safety issue becomes very relevant and very much drawn into question.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRINKLEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Arkansas if my time has not expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman needs more time, I will make a request that he receive more time.

Mr. BRINKLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to address the safety issue that had been brought up.

The gentleman mentioned the fact that one of the proposed sites or the proposed site for the production of the binary chemical is in Pine Bluff, Ark. I happen to be the Congressman who represents Pine Bluff, so I have been forced to live with this issue for the last 3½ years and I have been very cognizant of the sensitivity of the debate, the international implications, and also the political ramifications and implications back in my district. As a result, I have availed myself of numerous private briefings, plus I have participated in all the debates that have taken place on this House floor as well as in some other hearings.

I have also taken the opportunity to go first hand to the site, put on the gas mask, and actually get into the concrete bunker.

I think there may be an element of misconception here about safety. The reason we can brag about the safety and the fact that no one has been harmed is because of all the precautions that have been taken to detect the leakers. What happens when you have that shell is that they go in and do a test by actually drilling into a certain number to find out if they can find any leakers. Once the existing unitary shell leaks, it leaks inside the brass container. So they go in and test, and if they find it is a leaker, then they destroy that through some type of demilitarization, and then just based on percentages, they know basically how many are usable and how many are not. In order to know 100 percent how many are usable, they literally would have to go in and do a check of every single 155-millimeter shell that is there. It would be time-consuming.

So the safety part of it sometimes can be misleading. No one has been harmed because of the safety precautions.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Brinkley) has expired.

(On request of Mr. Anthony, and by unanimous consent, Mr. Brinkley was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, the reason no one would argue that the binary is more safe is simply because of the mechanism by which it is put together. You have two nontoxic, nonlethal agents that are stored separately, one that you can purchase on the open market today, and then they are only put together actually when the shell is shot, and they are mixed while it is in flight.

For those who may be worried about whether or not it is toxic or may cause mutations, I submit that we would not be worried about that in a time when we would have had to be called upon to make the grave decision to use a chemical weapon, not as a first strike, but as a defense. When we get to that point, we will probably be dropping nuclear bombs all around the place, and the Lord knows what the mutations will then be.

Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to talk about the safety issue, and I will participate in the debate as it proceeds further in other areas. I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia, for yieldings.

Mr. BRINKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ANTHONY) for his fine contribution.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. COURTER AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ZABLOCKI

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COURTER as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. ZABLOCKI: On Page 8, after line 12 add the following new section:

RESTRICTION ON THE PRODUCTION OF BINARY CHEMICAL WEAPONS

SEC. 111. None of the funds authorized to be appropriated by this Act for production of binary chemical weapons may be used to produce such weapons unless the President certifies to the Congress that for each new binary chemical weapon produced, an equivalent number of unitary chemical munitions from the existing United States chemical weapons arsenal shall be rendered permanently useless for military purposes.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I allowed the amendment to be read in its entirety simply because it is so short, and I think, after having heard the language read, the Members will find it is very easy to understand. It is a very simple amendment. I look forward to any debate there may be on it.

The amendment simply says that for any amount of binary weapons that are produced, an equivalent amount of unitary chemical weapons shall be removed from the present stockpile and made totally useless and harmless for military purposes.

During the consideration of the original amendment, the Zablocki amendment, as amended by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE), there was made a couple of cogent arguments as to why we need chemical weapons capability, and I would just like to review both of those arguments because I think it is worthwhile repeating them. Then I will move on to another topic.

First of all, from a deterrent standpoint, everybody knows that the United States does not want to use and would not first use chemical weapons. And everybody, I am sure, in this body—and I say this because another gentleman from the State of New Jersey may amend my substitute—would want to go forward with negotiations with the Soviet Union or any other country that has the capability of producing chemical weapons in order to render them not only illegal but to destroy them, prohibiting their production and stockpiling or anything else.

I find it incredible that we as an institution can make the argument that we will be better off in those types of negotiations if we now eliminate what we would otherwise negotiate away. We would be absolutely negotiating against ourselves; we would have no quid pro quo; we would not be able to say to the other side, no matter who they may be, the Soviet Union or any other country, that, yes, we indeed believe what you believe, and we have to scale down, we have to curtail, we have to cut down, and we have to prohibit production and stockpiling.

Therefore, from a deterrent standpoint, and a negotiating standpoint we need some chemical capability.

Third, we need the capability—and I think this was brought up by the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE)—for battlefield equality. If, let us say, we are 10 or 15 years from today and we vote today never to produce any type of binary capability, then most certainly the remaining stockpile that we have will have eroded and would have been rendered totally useless, and any other adversary would, therefore, know with absolute assurance that we simply do not have this capability.

□ 1210

Then, a decade down the road, or 15 years down the road, or 20 years down the road, if, God forbid, there is an altercation, the other side could use the chemical weapons, or threaten to use same and we would have to suit up and they would not.

Under that situation, where one force has to suit up and the other does not, that force that does not has an obviously tremendous advantage.

I do not know whether anyone in this room has really put on one of those suits or seen one of those suits. It is very difficult to walk around. It is difficult to maneuver. It is difficult to do the simplest thing very often, and particularly over a long period of time.

Let me go into the thrust of the amendment.

Those against the concept of producing binary chemical weapons have made various statements. One of those statements was that we do not want to destroy our chemical weapons stockpile.

If in fact they believe that, then my amendment is the proper one.

What my amendment simply says is that we do not want to terminate our stockpile because of the aforesaid reasons with regard to suiting up, negotiations, and deterrence.

If you believe that we should not eliminate our capability, then what you really want to do is to make sure that our stockpile is safe and does not grow.

This leads me to the second statement made by the advocates of the amendment to delete all funds.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. COURTER) has expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. COURTER was allowed to proceed for 4 additional minutes.)

Mr. COURTER. The second reason they said was the fact that the issue here is not our stockpile, but proliferation, and here again is the beauty of my amendment. It does not create a scenario for increased proliferation. It does not permit it.

For every capsule of binary produced we eliminate a capsule in the stockpile, thus the end result is no proliferation, maintaining the deterrent capability, and making sure the existing stockpiles that we have, as time goes on, are safe, are modern, and do not increase.

I think my amendment has for those reasons a great deal of merit, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BETHUNE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I have listened carefully to the gentleman's statement and, more importantly, I have read the substitute the gentleman offers. I have read it very carefully.

What the gentleman is proposing turns out to be sort of a smokescreen because what the gentleman is permitting to be done under the substitute is for us to go right ahead and produce the binary weapons just like the committee wants to do, upon the condition that we will destroy one unitary chemical munition. That is what the gentleman's amendment says.

We have a lot of junk out there that we can destroy and comply with the gentleman's amendment. For instance, at the Pine Bluff Arsenal—and I have toured that arsenal and had the briefings down there, too—they have a stockpile of BZ weapons down there that they need to destroy. BZ is not nerve gas. It is an hallucinogen. That is all. If it got out, the whole of central Arkansas would be on a high for about 3 days. That is the worst case scenario.

But you could comply with the gentleman's amendment by going down there and destroying stuff that they are already planning to destroy. In fact, the Army has already notified us that it intends to destroy it.

Mr. COURTER. If I can regain my time from the gentleman, what this simply does is to guarantee that in fact they are going to do it.

Mr. BETHUNE. We are going to do it anyway.

Mr. COURTER. But basically your position is that we should through the medium of doing nothing and allowing these capabilities to erode, destroy totally and completely any deterrent capability we now have. That is the gentleman's amendment. That basically is your amendment.

What I am suggesting to you is during the next number of years everything that we have will be rendered useless. We will in fact have none.

So the basic issue here is for those people that do not want any deterrent chemical capability, that do not want to modernize, that do not want to make it environmentally sound, then they can go ahead with the Bethune amendment and the Zablocki amendment.

For those people that feel we need to have that deterrent capability, that we want to render our stockpile useful and modern but, indeed, we do not want to proliferate, we do not want to make more, we do not want to increase our capability but maintain it, then my substitute is the way to go.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

As I understand it, what the gentleman is offering is a substitute that would basically require an exchange or a reduction in the dangerous unitary gas we have now for every unit that is produced of binary agents.

In other words, we would be replacing the more dangerous substances by the less dangerous substances?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. COURTER) has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. HUNTER and by unanimous consent, Mr. COURTER was allowed to proceed for 4 additional minutes.)

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Is that correct?

Mr. COURTER. That is precisely correct. The gentleman stated it much more succinctly than I did.

Mr. HUNTER. So for those people who say let us keep some agents on hand, let us keep a supply on hand, it would make sense to go with the safer substance and to replace the dangerous substance as our technology comes on that allows us in fact to replace it because that is a problem.

We would be in fact reducing the costs that are attendant the securing and the demilitarization of the dangerous substances.

Mr. COURTER. That is correct. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I think, as my good friend from New Jersey knows, though, all units are not equal. I think the real crux of this issue right now is whether or not a binary or nerve gas capsule from 10 years ago is equal to that which would be produced at Pine Bluffs this year.

I do not think they are the same. I think we are talking apples and oranges.

One unit 10 years ago is in no way equal to one unit today.

Mr. COURTER. If the gentleman will permit me to respond, they are not equal. One is dangerous. One is antiquated and one can still kill just as much as the other.

So I am saying, I am mandating in my amendment that if we go forward and produce one binary weapon, we have to then render useless for military purposes something in the arsenal that we already have.

I think it makes eminent sense.

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BETHUNE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Safety keeps coming up. These things, the binaries, are untested dynamically; we do not know, and the gentleman cannot make any positive statements about that.

I mentioned the letter from the biochemist and all of those who have pointed out they may be carcinogenic. We just do not know, have not done the tests.

But the point I want to make is the 155 millimeter shell has to be distinguished from the rest of our stockpile. We have a number of chemical weapons out there and you have to distinguish the ones we are thinking about using from those that are already obsolete and we are not going to use under any circumstances. That is the point I am trying to make.

We have the 155 millimeter shell. We have the 8-inch shell. The 155 millimeter shell, by the way, we only have 33 out of our entire stockpile.

Mr. COURTER. If I could reclaim my time, could I ask the gentleman a question?

I am going to reclaim my time to ask the gentleman a question.

Is it not true that your position is that we should have absolutely none, zero that is, chemical warfare deterrent capability, zero? Is that your position?

Mr. BETHUNE. No. That is not my position.

Mr. COURTER. I believe that is the logical result of your amendment or the two amendments put together, because over time we are not going to have that capability.

The stuff we have there is going to erode. It is going to become more unsafe, more environmentally unsound, and we are going to have to get rid of it anyway.

If somebody has the position we should not have any type of capability, then they should vote for your amendment. If they do not believe that, I think they should vote for my substitute.

Mr. BETHUNE. Would the gentleman yield further, because I did not get to make my principal point.

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BETHUNE. The principal point is this: I know the gentleman intends to produce an amendment here which would authorize the Army to go ahead and start producing binary. Then you could argue we are destroying some of our existing stockpile and thus this is not production, is no increase.

□ 1220

Mr. COURTER. It is mandatory. It requires it. There is no option. They must do it.

Mr. BETHUNE. If the gentleman will yield, I do not think I have gotten the gentleman's attention on this point.

I know that is what the gentleman intends, and I know that is what the gentleman thinks his amendment does. But in fact his amendment does not do that. His amendment says that they shall destroy one unitary chemical munition.

The point I am making is that we have got a lot of unitary chemical munitions which we are going to destroy anyway, and the Army can comply with the gentleman's mandate here by destroying stuff that they are already going to destroy.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. COURTER) has expired.

(On request of Mr. BETHUNE and by unanimous consent, Mr. COURTER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. BETHUNE. The point I am trying to make is that just in March of this year, the Army put out a notice telling us that they intend to construct a facility at the Pine Bluff Arsenal to destroy a BZ weapon. So they are going to do that anyway. They can destroy those, and they are going to destroy them, and they can count that as complying with the gentleman's amendment, and you are right back to the committee's position.

Mr. COURTER. Just to sum up, I think the gentleman's position is clear. However, my substitute mandates. Perhaps the Department of Defense, perhaps the Army has some inclination to do what the gentleman says. My substitute requires it. It mandates it.

Once again, simply stated, my substitute permits us some chemical deterrent capability. The gentleman's amendment—not today, because we have an eroding stockpile—some day in the future means that the Soviet Union will have it and we will not.

Those people who vote in favor of the Zablocki amendment as amended by Bethune are simply saying that we want to denude ourselves of any deterrent capability, we want to walk into negotiations with nothing to negotiate with whatsoever. I think that would be a terrible shame.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the Courter amendment and in opposition to the Zablocki amendment.

Mr. Chairman, several years ago I had the opportunity to be in Germany and visited the Fulda Gap. The Fulda Gap is one of the traditional east to west invasion routes in the southern part of Germany. The other is in the northern part of Germany. We had an opportunity to visit with the troops on the line, the men and women who are there, facing the potential enemy. You can see the potential enemy, just across the line, with tanks and their various defensive postures. I asked those American troops, "What do you fear the most?" And they told me, "Artillery and chemical warfare." This is the concern.

There is a general concern, too, that with the armament and the capability the Soviets have, they could roll over Europe in 2 weeks and go to the English Channel. Not all of us believe that, but that is what some of the fear is because of the disparity of forces and the chemical warfare capability. And well those troops might be concerned because they know that the Soviets have at least 50 Soviet chemical warfare specialists to our 1. That is just one illustration of the disparity between the two.

The United States, as I understand it, is the only ally with any chemical warfare capability, to speak of, and that is certainly woefully depleted. That was shown by the chart showing that by the mid-1980's we will have only approximately 10 percent of our stockpile that can be used because of deterioration, because of the loss of launchers, because of the loss of the ability to project those forward, in the rear areas, and against enemy troops in a retaliatory or deterrent manner.

The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON) made a very significant point. This is the real world, not the world we would like it to be. It is known that Hitler was interested in using chemical warfare against our troops, but he resisted that temptation because he feared retaliation. What is not also known is that there was a recommendation to President Roosevelt to use chemical warfare in the Pacific theater, as in Iwo Jima, but he also resisted because of the fear of world opinion and retaliation against our troops. So both sides were deterred from using chemical warfare for the fear of retaliation from the other side. That is deterrence.

The men at Fulda Gap know today that we virtually have no chemical warfare capability or deterrent force to prevent the Soviets from using their chemical weapons. I really do not think those troops at the Fulda Gap or those who are replacing them, those who are facing the threat, are really very impressed about the virtue that we luxuriate in today, talking about, unilaterally keeping down our forces because that is really what we should morally do. Of course, that is a moral position. But unfortunately that is not the world today, and that is not the way to prevent temptation, for an enemy to use chemical weapons.

It was also mentioned by the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. HOLT) that the Navy cannot use our present chemical weapons today because they are unsafe. That means they cannot offshore bombard. So we have reduced our offensive capability.

What are we asking to do? We are asking to commence the manufacturer of a safe deterrent, a binary projectile that is in two parts and is not mixed until fired.

The amendment of the gentlemen from New Jersey (Mr. COURTER) is very rational. It says, in effect, we are not going to build any more chemical stockpile than we have at the present time. What we have is unsafe, and you have to produce binary weapons our country would have to equally reduce our stockpile. The President has to certify this equal reduction. If we do not have any alternative, we have no deterrence.

Tell me one instance in dealing with the Soviets, where we have successfully negotiated from a position of unilateral reduction. It has never happened, and it never will be in the world as it is.

What are the men at the Fulda Gap facing? These are the sons of your constituents, maybe even some of your own sons in the future or your grandsons in the future. Are you going to deny them the protection and the chance to deter and to fight back in the event of a chemical weapons attack?

The Soviet troops that they face have some of the following advantages, our intelligence tells us: Chemical units, at least 35 to 1; chemical personnel, at least 11 to 1; decontamination vehicles, at least 10 to 1; chemical munitions, either 4 to 1 or 10 to 1, although that is uncertain; chemical weapons systems, ground, 5 to 1; production facilities, 14 to 1. They have tremendously more ability to produce than we.

As I said earlier, the Soviet chemical troop strength is 50 times that of the U.S. Army chemical troops, and they are the best equipped and prepared in the world to launch chemical attacks and to operate under chemical warfare conditions.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. WHITE) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WHITE was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. WHITE. Listen to this: The Soviet training stresses attack through a contaminated area and exploitation of the results of offensive chemical operations. That is part of their basic offensive procedure.

Without adequate chemical warfare deterrent forces, our troops would be defensive. They would be fighting with protective clothing, which has already been mentioned, which reduces their efficiency in the battlefield, while the Soviets, without anything to fear, would not have to have that same encumbrance. Infantry under combat conditions often has a tendency to discard some of their gas equipment when they are moving forward under attack because it encumbers them, because it slows them and, therefore, makes them vulnerable to weaponry. So, therefore, they sometimes discard it, in the hopes of retrieving, or the expectation of not using it. Those troops which do not keep their equipment are going to be susceptible to attack unless we have the deterrent force to keep the other side from chemically attacking.

Now, if you think the Communist forces will not use chemical warfare, it has already been mentioned that you can just look at the evidence that we already have, the world as it is in Afghanistan and Cambodia. If you do not want the Warsaw Pact forces to gas and roll over NATO forces, including our Americans, give our troops the equipment and the deterrent force. If you do not want to force escalation to nuclear war, give us the deterrent force at a lower level. If you want peace, you have to deal from strength.

□ 1230

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, my colleagues know that I rarely take the well in this House. I do so this afternoon because of my deep-seated feelings about the perniciousness of the Zablocki and Bethune amendments.

I want to repeat a story that I told last year for the first time in this Chamber. I think it is cogent.

In 1978, a delegation from the Armed Services Committee of the House visited the Soviet Union and spent the better part of an afternoon with the Chief of Staff of the Soviet Army, Marshal Nikolai Ogarkov.

In the 3 or 4 hours that we had with him we had an opportunity to ask questions and one of the questions that I asked was, "Would you be willing to sign an agreement with the United States, to ban the use of chemical weapons?" He responded right away and positively, he said, "Absolutely, as a matter of fact, since last year, we have had a negotiating team in Geneva negotiating with an American delegation to this end."

It has been 4 years since we had that conversation. You tell me if you can measure any forward progress toward a negotiated end to the use of these terrible weapons?

There has not been any. So now we are told in these amendments we have an opportunity to make an agreement with the Soviets. They have tabled a proposal. But we should not go forward with any production of binary weapons.

I will tell my colleagues why there has not been any forward movement and why I do not think there will be any if we accept these amendments.

Listen to the Soviet advantage? Chemical units, 35 to 1. Chemical personnel, 11 to 1. Decontamination vehicles, 10 to 1. Chemical munitions, somewhere between 4 and 10 to 1.

Ground delivery systems, 5 to 1. And get this, because we have been talking about the production facilities this morning, there the edge is 14 to 1 technically, but actually it is 14 to 0, because we have not produced any weapons since 1969.

I get the feeling that what is being suggested here is a chemical freeze.

The gentleman from Arkansas sent a "Dear Colleague" letter around. In that letter he said, and I am quoting, "Our steadfast refusal to produce or use nerve gas will not go unnoticed," and quoting again, "If we hold to it, world opinion will rush to our side."

Well, reference has been made to the use of chemical weapons in Laos and Cambodia. Has world opinion rushed to our side? I barely heard a peep. So often the arguments are made if we do not do thus and so we will have world opinion. The gentleman from Texas, who just preceded me in the well, talked about the conversations he has had with soldiers and field commanders in Europe. I have had those same conversations. And he is absolutely right. The thing that they fear more from Soviet forces is an attack employing chemical weapons.

What is going to be our response? We are told we have a 30-day supply that we can use to come back with although there are sharp differences of opinion as to how it is going to be delivered.

I will tell my colleagues what the response is going to be. It is going to be a nuclear one. Who on Earth wants that kind of a result? Our goal I think is very clear. It is not the unrestricted production of nerve gas. The gentleman from New Jersey has pointed out in this amendment that all we want to do is replenish the stock and negotiate, if we can, a verifiable ban on the production and stockpiling and use of chemical weapons.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentlelman from Virginia (Mr. WHITEHURST) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WHITEHURST was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Chairman, we wish to provide our forces with chemical warfare protective equipment which we are going to do in this bill.

Until we negotiate such a ban, we wish to maintain a chemical warfare retaliatory capability adequate to deter an adversary from using his.

I will tell the Members something. You defeat the Courter amendment and pass the Zablocki-Bethune amendment, if you listen carefully you will hear the echo of Okargov's laughter in the Kremlin.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in support of the Zablocki amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take 5 minutes. I jokingly told people on a number of other amendments yesterday I thought there were about 60 people in this House who on any amendment would vote for the side that quit talking first. But let me simply take about 2 minutes to explain why I am in strong support of the Zablocki-Bethune amendments on this issue.

I would begin by addressing this question to the gentleman from Arkansas. We have heard here that if you adopt the Zablocki-Bethune amendments that we will somehow be assuring forever more that there will be no production of additional chemical weapons by the United States.

Is it not true that the limitation which the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Wisconsin are offering here today applies only to the 1983 bill?

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BETHUNE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

That is correct; only to the money that is in this bill for the production of the new binary weapon and new nerve gas weapon. It does not touch R. & D., it does not touch maintenance, it does not touch defensive.

Mr. OBEY. I thank the gentleman because I think that this subject is being overdebated and overdramatized and, as we often do on this floor, is being debated in terms of Armageddon rather than in terms of what the amendment actually does.

It seems to me that the only issue we are deciding today is whether or not to proceed with production of the binary nerve gas system at this time.

I underline those three words "at this time."

It may very well be necessary at some time to proceed.

I do not share the optimistic view of a number of people in this House that we are likely to achieve an agreement with the Soviet Union on this issue. I think it is highly unlikely that we will do so. But I do believe that we need to at least try for a variety of reasons, some of which are much larger than those related only to this narrow issue.

The Soviet Union is very good at exploiting the nervousness of Europe on virtually any occasion that we give them an opportunity. I would simply suggest to the House today that right now this country has a whole lot on its plate in terms of issues upon which we critically need the support of our NATO allies.

We have the issue of Poland which I think is extremely important and upon which as my colleagues know our European allies have been less than anxious to cooperate in terms of all of the initiatives which this administration has suggested.

We have the issue of Soviet trade limitations, and again we are having a great deal of difficulty in getting our European allies to follow the lead of the administration on this issue.

We have a wide variety of other trade issues, including agricultural issues, which relate to the East-West situation.

I just think that we ought to try to keep in mind that internationally, as is the case domestically, there is only so much that you can do at any one time without losing support for everything you are trying to do. The gentleman from Arkansas and I were members of a delegation which was in Europe a few months ago, and if anything struck me at that time it was how terribly dangerous it would be for us to underestimate the difficulty that this or any other administration is going to have in bringing our European NATO allies around to strong reliable support for us on a whole variety of issues, a number of which are at this moment much more important to us than is this issue.

I would respectfully suggest to the House that the administration needs, and we need right now more than anything else, to shore up support from our allies on arms control, on trade positions, on Poland and the like. Because of that fact I think this is precisely the wrong time to proceed with the development of this system.

This limit, as the gentleman from Arkansas has indicated, applies to now, it does not apply to the future.

□ 1240

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. OBEY was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. OBEY. We can change our judgment if we do not see any opportunity to work out an agreement with the Soviets; but I would urge you now not to take an action which will make Europe even more vulnerable than it is now to pressure from those within the European Community who would like to unilaterally disengage with the Soviets.

I must say something else. This is one of the few times when I think that Members ought to consider who is offering the amendment. There are very few Members in the House for whom I have more respect than the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI) and the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE). These are not knee jerk unilateral disarmers offering this amendment. These authors of this amendment today are extremely prudent legislators. They are extremely cautious. They have approached this in an extremely detailed way.

I would again simply point out that we are not making a decision which is forever more. We are making a decision for the moment and for the moment only.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

(At the request of Mrs. ROUKEMA, and by unanimous consent, Mr. OBEY was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. Yes, certainly.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I want to commend the gentleman for his statement, particularly his emphasis on the foreign policy aspect of this question.

I think under the discussion of the substitute, that it has somehow been implied that we are taking a step forever and ever, a unilateral step, which is of course not the case, as the gentleman has explained.

I would also like to point out in conjunction with the gentleman's statements on the NATO allies and our European problems, that in the record of the other body when they had this debate, it was pointed out extensively in quotations from Dr. Matthew Messelson, one of the foremost authorities in the United States on chemical weaponry, with respect to the overkill capabililty that we have in tonnage and he relates in testimony before the Appropriations Committee, as quoted in the record of the other body, that this is most detrimental to our NATO allies. That the overkill capacity that is presently contemplated by the administration is absolutely indescribable. We cannot even answer the question, what could our possible aim be? So we have gone beyond the question of stockpiling to the question of deployment. Why the magnitude of preparation?

It must mean something in terms of our foreign policy perspective, so I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. OBEY. I thank the gentlewoman.

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Courter substitute amendment.

Until we can achieve a complete verifiable ban on chemical weapons, our military must have the capability to deter chemical use against us or our allies. While the United States has exercised unilateral restraint for 13 years by not producing chemical weapons, the Soviets have continued to progress in this area until they now enjoy what could be a decisive military advantage. We should continue to exercise restraints; however, we cannot continue to ignore this serious threat to our forces. We will remain firmly committed to our longstanding policy of no first use of chemical weapons.

Further, the United States does not and will not possess biological or toxic weapons under any circumstances.

Most of the efforts and resources in the chemical warfare area is properly devoted to improving the chemical defense posture of the services. However, chemical protection alone is not adequate deterrent. The equipment and procedures for chemical defense are so restrictive that they degrade unit performance from 30 to 50 percent or even more for some difficult jobs.

I have recently come back from Bentwater in England. I had an opportunity to firsthand assess the equipment that our troops are required to wear to handle a chemical threat. It is a very difficult situation. There is no way that we can ask our troops to operate in this type of environment.

If our forces must operate in protective clothing and the enemy can operate unencumbered, we have a great disadvantage. He can gain a decisive battlefield advantage. However, if he is threatened by retaliation, he knows that he, too, would have to suffer the degradation imposed by chemical protection and would be deterred from initiating the use of chemical weapons.

I would remind you that since World War I, chemical weapons have never been used against a military force that could protect itself and retaliate. Even in the intense conflict of World War II, Hitler did not use his chemical arsenal. He believed the Allies stood ready to retaliate.

We all share a common objective: To eliminate the threat of chemical warfare. I believe that we have a far greater chance of achieving this objective if our adversaries perceive no advantage from using chemical weapons. The program to improve both our protective and retaliatory capabilities will deny the Soviet Union the military advantage they would now gain from using chemical weapons, and this will eliminate the incentive to use chemical weapons and instead will provide an incentive for serious arms control.

I urge you to join me in support of the substitute amendment.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HOLLENBECK TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. COURTER AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ZABLOCKI

Mr. HOLLENBECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment offered as a substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOLLENBECK to the amendment offered by Mr. COURTER as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. ZABLOCKI: At the end of the substitute amendment add the following: Page 26, after line 22, add the following new section:

TREATY ON CHEMICAL WEAPONS

SEC. 902. It is the sense of the Congress that the President should—

(1) actively promote negotiations among the member nations of the ad hoc working group on chemical weapons of the Committee on Disarmament established by the United Nations General Assembly and meeting in Geneva, Switzerland, for the purpose of the member nations agreeing to a treaty for the complete and verifiable prohibition of the development, production, and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and for the destruction of all chemical weapons; and

(2) communicate to the Government of the Soviet Union the willingness of the Government of the United States to proceed as soon as possible to conclude a treaty for the complete and verifiable prohibition of the development, production, and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and for the destruction of all chemical weapons.

Mr. HOLLENBECK. (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Objection is heard.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the amendment.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield

Mr. HOLLENBECK. Mr. Chairman, I would like, before I begin, to yield to the gentleman from Iowa for a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa is supposed to be at the White House at 1:15 for the signing of a bill. I have an amendment that applies to title I.

I ask unanimous consent that my rights be protected and that if we do complete title I, I might still have the opportunity to offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, is that within the province of the Chair, that this kind of unanimous-consent request is in order?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair is having difficulty hearing the gentleman from New York. Would the gentleman please repeat his point of order?

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, is that request proper when we have some 15 amendments pending and nobody knows exactly when an amendment will come? If everybody could be granted the same unanimous-consent request, we could be here until Christmas.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that by unanimous consent the Committee can preserve the gentleman's right to return to title I, by unanimous consent.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry with regard to the unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. COURTER. I am not certainly going to object. My question, my inquiry is, is the gentleman's right preserved with regard to his amendment, or when we come back, is title I open to everybody else as well, because the request has to do with the title and not the amendment?

□ 1250

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman's unanimous-consent request, as the Chair understands it, is to have his right protected to return for his amendment to title I, and his amendment alone.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, his amendment only; is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. That is what the Chair understands.

Mr. COURTER. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLLENBECK. Mr. Chairman, I commend my colleague from New Jersey for offering a worthy attempt at compromise on this issue and for his attention to trying to allay the fears many of us have over the promulgation of chemical weapons.

My amendment to the gentleman's substitute is designed to call specific attention to the need to actively promote negotiations among the member countries of the United Nations Committee on Disarmament and to communicate to the Soviet Union the willingness of our Government to proceed as soon as possible with bilateral negotiations for the purpose of concluding a treaty to ban chemical weapons.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened for a long time to the many arguments both in support and in opposition to the resumed production of chemical weapons. The arguments themselves have already been adequately made and do not in my opinion warrant further elaboration, at least not at this time.

For whatever our decision on the production of chemical weapons may eventually be, it should not, however, detract from our longstanding policy of a leadership role in behalf of negotiating and concluding verifiable and comprehensive treaties to ban forever the production of chemical weapons.

Mr. Chairman, clearly the issue at hand goes beyond the decision on whether or not to produce chemical weapons and in what shape or in what form. What is of far greater relevance is the ability of the United States and the Soviet Union to reach an agreement on chemical arms control.

No matter what you believe, whether you feel our initiation of a chemical weapons program would act as an inducement for Soviet relaxation of their position and lead to a verifiable agreement, or whether you believe any modernization of our chemical weapons stockpile will reduce the possibility of initiating a treaty, the purposes of the Nation and of the world are ultimately best served through a total ban on chemical weapons.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HOLLENBECK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STRATTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that the reason we do not have any chemical warfare negotiations going on at the present time is not because of the failure of the United States; it is because of the unwillingness of the Soviet Union to engage in those negotiations; is it not?

Mr. HOLLENBECK. The gentleman is correct. I am urging along these same lines that our negotiations continue further and that we take active initiatives toward bringing them into a negotiating posture.

Mr. STRATTON. I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment, but I do think it ought to be made clear in an era when millions of citizens mistakenly are trying to blame the United States for the arms race, and the threat of nuclear war, insisting that because we do not agree to a Soviet nuclear freeze proposal, then we are the ones who are endangering the planet. It was the Soviet Union that refused to negotiate on chemical weapons, and we ought to make that fact clear.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLLENBECK) has expired.

(On request of Mr. STRATTON and by unanimous consent, Mr. HOLLENBECK was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOLLENBECK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STRATTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I did not want to interrupt the gentleman's excellent presentation. It is not the Soviet Union that has refused to negotiate?

Mr. HOLLENBECK. I thank the gentleman for raising the point.

Mr. Chairman, to elaborate on that, we should note that the United States has always taken an active and positive role in previous efforts to ban chemical, and biological weapons as well, going back to 1969, as we know, when President Nixon ordered a moratorium on production of chemical weapons and renounced possession of all forms of poison and toxic weapons.

This initiative was followed by the 1972 Biological Weapons Convention decision to ban the development, possession, and production of germ warfare. Also, in 1972 the Committee on Disarmament began multilateral discussions to seek agreement on chemical weapons.

In 1976, President Ford continued that commitment when he launched bilateral negotiations, which the gentleman referred to, with the Soviet Union, seeking a treaty.

Mr. HAGEDORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLENBECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield at this time to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. HAGEDORN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to support the gentleman's amendment, but I think that the important thing is to point out that our Government has never been hesitant, and I sometimes feel we should not be suggesting that it is our Government, and I believe that is perhaps what this amendment does, but to those people in our society who honestly believe it is our Government's fault, we are going to clarify that matter right now.

I strongly support the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey for the alternate offset of the production of binary gas bombs by repealing and doing away with the stockpile.

Mr. HOLLENBECK. I thank the gentleman for his remarks. I think my remarks amply clarify the U.S. role in the history of this issue.

And I hasten to add that as recently as May 9, President Reagan did indicate that in the 40-nation Committee on Disarmament we would seek a total ban on chemical weapons.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLENBECK. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa, who has been patiently waiting and who has shown a great sensitivity in this area.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I largely agree with the gentleman's assessment of where responsibility lies, but I think it should be noted that the United States does have a certain degree of mutual responsibility and our Government has quite recently been responsible for calling off certain bilateral discussions in this area that I hope will resume very quickly.

But more importantly, with regard to the amendment, per se, this "intent of the Congress" approach represents the fourth effort in the last 3 years in which something similar to this in language has been presented to the Congress. Three similar ones that this gentleman presented, all have passed this body; none unfortunately appear to have had any effect.

I would only say to the gentleman that I strongly support his amendment but it does not sufficiently change the scope of the Courter amendment, that the Courter amendment should be supported.

The Zablocki-Bethune approach remains vastly preferable.

If the Courter amendment is defeated, I would be very hopeful that the amendment just offered by the gentleman from New Jersey would be amended to the approach of the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HOLLENBECK. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PRICE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, let me state at this time that I have just received a communication from the administration on the particular Courter amendment, and I would just like to read the letter that I have just received from the Secretary of Defense on this matter. It says:

THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, D.C., July 22, 1982.

Hon. MELVIN PRICE,
Chairman, Committee on Armed Services, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Administration supports the substitute amendment of Mr. Courter of New Jersey in that it allows the United States to replace the older unitary chemical weapons in the existing chemical munitions stockpile with modern binary chemical munitions that are much safer to produce, handle, transport, store and eventually dispose of. The President will certify that for each new binary weapon introduced into the stockpile, a chemical weapon from the existing arsenal will be rendered permanently useless for military pruposes. The Courter substitute is completely compatible with our intent to replace our retaliatory chemical weapons stockpile with one that is significantly smaller and safer. It would reduce the Soviet incentive to use chemical weapons while increasing our prospects to achieve a complete and verifiable ban on these weapons.

Sincerely,

CASPAR W. WEINBERGER.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE. I would yield to the gentlewoman, but I do not have the time.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman who does have the time yield to me?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore The time of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLLENBECK) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. HOLLENBECK was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. HOLLENBECK. Mr. Chairman, now that I do have the time, I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey, who has been very active in this matter.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like very much to support the gentleman's amendment because I totally agree with the thrust of it. However, when it is used as an amendment to the Courter proposal, which presupposes the production of binary nerve gas, I would have to oppose it for this reason: Binary would infinitely complicate any arms control verification procedures. It is commonly recognized, or at least open to serious question because of the satellite surveillance requirements, that binary are almost impossible to verify except by onsite inspection and, therefore, weapons complications binary would bring to arms control agreement verification procedures would be infinite and would thereby make the gentleman's proposal, unfortunately, incapable of implementation.

I would love to support the gentleman's amendment attached to the Zablocki-Bethune amendment.

Mr. HOLLENBECK. That amendment will be offered later anyway, perhaps by the gentlelady from New Jersey.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey, the author of the substitute, and a member of the committee.

□ 1300

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLENBECK. I yield to be gentleman, the author of the substitute amendment and member of the committee.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I would like to respond first of all to the statement of the gentlewoman from New Jersey about the fact that binary is more difficult to detect than other types of chemical weapons. I as a Member of the Armed Services Committee, and I know there are others who have sat on that committee a good deal longer than I have, have certainly not received any testimony from any credible source or any source whatsoever that would corroborate the statement that binary weapons are more difficult to find or verify than any other type of chemical weapons. They are all very difficult; let us face it.

Second, the gentlewoman from New Jersey indicated that she had a problem with this amendment because of concern about binary chemical weapons. Unless I misunderstood, this amendment does not talk about binary whatsoever. Is that correct?

Mr. HOLLENBECK. It merely expresses the sense of the Congress that the President should actively promote negotiations multilaterally with the Committee on Disarmament and bilaterally with the Soviet Union.

Mr. COURTER. I thank the gentleman. As such, I think the gentleman's amendment to my substitute has a great deal of merit. I think it once again shows that the true intention of the United States is to hold out the olive branch while remaining strong as well, and to a very large extent it improves my substitute. I congratulate the gentleman. I hope his amendment to my substitute passes, and then of course the substitute passes as well.

Mr. HOLLENBECK. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLENBECK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague for yielding. I too want to extend my congratulations to the gentleman on his amendment. My colleague, Mr. COURTER, has just expressed, I think, as well as I could my feelings as well, and I would to associate myself with his remarks.

I think it is very important that we establish the willingness of the United States to be a leader in negotiating, not limitation, but removal of chemical warefare.

As far as the comment about verification is concerned, I believe that the gentleman is offering here an opportunity to promote the beginning of onsite verification. That is necessary, and if we are going to have limitations and reduction in nuclear arms, we must have onsite verification and if we are going to have meaningful control of chemicals, and I do not care whether they are binary or not, any chemical is extremely difficult to detect and probably impossible if we are going to rely on satellite and technical surveillance only. We must have onsite verification. So, I think the gentleman is opening an area of negotiation that is very important as far as disarmament of various forms and the future of the world are concerned. I salute the gentleman for it, and let us press ahead.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLENBECK. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the amendments offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI), and the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE) to delete funding and prohibit renewed production of chemical weapons.

The defense authorization bill we are considering today provides for many necessary improvements in our national defense capabilities. Throughout the past decade, the percentage of our Federal budget devoted to the military steadily declined while the Soviet Union engaged in a military buildup of unprecedented size and duration. During that time, many in this country hopefully believed this buildup would end as the Soviets achieved military parity with the United States, but it is clear now that they were sadly mistaken. Now we must accept the unpleasant but vital task of working to maintain our capability to defend ourselves and our allies against foreign aggression.

I believe our people have the will to meet this challenge, and that our economy, inherently superior to that of the Soviet Union, can provide the necessary resources. However, in planning this effort, it would be a tragic mistake for this Congress to embark on a course of reacting reflexively to every Soviet military decision and accepting without thought the unforseen moral and geopolitical consequences which present Soviet military policies imply. Resumption of the production of chemical weapons by the United States in order to match Soviet offensive capabilities would be a striking example of such a mistake.

Chemical weapons are most effective against poorly equipped troops positioned in rugged and sparsely populated terrain, conditions which generally imply fighting against Third World forces. The Soviets have repeatedly endorsed this view by their use of chemical weapons in Yemen in the late 1960's and in Southeast Asia and Afghanistan in more recent years. These are the only times, incidentally, when such weapons have been used anywhere in the world since the Geneva protocol condemning their use was adopted in 1925. The demonstrated fact of Soviet capability and willingness to use chemical weapons against the people of the Third World should rightfully serve as powerful testimony revealing the true nature of the growing Soviet adventurism in the underdeveloped regions of the world.

Chemical weapons, of course, can also be used in densely populated, readily accessible areas such as Europe, but they are far less effective against properly trained and equipped troops and are far more likely under such circumstances to maim and kill noncombatants. At this time of apparent confusion of many in Europe, inexplicable though it may seem, regarding whether the United States or the Soviet Union poses the greater threat to the safety of Europe, Soviet production and deployment of chemical weapons there should serve to clarify for many the offensive character of the Soviet forces, just as our channeling increased resources toward improved protection for NATO forces against chemical attack would emphasize NATO's essentially defensive purposes.

The point I am making here, Mr. Chairman, is that the most powerful, most dangerous weapon on the face of the Earth to the principles we stand for and believe in are not necessarily nuclear weapons or chemical or biological. Perhaps the weapon we must most be concerned about is the weapon of propaganda. And while we know and must be tremendously concerned with the great advances the Soviets have achieved in nuclear weapon sophistication—and obviously, if such a term applies—in chemical weapon sophistication—those gains in the past decade have been matched, perhaps outstripped by their sophistication in propaganda.

A fight we are waging and must wage is for the hearts and minds of the common man of this world, principally the people of the emerging Third World nations in Asia, Africa, and in Central and South America. The American people have been made aware of the Soviets treachery not only in producing, but in using mycotoxins on innocent Afghan and Loatian civilians, and I must commend the Wall Street Journal for its persistence and courage—and condemn the lack of it by most other print and almost all electronic media in our country—in making us know and understand what the Soviets were doing. But most of the people of the world, including the Soviet people, know nothing of these violations, because they exist in closed societies with controlled press.

We do not—and thank God we do not live in such a society. Our action here today will be watched by the world, because ours is an open society and the Soviets will maximize propaganda efforts. Chemical weapons first used in World War I so revulsed the world that nations agreed to ban their use forever. Resumption of production of chemical weapons now, by the United States, would be interpreted worldwide as an abdication by us of the principles we profess to believe in, and will undermine, far more than any lethal threat by the Soviets, against which we can defend, the credibility of our country in that very real war that is fought every day in every part of the world for the future of freedom on this planet.

Mr. HOLLENBECK. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, it is important, I think, that we realize that the United States reaffirm at this time its longstanding policy in support of concluding a treaty to ban chemical weapons. The amendment to the substitute puts the Congress on record in strong support of renewed talks. It encourages the President to actively promote negotiations, and expresses to the Soviet Union our willingness to proceed with bilateral negotiations to seek a truly comprehensive treaty. This action will serve to reaffirm U.S. policy on chemical weapons and will place upon the Soviet Union the burden of proof as to their actual intentions for all the world to see.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this amendment.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might have the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey. He, in our previous colloquy, agreed that the Soviet Union was the one that had declined to enter into negotiations, and several comments were made on the other side that they were concerned that this amendment might suggest that we were the ones that were at fault. I wonder if the gentleman from New Jersey would be willing to request unanimous consent to modify his amendment by inserting on line 11, after the word "Union" the words, "which until now has repeatedly refused to engage in negotiations looking toward ending the threat of chemnical warfare."

Mr. HOLLENBECK. Mr. Chairman, who is requesting this?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is the gentleman from New York making a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HOLLENBECK. I would have no objection.

Mr. STRATTON. From a parliamentary point of view I thought the maker of the amendment would have to request it, but if that is not in order, I would make that unanimous-consent request so that we have here the second paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 14, after the word "Union" of the Hollenbeck amendment insert the words, "which until now has repeatedly refused to engage in negotiations looking toward ending the threat of chemical warfare".

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) to modify the amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, before I make some prepared remarks let me just comment about the Courter amendment, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey. It is based on the principle, basically, that there is more reliability in the binary weapons system as opposed to the present unitary system. The whole argument of the Courter amendment, and the argument obviously now of the administration, which has come forward at the 11th hour to support this amendment, is based upon reliability. I think the following facts should be made very clear to the Members who are paying attention to this debate:

First, it has been suggested by the former director of development at the Army Chemical System Laboratory, a director for many, many years of our CW efforts, that without open-air testing of the binary system, which we do not have and which I do not believe will be allowed on our soil, 20 to 30 percent of the 155-millimeter shells would be duds and 50 percent of the Navy's proposed Bigeye bombs would be duds. We have to compare that to the existing system, where less than 1 percent of the existing weapons have failed to fire.

It has also been suggested here in the debate that the present system of unitary CW weapons is diminishing. That is not true either. In fact, since 1977, through a refurbishing program, we have increased the number of weapons we have in our chemical warfare arsenal.

The gentleman from Virginia about an hour and a half ago, I guess, on the floor, and several others since then, have suggested to us that the Soviets do not want to negotiate when in fact the real point of negotiations has been impeded or stopped by the Reagan administration. We have had negotiations for literally years until the Reagan association came into office. They stopped negotiations on chemical warfare. That is why I did not object, frankly, to the inclusion of the gentleman's modification of the Hollenbeck amendment, Mr. STRATTON's inclusion, when he suggested to us that it is Soviet intransigence.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman makes a point, but I would not carry it too far. Let us be very clear. The past three administrations have not seriously approached the chemical weapon issue. I happen to be chagrined that the Reagan administration is not doing well, but they are doing as much as the Carter administration did, as much as the Ford administration did, and frankly, as much as the Nixon administration prior to it on the chemical weapon issue, although under the Nixon administration we did negotiate the Biological Weapons Convention.

I would like to stress here that the Biological Weapon Conventions contains in article 7 a commitment of the United States of America and other parties to the convention to pursue further negotiations toward a convention prohibiting the development, production, and stockpiling of chemical weapons.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. The gentleman makes my point. I would not argue with his assertion. That point is, that it has not been just the Soviet Union that has been the obstructionist in trying to get an agreement here. It has been both parties. It seems to me the inclusion of that modification, certainly from my standpoint, does not make the amendment any more attractive.

□ 1310

Mr. Chairman, I would like to just make some general remarks. I think my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) put it well when he said that we sometimes tend to lose sight of what we are talking about when we get into arguments on four or five pending amendments.

So strong—and many Members have indicated this in the course of the debate—was our commitment to reducing production of chemical weapons that neither side resorted to chemical warfare in fighting World War II. So strong was that commitment that three different administrations, as was just pointed out, from both parties, over 13 years, have gone beyond the Geneva protocol of 1925 and renounced not just the first use but continued production of chemical weapons.

In a period of wrenching budget decisions, resuming production of chemical weapons will add anywhere from $6 to $10 billion by 1987 to an already strained defense budget, money that can only come at the expense of other programs.

This week we have seen—and this was just the other day—the Armed Services Committee come forward with committee amendments to cut major programs. It is clear that whatever the talk of unlimited defense spending, priorities are going to have to be set.

Can we honestly say that the resumption of chemical weapons is more important than the Navy's need for new ships? Can we honestly say that resumption of chemical weapons is more important than measures that will help us retain senior noncommissioned officers?

The decision to begin production of chemical weapons, after all of these years, after President Nixon stopped them in late 1960, is important in its own terms, vitally important; yet it also involves much broader issues. Clearly, it hinges on large decisions and reflects an overreaching defense strategy.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BONIOR of Michigan was allowed to proceed for 4 additional minutes.)

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the United States needs to strengthen its relationship with Western Europe; yet it has been mentioned several times that production of chemical weapons does exactly the opposite. In Europe the decision of the United States to produce chemical weapons seems to reflect the logic of the neutron bomb carried to a brandnew extreme. Chemical weapons will leave not merely the buildings but the soldiers as well, concentrating death with an eerie precision on civilians alone.

Should it surprise us that NATO's North Atlantic Assembly adopted a resolution in November of 1980 stating that "proposals to deploy new offensive chemical weapons in Europe would provoke a strong public reaction * * *"? Should it surprise that the Social Democratic Party of West Germany responded to the administration's decision to resume production with a resolution rejecting "the manufacture and storage of bacteriological and chemical warfare agents in the Federal Republic of Germany"? And the Social Democrats in Germany certainly are not alone on this issue.

The United States needs to establish its worldwide credibility as a forceful advocate for arms reduction; yet the production of binary chemical weapons does exactly the opposite. Progress had been made in bilateral negotiations with the Russians; yet production of chemical weapons impedes additional gains. It commits us to a policy of escalation as a precondition to further negotiations.

The Russians are using chemical weapons, but that hardly argues that it becomes appropriate for us to do so and for us to become coconspirators. It argues instead that we forcefully use the forums of international law and diplomacy in addressing this most important issue.

We must learn from the mistakes of the past. Across the Third World, the United States has lost possession of the titles of freedom and economic justice, and we pay daily for that loss. Who among us would not have less money to spend on Third World arms stockpiles and a greater stockpile of credibility among Third World people? Which would better serve our interests today? Which would better serve our security?

Let the Russians confuse security with weapons at any cost. Let the United States remember that our security is also based on the allegiance of people and the mighty weapon of popular support.

There are, then, larger issues at stake today. In deciding whether or not to begin production of chemical weapons, the House will also decide, whether we like it or not, what this Nation really means by a cooperative relationship with our allies and whether this Nation really supports arms reductions.

In the end, as we are so many times, we are asked on this floor, and we are going to be asked again, to believe that this weapons system is better simply because it is newer and necessary simply because it is conceivable. This is a logic that is all too familiar to this body, and its implications are very, very clear.

Greek myth tells us that once the Pandora's box is opened, it is difficult to contain the evil that escapes. I urge my colleagues to think long and deeply before we open Pandora's box of binary chemical weapons.

Today we can send a signal reaffirming our Nation's commitment to humanity and commonsense or we can threaten our allies and enemies alike with a return to the dark days when deadly gas hovered over the battlefields of Europe.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support the amendment that has been offered by my colleague, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE) and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI) and to look with close scrutiny at those that have been suggested by other Members who have since offered substitutes.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to advise the committee that I am just in receipt of a communication from the White House, and it states as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D.C., July 22, 1982.

Hon. MELVIN PRICE,
Chairman, Committee on Armed Services, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am advised that Jim Courter of New Jersey will offer an amendment to the fiscal year 1983 Defense Authorization Act that would in effect require the removal of one unitary munition from our stockpile of chemical weapons with the introduction of each new binary weapon.

I wanted to convey to you the President's complete support for the amendment. The Administration's objective is to provide the smallest and safest chemical munition stockpile that will deter the Soviets from using chemical weapons while we work toward our goal of a complete and verifiable ban on chemical weapons.

I strongly urge that the Courter amendment be passed by the House.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM P. CLARK.

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, as we look back over the last year and a half of U.S. policy, we find that we have had an incredible ability to take the world's attention away from the Soviet Union's aggressive behavior and put America in the worst possible light.

A year and a half ago the world's attention was focused on the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the tragic situation of martial law in Poland. But, in recent months we have turned that attention away from Soviet activity and toward U.S. policy in El Salvador and then to America's own nuclear arms policy, placing America in what could be perceived as the aggressor role in the eyes of most Europeans. In light of this, I think that one of the things we are facing here today. as we consider our potential for starting a new kind of arms race in chemical weapons, is the question of how this action is going to be perceived in Europe.

It is very difficult, even for Members who have spent an enormous amount of time looking at these two chemical weapons systems, unitary and binary, to decide conclusively which one is better militarily. In listening to the debate today I have decided that there are few advantages, if any, to the binary system as opposed to the unitary system that is now in our stockpile. It seems to me that we would gain very little in terms of military utility by producing new binary chemical weapons.

But, what we do have if we do not stop these plans for renewed production of nerve gas is an incredible opportunity to further alienate our European allies. I believe that was understood by the administration when it failed to live up to the law that called for a survey of our allies' positions on chemical weapons. Specifically, the Congress agreed in the conference on fiscal year 1982 defense appropriations to language requiring the administration to provide a country-by-country report on the views of our NATO allies on chemical weapons before any requests were made for funding of nerve gas production. The administration chose to ignore the letter and spirit of the law in what, I think, was fear of what they would discover regarding European abhorrence of these weapons. I think that the administration knew that the Europeans would report very negatively on nerve gas. I think that the administration knew that our NATO allies would in fact refuse deployment of any nerve gas on their soil. What the administration certainly does know is that new or existing chemical weapons stocks are worthless if they cannot be deployed in Europe. That is why they blatantly ignored congressional mandate, in fact the law, to report on Europe's views on the subject.

We are all, aware of the recent strains in our relations well with our relations with the governments of Europe over the gas pipeline. There have been disagreements over U.S. approach to arms control. And today we have here an opportunity to further alienate not only the governments of Europe but, I am afraid, the people of Europe as well.

Mr. Chairman, I would hope that the House would support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI).

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, we appear to be moving toward the end of this very instructive debate, and we soon will be moving toward voting on a rather complicated set of amendments. I hope that situation will be explained in detail before we get the Members out of their offices and onto the floor to vote.

Let me just observe that this is a rather remarkable change from the debate that went on yesterday. Yesterday we had Members arguing over which area of the country was going to get a Government program.

□ 1320

Today we have Members arguing over which area of the country is not going to get a Government program. I think it does change the attitude a little bit and it provides relief from some of the tension that we had on yesterday.

Let me just summarize, if I may, on two particular points. First, there can really be no reasonable, informed debate over the question of whether the current stockpile of noneffective chemical weapons in the U.S. arsenal really represents any significant deterrent capability against the monumental Soviet chemical arsenal. It is no good. It is even dangerous. Even the gentlewoman from Colorado (Mrs. SCHROEDER) who wanted those ancient weapons moved out of her State of Colorado to Utah where they ultimately were moved was terrorized by the fact that when they went out of Colorado they were in such an unstable condition they might explode and wipe out the people of Colorado. Fortunately that did not happen.

There can also be no reasonable informed debate over the question that the reason we are asking the right to establish a binary chemical weapons system is for the sole purpose of deterrence. In chemical warfare we are grossly inferior to the Soviet Union, as has already been pointed out; and when we provide modern chemical weapons we are providing a deterrent against the possiblity of them being used against us, and thus are protecting our service personnel in Europe and elsewhere, as well as our loved ones back in the Continental United States.

It is incredible to me that people should be getting up here and saying that these terrible binary weapons are so awful that they cannot be verified. The reason they cannot be verified is simply that the two parts of them are each nontoxic, and they would not explode even if they were driven up and down the ski slopes of Colorado.

The only way they can become toxic is after they have been fired from a shell.

We have also had some interesting discussion about what various retired admirals who were never connected with chemical warfare have said about the situation. And we have had experts presumably to tell us what they think is the philosophy of the Kremlin.

The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WHITEHURST) mentioned a little while ago his conversation with Marshal Okargov.

I would like to mention just three personal experiences of my own which lead me to oppose very vigorously the Zablocki amendment.

Back in 1973 the distinguished gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. HOLT) and I and some other members of the Armed Services Committee visited the Middle East at the conclusion of the Yom Kippur war. The Israelis invited us to take a look at the captured equipment that they had picked up from the Egyptians. It was all Soviet equipment.

We found that every item of Soviet equipment included a detailed, complex, defensive gas warfare capability. You do not carry a defensive gas warfare capability unless you are prepared to use chemical warfare yourself offensively.

That was the first real evidence we had of the wide extent of the Soviet chemical preparations and it made a tremendous impact on the Pentagon when we reported to them.

A few years later—in 1980, to be exact—the Armed Services Committee had occasion to visit in Pakistan, at Peshawar.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) has expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. STRATTON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. STRATTON. In Peshawar we had the unique opportunity to meet with some of the earliest of the Afghanistan freedom fighters who were in camps in Peshawar. We asked them to explain some of their experiences while they were under attack from the Soviet Union. They described this "yellow rain" which was coming out of the sky and falling on them and people were collapsing and dying right and left.

This was one of the first pieces of real evidence that the United States picked up with respect to the charges of Soviet offensive chemical warfare in the Afghanistan campaign.

The third event concerns the unique opportunity I had, by appointment of the President, of serving for some 5 weeks in New York as a member of the U.S. delegation to the second special session on disarmament of the U.N. General Assembly. As one of the American representatives I had occasion during the consideration of what were regarded as new initiatives for peace to emphasize the new initiative which President Reagan had presented to the General Assembly in his speech on June 17 when he said:

> We ought to go on record as United Nations in urging all of the countries against whom charges have been made of chemical warfare attacks to open up their borders so that the U.N. chemical expert team can verify the allegations of chemical warfare and "yellow rain."

The Soviet Union, of course, is in charge of Afghanistan and Vietnam, is in charge of Laos and Kampuchea. The President proposed that those countries ought to urge them to open up their borders so that the U.N., not a U.S., but a U.N. team of chemical experts, can go in and verify the truth or falsity of the claims of chemical warfare and yellow rain in Southeast Asia that have been made so frequently. In spite of numerous attempts by the U.N. to get their team of experts into those countries and repeatedly they have been denied.

I happened to mention this fact in a statement at the particular U.N. committee that was considering new initiatives and pointed out that the Soviet Union was still refusing to open up Afghanistan as President Reagan had urged. At the conclusion of my remarks you would have been surprised to see the Soviet Ambassador immediately hit the roof. He did not answer the question. Instead he decided to attack me. What does some Congressman from Washington know about chemical warfare? he said. What does he know about what is going on in Afghanistan? The Ambassador spent about 10 minutes berating me.

Of course this did not bother me because in this parliament I am used to that. But he studiously avoided answering the implied question that if the Soviet Union was not using chemical warfare in Afghanistan, why would they still hesitate to permit the U.N. team of chemical experts to enter Afghanistan?

After the Soviet delegate had finished, the Vietnam delegate got up and he, too, began to berate me because he said the United States had used agent orange in Vietnam. But agent orange was not a poison gas, but simply a defoliant, just like DDT. The Vietnam delegate also made no response to the question of why Vietnam was not opening up the areas under its control, if, in fact, they had not used chemical warfare.

The Afghanistan delegate, who apparently was not quite as fast on his feet as the other two, reserved his time for the following day.

I did not happen to be on hand that next day but I did get a transcript of his remarks. They, too, were very derogatory, although once again there was a clear refusal to say why if they were innocent they would not agree to allow the U.N. experts, not U.S. experts, but U.N. experts to come in and seek out the truth or falsity of the charges.

So it is obvious we are touching and did touch a very sensitive nerve with the Soviets whenever we mention chemical warfare. The least we can do is to demonstrate that we intend to go ahead to develop a necessary deterrent to the obviously overwhelming Soviet capability in this field.

● Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to say that I do not appreciate being cited by the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) as supporting the construction of binary chemical weapons. I will vote for the Bethune and Zablocki amendments because I believe that the minimal military ability of such weapons is far outweighed by humanitarian, political, and economic considerations.

The Rocky Mountain Arsenal is located at the end of the runway to Stapleton Airport in Denver. The Army used this facility to store old, leaky chemical bombs, Weteyes. We fought to get the Army to get rid of these bombs, particularly because they were being kept very close to the center of Denver. The Army announced plans to move them to Utah. We were, obviously, concerned about their transportation, given their instability and age.

My support for getting rid of leaking, deadly weapons from downtown Denver does not mean I support building newer and more powerful chemical weapons. In fact, my experience with the Weteyes convinces me that the risks and dangers to our own people from these weapons are so serious that we should not buy them at all.

I hope no one was misled by the statements of my colleague. I oppose the deployment of binary chemical weapons.●

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I would like to associate myself with remarks of the gentleman from New York. I think he is very knowledgeable. He has studied this question very carefully.

I find even the discussion of such horrible weapons to be very distasteful. But to me, my responsibility as a Member of this body is to provide our young people, that we have asked to go out and be on the front line of the defense of this country, with the very best, safest, most effective deterrent that we can give them, to avoid their being harmed as they defend us.

I feel strongly that we should oppose the Bethune amendment. I think that takes away our opportunity to provide that kind of effective, safe weapons system to deter the Soviet Union from using anything of this nature.

□ 1330

I would strongly support the Hollenbeck amendment and the Courter amendment.

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, the Hollenbeck proposal is a good proposal. No one can argue with the words which are contained in that proposal. But it does not correct the flaw in the Courter substitute. So, therefore, I encourage Members to oppose the Courter substitute for this reason: The Courter substitute is nothing more than an Armed Services Committee smokescreen to get the same result that they are trying to get in the bill that they brought to the floor.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BETHUNE. No, not yet, Let me finish my statement, and then I will yield to the gentleman, because this point did not stick a while ago. I made it over and over, but it never did quite stick.

The Courter amendment simply says that if you produce a binary weapon, then you have got to destroy one of the chemical weapons from the existing stockpile. That means nothing. That adds nothing. Nor does it take away anything from the bill that the committee brought to the floor, because there is plenty of stuff on hand that the Army can destroy and comply with the Courter substitute's mandate. So it really changes nothing. The committee is still trying to get the mandate to produce binary and coming up with a rather illusory suggestion that they are going to be getting rid of some chemical weapon in exchange therefore and not therefore building up the stockpile. That is just not so.

The Members of the other body—and this is very important—were quick enough to catch this. The same effort was tried on the other side. And in an amendment that was brought to the floor over there there was a proviso that they shall destroy a unitary shell from the existing arsenal for each binary produced. Members of the other body were quick enough to see what was going on there, and they knew that the Army was not going to destroy anything except old stuff that had to be destroyed anyway. And so before they voted, they were certain to get in this language: "For each binary shell produced, a serviceable unitary artillery shell from the existing arsenal shall be rendered permanently useless."

Now, that is a big distinction. As I say, at Pine Bluff Arsenal right now, there is a stockpile of BZ chemical munitions which is just a halucinogenic munition. It is not nerve gas. And they can destroy one of those, which they fully intend to destroy anyway. They are setting aside $37 million right now to build a plant to destroy those munitions. And then it is going to take another $25 million, by the way, to go ahead and carry out the destruction after they build that facility. That is already on the board. The plans are already drawn. I was down there last weekend to look at the proposed site. So they are going to destroy a bunch of that stuff anyway, and that would count as a munition destroyed under the Courter substitute. So it is just a charade. At first it was a charade brought to us by the Defense Committee, but now we have the Secretary of Defense participating, since he sent his letter over embracing the substitute, and now we have got the White House participating, inasmuch as Mr. Clark also sent a letter over. We ought to be getting the big one here in about 15 minutes, I suppose, to complete the plan.

The fact of the matter is that the binaries which are suggested as a needed replacement are costly at a time when we are trying to save money. They are untested. They are not as effective.

By the way, that is a good point. The existing artillery shell has explosive in it, and when it comes down it bursts and shoots that chemical out, and we know that because we tested it dynamically. We have not tested the binary dynamically, and from what we know about it all we can suppose is that when it comes down it will have something near the same result. But the theoreticians who have looked at it have said no, that is probably not what will happen. Since it does not have the explosives in it, in all likelihood when the binary mixes and goes off it will puff up in the air and be carried downwind. So they argue that it is not as effective. No one can dispute that because there has been no dynamic testing, only simulant testing.

Furthermore, as to safety, we do not know what is in this binery weapon. The Nobel winners that I mentioned, the chemists and the biochemists, have suggested there may be some carcinogenic difficulties with it later on down the line. Who knows?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BETHUNE was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. BETHUNE. Back when the BZ, the hallucinogen that I mentioned, was produced, they said that it would not be of any particular difficulty. So we spent $12 million producing the BZ weapon, which is the one we have got on hand, down at Pine Bluff Arsenal right now. And now we have got to get rid of it. Somebody decided we do not need that anymore, that it is not a good military strategy or tactic to follow anymore, so we have got to get rid of the BZ weapons.

Do you have any idea, I ask the Members, what it is going to cost to get rid of the BZ stockpile that we have got down there? I do. They are going to build a plant. It is going to cost $36 million. And then they are going to spend $25 million to operate that plant. Now, I am not real good at ciphering, but I figured it out, and for the 1,500 BZ munitions they have got on hand, you are talking $40,000 per munition to destroy just a hallucinogenic BZ munition. That is the cost of destroying those.

So here we got into this pattern, where some time ago we built the BZ weapon at great cost, and now, some years later, we are having to destroy it at four times the cost so that we can build a new weapon which is less effetive, untested, at great cost, so that one day our children and our children's children can figure out how to dispose of it at great cost. It is nuts. It just does not make sense.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BETHUNE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. My colleague makes a very good point, and since he is discussing the technical aspects and the insane effects of this whole exercise, I think it is important also to point out the sound signature of the binary weapons system. You can hear it. It is distinct. It lets everybody know it is coming. Whereas the existing unitary system, with its launching, is disguisable. That is another kink that has not been worked out.

Mr. BETHUNE. Not only that but, of course, the unitary is odorless, and in the case of the Bigeye, we have already pointed out it has the odor of sulfur as well as the noise, and it can be detected quite quickly.

Anyway, I think the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) made a good point. The amendment that we offer is not one to unilaterally disarm, nor is it an irreversible decision. What we are saying is that, under the facts and circumstances that exist at this time, the proper thing to do, having doubt—and I think doubt has been created here—is to stick with the existing policy, one we have held since 1969. It has served us well. It will continue to serve us well. If as time goes by—and, by the way, these munitions that you are talking about, these binaries, would not come on line, the Bigeye, for some 3 to 4 or 5 years, and nearly as long for the other ones. So if it appears 6 months from now, after the President meets with the Soviet Premier and other things, that this would then be the course to take, this Congress can do that. But I do not think the evidence is here that we ought to throw away the policy that has served us well since 1969.

By the way, if I thought the evidence was here and if I thought the Pine Bluff Arsenal was the place to do it, I would be the first to say so. The gentleman from New York alluded to that a moment ago. And I would remind the gentleman that politicians are not believable, so I would never try to describe my own motivations. But I would say this to the gentleman, inasmuch as I do represent one-half million people in the central district of Arkansas: To the extent that the gentleman's comment that we do not want this somehow reflects that the people of Arkansas are frightened of it or that they do not want to do their part, I would remind the gentleman that in the State of Arkansas we have 16 Titan missiles. We used to have 17, but one of them blew up in September 1980. And did you see the people of Arkansas parading around with signs and demonstrating, such as you might have seen in some parts of this country? No. They want to do their part. This gentleman came into the well of this House shortly thereafter and supported the Titan project in a colloquy with the chairman. This gentleman also supported the MX missile, and so did the people of Arkansas. So to the extent that the gentleman's comment might suggest that the people of Arkansas somehow through their Representative here are not willing to do their part and that they are not brave and that they are not people who can understand risks and accept them in the interest of national defense the gentleman was in error and I think the gentleman should clarify the point.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BETHUNE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STRATTON. The question that I wanted to ask the gentleman is that when he talks about this $45 million plant, or whatever it is, that is going to be coming into his State, is not that going to supply some additional jobs for Arkansas? We have got a lot of jobless people around the country, and my understanding is that the gentleman has those problems even in Arkansas. Not many States are going to get a $45 million plant.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BETHUNE was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. STRATTON. I would think that that would be something that the gentleman would not want to overlook.

Mr. BETHUNE. Certainly that is an element that every Member ought to consider. But let me suggest to the gentleman that it is about 999 on the list of things I consider when I try to come to a decision on a question that has as far-reaching an implication as production of chemical weapons. Frankly, I do not know how many jobs it might bring to the State of Arkansas or to my district. And, frankly, I think that is irrelevant when we are talking about something as significant as chemical weapons, as significant as abandoning a policy that we have held since 1969.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BETHUNE. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. I thank my colleague from Arkansas for yielding.

The gentleman was in a colloquy with the gentleman from New York, talking about the reaction of the people of Arkansas for or against this project. I do represent the district in which this project will be located.

□ 1340

When they had an environmental impact hearing in Pine Bluff with adequate public notice to the community to come in and state any objections that they would have, not only for those citizens who lived in and around Pine Bluff, which would include the State capitol of Little Rock, only 45 miles away, I will tell this body that not one single person showed up to testify in opposition to this project.

Mr. BETHUNE. If I could reclaim my time, I would say the gentleman just proved my point, that is not relevant to the discussion here whatsoever, it is certainly not what motivated me to take the well and discuss this issue. And that is aside from the question whether or not I could convince through testimony and art of persuasion that this politician's motives have nothing to do with parochial concerns.

I do not think that has anything to do with this debate. What I would say is that when Members vote on this issue, you need to search your souls and what you need to do I believe, given the circumstances that exist at this time, is to vote for the Zablocki-Bethune amendment and vote down the Courter amendment.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I know that we have been debating this for many, many hours and I wanted to finish up by emphasizing a couple of things.

First of all, for those people who did not actually hear the words of the chairman when he read the letter by Secretary of Defense Cap Weinberger, I want to read a couple of sentences. It is a letter directed to Chairman PRICE:

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Administration supports the substitute amendment of Mr. Courter of New Jersey that allows the United States to replace the older unitary chemical weapons in the existing chemical munitions stockpile with modern binary chemical munitions that are much safer to produce, to handle, to transport, to store, and eventually to dispose of. The President will certify that for each new binary weapon introduced into the stockpile, a chemical weapon from the existing arsenal will be rendered permanently useless for military purposes.

Then, for those people who did not see the letter from the White House signed by William Clark, to WILLIAM DICKINSON, the ranking minority member of the Armed Services Committee, I will read a few lines:

I wanted to convey to you the President's complete support for the amendment. The Administration's objective is to provide the smallest and safest chemical munition stockpile that will deter the Soviets from using chemical weapons while we work toward our goal of a complete and certifiable ban on chemical weapons.

I strongly urge that the Courter amendment be passed by the House.

WILLIAM CLARK.

Finally, one of my adversaries here today, who has an amendment to the Zablocki amendment, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE) brought up the Senate, so I would like to comment on same. Although my words are not identical to the Senate language, the thrust is there, the intent is there, the result is there. If there is a small concern with regard to wording, in conference I am sure we can work out the differences.

For those of my colleagues who wanted to know what the Senate did with an amendment substantially identical, substantially identical to my amendment, the other body passed that—it was the Hatfield amendment—by a vote of 92 to zero on May 13.

With my remaining couple of minutes, therefore, knowing that my amendment has the support of the Secretary of Defense, the White House, and substantially the same language passed in the other body by a vote of 92 to zero, I would like to mention again, if I may, what in effect the Bethune and Zablocki amendments do. They do not permit, they do not allow any money whatsoever for the construction of binary weapons.

What does that mean? That means, in effect, although not today, 5 years, or 10 years down the road, we are going to have absolutely no deterrent chemical capability whatsoever.

The last time we put any of this in production was 1969. That is a long period of time. What happened during those number of years? All we have to do is look at the charts and we find out that gradually, month after month, year after year, what we have in storage is eroded, it becomes dangerous, it becomes difficult to use, it becomes environmentally unsafe, environmentally hazardous, and a weapon that is in fact not a weapon and not a deterrent.

So the Bethune and the Zablocki language means that if you are in favor of absolutely denuding ourselves of chemical defense capabilities, or deterrent capabilities, then you are in favor of it. Because what it really in effect does is through time, eliminates totally and completely the stockpile we have today.

So the issue I think is very clear. If those people in this body believe that we should have absolutely no chemical deterrent, nothing in our pockets to put on the table when we negotiate chemical weapons, then they can go ahead and vote for Zablocki and Bethune.

For those of us who want to make sure that we have something to put on the table, something to deter now as well as something as a deterrent 10 years from now, then there is an alternative, the Courter substitute.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I certainly rise in support of the gentleman's substitute. I am trying to get the parliamentary situation straightened out.

Is the amendment to the gentleman's substitute by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLLENBECK); is that correct?

Mr. COURTER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. COURTER) has expired.

(At the request of Mr. MONTGOMERY and by unanimous consent, Mr. COURTER was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. COURTER. It is my understanding that we have, first, the Zablocki amendment, which is amended by Bethune. I then came forward with a substitute to Zablocki.

Then the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLLENBECK) came forward with an amendment to my substitute. Therefore, the first vote, it is my understanding, will be on Bethune perfecting Zablocki; the second vote on Hollenbeck perfecting Courter; the third vote on Courter.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Would the Chair verify that would be the correct procedure?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman is correct, the first vote is on the Bethune amendment to the Zablocki amendment; the second vote will be the Hollenbeck amendment to the Courter substitute; the third vote will be the Courter substitute and the final vote will be on the Zablocki amendment.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. The final vote?

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STRATTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman has outlined the names of the various amendments, but might it not be helpful if the gentleman would also outline what each one of these amendments do so that those who may not have been listening to the discussion would have——

Mr. COURTER. I will yield to the gentleman from New York for that purpose if he would like to, or I will, whatever the case may be.

□ 1350

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. COURTER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York.

Obviously, there might be a difference of opinion as to what the amendments do.

The first vote is going to be on the Bethune amendment and the Bethune amendment, it is my understanding, in conjunction with the Zablocki amendment eliminates all funding for the production of binary weapons.

I have a substitute amendment, the Courter substitute. What the Courter substitute amendment does is to say that whatever binary we produce, then it is an obligation, to eliminate and make militarily useless an equivalent amount of chemical agents now in the stockpile.

The amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLLENBECK) to my substitute just adds some language indicating it is the sense of the Congress that we should forthwith negotiate the reduction and elimination of chemical weapons.

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words. I am not going to take the 5 minutes.

I just wish we would begin to understand what we are doing. We are spending money, other people's money, on chemical weapons, $25 million, when we are worrying about children's school lunches.

We have chemical weapons, and God forbid we should ever use them.

I do not know how we get carried away, spending huge sums for one program after another which we pray and intend we shall never use. With this bill, we are not condemning chemical weapons forever, but surely this year it is foolish to insist we must spend $25 million to build a whole new family of weapons and then say we are going to destroy some of the ones we already have. I have been reading the papers. I have seen testimony that the chemical weapons we have are still viable.

For heaven's sake, if we have to use them are they not enough of a threat? They are enormous in number. I do not understand how we can be even contemplating this. It is a question of spending money that belongs to other people—money that is lacking the programs that we know we need. And we are planning to spend it for something disgusting, something beneath the dignity of this Nation, chemical weapons. We know that they are put into the air, we may be able to protect the soldiers with their wonderful equipment, but how do we protect the poor innocent civilians miles away when the gas is carried on the wind? There is no way of stopping it. You cannot say we are using a legitimate weapon against other soldiers. You are not. You are using something against the public, the children in school, people in hospitals, people in their homes, people walking in the street. Those are the people who are going to suffer for these weapons.

When we have trouble finding the money we need for the programs we know we have to support, to take $25 million to destroy some weapons and build some more that have been outlawed, I think it is absolutely beyond comprehension.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. FENWICK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding. I want to commend her for her excellent statement. She has effectively brought the key question into perspective.

What are we voting upon? It was said by the gentleman from New Jersey that those who would vote for the Zablocki-Bethune amendment were for unilateral disarmament, or unilateral destruction of chemical warfare. There is nothing further from the truth.

All the amendment says is that the $54 million for this year, 1983, will not be used.

It has been proven that we have more than enough chemical destructive capabilities. That is what worries the gentlewoman from New Jersey and that is what also worries me.

Mrs. FENWICK. Could I correct myself. It is not $25 million; it is $54 million.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield further?

Mrs. FENWICK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. It is very necessary to remember that my amendment leaves in place 90 percent for the CW program. All it does on a 1-year basis is that we wait and have the research and development until we are sure that it is workable. The information we have been receiving leaves great doubt in this respect.

I thank the gentlewoman for yielding and commend her again for her wonderful statement.

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. FENWICK. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BETHUNE. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding. I will not take much time; but I do think it is important that we clarify the record because it was suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey that his substitute is essentially and substantially the same vote they had in the other body, which carried by 92 to nothing. That is just not the record.

In the other body they had an amendment similar to that of the gentleman from New Jersey and it never got off the ground, because that amendment had the same language that the gentleman's has, that they will destroy one existing chemical munition for every new binary they produce. It was not until after they had a full debate and almost carried an amendment similar to mine that they voted on the one that passed. The one that passed, and this is important, specified that the existing munition that would be destroyed would have to be a serviceable artillery shell. My colleagues, the difference is as great as the difference between lightning and the lightning bug when it comes to deciding whether the gentleman's amendment has merit or not.

His substitute does not have merit. It is nothing more than a smoke screen to achieve exactly the same result that the Armed Services Committee sought when they came here.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. FENWICK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. OBEY. Is it not true that this amendment simply replaces a $22 million nerve gas maintenance plan with a gas production plan which would spend anywhere between $6 and $12 billion?

Mrs. FENWICK. I think it is true. I believe that is true.

● Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support for the amendment offered by the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. ZABLOCKI, and by my colleague from Arkansas, Mr. BETHUNE.

As one who has consistently, and persistently, opposed chemical warfare, it is deeply distressing that we, as a nation, are on the threshold of taking a disastrous step—procurement of binary chemical weapons for a munitions plant in Pine Bluff, Ark.

This decision would lead the United States into a new, insane arms race with the Soviet Union—a heinous and immoral race that will cost us at least $10 billion in taxpayers' dollars and much more than that in the eyes of our allies.

If used on a European battlefield, these gruesome new arms will result in 20 times as many civilian casualties as military casualties, and extensive environmental damage.

The victims of chemical warfare will not be Soviet or United States soldiers well protected by defensive gear. They will be civilians, women, infants, birds, rabbits—any living thing with a nervous system. And they will die from something they could not see or smell, with no warning, with no chance of escape.

It is a horrible death by any account. Muscles are stimulated and do not relax, intense sweating is induced, uncontrolled vomiting and diarrhea occurs, vision is lost, convulsions, and ultimately complete paralysis of breathing and death. Some will die quickly, some over a tortuous period of hours. A sublethal dose causes indefinite psychiatric and neurological disorders.

According to the New York Times, a senior Pentagon official said that—

The use of poison gas frightens people, but it could be considered a cheaper substitute for nuclear warfare that would do far less damage outside the battlefield.

It is no wonder that the Europeans are terrified of the President's decision to begin a chemical arms race. Rather than capitulate to the Pentagon's war scenarios, we ought to be doing everything in our power to avoid new ways to inflict hideous forms of death by stopping this race before it gets started.

Our allies are watching us. They want to know if we are going to accuse the Soviet Union of violating the Geneva protocal by using chemical agents in Southeast Asia and Afghanistan, and then turn around and legitimize the Soviets attacks by rebuilding a chemical warfare capacity of our own.

They want to know if we listen to them. If we are peacemakers or warmongers. If we are hypocrites, or leaders.

Last February, President Reagan certified that renewing producing of chemical weapons in this country after a 13-year moratorium initiated by President Nixon, was "essential to the national interest." And how did Europe respond? Like this:

Der Spiegel, Germany:

President Reagan's decision to produce chemcial weapons contains political dynamite * * *. He has escalated the arms race.

Radio France-Inter, February 9, 1982:

Experts say that the only way for the United States to force the U.S.S.R. to renounce its chemical weapons is to have them also. This is barely understandable. All this belongs to a logic of lunatics, a logic of death * * *.

Amsterdam's Trouw, February 15, 1982:

The British, French and Germans still almost literally feel the trauma of World War I with its mustard gas. And Europe knows that if a conflict is not fought out directly with nuclear weapons, it will be a likely theater for the use of these inhumane chemicals.

Helsinki's conservative Uusi Suomi, February 12, 1982:

With its decision on chemical weapons, the United States will no longer be able to show that these weapons are particularly hypocritical or immoral, because it is going to produce these weapons instead of being content with establishing systems to counter them. This mistaken decision is not explained away by the large Soviet arsenals of chemical weapons.

Independent Stuttgarter Zeitung, February 19, 1982:

Rather than encouraging the U.S., Bonn should urge it to practice restraint in the area of chemical weapons.

Britain, the Netherland, Norway, and West Germany flatly refused to store new chemical weapons in their countries. Our allies in Western Europe know where a chemical war will be fought—on their turf, not ours. And we know it, too.

The utility of a U.S. chemical arsenal depends on forward deployment since speed in retaliating to a surprise chemical attack is essential. Airlifting artillery rounds from the United States to Europe would take at least 2 weeks or more, taking up a considerable percentage of our airlift capacity for less accurate and less efficient munitions than convention ones.

If we do not approve this amendment and instead agree with the administration's Dr. Strangelove plan to produce new chemcial weapons, we stand to antagonize and jeopardize already fragile relations with our NATO allies.

The administration contends that our NATO allies have not formally opposed its decision to produce new weapons, but neither have they invited it. In fact, Senator HATFIELD and the Senate Appropriations Committee demanded a country-by-country report on our allies' views of the long-range binary program and the administration flatly refused to comply with the request.

Why take this action at a time when many experts feel that allied relations are at their lowest point in postwar history, and when our current stockpile provides a sufficient retaliatory capability?

In May, Rear Adm. Thomas D. Davies, former assistant director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency under Presidents Nixon, Ford, and Carter, testified at the Senate Appropriations Committee hearing. He had this to say about our current stockpile:

> The safety record of our current stockpile of munition is excellent . . . We already have an adequate stockpile, and its location or distribution is not likely to be improved by the introduction of binaries, nor in my opinion will the start of binary nerve gas production frighten the U.S.S.R. into more productive negotiation. In fact, the most likely outcome is that the U.S.S.R. will start some equivalent production of its own, increasing the already large stockpiles and adding to the difficulty of ever constraining this weapon.

Mr. Saul Hormatz was in charge of the Army's chemical weapons program for 12 years. He casts the decision to produce new binary weapons as "a grave misjudgment which will endanger our security as a nation." He firmly believes binary weapons are of unknown reliability and questionable military usefulness, that they are inferior to current unitary shells, and that rather than deter a new arms buildup they will expand and increase it.

The Army recently certified that all of its 155-millimeter and 8-inch artillery projectiles as fully servicable, and there are enough of them for 30 days of warfare. These weapons have been fully tested, and binaries have not. The open-air testing binaries would require would no doubt encounter stiff opposition in this country.

These are solid strategic reasons why we should not go forth with the administration's plan.

We can show that we are indeed different than the Soviets, not partners in crime with them. We can point to suspected Soviet violations of the Geneva protocol and press for renewed bilateral negotiations on this issue.

Earlier this year I cosponsored a bill to prohibit production of chemical weapons and to urge President Reagan to enter into immediate negotiation with the Soviet Union for a mutual, verifiable limitation on production and stockpiling. The Soviets have submitted a chemical warfare arms control proposal at the United Nations which we should actively pursue.

Producing binary chemical weapons will anger our allies, threaten NATO stability, waste taxpayers money on an untested, unreliable, and inefficient weapons program, remove our moral edge over the Soviets, and endanger not improve our national security. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.●

● Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to add my name in support of the Zablocki-Bethune amendment to delete $54 million for procurement of binary nerve gas weapons.

From a purely strategic viewpoint—binary nerve gas artillery shells are of dubious value. They are untested and, therefore, are not certain to be battle-ready. Dr. Saul Hormats, former Director of the Army Chemical Systems Laboratory, estimates that between 25 and 30 percent of binary artillery shells and 50 percent of the binary Bigeye bombs will be duds as compared to less than 1 percent of existing chemical artillery shells and aerial bombs. Furthermore, the current U.S. stockpile of lethal chemical weapons is more than adequate to deter Soviet first-use of chemical warfare against our allies. There is no need to build more.

From a moral standpoint—the construction of nerve gas weapons is nothing short of cruel. Nerve gas kills indiscriminately and in the most agonizing fashion. It disrupts the nervous system. Causing convulsions, uncontrollable vomiting, and diarrhea, and finally asphyxia by respiratory paralysis. Death can come within minutes, hours, days, or weeks—depending on the dose. It also should be noted that modern military technology has developed equipment that is virtually impenetratable to the harms of chemical warfare. Only innocent civilians would be victimized.

Further, our allies in Europe, where these weapons would be stationed, have firmly expressed their objectives to the deployments of nerve gas. High ranking officials in Britian, the Netherlands, Norway, and West Germany have all indicated their strong disagreements on binary deployments in their respective countries. Perhaps they recognize the cruelty and insanity of this weapon if it were ever to be used.

Beyond this, Mr. Chairman, let us not begin a new arms race of chemical weaponry by allowing this weapon to be built.●

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Zablocki-Bethune amendment to delete funding for resumed production of binary chemical weapons. I commend the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Representative ZABLOCKI, and the gentleman from Arkansas, Representative BETHUNE, for offering this important measure.

President Reagan has requested $54 million to resume production of hideous chemical weapons. He is the first President to propose the manufacture of chemical weapons since Richard Nixon terminated their production 13 years ago.

I support this amendment because there is no sound military reason to proceed with chemical weapons production; indeed, resuming production can only hurt our national security at a cost which may ultimately exceed $10 billion.

The manufacture of chemical weapons would be a provocative first step toward a new chemical arms race. The Soviets will likely view a U.S. renewed chemical weapons program as justification for their own buildup. Instead of creating a new and expensive generation of weapons, we should focus on negotiating a comprehensive ban on the development, production, and possession of chemical weapons. Indeed, such negotiations have been proceeding in Geneva, and a decision for the United States to renew production of chemical weapons will irreparably harm those negotiations.

The production of chemical weapons greatly threatens NATO stability. Our allies have demonstrated repugnance at the new development of U.S. nerve gas, and by treaty some of our allies cannot even maintain those weapons on their soil. Since February 1982, when President Reagan announced his chemical weapons plan, leaders in Great Britain, the Netherlands, Norway, and West Germany have renounced the proposal.

Why risk further destabilizing our NATO alliance and entering a new arms race when we already have an enormous stockpile of chemical munitions? Our current stockpile is more than adequate to deter Soviet first-use of chemical weapons against us. According to the council for a livable world, our stockpile of chemical shells can supply all United States and NATO artillery pieces for 45 days of continous chemical warfare in Europe.

One of the most troubling aspects of the President's proposal is that it will divert resources from more important defense programs. Most strategists agree that the size of a nation's chemical stockpile is relatively unimportant. The adequacy of our chemical weapons defensive capability is vital. The renewed production of weapons will simply divert funds from the development of improved U.S. protective equipment, uniform, training, and doctrine.

Binary chemical weapons are grotesque. Their primary victims will be civilians, since troops in protective clothing are virtually invulnerable. In a chemical war, as many as 40 million innocent civilians may die. The decision to renew the production of these weapons after a 13-year moratorium sends a dangerous signal to our allies and adversaries. I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.●

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, we must reject the Reagan administration's plan to resume production of binary chemical weapons such as nerve gas and support the Zablocki-Bethune amendment. The $54 million that the President has requested for binary chemical weapon production is not only wasteful and unnecessary but is morally repugnant.

By allowing funding for nerve gas production, this administration would break a 13-year moratorium on chemical weapons production. The fact that the administration would abandon an area of arms control that has been successful is abhorrent. Worse, the military justifications for sustaining the program are perverted.

First, since Europe is where a chemical battle between the United States and the Soviet Union might be fought, U.S. production of chemical weapons would be greeted with great alarm by our European allies. It is understandable, since the Europeans know well that an outbreak of chemical warfare would cause much greater harm to civilians than to protected troops. Their alarm could provide the basis for deterioration of America's already strained relations with our European allies.

Further, production of binary chemical weapons threatens to impede arms control. Chemical weaponry is one area in which nonproliferation has proven successful to date. By enacting a new program of chemical weapons production, the technology and materials for binary production would be made more accessible to other nations and to terrorist groups.

The administration seeks to justify its binary weapons proposal by accusing the Soviets of prior chemical weapons use. Regardless, American production of the same hideous weapons is not a sensible response. In fact, it is likely that the Soviets would view the administration's binary program as justification for increasing their own chemical weapons production.

Most importantly, nerve gas is a cruel weapon. It kills indiscriminately, affecting almost completely civilians who are unprotected. On moral grounds alone, its use cannot be condoned. Accordingly, the production of nerve gas for military use has been vehemently opposed by clergymen as well as by concerned, informed scientists.

For 13 years the U.S. Government has seen fit to sustain a moratorium on binary chemical weapons. Let us not be the Congress which brings killer yellow rain to the Earth on which millions of innocent people live.●

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE) to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 232, noes 181, not voting 21, as follows:

[Roll No. 202]

AYES—232

Addabbo	Dymally	Hoyer
Albosta	Early	Hughes
Anderson	Eckart	Jacobs
Andrews	Edgar	Jeffords
Aspin	Edwards (CA)	Jenkins
AuCoin	Edwards (OK)	Jones (OK)
Bailey (MO)	Emery	Kastenmeier
Bedell	Erdahl	Kennelly
Beilenson	Ertel	Kildee
Benedict	Evans (DE)	Kogovsek
Bereuter	Evans (IA)	LaFalce
Bethune	Evans (IN)	Lantos
Biaggi	Fascell	Leach
Bingham	Fenwick	Lee
Blanchard	Ferraro	Lehman
Boggs	Findley	Leland
Boland	Fish	Long (LA)
Bonior	Fithian	Long (MD)
Bonker	Florio	Lowry (WA)
Brodhead	Foglietta	Luken
Broomfield	Foley	Lundine
Brown (CA)	Ford (MI)	Markey
Brown (CO)	Ford (TN)	Martin (IL)
Broyhill	Forsythe	Martin (NC)
Burton, Phillip	Fowler	Martinez
Clausen	Frank	Matsui
Coats	Frenzel	Mattox
Coelho	Frost	Mavroules
Collins (IL)	Garcia	Mazzoli
Conable	Gejdenson	McClory
Conte	Glickman	McCloskey
Conyers	Gonzalez	McCurdy
Coughlin	Goodling	McDade
Coyne, James	Gray	McEwen
Coyne, William	Green	McGrath
Craig	Gregg	McHugh
Crockett	Guarini	McKinney
D'Amours	Gunderson	Mica
Daschle	Hall (OH)	Mikulski
Daub	Hall, Sam	Miller (CA)
Deckard	Hamilton	Mineta
Dellums	Harkin	Minish
DeNardis	Hawkins	Mitchell (MD)
Derrick	Heckler	Moakley
Dixon	Hertel	Moffett
Donnelly	Hightower	Molinari
Dorgan	Hollenbeck	Natcher
Downey	Hopkins	Nowak
Dunn	Horton	Oakar
Dwyer	Howard	Oberstar
Obey	Roybal	Tauke
Ottinger	Russo	Traxler
Panetta	Sabo	Udall
Parris	Savage	Vander Jagt
Paul	Scheuer	Vento
Pease	Schneider	Walgren
Perkins	Schroeder	Walker
Peyser	Schumer	Washington
Porter	Seiberling	Waxman
Pritchard	Sensenbrenner	Weaver
Pursell	Shamansky	Weber (MN)
Rahall	Shannon	Weber (OH)
Railsback	Sharp	Weiss
Rangel	Shuster	Whittaker
Ratchford	Simon	Whitten
Regula	Smith (IA)	Williams (MT)
Reuss	Smith (NE)	Williams (OH)
Richmond	Smith (NJ)	Wirth
Rinaldo	Smith (PA)	Wolpe
Roberts (KS)	Snowe	Wortley
Roberts (SD)	Solarz	Wyden
Rodino	St Germain	Wylie
Roe	Stanton	Yates
Rose	Stark	Yatron
Rosenthal	Stokes	Zablocki
Rostenkowski	Studds	Zeferetti
Roth	Swift
Roukema	Synar

NOES—181

Akaka	Gaydos	Moore
Alexander	Gephardt	Moorhead
Annunzio	Gibbons	Morrison
Anthony	Gilman	Mottl
Applegate	Gingrich	Murphy
Archer	Goldwater	Murtha
Ashbrook	Gore	Myers
Atkinson	Gradison	Napier
Badham	Gramm	Neal
Bafalis	Grisham	Nelligan
Bailey (PA)	Hagedorn	Nelson
Barnard	Hall, Ralph	Nichols
Beard	Hammerschmidt	O'Brien
Benjamin	Hance	Oxley
Bennett	Hansen (ID)	Pashayan
Bevill	Hansen (UT)	Patman
Bliley	Hartnett	Petri
Bolling	Hatcher	Pickle
Boner	Hefner	Price
Bouquard	Heftel	Quillen
Breaux	Hendon	Ritter
Brinkley	Hiler	Robinson
Brooks	Hillis	Roemer
Butler	Holland	Rogers
Byron	Holt	Rousselot
Campbell	Hubbard	Rudd
Carman	Hunter	Sawyer
Carney	Hutto	Schulze
Chappell	Hyde	Shaw
Cheney	Ireland	Shelby
Clinger	Jeffries	Shumway
Collins (TX)	Johnston	Siljander
Corcoran	Jones (NC)	Skeen
Courter	Kazen	Skelton
Crane, Daniel	Kemp	Smith (AL)
Crane, Philip	Kindness	Smith (OR)
Daniel, Dan	Kramer	Snyder
Daniel, R. W.	Lagomarsino	Spence
Dannemeyer	Latta	Stangeland
Davis	Leath	Staton
de la Garza	LeBoutillier	Stenholm
Derwinski	Lent	Stratton
Dickinson	Levitas	Stump
Dicks	Lewis	Tauzin
Dingell	Livingston	Taylor
Dornan	Loeffler	Thomas
Dougherty	Lott	Trible
Dreier	Lowery (CA)	Volkmer
Duncan	Lujan	Wampler
Dyson	Lungren	Watkins
Edwards (AL)	Madigan	White
English	Marlenee	Whitehurst
Erlenborn	Marriott	Whitley
Evans (GA)	Martin (NY)	Winn
Fary	McCollum	Wolf
Fazio	McDonald	Wright
Fiedler	Michel	Young (AK)
Fields	Miller (OH)	Young (FL)
Flippo	Mitchell (NY)	Young (MO)
Fountain	Mollohan
Fuqua	Montgomery

NOT VOTING—21

Barnes	Brown (OH)	Burton, John
Bowen	Burgener	Chappie

Chisholm	Ginn	Pepper
Clay	Huckaby	Rhodes
Coleman	Jones (TN)	Santini
Dowdy	Marks	Solomon
Emerson	Patterson	Wilson

□ 1410

Messrs. BAILEY of Missouri, PERKINS, BRODHEAD, and GONZALEZ changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. (Mr. BONIOR of Michigan). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLLENBECK), as modified, to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. COURTER) as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI), as amended.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding of the rules that it is in order for there to be continued debate on the amendments that have not yet been voted on.

Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is important that Members of the House who were not able to be in the Chamber at the time that debate was going on should be clear on exactly what the following votes will occur.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE), which has just carried, was an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI). Mr. ZABLOCKI's basic amendment eliminates the money for chemical warfare. The Bethune amendment, which just carried, contained a further ban on expending any sums for binary weapons.

The next vote that will occur, as the Chair previously explained, is the vote on the Hollenbeck amendment, which perfects the Courter substitute. The Hollenbeck amendment would add language which says that it is the sense of the Congress that we want the Soviet Union, which has previously been reluctant to engage in negotiations limiting or banning chemical warfare, to engage in those negotiations.

The Courter substitute would restore the funds which Zablocki knocks out and would provide that for every binary weapon that is produced, a unitary weapon shall be eliminated from our current arsenal.

□ 1420

That substitute has received the enthusiastic support of the President's National Security Adviser, Mr. Clark, as well as of the Secretary of Defense, Mr. Weinberger. If the Courter substitute, as perfected by the Hollenbeck amendment carries, then the Zablocki amendment which wipes out the money for a chemical warfare deterrent would go down.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRATTON. I am very happy to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin for a further explanation.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, I am sure the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) does not intend to misrepresent what the Zablocki amendment will do. It is a 1-year amendment which deletes the money, the $54 million, for binary production. Ninety percent of the chemical warfare program remains intact. Research and development for the binary program remains. As far as testing is concerned, it should be emphasized that the binary has not been field tested, which is a further argument for deleting the binary production funds.

Furthermore, the gentleman does not intend, I am sure, to misrepresent what the Courter amendment would do. The Courter amendment, even amended by Hollenbeck, would reverse what my colleagues have just voted on by a vote of 232 to 181. The Courter amendment would permit the production of the binary, which we have just voted against.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, if I may reclaim my time, do I understand that the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI) would permit funds for the production of binary chemicals?

Mr. ZABLOCKI. The $54 million intended for the production of binary chemical weapons would, by my amendment, be deleted.

Mr. STRATTON. And what about research? Does it knock out research?

Mr. ZABLOCKI. No, research and development for the binary program is not affected by my amendment.

Mr. STRATTON. Then the gentleman's amendment really stops the binary weapons production, which would be the only safe as well as effective deterrent we could have against the massive Soviet chemical warfare capability.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRATTON. If I still have time, I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

There are just two points I would like to make.

First of all, there have been a lot of statements made during the past few hours that binary weapons have not been tested. Nothing is further from the truth. They simply have.

Secondly, I just want to make the clarification, as the author of the Courter substitute, that the substitute simply states that for every binary weapon that we produce we have to render militarily useless an equivalent amount of chemical agents that we now have. That is simply the Courter substitute that is going to be amended by the Hollenbeck amendment, and I also want this body to know that I have no objection to the Hollenbeck amendment, which I believe perfects it and adds a new dimension to my substitute.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. COURTER). The gentleman's amendment ought to be supported.

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Chairman, the Members want to vote and I think we should get to the vote. I do not intend to take 5 minutes' time. I will just say that the vote that just occurred on the Bethune amendment was a vote to stop the production of binary chemicals, the new nerve gas. There is Hollenbeck amendment, which is a perfecting amendment to the Courter substitute. No one here objects to the Hollenbeck amendment to the Courter substitute.

The Courter substitute, on the other hand, is nothing more than a smokescreen for the committee position, and by voting for it not only would we reverse the vote that we just cast but it would bar us from reaching the principal vehicle, the Zablocki amendment, which is the next vote after Courter.

So, Mr. Chairman, if the Members voted "aye" on Bethune, they should vote "no" on Courter and then "aye" on Zablocki, and we will dispose of this matter in the way we should.

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I will be very, very brief since I detect from the shouts of "vote, vote" across the way that all of the Members, as I would predict they would after listening to the astute comments of the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON) and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. COURTER), will do the necessary thing, make up for the earlier mistake in the previous vote, and support the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. COURTER) and give the President the flexibility he needs to negotiate away the Soviet capability in chemical warfare.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge the Members to think this matter through carefully and objectively and salvage the proper position for our national defense by supporting the Courter amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I support the administration's program on modernization of our chemical warfare capability.

Since 1969, the United States has not manufactured lethal or incapacitating chemical weapons, whereas the Soviets have engaged in prolonged unilateral buildup. The Soviet threat is heightened by the use of chemical and biological warfare in Afghanistan and Southeast Asia.

All executive agencies concerned with national security, as well as previous Congresses, have concluded that we can no longer delay modernization of our chemical warfare deterrent, a modest one measured against Soviet capabilities. Our military must be able to deter threats to ourselves and our allies, which requires adequate U.S. stocks.

The decision to modernize our chemical weapons capability was undertaken only after long and painstaking examination of the Armed Forces obsolete and deteriorating assets.

Much emphasis has been placed in debate on binary weapons. It should be stressed that what the binary system is in essence is a safer way to store and use chemical weapons. Binary weapons are not much more lethal than the CW weapons we now have, but much of our present stocks are becoming obsolete. They simply do not fit into modern delivery systems. The United States does not plan to increase its total number of chemical munitions but simply to modernize them, actually with a slight decrease. They will be much more capable.

According to the administration, of its fiscal year 1983 budget presentation, 70 percent is based on defensive requirements, 10 percent is for the safe destruction of obsolescent weapons and only about 20 percent is devoted to the binary program, an important element of modernization.

According to executive branch witnesses, the United States has kept its allies fully informed of its program and of its decisions, over the past several years, to begin modernization. No allied government expressed opposition or otherwise commented on the substance of the decision to seek funds for production. For many years, it has been agreed NATO doctrine that an effective chemical warfare retaliatory capability is an essential part of the continuum of deterrence.

Our allies, like ourselves, are committed to seeking through arms control a complete ban on the production and stockpiling of chemical weapons. They and we are pressing for such an agreement in the Committee on Disarmanent in Geneva, recognizing that the problems of verification and effective compliance must be overcome.

Chemical weapons are awesome, of that can be no doubt. They are no more frightening than nuclear weapons, however. It is my belief that it is only by having a credible nuclear arsenal that we have deterred the use by the Soviets of either their nuclear weapons or nuclear blackmail. I believe there is an accurate analogy here. I believe that we must have a credible deterrent in chemical weapons, as well.

Inasmuch as chemical weapons, unlike nuclear weapons, are being used by the Soviets and their allies today, there is an even more urgent need to maintain a chemical warfare deterrent. This is not to say that we should not urgently pursue arms control and reduction in nuclear weapons. We should, It is U.S. policy to do so. But we can only negotiate controls and reductions from a position of strength. We should improve our defenses against chemical warfare, destroy our obsolescent weapons, and modernize our stockpile. The administration's bill provides for these things.

Debate about chemical warfare has yet to identify a deterrent that does not include a chemical weapons component, without posing the risks of undesirable escalation or unacceptable accommodation.

The United States is working to achieve through negotiations, a verifiable ban on all chemical weapons. Until that time, however, Soviet incentives to use chemical weapons against us or our allies must be eliminated. This can be done by modernizing and maintaining an adequate chemical warfare deterrent. The modernization of our chemical weapons does not represent a decision to place greater emphasis upon chemical warfare nor to match Soviet capabilities. The U.S. objective is to have the safest, smallest level of chemical munitions which provides the deterrent we need.

To repeat, the administration's goal is a complete and verifiable ban on the development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons. The sticking point in our negotiations with the Soviet Union on these weapons is the latter's unwillingness to accept reasonable provisions for verification of their destruction. The Soviets have also not been willing to agree to effective procedures for assuring continued compliance.

I urge my colleagues to support the administration on this important measure.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLLENBECK), as modified, to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. COURTER) as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI), as amended.

The amendment, as modified, to the amendment offered as a substitute for the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment, as amended, offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. COURTER) as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI), as amended.

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device and there were—ayes 192, noes 225, not voting 17, as follows:

[ROLL NO. 203]

AYES—192

Akaka	Flippo	Mitchell (NY)
Alexander	Fountain	Mollohan
Andrews	Frost	Montgomery
Annunzio	Fuqua	Moore
Anthony	Gephardt	Moorhead
Applegate	Gibbons	Morrison
Archer	Gilman	Mottl
Ashbrook	Gingrich	Murphy
Atkinson	Goldwater	Murtha
Badham	Gore	Myers
Bafalis	Gradison	Napier
Bailey (PA)	Gramm	Neal
Barnard	Grisham	Nelligan
Beard	Hagedorn	Nelson
Benjamin	Hall, Ralph	Nichols
Bennett	Hamilton	O'Brien
Bevill	Hammerschmidt	Pashayan
Bliley	Hance	Patman
Boggs	Hansen (ID)	Petri
Bolling	Hansen (UT)	Price
Boner	Hartnett	Quillen
Bouquard	Hatcher	Ritter
Brinkley	Hefner	Robinson
Brooks	Heftel	Roemer
Broomfield	Hendon	Rogers
Broyhill	Hiler	Rostenkowski
Butler	Hillis	Rousselot
Byron	Holland	Rudd
Campbell	Holt	Schulze
Carney	Hubbard	Shaw
Chappell	Huckaby	Shelby
Cheney	Hunter	Shumway
Clinger	Hutto	Siljander
Collins (TX)	Hyde	Skeen
Conable	Ireland	Skelton
Corcoran	Jeffries	Smith (AL)
Courter	Johnston	Smith (OR)
Coyne, James	Jones (NC)	Snyder
Crane, Daniel	Kazen	Spence
Crane, Philip	Kemp	Stangeland
Daniel, Dan	Kindness	Stanton
Daniel, R. W.	Kramer	Staton
Dannemeyer	Lagomarsino	Stenholm
Davis	Latta	Stratton
de la Garza	Leath	Stump
Derwinski	LeBoutillier	Tauzin
Dickinson	Lent	Taylor
Dicks	Levitas	Thomas
Dingell	Lewis	Trible
Dornan	Livingston	Volkmer
Dougherty	Loeffler	Wampler
Dowdy	Long (LA)	Watkins
Dreier	Lott	White
Duncan	Lowery (CA)	Whitehurst
Dyson	Lujan	Whitley
Edwards (AL)	Lungren	Wilson
English	Madigan	Winn
Erlenborn	Marlenee	Wolf
Evans (GA)	Marriott	Wortley
Evans (IN)	Martin (NY)	Wright
Fary	McCollum	Wylie
Fazio	McDonald	Young (AK)
Fiedler	Michel	Young (FL)
Fields	Miller (OH)	Young (MO)

NOES—225

Addabbo	Albosta	Anderson

Aspin	Goodling	Perkins
AuCoin	Gray	Peyser
Bailey (MO)	Green	Pickle
Bedell	Gregg	Porter
Beilenson	Guarini	Pritchard
Benedict	Gunderson	Pursell
Bereuter	Hall (OH)	Rahall
Bethune	Hall, Sam	Railsback
Biaggi	Harkin	Rangel
Bingham	Hawkins	Ratchford
Blanchard	Heckler	Regula
Boland	Hertel	Reuss
Bonior	Hightower	Richmond
Bonker	Hollenbeck	Rinaldo
Brodhead	Hopkins	Roberts (KS)
Brown (CA)	Horton	Roberts (SD)
Brown (CO)	Howard	Rodino
Burton, Phillip	Hoyer	Roe
Carman	Hughes	Rose
Chisholm	Jacobs	Rosenthal
Clausen	Jeffords	Roth
Coats	Jenkins	Roukema
Coelho	Jones (OK)	Roybal
Collins (IL)	Kastenmeier	Russo
Conte	Kennelly	Sabo
Conyers	Kildee	Savage
Coughlin	Kogovsek	Sawyer
Coyne, William	LaFalce	Scheuer
Craig	Lantos	Schneider
Crockett	Leach	Schroeder
D'Amours	Lee	Schumer
Daschle	Lehman	Seiberling
Daub	Leland	Sensenbrenner
Deckard	Long (MD)	Shamansky
Dellums	Lowry (WA)	Shannon
DeNardis	Luken	Sharp
Derrick	Lundine	Shuster
Dixon	Markey	Simon
Donnelly	Martin (IL)	Smith (IA)
Dorgan	Martin (NC)	Smith (NE)
Downey	Martinez	Smith (NJ)
Dunn	Matsui	Smith (PA)
Dwyer	Mattox	Snowe
Dymally	Mavroules	Solarz
Early	Mazzoli	St Germain
Eckart	McClory	Stark
Edgar	McCloskey	Stokes
Edwards (CA)	McCurdy	Studds
Edwards (OK)	McDade	Swift
Emery	McEwen	Synar
Erdahl	McGrath	Tauke
Ertel	McHugh	Traxler
Evans (DE)	McKinney	Udall
Evans (IA)	Mica	Vander Jagt
Fascell	Mikulski	Vento
Fenwick	Miller (CA)	Walgren
Ferraro	Mineta	Walker
Findley	Minish	Washington
Fish	Mitchell (MD)	Waxman
Fithian	Moakley	Weaver
Florio	Moffett	Weber (MN)
Foglietta	Molinari	Weber (OH)
Foley	Natcher	Weiss
Ford (MI)	Nowak	Whittaker
Ford (TN)	Oakar	Whitten
Forsythe	Oberstar	Williams (MT)
Fowler	Obey	Williams (OH)
Frank	Ottinger	Wirth
Frenzel	Oxley	Wolpe
Garcia	Panetta	Wyden
Gaydos	Parris	Yates
Gejdenson	Patterson	Yatron
Glickman	Paul	Zablocki
Gonzalez	Pease	Zeferetti

NOT VOTING—17

Barnes	Chappie	Marks
Bowen	Clay	Pepper
Breaux	Coleman	Rhodes
Brown (OH)	Emerson	Santini
Burgener	Ginn	Solomon
Burton, John	Jones (TN)

□ 1440

Mr. SAWYER changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. ALEXANDER changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment, as amended, offered as a substitute for the amendment, as amended, was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MRS. ROUKEMA TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ZABLOCKI, AS AMENDED

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. ROUKEMA to the amendment offered by Mr. ZABLOCKI, as amended: Page 8, after line 12, insert the following new section:

SEC. 112. It is the sense of the Congress that the President should continue to promote actively negotiations among the member countries of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Warfare of the Committee on Disarmament established by the United Nations General Assembly and meeting in Geneva, Switzerland for the purpose of drafting a treaty for the complete, effective and verifiable prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and for their destruction and

(2) press vigorously in every appropriate forum for a full explanation of outstanding allegations concerning Soviet and Soviet-proxy use of chemical weapons in violation of international law.

(3) communicate to the government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics the earnest desire of the government of the United States for a comprehensive, verifiable ban on chemical weaponry and its willingness to participate in negotiations toward this end.

Mrs. ROUKEMA (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment to the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Objection is heard.

The Clerk will continue the reading of the amendment.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the amendment.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is essentially the same as the Hollenbeck amendment that has been previously debated. It stresses the sense of Congress that it is the policy of the United States to actively promote and negotiate to secure a treaty for the complete, effective, and verifiable prohibition of the development, production, and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and for their destruction, and that we should vigorously pursue chemical arms reduction talks.

I think that it is an appropriate amendment to add as the stated policy intention of the United States, and it is most consistent and germane to the Zablocki-Bethune amendment.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentlewoman why she deliberately changed the language that was in the Hollenbeck substitute which pointed out that the Soviet Union "until now has repeatedly refused to engage in negotiations looking toward ending the threat of chemical warfare," and in its place has put other language which appears to be blessing and annointing the Soviet Union for being so gracious as to join with the United States. Why did the gentlewoman take out this language which pins the donkey clearly on the country that has refused to negotiate?

Mrs. ROUKEMA. This amendment was prepared by me last evening, prior to the discussion that took place on the floor, and is completely consistent with the language adopted in the other body. I felt that it was complete and comprehensive, and I did not think that the wording that was added in the previous discussion significantly detracted or enhanced what should be the clear expression of the sense of Congress on chemical weapons arms reduction.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. I am very interested in the gentlewoman's amendment, but I do have a question. How does one verify the production or nonproduction of chemical warfare other than on site?

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I do not understand the nature of the gentleman's question.

Mr. HYDE. The amendment that the gentlewoman is proposing seeks to indicate that we want to negotiate a verifiable treaty with the Soviet Union about the nonproduction of chemical warfare.

It is my belief that the only verification that is effective requires onsite inspection, and it is my belief that the Soviets, being a closed society, would have to change the nature of their society so that we might onsite verify wherever in the Soviet Union they might be secretly producing chemical warfare.

□ 1450

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I would agree to the inclusion of the Stratton language, although I do not see how that substantially applies to the issue that is now raised. Of course the gentleman raised a germane issue in all arms reduction talks, the question of verification.

If it would satisfy the gentleman's objection we will include the language, otherwise I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

I have not made myself clear.

I am not suggesting any change in the amendment. I am just trying to indicate how really illusory it is to expect to ever verify the production or nonproduction of chemical warfare in the Soviet Union. It cannot be done because it must be done on site and they would have to become a different type of society than they have been during the entire existence of the Soviet Union.

So I simply say we are asking for the impossible.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I felt that the amendment would be nondebatable and noncontroversial, having been readily accepted previously, but rather than prolong the debate I would just urge a vote on the Zablocki-Bethune amendment and withdraw the motion.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Does the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. ROUKEMA) withdraw her amendment?

Mrs. ROUKEMA. No, I do not withdraw it. I just want to substitute the Hollenbeck language.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the modification?

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, what was the unanimous-consent request?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The request is a unanimous-consent request to modify the gentlewoman's amendment.

Mr. STRATTON. A unanimous consent to the amendment?

I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentlewoman is seeking unanimous consent to modify the language of her amendment.

Mr. STRATTON. I still object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make the point that I would ask that the motion as presented to the desk be approved and so move.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. ROUKEMA) to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI), as amended.

The amendment to the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ZABLOCKI), as amended.

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Chairman, I promised my colleagues that they would have a vote on the Zablocki amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 251, noes 159, answered "present" 1, not voting 23, as follows:

[Roll No. 204]

AYES—251

Addabbo	Gaydos	Parris
Akaka	Gejdenson	Patterson
Albosta	Gilman	Paul
Anderson	Glickman	Pease
Andrews	Gonzalez	Perkins
Annunzio	Goodling	Peyser
Applegate	Gore	Pickle
Aspin	Gradison	Porter
AuCoin	Gray	Pritchard
Bailey (MO)	Green	Pursell
Bedell	Gregg	Rahall
Beilenson	Guarini	Railsback
Benedict	Gunderson	Rangel
Bereuter	Hall (OH)	Ratchford
Bethune	Hall, Sam	Regula
Biaggi	Hamilton	Reuss
Bingham	Harkin	Richmond
Blanchard	Hawkins	Rinaldo
Boggs	Heckler	Roberts (KS)
Boland	Hefner	Roberts (SD)
Bonior	Hertel	Rodino
Bonker	Hightower	Roe
Brodhead	Hollenbeck	Rose
Broomfield	Hopkins	Rosenthal
Brown (CA)	Horton	Rostenkowski
Brown (CO)	Howard	Roth
Broyhill	Hoyer	Roukema
Burton, Phillip	Hughes	Roybal
Chisholm	Jacobs	Russo
Clausen	Jeffords	Sabo
Coats	Jenkins	Savage
Coelho	Jones (NC)	Scheuer
Collins (IL)	Jones (OK)	Schneider
Conte	Kastenmeier	Schroeder
Conyers	Kennelly	Schumer
Coughlin	Kildee	Seiberling
Coyne, James	Kogovsek	Sensenbrenner
Coyne, William	LaFalce	Shamansky
Craig	Lantos	Shannon
Crockett	Leach	Sharp
D'Amours	Lee	Shuster
Daschle	Lehman	Simon
Daub	Leland	Smith (IA)
Deckard	Long (LA)	Smith (NE)
Dellums	Long (MD)	Smith (NJ)
DeNardis	Lowry (WA)	Smith (PA)
Derrick	Luken	Snowe
Dicks	Lundine	Solarz
Donnelly	Madigan	St Germain
Dorgan	Markey	Stanton
Downey	Marlenee	Stark
Dunn	Martin (IL)	Stokes
Dwyer	Martin (NC)	Studds
Dymally	Martinez	Swift
Early	Matsui	Synar
Eckart	Mattox	Tauke
Edgar	Mavroules	Traxler
Edwards (CA)	Mazzoli	Udall
Edwards (OK)	McClory	Vander Jagt
Emery	McCloskey	Vento
Erdahl	McCurdy	Volkmer
Erlenborn	McDade	Walgren
Ertel	McEwen	Walker
Evans (DE)	McGrath	Washington
Evans (IA)	McHugh	Waxman
Evans (IN)	McKinney	Weaver
Fary	Mica	Weber (MN)
Fascell	Mikulski	Weber (OH)
Fazio	Miller (CA)	Weiss
Fenwick	Mineta	Whittaker
Ferraro	Minish	Whitten
Findley	Mitchell (MD)	Williams (MT)
Fish	Moffett	Williams (OH)
Fithian	Molinari	Wirth
Florio	Murphy	Wolpe
Foglietta	Natcher	Wortley
Foley	Neal	Wright
Ford (TN)	Nowak	Wyden
Forsythe	Oakar	Wylie
Fowler	Oberstar	Yates
Frank	Obey	Yatron
Frenzel	Ottinger	Zablocki
Frost	Oxley	Zeferetti
Garcia	Panetta

NOES—159

Alexander	Fountain	Moore
Anthony	Fuqua	Moorhead
Archer	Gephardt	Morrison
Ashbrook	Gibbons	Mottl
Atkinson	Gingrich	Murtha
Badham	Gramm	Myers
Bafalis	Grisham	Napier
Bailey (PA)	Hagedorn	Nelligan
Barnard	Hall, Ralph	Nelson
Beard	Hammerschmidt	Nichols
Benjamin	Hance	O'Brien
Bennett	Hansen (ID)	Pashayan
Bevill	Hansen (UT)	Patman
Bliley	Hartnett	Petri
Bolling	Hendon	Price
Boner	Hiler	Quillen
Bouquard	Hillis	Ritter
Brinkley	Holland	Robinson
Brooks	Holt	Roemer
Butler	Hubbard	Rogers
Byron	Huckaby	Rudd
Campbell	Hunter	Sawyer
Carman	Hutto	Schulze
Carney	Hyde	Shaw
Chappell	Ireland	Shelby
Cheney	Jeffries	Shumway
Clinger	Johnston	Siljander
Collins (TX)	Kazen	Skeen
Conable	Kemp	Skelton
Corcoran	Kindness	Smith (AL)
Courter	Kramer	Smith (OR)
Crane, Daniel	Lagomarsino	Snyder
Crane, Philip	Latta	Spence
Daniel, Dan	Leath	Stangeland
Daniel, R. W.	LeBoutillier	Staton
Dannemeyer	Lent	Stenholm
Davis	Levitas	Stratton
de la Garza	Lewis	Stump
Derwinski	Livingston	Tauzin
Dickinson	Loeffler	Taylor
Dingell	Lott	Thomas
Dornan	Lowery (CA)	Trible
Dougherty	Lujan	Wampler
Dowdy	Lungren	Watkins
Dreier	Marriott	White
Duncan	Martin (NY)	Whitehurst
Dyson	McCollum	Whitley
Edwards (AL)	McDonald	Wilson
English	Michel	Winn
Evans (GA)	Miller (OH)	Wolf
Fiedler	Mitchell (NY)	Young (AK)
Fields	Mollohan	Young (FL)
Flippo	Montgomery	Young (MO)

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1

Heftel

NOT VOTING—23

Barnes	Coleman	Marks
Bowen	Dixon	Moakley
Breaux	Emerson	Pepper
Brown (OH)	Ford (MI)	Rhodes
Burgener	Ginn	Rousselot
Burton, John	Goldwater	Santini
Chappie	Hatcher	Solomon
Clay	Jones (TN)

□ 1500

Mr. BAILEY of Pennsylvania changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DELLUMS

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DELLUMS: Page 6, strike out line 13 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For Aircraft, $13,209,900,000.".

□ 1510

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment before you strikes the funds from the procurement section of this bill for the B-1 bomber.

As some of you may recall, last year I argued that the decision to purchase, to develop, and to fly 100 B-1 bombers was expensive, unnecessary, wasteful, and a political rather than a military decision.

I still believe that. However, I will organize my presentation today in a little different fashion.

I would like to begin by reading in part, Mr. Chairman, from an article written by Stansfield Turner, the former Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, an article that appeared in the Washington Post in March 1981.

The manned bomber, be it a B-1 or a carrier-based aircraft, is designed to penetrate the enemy's defenses and deliver a weapon close to the target. However, this tactic is being made obsolete today by a technology that enables the enemy to better defend against bombers. Satellite sensors can pick up data which, in turn, can be rapidly processed and then sent around the world instantaneously by digital data transmission. The result will be near assured detection of the bomber as it penetrates enemy defenses, the immediate calculation of how to intercept it and to dispatch a SMART-guided missile to pursue it relentlessly to destruction.

A further quote:

It is a long and proud tradition to place a man in an aircraft over the target. But it is a dying tradition. The pride should not stand in the way of doing the job better and more safely. The risks to a pilot are unreasonable and the probability of hitting the target less than with a remotely controlled system. We still need bombers, but without the requirement for large, complex aircraft that can penetrate sophisticated defenses. A more simple version with a standoff variety can be built smaller and more simply and we will be able to afford more of them.

That is the end of the quote of Stansfield Turner, former Director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Mr. Chairman, in this era of rising deficits, increasing citizen concern for massive increases in America's military budget and the concern for the potential of nuclear war, it seems to me it is our responsibility to agonize, to evaluate, to scrutinize carefully every single decision to purchase any weapons system and should not be determined on whether it will generate a few jobs but whether or not we need that weapons system and whether or not that weapons system fits our view of our role in a rapidly changing world.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am proposing in this amendment that we strike all funds for the B-1 bomber in the procurement section of this bill. The B-1 is not only strategically obsolete; it is a fiscal irresponsibility.

The prime rationale or the rationalization for the B-1 bomber is to improve in some way our strategic bomber force, but I would submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that we have more than 300 B-52's, many of them being retrofitted, and 60 FB-111's that will be more than adequate for the next two decades.

More importantly, Mr. Chairman, by 1988 or 1990, depending on which expert one listens to, these planes would not be able to penetrate the air defense.

To restate this argument: This administration wants to purchase 100 B-1 bombers. They probably would not be able to come on line until 1988. Many experts believe that these manned penetrating bombers, just as former Director Stansfield Turner points out, would not be able to penetrate Soviet air defenses beyond the year 1990. So we are purchasing 100 extremely sophisticated weapons systems that may not be able to serve us well for more than 1, perhaps even 2 years, since the first B-1's would not be operational until that time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. DELLUMS) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DELLUMS was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DELLUMS. Now, many people agree with this. They say, "You are probably correct. Therefore, after 1990, we would suggest that we use the B-1 bomber to carry cruise missiles." This, to me, is an absurdity. The B-1 bomber is much too sophisticated, much too expensive, it is overpriced and overdesigned, to act as a cruise missile carrier.

Given the debate that we had yesterday, you could carry cruise missiles in a 747. Maybe that is the compromise. The tragedy is that the great debate of 1982 on the military budget is, "Which porkbarrel do we put our hands in?"

One way to handle that, if we want to carry cruise missiles, is to carry them in a 747. They certainly do not cost you the same amount of money that a sophisticated B-1 bomber system costs.

It also seems to me that it is unwise and risky to risk a plane that cost $400 million in some kind of theater scenario.

Mr. Chairman, the Congressional Budget Office has indicated that this program will cost the American people nearly $40 billion, 100 planes at approximately $400 million a copy, at a time when we are asking millions of human beings in this country to sacrifice in order to bring this economy together. We throw a $40 billion bone to the Pentagon that serves no useful purpose, that will be obsolete by the time this weapons system comes on line.

It would seem to me, for these reasons, this weapons system ought to be rejected. A $40 billion turkey is absurd, Mr. Chairman.

Judging from prior aircraft purchases, I would suggest that over the total life of this B-1 bomber program, it will probably cost the American people in excess of $100 billion.

On both military and fiscal grounds, there are no persuasive arguments that should lead us to support this $40 billion B-1 bomber program, and it is for those reasons, Mr. Chairman, that I urge support for this amendment.

To summarize, militarily, this will be an obsolete weapon. Fiscally, it is absurd to spend $40 billion.

I indicated that this decision was a political decision rather than a military decision. Let me explain that.

Back when we started down this road toward nuclear superiority, the Air Force had preeminent status in the field of nuclear capability with their Strategic Air Command. Then along came the Navy and their superior submarine nuclear technology. They then became the preeminent branch of service in nuclear capability.

The Air Force wants very desperately to regain their status. The President decided to at least delay the decision on one of the Air Force's weapons system, a weapon that I define as crisis-destabilizing—euphemistically referred to as the MX missile—and in light of holding back the decision on the MX missile, it seems to me this administration needed to throw some bone to the Air Force in order to handle the politics of the Pentagon, and here is a $40 billion program that was a political decision, not a military decision.

There is no military justification for it. As I said, it is fiscally irresponsible.

Mr. Chairman, for these reasons, we should not go forward with the development of the B-1 bomber program.

Back in the era of President Carter, when he reviewed this decision, he decided to cancel it. But the B-1 bomber grows like Topsy. It grows like wild weeds. You defeat it one year and it comes back the next year. You defeat it and it comes back; you defeat it and it keeps coming back.

It is a $40 billion program. Let us beat it back.

□ 1520

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I would like to take a few minutes to put the bomber program in perspective and explain why the time phased B-1B/advanced technology bomber program is the logical approach to a bomber modernization program.

Historically, the unique military characteristics of the manned bomber have provided a vital dimension of flexibility to our strategic and tactical forces. But the B-52's, which have been the mainstay of our manned bomber forces for the past 25 years, are becoming more difficult and expensive to maintain and, more importantly, will become increasingly vulnerable to a Soviet first strike and to Soviet air defenses over the next several years. Because B-52's are not only fully hardened against the effects of nuclear blasts and are relatively slow in flying out from their bases, they are more vulnerable to attacks from sea-launched ballistic missiles launched from Soviet submarines patrolling off our coasts. Moreover, because of their large radar reflectivity and relatively slow speed at low altitude, the B-52's will be far less able to penetrate Soviet air defenses during the latter part of this decade.

The limitations inherent in the B-52 make it imperative that we start fielding a replacement aircraft now. The Defense Department has begun a time-phased bomber modernization program designed to use the remaining capabilities of the B-52, while laying the groundwork for a future bomber force.

Acquiring the B-1B while continuing to pursue the advanced technology bomber, or ATB, is the most prudent approach for revitalizing our bomber forces. This approach enables the fielding of the necessary additional forces required during a period when the United States must depend heavily on bombers, while the proper steps to strengthen our land-based missiles are taken. A combined force of B-1B's, ATB's, and cruise missiles will place maximum stress on Soviet air defenses and provide the United States with significant leverage in our long-term strategic competition with the Soviets. A two-bomber program will also provide time for an orderly and logically paced development for the ATB, fully exploiting the enormous potential of low observable technology while avoiding the inevitable mistakes in a too rapidly paced program.

The B-1B will apply some elements of low observable technology to reduce its radar cross-section to a level one-tenth that of the original B-1 and one-hundredth that of the B-52. It will also include the latest developments in electronic countermeasures technology and offensive avionics systems. These developments, in conjunction with its high-speed and low-level capabilities, will provide high confidence that the B-1B will be able to penetrate Soviet defenses well into the 1990's and perform as an effective cruise missile carrier and conventional carrier well into the next century, throughout 30 or more years of service life.

As for the ATB, the prime contractor as well as other key members of the development team, have been selected. This program is proceeding at the fastest prudent pace. While most details of this program are classified, the essential point is what the ATB is being developed using low observable techniques to negate the effectiveness of present and projected air defenses. The technologies involved are exciting and promising, but because of the major advances required in several areas and the consequent uncertainties involved, there would be a high degree of program risk in concentrating solely on ATB. For these reasons and others, a significant acceleration of this important program is not prudent at this time. However, an orderly development program will enable these uncertainties to be resolved and will result in an ATB that represents a technological advance of extraordinary military significance. When deployed in the 1990's, it will augment the B-1B capability and contribute dramatically to the strength and deterrent value of our strategic forces well into the next century.

Most of what I have said, you have heard before. We have spent many hours during the past year debating the merits of a time-phased two-bomber modernization program. During the fiscal year 1982 budget cycle, we agreed as a body to commit production funds for the B-1B program and development funds for an ATB program.

That commitment was made just a few months ago. I see nothing in either of these programs or in the global political-military environment that warrants withdrawal of our full support for both of these programs.

The integrated B-1B/ATB bomber program is progressing smoothly and on schedule. At this point, 24 percent of the B-1B program has been negotiated. It is on cost and on schedule. The ATB development is also progressing smoothly, focusing now on developing the design and manufacturing technology that will provide an operationally effective system at a cost we can afford. I see no need for further debate of the integrated bomber program. I feel we should support the commitment we made in the fiscal year 1982 cycle and maintain the pace on this critical effort.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE. I do not have any time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois has 1 minute remaining.

Does the gentleman yield back the balance of his time?

Mr. PRICE. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I just wanted to add a few points to the excellent analysis of the B-1 aircraft just presented by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PRICE).

The gentleman from California (Mr. DELLUMS) was pointing out, or claiming, I should say, that there is some concern about how long the B-1 is going to be able to penetrate in the Soviet Union. In a letter to Senator TOWER from the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency and from the Secretary of Defense, those two leaders of our major agencies concerned with our national security said this, and I quote:

> The B-1B would have the capability to penetrate anticipated Soviet air defenses well into the 1990's in a multitude of employment modes and to perform effectively as a cruise missile carrier and as a conventional bomber into the next century.

In fact, I would also like to point out to my friend from California that the B-1B has already been exposed to a very relentless series of tests in actual flight against all of the simulated air defense systems that we know about in the Soviet Union, and it came through perfectly, because of the outstanding electronic countermeasure gear which is included on the B-1, and which happens to be built, by the way, in my State of New York. It came through without any of those systems being able to lay a glove on it.

So, I think we ought not to denigrate the B-1. It is a great plane. It was a great plane when President Carter foolishly, against the recommendations of all of his defense advisers, both uniformed and civilian, decided to eliminate it.

The gentleman from California has also commented on the increase in costs for the B-1, something like $200 million a copy. But, it was because of the gentleman from California and others who refused to override the President's action and to vote to continue the production line when the cost was only $58 million a copy that the cost has risen to $200 million, because we had to wait all those years to appreciate just how important that bomber was.

Mr. ROBERT W. DANIEL, JR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. We have debated this issue many times in the past and I suspect we will probably have debates on it again in the future.

Last November, Dr. DeLauer wrote a very detailed letter to the chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee of the other body explaining the rationale for the B-1/advanced technology bomber (ATB) approach to modernizing our strategic bomber force. I would like to review some of the key points Dr. DeLauer brings out in this letter.

To be an effective deterrent a manned bomber must be able to accomplish three basic parts of the manned bomber mission; take off and base escape prior to being struck, with particular concern toward a surprise attack; navigate and fly safely the long range to its targets; and, penetrate any defenses required to reach its target.

As the Soviets deploy increasing numbers of warheads (which can be used for barrage attack), and develop more effective forward air defenses, the B-52's ability to accomplish all three parts of its mission in sufficient numbers to be an effective and credible deterrent will become increasingly questionable in the last half of the 1980's. In addition, the cost of the B-52's operation and maintenance is rising dramatically as its age increases. In contrast to this, the B-1B and the ATB can accomplish all three parts of the bomber mission effectively and will be able to do so for many years to come.

The combined B-1B/ATB program will represent a force that will cause the Soviets to begin to improve their air defense now and to continue to improve them throughout the rest of the century. The heavy investment this will require will provide the United States with significant leverage and restrict the Soviet's ability to upgrade their offensive forces. In contrast to this, an ATB only program allows the Soviets to delay the improvements to their air defenses and gives them many years to work exclusively on ways to counter the ATB technology. Finally, the combined program allows the option of deciding to buy more or less of either the B-1B or ATB at mid-decade depending on the progress made and the cost of each program.

Now, as to the issue to the ability of manned bombers to penetrate Soviet air defenses. Many people who are uninformed with the facts and technical details of air defense often imagine air defense as a wall or barrier that is or is not broken at given times. This conception is misleading. Air defense in today's world is done in depth and consists of varying degrees of defense depending on the importance of the target and timing of the attack. Thus, there is no magic moment when a given type of bomber cannot "penetrate." What occurs is that the probability of air defenses being effective over a range of desired targets gradually increases over time as defenses are improved. These improvements, however, can be offset through the introduction of new equipment and tactics in the attacking force. The low radar cross section of the B-1B (which is less than one one-hundreth that of the B-52) and its state-of-the-art electronics will allow it to penetrate to needed targets well into the 1990's. The improvements that the ATB will offer in these areas promise to allow similar effectiveness to be maintained well into the next century. By combining these two programs, we maintain the important deterrent capability of manned bombers, that is, reliability, survivability, recallability, endurance, and the ability to hit mobile targets, well into the future for essentially the same cost that would be incurred if we continued to operate older obsolete systems.

The gentleman from California (Mr. DELLUMS) in a "Dear Colleague" letter has asserted, and I quote:

No arguments can be made in favor of the B-1B bomber program on either military or fiscal grounds * * *.

While I will agree the B-1 program is indeed costly, I would disagree with the gentleman that no arguments can be made in its favor. I believe the military arguments favoring the B-1 are compelling and I urge you to reject this amendment.

□ 1530

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is always a pleasure to take the well in either agreement or disagreement with the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. DELLUMS). There is no Member in the House with a reputation for being more candid, bold, or frank. I have often complimented him on his ability to speak in triplets. Why use one adjective when three would suffice?

However, I think he is engaging in an exercise in futility here, if I might dare to go to the core of the matter of where we disagree on this issue.

It is not this particular airplane. It is an excellent aircraft, and I have made so many technical arguments about its capabilities in this well over 6 years that I admit I am slightly burned out on defending it. To fly it is to sit at the controls—it has a fighter pilot's stick, I might add, rather than a bomber's yoke—of the finest piece of equipment to take to the air, with the possible sole exception of the SR-71 Blackbird, but their missions are so different that they are not really comparable.

The problem here is that I think the gentleman should direct the thrust of his argument against this: do we want a bomber at all? It is the B-52; that is the problem. I would submit that the debate would be far more cogent, relevant or decisive if what we would do is have the gentleman come to the well with an amendment that says we want to shutdown on a date certain manned bomber aircraft in the United States. I do not think the House would get anywhere near a majority vote.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORNAN of California. Yes, I will yield to the gentleman from California if he will get me some more time if I need it.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman, would be cosponsor such an amendment if I offered it?

Mr. DORNAN of California. No, I would not. What it would do is sharpen the argument as to whether or not an air-breathing leg of the Triad is necessary and how viable it would be into the next century.

Here is the problem of what we are voting on with this amendment. This should always be a perfecting amendment to do away with manned bomber aircraft, because the B-52's are going to be supported by the Senate and the House Armed Services Committees, and they are going to be extended into the next century.

Shortly after we debated this matter last year, a young Air Force Reserve lieutenant named Kendall Wallace, who was a fraternity brother of one of my staffers, talked to my staffer at the USC fraternity party. He was a B-52 navigator, and he told my crew member to go back and tell his boss, Congressman BOB DORNAN, to please keep fighting for the B-1 because he had reached the point in his career where he was frightened everytime he got on board a B-52. He was flying the older D model. Within 6 days of telling my young staffer that he was worried about the airplane, this officer died with the entire crew when a B-52 hit the ground about 10 miles from La Junta, Calif., on October 30 at the end of a long night mission.

The Air Force feels that it might have been pilot error or crew error, but I know, as in most Air Force accidents where the results are not clear and definitive, that the burden of guilt always seems to be borne by the crew.

These planes are so old that it could have easily been some mechanical difficulty not determined by the accident investigating board.

Now, this young navigator's wife had just graduated from law school and was driving along the freeway in Los Angeles when inadvertently the names of the next of kind were given out after this B-52 crash before she had even been reached by an Air Force casualty officer. This young wife called my office to say that she thought we had reached the point where the B-52's had outlived their usefulness—way over a quarter of a century. Over and over we have heard in this well that the pilot and crews 5 years ago were starting to emerge with young men younger than the airplanes they were now flying. We must now be at 50 percent, where half of the crews are younger than the B-52's they are flying.

The main point of what we should be discussing is this: Are we going to get rid of manned bombers, or are we going to give our young men a decent weapon system in which to serve their nation and defend what is left of the free world?

The B-1 is a magnificent system, and when we added that model No. B, on it, it indicated that it had become a significantly different aircraft with much of the self-technology on it.

There was a lot of talk the day before yesterday about a paper airplane; the Stealth is just that. Someday it may emerge from the drawing boards, as has so much of the product of the American aeronautical defense establishment, as an excellent weapon system. But right now you can pick up this week's issue of Aviation Week and see that NATO has finally assigned a nickname to the Soviet RAM-P bomber, which most of us have seen in the John T. Hughes briefing. That RAM-P bomber is called the Blackjack, and it is, in all of the intelligence briefings, a Soviet B-2.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. DORNAN) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DORNAN of California was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Chairman, now we have the Soviet B-1, the Backfire, at a production rate of 30 a month, and now they are going to go into production with the RAM-P or Blackjack, the Soviet B-2.

Is there something the Soviets know about a thinking man's system that is recallable, that is flexible, and that is worthy of the young officers who fly it?

I think in the future we should stop discussing the merits of the B-1. It is the state of the art. With every system that comes on the line now, this is such a fast moving train in this world of high technology that systems become technically obsolescent or obsolete. It is the best aircraft in the world in that category of bomber. It is superior probably even to the Soviet B-2 Blackjack. We must give it to our men. We owe it to the young lieutenants like Kendall Wallace of the Strategic Air Command to give them a new system. We have already lost 6 precious years.

Next year I ask the articulate, distinguished gentleman to discuss the merits of a manned bomber at all, and on that argument the House will render its decision, but not on this specific excellent piece of equipment.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the Dellums amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield at this time to the gentleman from California (Mr. DELLUMS).

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman from Colorado (Mrs. SCHROEDER) for yielding to me.

I would like to say to the gentleman from California (Mr. DORNAN) that he raises a very interesting proposition. The point is that we can only raise this issue in the context of challenging the B-1, and I would suggest that the gentleman is perfectly correct. I do not believe we need a manned penetrating bomber in the 1980's or the 1990's.

That may be the state of the art in terms of bombers, but it is not the state of the art in terms of the air-breathing leg of our Triad.

□ 1540

We do have air-launched cruise missiles. The point I am trying to suggest is that technology is far beyond a manned penetrating bomber.

The whole notion of a manned plane over a target, as Stansfield Turner eloquently points out, is tradition in history, but time is far past this absurdity. We have technology that far exceeds that.

If the B-52 is not an appropriate weapon to penetrate Soviet air defense between 1990 or 1991, give it a standoff platform so that it can stand off if necessary, and it is my great hope that we never engage in a confrontation with the Soviet Union because I believe that will bring destruction to our Nation, to their nation, and the world as you and I know it, and it seems to me we ought to be engaging in a negotiation, not playing macho games of who has the best weapon. But if you want to have a weapon then you can have a standoff capability. We do have air-launched cruise missiles.

If the gentlewoman from Colorado would yield further I would like to make this point. The gentleman from New York points out that after 1990 the B-1B can be a cruise missile carrier. I repeat my argument. This is a plane that costs $400 million a copy.

At a time when you and I are all talking about economies, can you really go home and talk to people about a $400 million plane carrying cruise missiles when virtually any wide-bodied plane can carry cruise missiles, including the 300 B-52's that we have, including the FB-111 that we have.

We do not need to build these 100 planes at a cost of $40 billion.

Technology is far beyond the B-1. The Government, as I said, may be perfectly correct with respect to the whole notion of the state of the art.

I might add one other comment to the gentleman from California. Yes, the B-1B may be able to take off quickly but it has to be refueled in the air. The KC-135 that has responsibility to catch up with the B-1 in order to refuel it cannot fly as fast as the B-1B so you have a plane that flies faster than the tanker that has to refuel it.

So simply on the basis of logic and rationality, this whole notion ought to be rejected.

The gentleman from New York points out after 1990 not only can it be used as a cruise missile carrier, but it can also be used as a conventional bomber. A $400 million plane as a conventional bomber? Can we make this argument straight faced?

We have a number of bombers that can act as a conventional bomber. To place a $400 million plane in a conventional theater scenario to me is a very high risk and a great absurdity at a point where we are crushing programs, challenging social security, and doing a whole range of other things, talking about economies. And here we are talking about spending this kind of money on a weapons system that clearly, in my estimation, is obsolete.

I would just like to point out that someone concludes, based on a whole range of evaluations of the B-1B, that fast, basic escape, getting off the ground and getting out there quickly is no known requirement, and at best it is a requirement that we certainly do not need to spend $40 billion on. That is all the B-1B gives us.

I would just like to add on personal note. The gentleman from California continues to talk about this gentleman from California speaking in triplicate. If the B-1 bomber is expensive, it is expensive. But if it is also wasteful, then it is also wasteful. If it is unnecessary, then it is also unnecessary.

This gentleman from California is not engaging in style. The point I make is that it is expensive and we can argue that. It is wasteful. We can argue that. It is unnecessary. We can argue that. And was a political decision rather than a military decision, and we can argue that.

The gentleman from Virginia argues that this plane is expensive, so he agrees with me on that basis. But then he argues that it is a military plane.

I am saying to my distinguished colleague from Virginia, the state of the art is far beyond the B-1B. Standoff capability with wide-bodied planes and air-launched cruise missiles can get the job done without spending $40 billion and without us putting pilots and crews out there on a target that would force them to commit suicide.

I would like to point out that Secretary Weinberger has made the following statement.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Colorado (Mrs. SCHROEDER) has expired.

(At the request of Mr. DELLUMS and by unanimous consent Mrs. SCHROEDER was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DELLUMS. I thank the gentlewoman.

Secretary of Defense Weinberger has said that sending a B-1B to the Soviet Union in 1990 or thereafter would be a "suicide mission."

In addition, CIA and Air Force intelligence estimates indicate that the B-1B may not add any new penetration capability to that already possessed by the B-52.

On October 29 the CIA analyst Robert Huffstutler told the Senate Defense Appropriations Subcommittee that the B-52 could penetrate Soviet air space until 1991.

Finally, the matter is further clouded by Air Force charts, Air Force charts that show that to evade Soviet defense technology any U.S. bomber, with the exception of Stealth technology, which is still on the drawing board, may have to adopt a "shoot and penetrate" tactic which means you shoot missiles to suppress Soviet air defenses and then you penetrate Soviet air space rather than simply penetrate it.

The Air Force concedes that the B-52 could do that just as easily as a B-1B. We certainly do not have to spend $40 billion to get that capability.

I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I thank the gentleman from California. I think he has made the point very, very well. I think we have been over and over this issue. Members are right the debate is an old one.

If the B-1 was obsolete several years ago it is still obsolete today! I am sorry the committee insists we keep going over this.

As a pilot, I really want to say it makes much more sense to me that we buy things such as the AV-8B the planes that held up so well in the Falkland Islands. Small planes that work well and are very flexible and comparably cheap are needed much more.

Think how many you could buy for the price of just one B-1. We keep looking for a way to justify the expensive B-1 and we have needs for spare parts, conventional weapons, and training that go unmet.

Those are the kinds of tradeoffs we are talking about. There are all sorts of other planes that can do the same mission as the B-1. We are buying a gold-plated, obsolete turkey and short-changing immediate needs to do it.

I compliment the gentleman for bringing this forward and yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, once again I have heard the annual "Let's kill the B-1 bomber amendment" with nothing really new added. I feel constrained to say that those who say let us use something else than the B-1 bomber to take the place of the really old and wornout B-52 are advocating the same thing that was advocated yesterday on the basing mode of the MX by saying that maybe we will get a basing mode that will put a different size or shape rocket in the base.

That is about as logical and rational as saying let us stop the B-1 because it is so old now, and having been stopped for the last 10 years, let us go ahead with something new, and find the next generation bomber. But I do not think anyone is kidding anyone around here because I would venture to say that anyone who would say let us kill the B-1 bomber now so that we can go ahead and go on the ATB or the advanced technology bomber would wait until that was delayed a few years and then say that was obsolete.

So I think that argument falls on its own.

I enjoy listening to the gentleman from California, Mr. DELLUMS, every year when he starts out on the B-1.

According to my figures, figures given by the President, the White House, and the Department of Defense, and the prime contractor for this excellent airplane, which I have flown, the price is $205 million per copy, and that the program is ahead of time and ahead of schedule and under cost at the present time, which would be in 1981 dollars for the whole program $20.5 billion for the baseline program.

If the gentleman from California is accusing the President of not telling the truth, he should do that in some other forum.

□ 1550

Mr. ROBERT W. DANIEL, JR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERT W. DANIEL, JR. I ask, is it not true that in late 1981 the President of the United States certified that the program cost in 1981 dollars was going to be $20.5 billion, and he has got to come back, if there is any change in that cost? Is that not the case?

Mr. BADHAM. That is absolutely correct, under the law of this land. I have checked the figures, rechecked them, checked with the Air Force, checked the GAO figures, and it is still $20.5 billion baseline program cost.

Mr. ROBERT W. DANIEL, JR. In view of the certification and the requirement to come back, I am sure the gentleman shares my mystification with these figures that the gentleman from California has given us.

Mr. BADHAM. I most assuredly do. And that is why I had not intended to speak but do speak for the simple reason that I think it should be read into the record very clearly.

But the idea here is that if we are going to have a bomber force, a large airplane that carries weapons systems that is piloted by man, we must well forget the B-52. I have not flown the B-52, but I had the great experience of riding a B-52D model, and for one who has flown the F-111 and has flown the B-1, as I have, when they asked me if I wanted to drive when I was on a B-52 mission, I said, "No, thanks, I am having a hard enough time holding on." When the B-52 goes at low level, I cannot describe to you the shaking of the wings, the bouncing of the seat, and you really have the feeling that the wings are going to fall off.

So we need a new bomber. I do not think anybody argues that. We do need a new bomber, and the B-1 is the bomber that, not only at its time of design demonstrated the best technology available anywhere in the world, but it has been improved constantly as the state of the art has increased, with such things as Stealth technology techniques that can be applied to the existing B-1 airframes. It is an excellent airframe. It is an excellent airplane. It is an airplane that we need, as the gentleman from California (Mr. DORNAN) said, to do only required respect to the people who have volunteered to fly airplanes in the defense of this country.

I support fully the continuation of the B-1 program. I think it is adequate, it is fine, and it will penetrate well on into its useful years, until we have a next generation bomber.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. BADHAM) has expired.

Mr. BADHAM. My time has expired.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California (Mr. BADHAM) be allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Does the gentleman from California (Mr. BADHAM) desire recognition?

Mr. BADHAM. No, Mr. Chairman, I do not.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me briefly?

Mr. CONYERS. I yield to the gentleman briefly.

Mr. DELLUMS. I would simply like to respond to the gentleman from California (Mr. BADHAM). He did not have to run away from the microphone. I am not going to gobble him up.

I would simply like to point out two things: First, I am not here saying that the President is telling a lie. I am not here to engage in that kind of absurd, mediocre personality challenge. We are here talking about policy ideas.

I came up with the $40 billion figure not out of my head. The Congressional Budget Office points out that the Pentagon estimate of approximately $20 billion has to be doubled to roughly $40 billion when you start including the factors of inflation. So I did not come up with these figures out of my head. We are not here playing these kinds of games. We are raising serious policy considerations here.

Second, all we are suggesting, I say to my colleague, is that a manned penetrating bomber force is yesterday's concept, and we ought to understand that. That is all I am trying to suggest. Spending $40 billion chasing yesterday, to me, is not only an absurdity, it is a shameful thing to do, particularly given the moment that we find ourselves in.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I do not have anything really new in terms of arguments to add to the B-1 bomber discussion. But I do not perceive that that is a requisite for discussing this matter. My friend from California (Mr. BADHAM) said that the gentleman from California (Mr. DELLUMS) brings the same old arguments about the B-1 bomber to the floor and there is really nothing new. So what? Is there some requirement that we have to invent something new, sir, every time we debate this issue? They are the same arguments, and they are not new. But I did not know I had to bring some new ones every year. The old ones are perfectly adequate. And guess what. More and more people are beginning to realize that they are the correct old arguments. So I do not see any requirement on my part to research some new additional information. I think that some of these pilots who fly these planes ought to disqualify themselves from discussing this issue because of their partisan feelings about plane flying.

I have never flown a B-1 bomber. I have never flown in one that I know of. So how it feels at the stick and what the propellers do and how the wings vibrate is a thrill that has been denied me. But I do not think you have to know that to decide whether or not we should discontinue its production.

With reference to the President's accuracy or inaccuracy, the gentleman says, "This is not the right forum to bring up inaccuracies of the President of the United States." Has the gentleman got a better place? Should we go on Pennslyvania Avenue, out in front of the White House, and shout about it through the fence? I think that the Congress is the most appropriate forum in the United States of America to bring up inaccuracies about the President's remarks or the gentleman's remarks, for that matter. I simply do not understand why we cannot discuss this subject here.

The gentleman from California (Mr. BADHAM) has said, "Where do these figures come from?" And if he is suggesting—I have got all of this research material—that he has never heard of the Congressional Budget Office study on this subject, I will yield to him at this point to explain that maybe my staff is in error about the materials presented. They said $39.8 billion per copy. Now, this is not a figure somebody dreamed up. We are talking about big bucks, even among ourselves. This is not chicken feed. So do not look so weird about arguing whether or not this cost is appropriate.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. CONYERS was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. CONYERS. I am not on the committee, but I understand the question is whether the B-1B should be continued until the Stealth bomber comes along. Is that the general idea, that there is an ultimate replacement for the bomber, and we are talking about whether we should continue to reproduce the B-1B in the interim?

Mr. DELLUMS. If the gentleman will yield, that is one argument that some people make. There is also the fact that there may very well not be a Stealth. We may be talking about standoff capability with air-launch cruise missiles, and many people think that that is a technology that is far superior to the whole concept of a manned penetrating bomber. And some people have gone far enough to talk about a Stealth air-launch cruise missile.

Mr. CONYERS. Fine. Under either view I really think that we ought to kill the B-1B. That is the bottom line. I apologize, I have not been in the Air Force, and I have not flown it. I do not know how it feels to be in the cockpit with your hand on the stick. I am sure it is exhilarating. But notwithstanding, in terms of my responsibility in fashioning the military budget, I think the time has come to give it the heave.

□ 1600

The Secretary of Defense told Congress that the Stealth could become operational by 1989. Attempting to develop B-1B and Stealth at the same time as is proposed will inevitably retard the progress of the Stealth bomber.

That is from the Secretary.

So I respectfully thank everyone for their kind attention.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONYERS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DELLUMS. I thank my colleague for yielding and appreciate the fact that the gentleman zeroed in on one of the arguments that had been advanced by the opposition, and that is that the arguments against the B-1B are old arguments.

The B-1B is an old plane. I appreciate the fact that the gentleman said that. There is a second tactic I deeply resent, and that is the tactic of attempting to discuss these issues in purely personal terms.

We have heard the gentleman from California rail against the B-1 bomber last year and the year after as if in some way a $39.8 billion program is a personal item.

I wish I were worth $40 billion. This is not RON DELLUMS' amendment. This happens to be an amendment that affects the lives of American people, taxpayers paying billions of dollars for a weapons system that is totally obsolete and we ought not to be debating this matter on personal terms. We ought to be talking whether this weapon system makes sense. I do not think it does militarily nor economically and I thank my colleague.

Mr. CONYERS. I think the gentleman's concern about national security is second to no man or woman in this Chamber.

Mr. BEARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a brief colloquy with my good freind.

I would like to ask the gentleman, understanding his sensitivity and I think everybody's concern regarding the cost of this particular aircraft, I wonder if the gentleman would have supported this particular aircraft to replace the B-52 bomber, if, say, the aircraft was in the $50 million range or the $57 million?

Originally when we were going to build this aircraft the cost was going to be about $57 million which would, of course, be much more reasonable now.

What we are talking about, $275 million per copy?

Would the gentleman have been prone to support this aircraft if the cost were down to the $50 million range to replace this antiquated B-52 which everyone has said is even getting to the point of being dangerous to fly?

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEARD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONYERS. I do not know. How would I know? Nobody ever asked me that before.

I will tell the gentleman this though. When it first started out, the Air Force put the price tag on the B-1B program at $19.7 billion. That does not sound like $50 billion to me.

Mr. BEARD. It was $47 million the first copy.

Mr. CONYERS. I see.

Mr. BEARD. Then in 1977 we could go to $57 million for a flyaway. I think the point is while people are expressing concern about the tremendous cost of this air system or aircraft, I think if we look back we would probably show the gentleman did not support it back then and probably voted to cancel the B-1 and has been opposed to it——

Mr. CONYERS. Are you bringing my past voting record into a hypothetical situation?

Mr. BEARD. It is not hypothetical, it is on the record. The hard cold fact is that the gentleman was opposed to this system way back when it was reasonable and now as a result of these types of votes, or cancellation, of prolonging, now we are in a system that is going to cost way and above that, and I am saying that we do this to so many of our weapons system and weapons systems that are needed to fill a void, and here we go, let us slow, then let us stop, and we realize we need it and we start back, and I think the gentleman understands it drives the costs up. So I think one of the major causes for these tremendous cost increases are the lack of consistency by the Members of Congress in supporting these programs.

Mr. CONYERS. If the gentleman will yield further, I would like to argue that I am one of the most consistent Members on the floor. If the gentleman says it costs $50 million the first time and costs less now, I was opposed to it then and I am opposed to it now. That is a case for consistency.

Mr. BEARD. Well, I would like to say that is the point I wanted to make, the fact the gentleman has been extremely consistent in being opposed to this particular system.

Mr. CONYERS. If the gentleman is talking about inconsistent Members I would suggest he exclude this particular Member. I have consistently opposed the B-1.

I am flattered that the gentleman follows my voting record as closely as he claims. That is more than I even do. I did not know he cared.

Mr. BEARD. It is my time. I say to my friend from Michigan I can probably assume the gentleman's voting record as easily as the gentleman can assume my voting record, so I do not say that in any type of derogatory fashion. I just say that the weapons system unfortunately has increased in cost because of the lack of consistency in the Congress, but I think it is important to point out though that the gentleman has opposed it right across the board. So the new found concern about the cost of the weapons system I think is inconsistent inasmuch as the gentleman has been one of the causes for the increases.

Mr. CONYERS. If the gentleman will yield, I do not know how he got this much time under 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. BEARD) has expired.

(At the request of Mr. CONYERS and by unanimous consent, Mr. BEARD was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEARD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONYERS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I appreciate this colloquy.

First of all, I do not presume to know what the gentleman's record is without bothering to look it up and I do not understand how he can presume to know what mine is. Your voting record on military matters, on civil rights, on the Martin Luther King bill, on questions of peace or war are not matters that I could hazard a guess at during debate on the floor. It seems a bit reckless if you do not mind me saying so. I do not make that kind of assumption against any Member in the House of Representatives.

I have no idea how the gentleman votes on anything and I would never dare to assume that I could intuitively divine the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. BEARD) vote on anything.

Now can the gentleman tell me if it is right or wrong, true or false; in July 1981 the Air Force put the price tag of the B-1B program at $19.7 billion. True or false?

If the gentleman does not know it is all right.

Mr. BEARD. What was the date on that, July 1981?

That is false.

Mr. CONYERS. That is false. Thank you.

Now can you tell me where the figure of $50 million per copy that the gentleman hypothesized I voted on; $57 million.

Mr. BEARD. Flyaway in 1977.

Mr. CONYERS. In 1977 it was $57 million.

Could the gentleman cite me one authority for that besides himself?

Mr. BEARD. The Department of Defense is a good place to start.

Mr. CONYERS. That is a great place to start.

Mr. BEARD. Let me just say quickly the point is we need this aircraft, we desperately need it, we can no longer look at the Stealth way down the road, we can no longer continue to give paper support to our troops. I did not mean to and I apologize to the gentleman for getting into an assumption battle. That is not the case. I feel very strongly about the B-1 and feel that we need to go forth with it because if we do not we are talking about something 10 years down the road that is going to be dramatically more expensive than this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER).

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, the discussion that just took place on the floor of whether or not and how long people have been opposed to the B-1 may be the most important part of this discussion.

The fact is when the B-1 cost $40 million the B-1 cost $57 million, or today when it costs somewhere between $200 million and $400 million a copy depending upon whose estimate it is, and every time this plane, and the price tag that it carries has been compared to the mission that it was designed to do and in each and every time substantial concerns by people who understand the missions, the purpose for which it was designed have been raised.

□ 1610

Originally it was designed to fly high. Then there was a question whether it could do that and still penetrate.

Somebody suggested General Ellis, who by the way was the Commander in Chief of the Strategic Air Command, the man who was supposed to fly this airplane, whose troops were supposed to fly this airplane, decided that the FB-111 would be superior, that it would only cost $10 billion, would give us the same firepower, the same penetrating ability; so the B-1 did not measure up at that price tag.

Now we find out that wide-bodied standoff capability is a very realistic alternative, so all of a sudden the B-1 is not realistic at this price capability; so then we have to start saying, well, what is the mission of this airplane?

The fact of the matter is they have not yet been able to come up with a unique mission which this airplane can fulfill, that cannot be fulfilled by another weapons system. So what has happened is what you see here today, perhaps the most important debate of this legislation outside of the MX, that this Chamber is vacant, relatively so, and yet people want to continue to say that defense spending, military spending, should be brought under control; but what has in fact happened is this system continues to go on. They continue to try to resurrect some mission which it can do; but the fact is that if it is a cruise missile carrier, there is wide bodied standoff capability that is available in a shorter period of time. If it is a penetrating bomber, there are other alternatives to the penetrating bomber.

In fact, it is incredible, the rational that has now surfaced, that somehow it can go in later and at $400 million a copy it can drop iron bombs on the Soviet Union. I would suggest that if things have deteriorated to the point where this is going to be a conventional bomber, there will be very little use for iron bombs after the nuclear destruction that has taken place within the Soviet Union and quite possibly in this country.

So what has happened is that over the 5 years or 10 years this program has been delayed, it has never met its mission. There has always been an alternative at whatever price they have tried to present the B-1 bomber to us.

But let me suggest that something else is going on here. For people who are watching this debate, maybe in fact what you have seen here today is you have seen the best argument for an amendment for a balanced budget, because as long as these kinds of systems can be devised, as long as these kinds of systems do not need to be scrutinized and can use up $40 billion of taxpayer revenues and be charged off to the deficit because that is where this system is going, because nobody has the courage to stand up and raise the tax revenues to pay for this system.

Perhaps a requirement on this body for a balanced budget would turn some of the energies that are used to make up missions for this unacceptable system, that some of the energies would start looking at the alternatives.

We understand very clearly that careers are on the line in the Pentagon, careers are on the line in the industrial complex that supports this system. We have all received letters from the subcontractors that demand that you vote for this system. We can understand that; but that is not the basis on which a strategic weapons system should be built. It should be built upon whether or not it can meet the mission for which it is designed.

I think that Congressman DELLUMS has presented to this House substantial testimony, not of his own, but of people who are experts in this field, people who have held positions of responsibility within the Strategic Air Command, within the Department of Defense, within the intelligence community. He has reported to this body that they have serious questions—some of them outright believe that this system should be abolished, and yet it grinds on and grinds on. Why? Because we are not required to pay for this extravagant system.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI). The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MILLER of California was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. MILLER of California. This body is not required to pay for this system, because we are going to hide it in the deficit. Well, maybe just now we have come to the best rationale why this Congress should be constrained to the balanced budget, because if you had to match the real worth of this system in military terms and its real cost, which I happen to believe will approach $40 billion by the time it is delivered, the purpose and the cost and the robbery that is going to take place from the resources available to people in this country, whether it is social security, whether it is nutrition, of education, or the Space Shuttle, I do not believe that this Congress would treat this issue as cavalierly as they have treated it today.

In fact, what this Congress would do is ask for a full investigation, a full determination of whether or not the standoff capability of the wide bodies can meet one portion of this mission, or whether the stretched FB-111 can meet another portion of this mission, whether or not the reengine—mind you, just the other day in the cloakroom, one of our colleagues suggested that they could not discuss the reengine of the B-52 because of the fight yesterday on the 747, and the C-5A.

We cannot discuss whether or not we can make the B-52 a good airplane, a better airplane for the future with new engines because all the energy of the Defense Establishment is in pushing the B-1.

I think perhaps that if we were constrained from supporting the new expenditures, not voting $20 billion in taxes that is going to be raised this year, but the real cost of these increases in the military, which is about $38 billion this year in the budget, 38 billion new dollars in the budget this year, and we are only going to raise $20 billion; so what is that, that is $18 billion of this military budget is being charged off to the deficit that the American people are saddled with, that they cannot buy homes, they cannot buy automobiles, their jobs are being foreclosed and their businesses are being foreclosed on, and the real increase in the military budget is $38 billion and this Congress is only going to raise $20 billion in taxes. That tells me that $18 billion is supported by the deficit of this country and perhaps the time has come to end that.

Let us find out what, in fact, are the priorities and the true weapons systems for the defense of this country.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I want to associate myself with the incisive critique that has been offered by the gentleman in the well and want to commend our colleague, Mr. DELLUMS, for the excellence of his leadership in this important matter.

Both of these gentlemen have forcefully spoken to the absurdity of the B-1 program and the outrageous proposition of committing billions of dollars to the procurement of a bomber fleet that will not become available until 1988 and that will become obsolete by 1990. We must recognize that there are far more desireable options available to us for the maintenance and advancement of the airborne leg of the Triad—most notable among these, the use of already-retrofitted B-52 bombers equipped with air-launchable cruise missiles.

If we are truly serious about strengthening our defense capability, we will adopt Mr. Dellum's amendment and put an end to this kind of wasteful, unjustified expenditure. Simply, the B-1 bomber, like the MX missile, represents nothing more than a tremendous diversion of critical resources away from areas of most genuine need, both within and outside the Defense budget.

